Under Fed.R.Crim.Proc. 41(h), relating to search and seizure, "daytime" means the hours from 6:00 a.m. to 10:00 p.m.

See also Nighttime.

Daywere. In old English law, a term applied to land, and signifying as much arable ground as could be plowed up in one day's work.

Daywork drilling contract. A drilling contract under which the drilling contractor is compensated on the basis of the amount of time spent in drilling operations. Essentially, the lease owner hires the drilling rig and its staff to work under his direction. Broad discretion is given to the contracting party to give instructions to the drilling contractor as to how to conduct drilling operations. The courts impose broad liability upon the contracting party as a result of his broad discretion.

D.B. Abbreviation for Doomsday Book.

D.B.A. Abbreviation for "doing business as."

D.B.E. An abbreviation for de bene esse (q.v.).

D.B.N. An abbreviation for de bonis non; descriptive of a species of administration.

D.C. An abbreviation standing either for "District Court," or "District of Columbia."

DDB. Double-declining-balance depreciation. See Depreciation.

De. A Latin preposition, signifying of; by; from; out of; affecting; concerning; respecting.

Deacon. In ecclesiastical law, a minister or servant in the church, whose office is to assist the priest in divine service and the distribution of the sacrament. It is the lowest degree of holy orders in the Church of England.

De acquiando rerum dominio. Of (about) acquiring the ownership of things.

Dead. See Death.

Dead asset. Worthless asset which has no realizable value; e.g., uncollectable account receivable.

Deadbeat. Slang term for one who fails to pay his debts.

Dead body. A corpse. The body of a human being, deprived of life.

Dead-born. A dead-born child is to be considered as if it had never been conceived or born; in other words, it is presumed it never had life, it being a maxim of the common law that mortuus exitus non est exitus (a dead birth is no birth). This is also the doctrine of the civil law.
Deadly weapon. The amount paid by a charterer for that part of the vessel's capacity which he does not occupy although he has contracted for it.

Dead letter. A term sometimes applied to a law that has become obsolete by long disuse, and also to a letter that is undeliverable by the postal service because of insufficient address or postage and absence of return address.

Deadlocked. Unable to agree.

Corporation. Deadlock in a closely held corporation arises when a control structure permits one or more factions of shareholders to block corporate action if they disagree with some aspect of corporate policy. A deadlock often arises with respect to the election of directors, e.g., by an equal division of shares between two factions, but may also arise at the level of the board of directors itself. Term as used in statute empowering court to dissolve corporation when directors are deadlocked, means corporation which, because of decision or indecision of stockholders, cannot perform its corporate powers. Kolbbaum v. K & K Chevrolet, Inc., 196 Neb. 555, 244 N.W.2d 173, 177. See Rev.Model Bus.Corp. Act § 14.30(2) (involuntary dissolution at request of shareholder).

Jury. Jury which cannot agree on verdict; sometimes called "hung jury". Trial court should not repeatedly give an "anti-deadlock" instruction to "deadlocked jury," which is one which trial judge has concluded is genuinely deadlocked, giving due consideration to such things as nature and complexity of trial issues, duration of trial, length of jury deliberations, and representations of jury to court about state of deliberations. Epperson v. U.S., D.C.App., 495 A.2d 1170, 1172. See also Dynamite instruction.

Deadly force. The degree of force that may result in the death of the person against whom the force is applied. Force likely or intended to cause death or great bodily harm; may be reasonable or unreasonable, depending on the circumstances.

Deadly weapon. Any firearm, or other weapon, device, instrument, material or substance, whether animate or inanimate, which in the manner it is used or is intended to be used is known to be capable of producing death or serious bodily injury. Model Penal Code, § 210.0. See also 18 U.S.C.A. § 921.

Such weapons or instruments as are made and designed for offensive or defensive purposes, or for the destruction of life or the infliction of injury. One which, from the manner used, is calculated or likely to produce death or serious bodily injury. Austin v. State, Fla. App., 336 So.2d 480, 481. See also Dangerous weapon; Malicious assault with deadly weapon.

Deadly weapon per se. A weapon which of itself is deadly or one which would ordinarily result in death by its use; e.g. gun. Baylor v. State, 151 Tex.Cr.R. 365, 208 S.W.2d 558, 561.

Dead man's part. In English law, that portion of the effects of a deceased person which, by the custom of London and York, is allowed to the administrator, being, where the deceased leaves a widow and children, one-third; where he leaves only a widow or only children, one-half; and, where he leaves neither, the whole. This portion the administrator was wont to apply to his own use, till the statute 1 Jac. II, c. 17, declared that the same should be subject to the statute of distributions. 2 Bl.Comm. 518.

Dead man's statute. An evidential disqualification which renders inadmissible oral promises or declarations of a dead person when offered in support of their claims by those who bring claims against the estate of the dead person. The last vestige of the disqualification of witnesses by reason of interest as this existed at common law, though many states admit such testimony under certain statutory conditions. The standard type of state dead man statute would be applicable under Fed.R.Evid. 601 only if testimony of the witness concerned claims or defenses, or elements thereof, which were governed by state law.

De admensuratione /diy ædmenshøréyshiyówyiy/. Of admeasurement. Thus, de admensuratione dotis was a writ for the admeasurement of dower, and de admensuratione pastura was a writ for the admeasurement of pasture.

Dead-pledge. A mortgage, mortuum vadium.

Dead rent. In English law, a rent payable on a mining lease in addition to a royalty, so called because it is payable although the mine may not be worked.

Dead stock. Goods in inventory for which there is no market.

Dead storage. The storage, especially of automobiles in public garages, where automobiles not in use are to remain uninterrupted for a time, sometimes for the season.

Dead time. Time which does not count for any purpose, e.g. time for which a person is not paid wages, or time when employee is not working due to no fault of his own (e.g. because of machinery breakdown), or time for which a prisoner does not get credit in serving his sentence.

Dead use. A future use.

De advisamento consilii nostri /diy ædváyzaméntow kanzlifíyay nóstroy/. L. Lat. With or by the advice of our council. A phrase used in the old writs of summons to parliament.

De equitate /diy ēkwáteatyi/. In equity, de jure stricto, nihil possum vendicare, de equitate tamen, nullo modo hoc obinet; in strict law. I can claim nothing, but in equity this by no means obtains.

De estimato /diy éstamétyow/. In Roman law, one of the innominate contracts, and, in effect, a sale of land or goods at a price fixed (estimato), and guaranteed by some third party, who undertook to find a purchaser.
Deal, n. An arrangement to attain a desired result by a Deaf person. Any person whose hearing is totally impaired or whose hearing is so seriously impaired as to prohibit the person from understanding oral communications when spoken in a normal conversational tone. See Code of Ga. Ann. § 30-1-1.

Deal, v. To traffic; to transact business; to bargain or trade. Also, to act between two persons, to intervene, or to have to do with. As to dealing in futures, see Futures contract.

Dealer. In the popular sense, one who buys to sell; not one who buys to keep, or makes to sell. One who purchases goods or property for resale to final customers; a retailer. See also Retailer.

The term "dealer" means any person engaged in the business of buying and selling securities for his own account, through a broker or otherwise, but does not include a bank, or any person insofar as he buys or sells securities for his own account, either individually or in some fiduciary capacity, but not as a part of a regular business. Securities Exchange Act of 1934, § 3.

Dealer's talk. The puffing of goods to induce the sale thereof; not regarded in law as fraudulent unless accompanied by some artifice to deceive the purchaser and throw him off his guard or some concealment of intrinsic defects not easily discoverable. See Puffing.

Deals. Transactions in the course of trade or business.

De allocatione facienda /diy aeloteky_shiyowniy faekta/. Breve. Writ for making an allowance. An old writ directed to the lord treasurer and barons of the exchequer, for allowing certain officers (as collectors of customs) in their accounts certain payments made by them.

De alto et basso /diy aeltow et bəsov/. Of high and low. A phrase anciently used to denote the absolute submission of all differences to arbitration.

De ambitu /diy ämbatyuw/. Lat. Concerning bribery. A phrase descriptive of the subject-matter of several of the Roman laws; as the Lex Aufidia, the Lex Pompeia, the Lex Tullia, and others. See Ambitus.

De ampliori gratia /diy amplyowray grýeys(iy)b/. Of more abundant or especial grace.

Dean. Administrative or academic head of school, college or university. There may be several kinds of deans in larger schools (e.g. dean of student affairs, academic dean) and also deans of specific schools within university. Administrator in charge of counseling and disciplining students in college or secondary school.

In England, an ecclesiastical dignitary who presides over the chapter of a cathedral, and is next in rank to the bishop. So called from having been originally appointed to superintend ten canons or prebendaries. 1 Bl.Comm. 382.

De anno bisextilis /diy änow báysekttáylay/. Of the bissextile or leap year. The title of a statute passed in the twenty-first year of Henry III, which in fact, however, is nothing more than a sort of writ or direction to the justices of the bench, instructing them how the extraordinary day in the leap year was to be reckoned in cases where persons had a day to appear at the distance of a year, as on the essoin de malo lecti, and the like. It was thereby directed that the additional day should, together with that which went before, be reckoned only as one, and so, of course, within the preceding year.

De annua pensione /diy änyuws pënshiyowniy/. Breve. Writ of annual pension. An ancient writ by which the king, having a yearly pension due him out of an abbey or priory for any of his chaplains, demanded the same of the abbot or prior, for the person named in the writ.

De annuo reditu /diy änyuwow rédstayuw/. For a yearly rent. A writ to recover an annuity, no matter how payable, in goods or money.

Dean of the Arches. In England, the presiding judge of the Court of Arches (q.v.).

De apostata capiendo /diy äpostéyta käpiyéndow/. Breve. Writ for taking an apostate. A writ which ancienly lay against one who, having entered and professed some order of religion, left it and wandered up and down the country, contrary to the rules of his order, commanding the sheriff to apprehend him and deliver him again to his abbot or prior.

De arbitratione facta /diy äyrbréyshiýowniy fákta/. (Lat. Of arbitration had.) A writ formerly used when an action was brought for a cause which had been settled by arbitration.

De arrestandis bonis ne dissipentur /diy äyrståndos bównas níy dáspántar/. An old writ which lay to seize goods in the hands of a party during the pendency of a suit, to prevent their being made away with.

De arrestando ipsum qui pecuniam receptit /diy äyrståndow ipsum kwáy š kýuwñiyami ayšiyat/. A writ which lay for the arrest of one who had taken the king's money to serve in the war, and hid himself to escape going.

De asportatis religiosorum /diy äsporterëtës ra-liýyow-sórom/. Concerning the property of religious persons carried away. The title of the statute 35 Edward I, passed to check the abuses of clerical possessions, one of which was the waste they suffered by being drained into foreign countries.

De assisa proroganda /diy sáayxa prôwragaänd/. (Lat. For proroguing assise.) A writ to put off an assise, Death. The cessation of life; permanent cessations of all vital functions and signs. Numerous states have enacted statutory definitions of death which include brain-related criteria. For example, many states have adopted, sometimes with variations, the Uniform Determination of Death Act definition: "An individual who has sustained either (1) irreversible cessation of circulatory and respiratory function, or (2) irreversible cessation of all functions of the entire brain, including the brain stem, is dead. A determination of death must be made in accordance with accepted medical standards." See, e.g., Calif. Health & Safety Code, § 7180. See also Swafford v. State, Ind., 421 N.E.2d 596, 602.

See also Contemplation of death; Presumption of death; Simultaneous Death Act; Wrongful death action.

Brain death. See Brain death; and Natural Death Acts, below.

Civil death. See Civil death.

Death benefits. Amount paid under insurance policy on death of insured. A payment made by an employer to the beneficiary or beneficiaries of a deceased employee on account of the death of the employee. A death benefit is also provided for under the Social Security Act.

Death by wrongful act. Statutory action arising from act to which law attaches liability as in the case of serving unwholesome food that results in death, the action for which may be brought by personal representative of deceased. See also Wrongful death statutes.

Death certificate. Official document issued by Register of Deaths or some other public official which certifies that a person has died. Generally such certificate specifies the cause of death, and is commonly required to be signed by the attending or an examining physician. Fed. Evid. R. 803(9) provides a hearsay exception for admissibility of death certificates.

Death duty. See Death taxes, below.

Death penalty. Supreme penalty exacted as punishment for murder and other capital crimes. The death penalty has been held to not be, under all circumstances, cruel and unusual punishment within prohibitions of 8th and 14th Amends. U.S. Const., Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 96 S.Ct. 2909, 49 L.Ed.2d 859; nor does the 6th Amendment require a jury trial on the sentencing issue of life or death, Spaziano v. Florida, 468 U.S. 447, 104 S.Ct. 3154, 82 L.Ed.2d 340.

Death records. Official records of deaths kept by town or city Register of Deaths or by some other public official with like functions. See Death certificate, above.

Death sentence. See Death penalty, above.

Death taxes. Generic term to describe all taxes imposed on property or on transfer of property at death of owner. Includes estate and inheritance taxes. See Estate tax; Inheritance tax.

Death warrant. A warrant from the proper executive authority appointing the time and place for the execution of the sentence of death upon a convict judicially condemned to suffer that penalty.

Fetal death. See Fetal death.

Instantaneous death. Term to describe death following accident within a very short time such as 15–20 minutes; such concept is important in death actions in which a claim is made for pain and suffering.

Natural death. A death which occurs by the unassisted operation of natural causes, as distinguished not only from "civil death", but also from "unnatural" (e.g. violent) death.

Natural Death Acts. Such statutes (e.g. Cal. Health & Safety Code § 7185 et seq.) authorize an adult to make a written directive instructing his physician to withhold life-sustaining procedures in the event of a terminal condition. In the directive, which is to be executed in a prescribed manner and made a part of the patient’s medical records, the declarant directs that if he has been certified by two physicians as being afflicted with a terminal condition, he is to be permitted to die naturally. The Act removes all civil or criminal liability from physicians who act in accordance with its provisions. It has been held that unwritten right of privacy is broad enough to include patient’s decision to decline medical treatment in certain circumstances. Matter of Quinlan, 70 N.J. 10, 355 A.2d 647, 663. See also Brain death; Will (Living will).

Presumptive death. That which is presumed from proof of a long continued absence unheard from and unexplained. The general rule, as provided by state statutes, is that the presumption of the duration of life ceases at the expiration of seven years from the time when the person was last known to be living; and after the lapse of that period there is a presumption of death.

Violent death. One caused or accelerated by the interference of human agency; distinguished from "natural death."

Death action. See Wrongful death action.

Death Knell Doctrine. Doctrine which allows immediate appeal from interlocutory order where delay of review until final judgment will cause irreparable loss of substantial rights and where order has practical effect of permanently foreclosing relief on claim. Moshe Meyrowitz, D.C., P.A. v. Howard, Me., 507 A.2d 578, 580.

Deathman. The executioner; hangman; person who executes capital punishment.

Death’s part. See Dead man’s part.

Death trap. A structure or situation involving imminent risk of death or a place apparently safe but actual De attornato recipiendo /diy átarnétov rasipiyéndow/. A writ which lay to the judges of a court, requiring them to receive and admit an attorney for a party.

De audiendo et terminando /diy ódýyéndow ét térmanýéndow/. For hearing and determining; to hear and determine. The name of a writ, or rather commission granted to certain justices to hear and determine cases of heinous misdemeanor, trespass, riotous breach of the peace, etc. See Oyer and terminer.

De averis captis in withernamium /diy avariyas kérptas an widameymiyam/. Writ for taking cattle in withernam. A writ which lay where the sheriff returned to a pluríes writ of replevin that the cattle or goods, etc., were elioned, etc.; by which he was commanded to take the cattle of the defendant in withernam (or reprisal), and detain them until he could replevy the other cattle. See Withernam.

De averis replegiandis /diy avariyas rapliyjiýásdas/. A writ to replevy beasts. 3 Bl.Comm. 149.

De banco /diy bésnkow/. Of the bench. A term formerly applied in England to the justices of the court of common pleas, or “bench,” as it was originally styled.

Debarment. To bar, exclude or preclude from having or doing something. Exclusion from government contract or from bidding on contracts. 18 Am.Jur. 466, 467; 8 Am.Jur. 683; 12 S.Ct. 315.

Debasement. Reducing the weight of gold and silver in coins or bullion. See also Disbarment.

De averis replegiandis /diy avariyas rapliyjiýásdas/. A writ to replevy beasts. 3 Bl.Comm. 149.

De bene esse /diy biýni biýi/da biýniy*/. Conditionally; provisionally; in anticipation of future need. A phrase applied to proceedings which are taken ex parte or provisionally, and are allowed to stand as well done for the present, but which may be subject to future exception or challenge, and must then stand or fall according to their intrinsic merit and regularity.

Examination de bene esse. A provisional examination of a witness. An examination of a witness whose testimony is important and might otherwise be lost, held out of court and before the trial, with the proviso that the deposition so taken may be used on the trial in case the witness is unable to attend in person at that time or cannot be produced. See e.g. Fed.R.Civ.P. 26, 27.

Debet /dabéntyər/. Long term unsecured debt instrument, issued pursuant to an indenture. A promissory note or bond backed by the general credit of a corporation and usually not secured by a mortgage or lien on any specific property; e.g., an unsecured bond. Holders of corporate debentures are creditors of the corporation and entitled to payment before shareholders upon dissolution. See also Bond; Indenture. Compare Secured bond.

Certificate issued by customs to an importer for the deduction or refund of duties on merchandise imported and then exported by such importer.

Convertible debenture. Debenture which may be changed or converted into some other security (e.g., stock) usually at the option of the holder.

Convertible subordinated debenture. Debenture which is subject or subordinate to prior payment of other indebtedness but which may be converted into another form of security.

Sinking fund debenture. Debenture which is secured by periodic payments into sinking fund, commonly managed by trustee for purpose of retiring such debt.

Subordinate debenture. Debenture which is subject to or subordinate to prior payment of other indebtedness.

Debenture bond. Bonds not secured by any specific property but issued against the general credit of a corporation or government.

Debenture indenture. An indenture containing obligations not secured by a mortgage or other collateral; a key instrument in the process of long term debt financing for general business corporations. Its effect is to put the debenture-holder in substantially the same practical position as a bondholder secured by a first mortgage. See also Indenture.

Debenture stock. In England, a stock or fund representing money borrowed by a company or public body and charged on the whole or part of its property. An issue of stock usually irredeemable and transferable in any amount, not including a fraction of a pound. The terminability and fixity in amount of debentures being inconvenient to lenders led to their being in many cases superseded by debenture stock.

Debet esse finis litium /débetesiy fáynes lísh(i)yam/. There ought to be an end of suits; there should be some period put to litigation.

Debet et detinet /débet et détanet/. (Lat. He owes and detains.) Words anciently used in the original writ (and now, in English, in the plaintiff’s declaration), in an action of debt, where it was brought by one of the original contracting parties who personally gave the credit, against the other who personally incurred the debt, or against his heirs, if they were bound to the payment; as by the obligee against the obligor, by the landlord against the tenant, etc. The declaration, in such cases, states that the defendant “owes to,” as well Debita sequuntur personam debitoris /debita sak-wántar pás-bó-sén debátó-ras/. Debts follow the person of the debtor; that is, they have no locality, and may be collected wherever the debtor can be found.

Debit balance. Account balance showing money owed to lender or seller. Accounting condition where there is an excess of debit over credit entries.

Debitor /débató-r/. In the civil and old English law, a debtor.

Debitor non præsumitur donare /débató-r nón pra-sýum-mitó-r donáriy/. A debtor is not presumed to make a gift. Whatever disposition he makes of his property is supposed to be in satisfaction of his debts. Where a debtor gives money or goods, or grants land to his creditor, the natural presumption is that he means to get free from his obligation, and not to make a present, unless donation be expressed.

Debitorum pactio-nibus creditorum petitio nec tolli debitorum pactionibus creditorum petitio nec tolli /débató-rum pás-khó-yónwás-nas kredató-rum pás-khó-yónwás-nas debótó-rum pactionibus creditorum petitio nec tolli/. The title of the English statute 4 Edw. I, St. 3; so called from the initial words of the fifth chapter.

De debito et detinet /débató et dé-jént/. Where the declaration merely states that the defendant detains the debt (as in actions by and against an executor for a debt due to or from the testator), the action is said to be “in the detinet” alone. 3 Bl. Comm. 155.

Debtorum pactionibus creditorum petitio nec tolli
Debitorum pactionibus creditorum petitio nec tolli
Debitorum pactionibus creditorum petitio nec tolli /débató-rum pactionibus creditorum petitio nec tolli/. The rights of creditors can neither be taken away nor diminished by agreements among (or of) the debtors.

Debitrix /débatróx/. A female debtor.

Debitum sine brevi /debatam syuwa briyviy/. L. Lat. In old English law, debts of the laity, or of lay persons. Debts recoverable in the civil courts.

Debitum et contractus sunt nullius loci /debatam et kantrí-kta sánt ná-lá-yas ló-wáy/. Debt and contract are of [belong to] no place; have no particular locality. The obligation in these cases is purely personal, and actions to enforce it may be brought anywhere.

Debitum in praesenti solvendum in futuro /debatam in prás-éntay solvendam in fyá-ti-rów/. A debt or obligation complete when contracted, but of which the performance cannot be required till some future period.

Debitum sine brevi /debatam syuwa briyviy/. L. Lat. Debt without writ; debt without a declaration. In old practice, this term denoted an action begun by original bill, instead of by writ. In modern usage, it is sometimes applied to a debt evidenced by confession of judgment without suit. The equivalent Norman-French phrase was “debit sans breve.” Both are abbreviated to d.s.b.

De bonis asportatis /dý bównas ás-pórtay-tás/. For goods taken away; for taking away goods. The action of trespass for taking personal property is technically called “trespass de bonis asportatis.”

De bonis non /dý bównas nón/. An abbreviation of De bonis non administratís (q.v.).

De bonis non administratís /dý bównas nón ad-ministratí-sás/. Of the goods not administered. When an administrator is appointed to succeed another, who has left the estate partially unsettled, he is said to be granted “administration de bonis non;” that is, of the goods not already administered.

De bonis non amovendis /dý bównas nón éyd-svéndás/. Writ for not removing goods. A writ anciently directed to the sheriffs of London, commanding them, in cases where a writ of error was brought by a defendant against whom a judgment was recovered, to see that his goods and chattels were safely kept without being removed, while the error remained undetermined, so that execution might be had of them, etc.

De bonis propriis /di bównas próprijas/. Of his own goods. The technical name of a judgment against an administrator or executor to be satisfied from his own property, and not from the estate of the deceased, as in cases where he has been guilty of a devastavit or of a false plea of plene administravit.

De bonis testatoris, or intestati /di bównas téštátorís/`intestátyay/. Of the goods of the testator, or intestate. A term applied to a judgment awarding execution against the property of a testator or intestate, as distinguished from the individual property of his executor or administrator.

De bonis testatoris ac si /di bównas téštátorís `ák sáy/ (Lat. From the goods of the testator, if he has any, and, if not, from those of the executor). A judgment rendered where an executor falsely pleads any matter as a release, or, generally, in any case where he is to be charged in case his testator’s estate is insufficient.

De bono et malo /di bównow et mælow/ /See De bien et de mal/. De bono gestu /di bównow jéstyuw/. For good behavior; for good abearance.

A fixed and certain obligation to pay money or some other valuable thing or things, either in the present or in the future. In a still more general sense, that which is due from one person to another, whether money, goods, or services. In a broad sense, any duty to respond to another in money, labor, or service; it may even mean a moral or honorary obligation, unenforceable by legal action. Also, sometimes an aggregate of separate debts, or the total sum of the existing claims against a person or company. Thus we speak of the "national debt", the "bonded debt" of a corporation, etc.

Active debt. One due to a person. Used in the civil law.

Ancestral debt. One of an ancestor which the law compels the heir to pay.

Antecedent debt. See that title.

Bad debt. Uncollectible account receivable. Under National Bank Act, an unsecured debt on which interest or payment is past due for at least six months. See also Bad debt; Bad debt reserve.

Bonded debt. Debt represented by bonds. See Bonded debt.

Common-law action. The name of a common-law action which lies to recover a certain specific sum of money, or a sum that can readily be reduced to a certainty. It is thus distinguished from assumpsit, which lies as well where the sum due is uncertain as where it is certain, and from covenant, which lies only upon contracts evidenced in a certain manner.

It is said to lie in the debet and detinet (when it is stated that the defendant owes and detains), or in the detinet (when it is stated merely that he detains). Debt in the detinet for goods differs from detinue, because it is not essential in this action, as in destine, that the specific property in the goods should have been vested in the plaintiff at the time the action is brought.

Consumer debt. See Consumer debt.

Contingent debt. See Contingent debt.

Convertible debt. Debt which may be changed or converted by creditor into another form of security, e.g., shares of stock. See Debenture (Convertible debenture).

Debt by simple contract. A debt or demand founded upon a verbal or implied contract, or upon any written agreement that is not under seal.

Debt by specialty or special contract. A debt due, or acknowledged to be due, by some deed or instrument under seal; as a deed of covenant or sale, a lease reservation, or a bond or obligation. 2 Bl.Comm. 465.

Debt of record. A debt which appears to be due by the evidence of a court of record, as by a judgment or recognizance. 2 Bl.Comm. 465.

Existing debt. See Existing debt.

Floating debt. Short-term or current debt, not represented by securities.

Fraudulent debt. A debt created by fraud. Such a debt implies confidence and deception. It implies that it arose out of a contract, express or implied, and that fraudulent practices were employed by the debtor, by which the creditor was defrauded.

Funded debt. Debt represented by bonds or other securities.

General debt. See that title.

Hypothecary debt. One which is a lien upon an estate.

Installment debt. Debt which is to be repaid in installments; e.g. retail installment contract.

Judgment debt. See Judgment debt.

Legal debts. Those that are recoverable in a court of law, as debt on a bill of exchange, a bond, or a simple contract.

Liquid debt. One which is immediately and unconditionally due. See also Liquidated debt.

Mutual debts. Money due on both sides between two persons. Such debts must be due to and from same persons in same capacity. Cross debts in the same capacity and right, and of the same kind and quality.
Debt-equity ratio. A amount arrived at by dividing total liabilities by total equity of an entity (e.g., total liabilities of corporation divided by total shareholders' equity). A high debt ratio is an indication that the entity may have difficulty meeting obligations which come due. A bank may be reluctant to provide financing to an entity with a high debt ratio due to the risks associated with repayment. See also Debt ratio.

Debt financing. Raising funds by issuing bonds or notes or borrowing from a financial institution. Contrast with equity financing which is raising funds by issuing and selling stocks. Corporate borrowing of money, generally on a long term basis for acquiring working capital or for retiring current indebtedness.

Debt instrument. Written promise to repay debt; e.g., promissory note, bill, bond, commercial paper.

Debt limitations. Ceiling placed on amount of borrowings by individuals, corporations or governments. Certain state constitutions prohibit deficit spending by government.

Debtor. One who owes a debt to another who is called the creditor; one who may be compelled to pay a claim or demand; anyone liable on a claim, whether due or to become due. First Nat. Bank & Trust Co. in Macon v. Kunes, 128 Ga.App. 565, 197 S.E.2d 446, 449.

"Debtor" means "the person who owes payment or other performance of the obligation secured, whether or not he owns or has rights in the collateral, and includes the seller of accounts or chattel paper. Where the debtor and the owner of the collateral are not the same person, the term 'debtor' means the owner of the collateral in any provision of the Article dealing with the collateral, the obligor in any provision dealing with the obligation, and may include both where the context so requires." U.C.C. § 9-105(1)(d).

In bankruptcy law, person who files a voluntary petition or person against whom an involuntary petition is filed. Person or municipality concerning which a bankruptcy case has been commenced. Bankruptcy Code, § 101. See Bankruptcy.

See also Absconding debtor; Joint debtors.

Judgment debtor. One who owes money as a result of a judgment in favor of a creditor.

Debtor in possession. In bankruptcy, refers to debtor in a Bankruptcy Code Chapter 11 or Chapter 12 case. For example, in a Chapter 11 case either the debtor will remain in control of its business or assets or a trustee will be appointed to take control of the business or assets.

Debt pooling. Arrangement by which debtor adjusts many debts by distributing his assets among several creditors, who may or may not agree to take less than is owed; or, an arrangement by which debtor agrees to pay in regular installments a sum of money to one creditor who agrees to discharge all his debts. Such activities may constitute unauthorized practice of law (as in e.g. Mass.), and formerly could be an act of bankruptcy. See Act of bankruptcy; Arrangement with creditors; Assignment (Assignment for benefit of creditors); Bankruptcy proceedings; Wage earner's plan.
Debt ratio. Amount of long-term debt divided by total of company's capital. See also Debt-equity ratio.

Debt retirement. Repayment of debt.

Debt security. Any form of corporate security reflected as debt on the books of the corporation in contrast to equity securities such as stock; e.g., bonds, notes and debentures are debt securities.

Debt service. The interest and charges currently payable on a debt, including principal payments.

De cetero /diy siytarow/. Henceforth.

De calceto reparando /diy kělsťow rěporąndow/. Writ for repairing a causeway. An old English writ by which the sheriff was commanded to distrain the inhabitants of a place to repair and maintain a causeway, etc.

Decalogue /dekaldg/. The ten commandments which, according to Exodus XX, 1-18, were given by God to Moses. The Jews called them the "Ten Words," hence the name.

Decanus /dakeynas/. In ecclesiastical and old European law, an officer having supervision over ten; a dean. A term applied not only to ecclesiastical, but to civil and military, officers. Decanus monasticus; a monastic dean, or dean of a monastery; an officer over ten monks. Decanus in majori ecclesiae; dean of a cathedral church, presiding over ten prebendaries. Decanus episcopi; a bishop's or rural dean, presiding over ten clerks or parishes. Decanus fröbordi; dean of a friborg. An officer among the Saxons who presided over a friborg, tithing, decennary, or association of ten inhabitants; otherwise called a "tithing man," or "borsholder," his duties being those of an inferior judicial officer. Decanus militaris; a military officer having command of ten soldiers.

In Roman law, an officer having the command of a company or "mess" of ten soldiers. Also an officer at Constantinople having charge of the burial of the dead.

De capitalibus dominis feodi /diy kępotěyelabas dōmanay fi(y)saday/. Of the chief lords of the fee.

Decapitation. The act of beheading. A mode of capital punishment by cutting off the head.

De capite minutis /diy kępatiy manyũwťas/. Of those who have lost their status, or civil condition. The name of a title in the Pandects. See Capitis dominio.

De cartis reddendis /diy kārtas rěděndas/. For restoring charters. A writ to secure the delivery of charters or deeds; a writ of detinue.

De catallis reddendis /dīy kätělas rěděndas/. For restoring chattels. A writ to secure the return specifically of chattels detained from the owner.

De cautione admittenda /diy kōhijowniy ēdmětěndas/. Writ to take caution or security. A writ which anciently lay against a bishop who held an excommunicated person in prison for his contempt, notwithstanding he had offered sufficient security (idoneam cautioinem) to obey the commands of the church; commanding him to take such security and release the prisoner.

Decese, n. Death; not including civil death. See Death.

Decese, v. To die; to depart life, or from life.

Deceased. A dead person. See Decedent.

Decedent. A deceased person, especially one who has lately died. Etymologically the word denotes a person who is dying, but it has come to be used in law as signifying any deceased person, testate or intestate.

Decedent’s estate. Property, both real and personal, which person possesses at the time of his death, and to it descends immediately to his heirs upon his death subject to the control of the probate court for the purposes of paying debts and claims and after distribution the estate ceases to exist. Mathey v. Mathey, 109 Mont. 467, 98 P.2d 373, 375.

Deceit. A fraudulent and deceptive misrepresentation, artifice, or device, used by one or more persons to deceive and trick another, who is ignorant of the true facts, to the prejudice and damage of the party imposed upon. To constitute "deceit," the statement must be untrue, made with knowledge of its falsity or with reckless and conscious ignorance thereof, especially if parties are not on equal terms, made with intent that plaintiff act thereon or in a manner apparently fitted to induce him to act thereon, and plaintiff must act in reliance on the statement in the manner contemplated, or manifestly probable, to his injury. See also Fraud; Misrepresentation; Reliance. For larceny by deceit, see Larceny.

In old English law, the name of an original writ, and the action founded on it, which lay to recover damages for any injury committed deceitfully, either in the name of another (as by bringing an action in another's name, and then suffering a nonsuit, whereby the plaintiff became liable to costs), or by a fraudulent warranty of goods, or other personal injury committed contrary to good faith and honesty. Also the name of a judicial writ which formerly lay to recover lands which had been lost by default by the tenant in a real action, in consequence of his not having been summoned by the sheriff, or by the collusion of his attorney.

Decem tales /děsəm téyliyz/. Ten such; or ten tales, jurors. In practice, the name of a writ which issued in England, where, on a trial at bar, ten jurors were necessary to make up a full panel, commanding the sheriff to summon the requisite number. 3 Bl.Comm. 364.
Decemviri litibus judicandis /dsémviray láytábs júdáskéndáes/. Lat. In the Roman law, ten persons (five senators and five equites) who acted as the council or assistants of the praeator, when he decided on matters of law.

Decency. Propriety of action, speech, dress, etc.

Decennary /dasepshiyowny/. An old writ which lay deserted, non decipientibus, jura subveniunt. Decennarius /dasenarriyas/. Lat. One who held one-half a virgate of land. One of the ten freeholders in a decennary. Decennier. One of the decennarii, or ten freeholders making up a tithing. 1 Bl.Comm. 114.

Decency /daseórya/. At common law a tithing, composed of ten neighboring families. 1 Bl.Comm. 114.

Deception. The act of deceiving; intentional misleading by falsehood spoken or acted. Synonymous with fraud. Jackman v. Mau, 78 C.A. 234, 177 P.2d 599, 605. Knowingly and willfully making a false statement or representation, express or implied, pertaining to a past existing fact. See also Bait and switch; Deceit; Fraud; Misrepresentation; Theft (theft by deception).

Deceptione /dséshiyówny/. An old writ which lay properly against one that deceitfully did anything in the name of another, for one that was damaged thereby. It was either original or judicial.

Decepsit non deciplentibus, jura subveniunt /dséptas nón dasipiyéntabas, júra sábviániyont/. The laws help persons who are deceived, not those deceiving.

Deceptive advertising. False and misleading advertising. Advertisement which contains any assertion, representation or statement of fact which is untrue or misleading.

Where the public are not cautious or watchful in their buying habits and are likely to be misled, the legislature may require not only the absence of active deception in advertising, but also affirmative measures to prevent misunderstanding. Com. v. Ferris, 305 Mass. 233, 25 N.E.2d 378. See e.g., Mass.G.L. c. 266, § 91; 15 U.S. C.A. § 52 et seq.

See also Deceptive sales practices.

Deceptive sales practices. The Federal Trade Commission and statutes in most states make deceptive sales practices unlawful. Historically, an act was deceptive if it had any tendency to deceive a nontrivial number of customers. A more recent reformulation of the test defines a deceptive act as one which is likely to deceive a consumer acting reasonably in the circumstances. See, e.g., Mass.G.L. c. 93A, § 21(a); 15 U.S.C.A. § 45(aX).

As term is used in consumer protection statutes, may import less than common law fraud in sale of goods or services though there must be some measure of deceit. Slaney v. Westwood Auto, Inc., 366 Mass. 688, 322 N.E.2d 768, 779. A sales practice may be deceptive if it could reasonably be found to have caused person to act differently from way he otherwise would have acted.

Such practices may encompass any type of business practice or action which deceives consumers, but acts or practices which are not among those listed by statute present jury question of whether action was deceptive. Southwest Lincoln–Mercury, Inc. v. Ross, Tex.Civ.App., 580 S.W.2d 2, 5. See, e.g., Bait and switch.

See also Consumer protection laws; Deceptive advertising.

De certificando /diy sårtofakándow/. A writ requiring a thing to be certified. A kind of certiorari.

Decertification. Process through which a group of employees decides it no longer wants a union to be its bargaining unit. The process involves an election conducted by the National Labor Relations Board.

De certiorando /diy sårsh(y)rándow/. A writ for certifying. A writ directed to the sheriff, requiring him to certify to a particular fact.

Decessus /daséesas/. In the civil and old English law, death; departure.

Decet tamen principem servare leges quibus ipse servatus est /diyyst támam prínsapam sórvérí líjyyjí kwibes ísipí sórvéríes ést/. It behooves, indeed, the prince to keep the laws by which he himself is preserved.

De champertia /diy kəmpórrh(ī)yər/. Writ of champertery. A writ directed to the justices of the bench, commanding the enforcement of the statute of champertors.

De char et de sank /da chúr éy dasóŋ(k)/. L. Fr. Of flesh and blood. Affaire rechat de char et de sank. Words used in claiming a person to be a villein, in the time of Edward II.

De chimino /diy kímanow/. A writ for the enforcement of a right of way.

De cibaris utendis /diy sóbéríyás yuwténds/. Of victuals to be used. The title of a sumptuary statute passed 10 Edw. III, St. 3, to restrain the expense of entertainments.

Decide. To arrive at a determination. To “decide” includes the power and right to deliberate, to weigh the reasons for and against, to see which preponderate, and to be governed by that preponderance. See Decision.

Decies tantum /déshiyiyz tántam/. Ten times as much. The name of an ancient writ that was used against a thief to hold him to the amount of the bribe.

Decima /diy saṃiy/ In ecclesiastical law, tenths, or a thing to be certified. A kind of certiorari.

Decimae debentur parocho /desamiy dabentar parowしよう/. In ecclesiastical law, tenths, or one-tenth of the annual profit of each living, payable formerly to the pope. There were severals valuations made of these livings at different times. The name of an ancient writ that was used against a juror who had taken a bribe in money for his verdict. The injured party could thus recover ten times the amount of the bribe.

Decima /diy saṃiy/ In ecclesiastical law, tenths, or a thing to be certified. A kind of certiorari.

Decimae /desamiy/. In ecclesiastical law, tenths, or one-tenth of the annual profit of each living, payable formerly to the pope. There were severals valuations made of these livings at different times. The name of an ancient writ that was used against a juror who had taken a bribe in money for his verdict. The injured party could thus recover ten times the amount of the bribe.

Decimae de decimatis solvi non debent /désamiy diy dëssëmyëtas sólvay nôn dëbánt/. Tithes are not to be paid from that which is given for tithes.

Decimae de jure divino et canonica institutione pertinent ad personam /désamiy diy jùriy dávâynow ét koànánëka inøstáywësáwiyóni pértanant ád parsówunam/. Tithes belong to the parson by divine right and canonical institution.

Decimae non debent solvi, ubi non est annua renovatio; et ex annuatís renovantibus simul semel /désamiy nôn débánt sólvay, yùwëbey nôn èst ánýwës rënnëvésh(yiy)ow; ét èks ánýwëyes rënnëvéntëbas säymal sémal/. Tithes ought not to be paid where there is not an annual renovation, and from annual renovations once only.

Decimation. The punishing of every tenth soldier by lot, for mutiny or other failure of duty. This was termed "decimatio legionis" by the Romans. Sometimes only the twentieth man was punished (vicesimatio), or the hundredth (centesimatio).

Decipi quam fallere est tutius /dësapay kwëm fàlariy èst tyùwësh(yiy)as/. It is safer to be deceived than to deceive.

Decision. A determination arrived at after consideration of facts, and, in legal context, law. A popular rather than technical or legal word; a comprehensive term having no fixed, legal meaning. It may be employed as referring to ministerial acts as well as to those that are judicial or of a judicial character.

A determination of a judicial or quasi judicial nature. A judgment, decree, or order pronounced by a court in settlement of a controversy submitted to it and by way of authoritative answer to the questions raised before it. The term is broad enough to cover both final judgments and interlocutory orders. And though sometimes limited to the sense of judgment, the term is at other times understood as meaning simply the first step leading to a judgment; or as an order for judgment. The word may also include various rulings, as well as orders, including agency and commission orders. U. S. v. Thompson, 251 U. S. 407, 40 S.Ct. 289, 291, 64 L.Ed. 333.

The findings of fact and conclusions of law which must be in writing and filed with the clerk. Wilcox v. Sway, 69 Cal.App.2d 560, 160 P.2d 154, 156.

"Decision" is not necessarily synonymous with "opinion." A decision of the court is its judgment; the opinion is the reasons given for that judgment, or the expression of the views of the judge. But the two words are sometimes used interchangeably.

See also Decree; Final decision; Finding; Judgment; Opinion; Order; Verdict.

Decisive, or decisory, oath. See Oath.

Decker test. Under the "Decker test," an employee of a corporation, though not a member of its control group, is sufficiently identified with the corporation so that his communication to the corporation's lawyer is privileged where the employee made the communication at the direction of his supervisors and where the subject matter on which the lawyer's advice was sought by the corporation and dealt with in the communication was with the performance by the employee of the duties of his employment. Virginia Elec. & Power Co. v. Sun Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., D.C.Va., 68 F.R.D. 397, 401.

De clamea admittenda in itinere per attornatum /dìy klëýmiyo adëstëndëa in aytinariy par ëtërnëýtëm/. See Clamea admittenda, etc.

Declarant. A person who makes a declaration.

Declaration. In common-law pleading, the first of the pleadings on the part of the plaintiff in an action at law, being a formal and methodical specification of the facts and circumstances constituting his cause or action. It commonly comprises several sections or divisions, called "counts", and its formal parts follow each other in this general order: Title, venue, commencement, cause of action, counts, conclusion. The declaration, at common law, answers to the "libel" in ecclesiastical and admiralty law, the "bill" in equity, the "petition" in civil law, the "complaint" in code and rule pleading, and the "count" in real actions. The term "complaint" is used in the federal courts and in all states that have adopted Rules of Civil Procedure.

In law of evidence, an unsworn statement or narration of facts made by party to the transaction, or by one who has an interest in the existence of the facts recounted. Also, similar statements made by a person since deceased, which are admissible in evidence in some cases, contrary to the general rule, e.g., "dying declarations" (q.v.). See also Declaration against interest, below.

Listing by person entering United States of merchandise or other goods brought into country by him.

The basic governing document or "constitution" for a condominium.

A document by the owner of property which is recorded in order to establish a legal order upon the property, such as a condominium (by a declaration of condominium or master deed), a system of cross-easements (by a declaration of easements), or a homeowners association (by declaration of covenants, restrictions and easements).

Declarations against interest. An out of court statement by a declarant who is unavailable as a witness is admissible as an exception to the rule against hearsay if the statement was against his interest at the time it was made. Under the common law the statement must have been against the pecuniary or proprietary interest of the declarant. Under Federal Rule of Evidence 804(b)(3) and the law of some states, the statement may also be admitted if it was against the penal interest of the declarant. However, the Federal Rule provides that a statement which tends to expose the declarant to crimnal liability and which is "offered to exculpate the accused" is not admissible "unless corroborating circumstances clearly indicate the trustworthiness of the statement."

Such declarations are evidence of the fact declared, and are therefore distinct from admissions, which amount to a waiver of proof. They are statements which, when made, conflict with the pecuniary or proprietary interest of the person making them, or so far tend to subject him to civil or criminal liability, or to render invalid a claim by him against another, that a reasonable man in his position would not have made the statement unless he believed it to be true.

Declaration in chief. A declaration for the principal cause of action.

Declaration of dividend. The act of a corporation in setting aside a portion of its net or surplus income for distribution among the stockholders according to their respective stock ownership. First Nat. Bank & Trust Co. v. Glenn, D.C.Ky., 36 F.Supp. 552, 554. See also Dividend.

Declaration of homestead. Statement required to be filed with proper state or local official or agency showing property ownership for purposes of securing homestead exemption rights. It is merely an act of the owner whereby he avails himself of, and secures, a right or privilege given him by statute; it is neither a conveyance nor a contract, and there is no transfer of, or change in, title, nor any agreement of transfer or change. U.S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Alloway, 173 Wash. 404, 23 P.2d 408. See also Homestead.

Declaration of Independence. A formal declaration or announcement, promulgated July 4, 1776, by the Congress of the United States of America, in the name and behalf of the people of the colonies, asserting and proclaiming their independence of the British crown, vindicating their pretensions to political autonomy, and announcing themselves to the world as a free and independent nation.

Declaration of intention. A declaration made by an alien, as a preliminary to naturalization, before a court of record, to the effect that it is his intention in good faith to become a citizen of the United States, and to renounce forever all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty whereof at the time he may be a citizen or subject. 8 U.S.C.A. § 1445.

Declaration of legitimacy. Formal pronunciation that a person is a legitimate child.

Declaration of right. See Bill of Rights.

Declaration of state of mind. Exception to hearsay rule which permits testimony of out of court statement concerning person's state of mind, e.g. "I am sad". Fed. Evid. R. 803(3).

Declaration of trust. The act by which the person who holds the legal title to property or an estate acknowledges and declares that he holds the same in trust to the use of another person or for certain specified purposes. The name is also used to designate the deed or other writing embodying such a declaration.

Declaration of war. A public and formal proclamation by a nation, through its executive or legislative department, that a state of war exists between itself and another nation, and forbidding all persons to aid or assist the enemy.

An act of Congress is necessary to the commencement of a foreign war and is in itself a "declaration" and fixes the date of the war. Rosenau v. Idaho Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 65 Idaho 408, 145 P.2d 227, 230. See Art. I, Sec. 8, cl. 11, U.S. Const.

Dying declarations. Statements made by a person who believes he is about to die in reference to the manner in which he received the injuries of which he is dying, or other immediate cause of his death, and in reference to the person who inflicted such injuries or the connection with such injuries of a person who is charged or suspected of having committed them. Such statements are admissible in evidence as an exception to the hearsay rule in a trial for homicide (and occasionally, at least in some jurisdictions, in other cases) where the killing of the declarant is the crime charged to the defendant. Shepard v. U.S., Kan., 290 U.S. 96, 54 S.Ct. 22, 78 L.Ed. 196.

Generally, the admissibility of such declarations is limited to use in prosecutions for homicide; but is admissible on behalf of accused as well as for prosecution.

In a prosecution for homicide or in a civil action or proceeding, a statement made by a declarant while believing that his death was imminent, concerning the cause or circumstances of what he believed to be his impending death is not excluded by the hearsay rule. Fed. Evid. R. 804(b)(2).

Self-serving declaration. One made by a party in his own interest at some time and place out of court; not including testimony which he gives as witness at the trial.

Declaration date. The day on which directors of a corporation declare a dividend as contrasted with date on which the dividend is actually paid. See Ex dividend.

Declaration of estimated tax. A tax payment procedure whereby non-wage earner individuals, and wage earners with other income not subject to withholding, as well as corporations are required to file declarations of estimated tax and make periodic payments of such. This requirement assures current collection of taxes from taxpayers whose incomes are not taxed, or fully taxed, by means of payroll withholdings. I.R.C. §§ 6015, 6154. See Estimated tax.

Declaration of Paris. The name given to an agreement announcing four important rules of international law.
Declaratory judgment. Statutory declaration. The law of a party to a controversy where the plaintiff is in doubt as to his legal rights to be observed and wrongs to be eschewed. Statutory declarations, many of which are patterned on The Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act. See Decleraco.

Declaratory judgment. The title of the statute 25 Edw. III, St. 3; containing a variety of provisions on the subject of presentations, indictments of spiritual persons, and the like. Declaratory judgment. To make known, manifest, or clear. To signify, to show in any manner either by words or acts. To publish; to utter; to announce clearly some opinion or resolution. To solemnly assert a fact before witnesses, e.g., where a testator declares a paper signed by him to be his last will and testament. See Declaration.

Decleraco. Declarator of trust. A common law action resorted to against a trustee who holds property upon titles ex facie for his own benefit. Declaratory. Explanatory; designed to fix or elucidate what before was uncertain or doubtful. Declaratory action. See Declaratory judgment.

Decleraco. Declaratory judgment. Statutory (see Declaratory Judgment Act) remedy for the determination of a justiciable controversy where the plaintiff is in doubt as to his legal rights. A binding adjudication of the rights and status of litigants even though no consequential relief is awarded. Brimmer v. Thomson, Wyo., 521 P.2d 574, 579. Such judgment is conclusive in a subsequent action between the parties as to the matters declared and, in accordance with the usual rules of issue preclusion, as to any issues actually litigated and determined. Seaboard Coast Line R. Co. v. Gulf Oil Corp., C.A.Fla., 409 F.2d 879.

Decleraco. Declaratory Judgment Act. Federal statute enacted in 1934, 28 U.S.C.A. § 2201, which permits bringing of complaint for a declaration of rights if there is an actual controversy between the parties. The judgment is binding as to present and future rights of the parties to the action. See Fed.R.Civil P. 57. Most states have statutes of a like or similar nature; many of which are patterned on The Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act. See also Declaratory judgment.

Decleraco. Declaratory part of a law. That which clearly defines rights to be observed and wrongs to be eschewed. Declaratory relief. See Declaratory judgment.

Decleraco. Declaratory statute. One enacted for the purpose of removing doubts or putting an end to conflicting decisions in regard to what the law is in relation to a particular matter. It may either be expressive of the common law, 1 Bl.Comm. 86; In re Ungaro's Will, 88 N.J.Eq. 25, 102 A. 244, 246, or may declare what shall be taken to be the true meaning and intention of a previous statute, though in the latter case such enactments are more commonly called "expository statutes." McMahon v. Maddox, Tex.Civ.App., 297 S.W. 310, 312. A statute enacted to put an end to a doubt as to what is the common law, or the meaning of another statute, and which declares what it is and ever has been. Nelson v. Sandkamp, 227 Minn. 177, 34 N.W.2d 640, 642.

Declerate. To make known, manifest, or clear. To signify, to show in any manner either by words or acts. To publish; to utter; to announce clearly some opinion or resolution. To solemnly assert a fact before witnesses, e.g., where a testator declares a paper signed by him to be his last will and testament. See Declaration.

Decleraco. Declarator of trust. A common law action resorted to against a trustee who holds property upon titles ex facie for his own benefit. Declaratory. Explanatory; designed to fix or elucidate what before was uncertain or doubtful. Declaratory action. See Declaratory judgment.

Decleraco. Declaratory judgment. Statutory (see Declaratory Judgment Act) remedy for the determination of a justiciable controversy where the plaintiff is in doubt as to his legal rights. A binding adjudication of the rights and status of litigants even though no consequential relief is awarded. Brimmer v. Thomson, Wyo., 521 P.2d 574, 579. Such judgment is conclusive in a subsequent action between the parties as to the matters declared and, in accordance with the usual rules of issue preclusion, as to any issues actually litigated and determined. Seaboard Coast Line R. Co. v. Gulf Oil Corp., C.A.Fla., 409 F.2d 879.

Decleraco. Declaratory Judgment Act. Federal statute enacted in 1934, 28 U.S.C.A. § 2201, which permits bringing of complaint for a declaration of rights if there is an actual controversy between the parties. The judgment is binding as to present and future rights of the parties to the action. See Fed.R.Civil P. 57. Most states have statutes of a like or similar nature; many of which are patterned on The Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act. See also Declaratory judgment.

Decleraco. Declaratory part of a law. That which clearly defines rights to be observed and wrongs to be eschewed. Declaratory relief. See Declaratory judgment.

Decleraco. Declaratory statute. One enacted for the purpose of removing doubts or putting an end to conflicting decisions in regard to what the law is in relation to a particular matter. It may either be expressive of the common law, 1 Bl.Comm. 86; In re Ungaro's Will, 88 N.J.Eq. 25, 102 A. 244, 246, or may declare what shall be taken to be the true meaning and intention of a previous statute, though in the latter case such enactments are more commonly called "expository statutes." McMahon v. Maddox, Tex.Civ.App., 297 S.W. 310, 312. A statute enacted to put an end to a doubt as to what is the common law, or the meaning of another statute, and which declares what it is and ever has been. Nelson v. Sandkamp, 227 Minn. 177, 34 N.W.2d 640, 642.
Decomposed. A state of decomposition. A separation into components; specifically, decay or dissolution. In re Vetter, Cust. & Pat.App., 96 F.2d 999, 1000.

De computo /di/kompystow/. Writ of account. A writ commanding a defendant to render a reasonable account to the plaintiff, or show cause to the contrary. The foundation of the modern action of account.

De concilio curiae /di/konsiliyow kyuriyiy/. By the advice (or direction) of the court.

De confes. In French law, a name formerly given to those persons who died without confession, whether they refused to confess or whether they were criminals to whom the sacrament was refused.

De conflictu legum /di/konsaerjginateytiy/. Concerning the conflict of laws. The title of several works written on that subject.

De conjunctim foedatis /di/konsaerjgwinateytiy/. Concerning persons jointly enfeoffed, or seised. The title of the statute 34 Edw. I, which was passed to prevent the delay occasioned by tenants in novel disseisin, and other writs, pleading that some one else was seised jointly with them.

De consanguineo, and de consanguinitate /di/konsaengwinyow/diy/konsaengwinatéyi/. Writs of cosinage (q.v.).

De consilio /di/konsiliyow/. In old criminal law, of counsel; concerning counsel or advice to commit a crime.

De consilio curiae /di/konsiliyow kyuriyiy/. By the advice or direction of the court.

De continuando assisam /di/kontinyuwándow asý zam/. Writ to continue an assise.

De contumace capiendo /di/kontyáméysi kápiyén dw/. Writ for taking a contumacious person. A writ which issues out of the English court of chancery, in cases where a person has been pronounced by an ecclesiastical court to be contumacious, and in contempt. It is a commitment for contempt.

De copia libelli deliberanda /di/kówpíya labéláy dalibránda/. Writ for delivering the copy of libel. An ancient writ directed to the judge of a spiritual court, commanding him to deliver to a defendant a copy of the libel filed against him in such court. The writ in the register was directed to the Dean of the Arches, and his commissary.

De coronatore eligendo /di/kóránatóriy eléjéndow/. Writ for electing a coroner. A writ issued to the sheriff in England, commanding him to proceed to the election of a coroner, which is done in full county court, the freeholders being the electors.

De coronatore exonerando /di/kóránatóriy skón arándow/. Writ for discharging or removing a coroner. A writ by which a coroner in England may be removed from office for some cause therein assigned. 1 Bl.Comm. 348.

De corpore comitatus /di/kópariy kómatéyas/. From the body of the county at large, as distinguished from a particular neighborhood (de vicineto). 3 Bl.Comm. 360. Used with reference to the composition of a jury.

Decoy. To inveigle, entice, tempt, or lure; as, to decoy a person within the jurisdiction of a court so that he may be served with process, or to decoy a fugitive criminal to a place where he may be arrested without extradition papers, or to decoy one away from his place of residence for the purpose of kidnapping him and as a part of that act. In all these uses the word implies enticement or luring by means of some fraud, trick, or temptation, but excludes the idea of force. Compare Entrapment.

Decoy letter. A letter prepared and mailed for the purpose of detecting a criminal, particularly one who is perpetrating frauds upon the postal or revenue laws.

Decree. The judgment of a court of equity or chancery, answering for most purposes to the judgment of a court of law. A decree in equity is a sentence or order of the court, pronounced on hearing and understanding all the points in issue, and determining the rights of all the parties to the suit, according to equity and good conscience. It is a declaration of the court announcing the legal consequences of the facts found. With the procedural merger of law and equity in the federal and most state courts under the Rules of Civil Procedure, the term "judgment" has generally replaced "decree". See Fed.R.Civ.P. 54(a). See also Decision; Judgment; Order.

General Classification

Decrees in equity are either final or interlocutory. A final decree is one which fully and finally disposes of the whole litigation, determining all questions raised by the case, and leaving nothing that requires further judicial action. An interlocutory decree is a provisional or preliminary decree, which is not final and does not determine the suit, but directs some further proceedings preparatory to the final decree. It is a decree pronounced for the purpose of ascertaining matter of law or fact preparatory to a final decree. Where something more than the ministerial execution of the decree as rendered is left to be done, the decree is interlocutory, and not final, even though it settles the equities of the bill. Lodge v. Twell, 135 U.S. 232, 10 S.Ct. 745, 34 L.Ed. 153. The difficulty of exact definition is mentioned in McGourkey v. Ry. Co., 146 U.S. 536, 13 S.Ct. 170, 36 L.Ed. 1079.

Consent decree. A judgment entered by consent of the parties whereby the defendant agrees to stop alleged illegal activity without admitting guilt or wrongdoing. Agreement by defendant to cease activities asserted as illegal by government (e.g. deceptive advertising practices as alleged by F.T.C.). Upon approval of such agreement by the court the government’s action against the defendant is dropped. Also, a decree entered in an equity suit on consent of both parties; it is not properly a judicial sentence, but is in the nature of a solemn contract or agreement of the parties, made under the sanction of the court, and in effect an admission by them that the decree is a just determination of their rights upon the real facts of the case, if such facts had been proved. It binds only the consenting parties; and is not binding upon the court.

Decree nisi /dakriyt náysay/. A provisional decree, which will be made absolute on motion unless cause be shown against it. Interlocutory judgment or decree in divorce action. In English practice, it is the order made by the court for divorce, on satisfactory proof being given in support of a petition for dissolution of marriage; it remains imperfect for a certain period (which period may be shortened by the court), and then, unless sufficient cause be shown, it is made absolute on motion, and the dissolution takes effect, subject to appeal. It effects a conditional divorce, becoming absolute only upon the happening of a prescribed contingency.

Decree of distribution. An instrument by which heirs receive property of a deceased; it is a final determination of the parties to a proceeding.

Decree of insolvency. One entered in a probate court, declaring the estate in question to be insolvent, that is, that the assets are not sufficient to pay the debts in full.

Decree of nullity. One entered in a suit for the annulment of a marriage, and adjudging the marriage to have been null and void ab initio. See Nullity.

Decree pro confessio. One entered in a court of equity in favor of the complainant where the defendant has made no answer to the bill and its allegations are consequently taken "as confessed." It is merely an admission of the allegations of the bill well pleaded.

Deficiency decree. In a mortgage foreclosure suit, a decree for the balance of the indebtedness after applying the proceeds of a sale of the mortgaged property to such indebtedness.

For Execution of decree, see Execution.

Decreet absolvitor /dakriyt abzólvstor/. A decree dismissing a claim, or acquitting a defendant.

Decreet arbitral /dakriyt árbstral/. An award of arbitrators.

Decreet cognitionis causas /dakriyt kognishiýównas kóza/. When a creditor brings his action against the heir of his debtor in order to constitute the debt against him and attach the lands, and the heir appears and renounces the succession, the court then pronounces a decree cognitionis causas.

Decreet condemnator /dakriyt köndamnóýéytar/. One where the decision is in favor of the plaintiff.

Decreet of valuation of teinds /dakriyt áv vályuywýéyshan əv týndž/. A sentence of the court of sessions (who are now in the place of the commissioners for the valuation of teinds), determining the extent and value of teinds.

Decrementum marius /dékreméntom máiró/. Lat. In old English law, decrease of the sea; the receding of the sea from the land. See Retraction.

Decrepit /dakrépat/. This term designates a person who is disabled, incapable, or incompetent, either from physical or mental weakness or defects, whether produced by age or other causes, to such an extent as to render the individual comparatively helpless in a personal conflict with one possessed of ordinary health and strength. Lutz v. State, 147 Tex.Cr.R. 236, 179 S.W.2d 979, 980. The term includes a blind man. Lewing v. State, 135 Tex.Cr.R. 485, 121 S.W.2d 599, 600.

Decretas /dakriyta Uns/. In the Roman law, judicial sentences given by the emperor as supreme judge.

Decretas conciliorum non ligant reges nostros /dakriytás kans-nilýyórsm nó:n ligánt ríjýýyz nóstrów/. The decrees of councils bind not our kings.

Decretals /dakriytalz/. In ecclesiastical law, letters of the pope, written at the suit or instance of one or more persons, determining some point or question in ecclesiastical law, and possessing the force of law, within the Roman Catholic Church. The decreets form the second part of the body of canon law.

This is also the title of the second of the two great divisions of the canon law, the first being called the "Decree" (decretum).

Decretal order /dakriyta órdár/. A preliminary order that determines no question upon the merits and establishes no right.

Decretals /dakriytalz/. In ecclesiastical law, letters of the pope, written at the suit or instance of one or more persons, determining some point or question in ecclesiastical law, and possessing the force of law, within the Roman Catholic Church. The decreets form the second part of the body of canon law.

In canon law, an ecclesiastical law, in contradistinction to a secular law (lex).

Decreto /deyréto/. In Spanish colonial law, an order emanating from some superior tribunal, promulgated in the name and by the authority of the sovereign, in relation to ecclesiastical matters.

Decretum /dakriyta/. In the civil law, a species of imperial constitution, being a judgment or sentence given by the emperor upon hearing of a cause (quod imperator cognoscens decrevit).

In canon law, an ecclesiastical law, in contradistinction to a secular law (lex).

Decretum gratiani /dakriytam gryéshíyéynay/. Gratian’s decree, or decretum. A collection of ecclesiastical law in three books or parts, made in the year 1151, by Gratian, a Benedictine monk of Bologna, being the oldest as well as the first in order of the collections which together form the body of the Roman canon law. 1 Bl.Comm. 82.

Decriminalization. An official act generally accomplished by legislation, in which an act or omission, formerly criminal, is made non-criminal and without punitive sanctions.

Decrowning. The act of depriving of a crown.
Decurio /dakyuriyow/. Lat. A decurion. In the provincial administration of the Roman empire, the decurions were the chief men or official personages of the large towns. Taken as a body, the decurions of a city were charged with the entire control and administration of its internal affairs; having powers both magisterial and legislative.

De curia claudenda /diy kyuriya klodenda/. An obsolete writ, to require a defendant to fence in his court or land about his house, where it was left open to the injury of his neighbor's freehold.

Decurio /dakyuriyow/. Lat. A decurion. In the provincial administration of the Roman empire, the decurions were the chief men or official personages of the large towns. Taken as a body, the decurions of a city were charged with the entire control and administration of its internal affairs; having powers both magisterial and legislative.

De cursu /diy karsyuw/. Of course. The usual, necessary, and formal proceedings in an action are said to be de cursu; as distinguished from summary proceedings, or such as are incidental and may be taken on summons or motion. Write de cursu are such as are issued of course, as distinguished from prerogative writs.

De custode admissendo /diy kastówdiy admaténdow/. Writ for admitting a guardian.

De custode amovendo /diy kastówdiy éymavéndow/. Writ for removing a guardian.

De custodia terrae et heredes /diy dasepshiyowniy/. A writ of deceit whereby the latter was damnified and deceived. The appropriation of land, or an easement set apart by adverse user. A dedication may be shown by some act or course of conduct; as to make a private way where the intention to dedicate is expressly manifested; as by ordinary deeds, recorded plats not executed pursuant to statute or defectively certified so as not to constitute a statutory dedication. Board of Com'rs of Garfield County v. Richmond Hotel & Building Co., 253 Ky. 463, 69 S.W.2d 985. See also Dedication and reservation.

De debito /diy débostow/. A word of debt.

De debitore in partes secando /diy debatóiri y pártiyz sokándow/. In Roman law; "Of cutting a debtor in pieces." This was the name of a law contained in the Twelve Tables, the meaning of which has occasioned much controversy. Some commentators have concluded that it was literally the privilege of the creditors of an insolvent debtor (all other means failing) to cut his body into pieces and distribute it among them. Others contend that the language of this law must be taken figuratively, denoting a cutting up and apportionment of the debtor's estate.

De deceptione /diy dasépshiywniy/. A writ of deceit which lay against one who acted in the name of another whereby the latter was damned and deceived.

De deoneranda pro rata portionis /diy diýównarénda prów réyta pórshiyównas/. Writ that lay where one was distrained for rent that ought to be paid by others proportionally with him.
Dedication-day. The feast of dedication of churches, or the dedicator may impose reasonable conditions, restrictions and limitations, and compliance therewith is essential unless waived. Dedicator may reserve a new right in himself by way of implied grant and may include rights personal or rights appurtenant to the land. At common law, a reservation in a dedication is not perpetual.

Dedicator may reserve a new right in himself by way of implied grant and may include rights personal or rights appurtenant to the land. At common law, a reservation in a dedication is not perpetual.

Dedimus potestatem /dédamay powstastéyam/. (We have given power.) In old English practice, a writ or commission issuing out of chancery, empowering the persons named therein to perform certain acts, as to administer oaths to defendants in chancery and take their answers, to administer oaths of office to justices of the peace, etc. 3 Bl.Comm. 447. It was anciently allowed for many purposes not now in use, as to make an attorney, to take the acknowledgment of a fine, etc.

In the United States, a commission to take testimony was sometimes termed a "dedimus potestatem."

Dedimus potestatem de attorno faciendo /dédamay powstastéyam dlí atánow féys(h)ýéndow/. In old English practice, a writ, issued by royal authority, empowering an attorney to appear for a defendant. Prior to the statute of Westminster 2, a party could not appear in court by attorney without this writ.

Dedition /dádishan/. The act of yielding up anything; surrender.

Dedititii /dídyatáshiyay/. In Roman law, criminals who had been marked in the face or on the body with fire or an iron, so that the mark could not be erased, and subsequently manumitted.

De diversis regulis juris antiqui /díy davorás régulas júras antáykway/. Of divers rules of the ancient law. A celebrated title of the Digests, and the last in that collection. It consists of two hundred and eleven rules or maxims.

De dolo malo /díy dówlo málow/. Of or founded upon fraud. See Actio de dolo malo.

De domo reparanda /díy dowmow répáránda/. A writ which lay for one tenant in common to compel his cotenant to contribute towards the repair of the common property.

De donis /díy dónnás/. Concerning gifts (or more fully, de donis conditionalibus, concerning conditional gifts). The name of a celebrated English statute, passed in the thirteenth year of Edw. I, and constituting the first chapter of the statute of Westm. 2, by virtue of which estates in fee-simple conditional (formerly known as "dona conditionalia") were converted into estates in fee-tail and rendered inalienable, thereby strengthening the power of the nobles. 2 Bl.Comm. 112.

De dote assignanda /díy dówtiy assýnynánda/. Writ for assigning dower. A writ which lay for the widow of a tenant in capite, commanding the king's escheater to cause her dower to be assigned to her.

De dote unde nihil habet /díy dówtiy ándiy néyal héydot/. A writ of dower which lay for a widow where no part of her dower had been assigned to her. It is not much used; but a form closely resembling it was sometimes used in the United States.

Deductible. That which may be taken away or subtracted. In taxation, an item which may be subtracted from gross income or adjusted gross income in determining taxable income (e.g., interest expenses, charitable contributions, certain taxes, etc.). See also Deduction.

The portion of an insured loss to be borne by the insured before he is entitled to recovery from the insurer. See Deductible clause.

Deductible clause. Clause in insurance policy providing that insured will absorb first part of loss (e.g., first $100) with insurer paying the excess.

Deduction. That which is deducted; the part taken away; abatement; as deductions from gross income in arriving at net income for tax purposes.

In the civil law, a portion or thing which an heir has a right to take from the mass of the succession before any partition takes place. Civil Code La. art. 1358.

See also Charitable deduction; Deductible; Marital deduction: Orphan's deduction.

Itemized deductions. Those expenses which are allowed as deductions from adjusted gross income, itemized in detail under their appropriate captions, and subtracted to arrive at income subject to tax (e.g., taxes, charitable contributions, etc.). I.R.C. §§ 161–188. See also Deductible.
Standard deduction. An option available to all individual taxpayers whereby they can deduct a specified amount from adjusted gross income instead of itemizing their deductions. This option is generally used by taxpayers who do not have deductions which exceed the standard deduction assigned to them. The Tax Reform Act of 1986 changed the standard deduction amounts. The standard deduction amounts for 1989 and subsequent years are indexed for inflation.

Deduction for new. In marine insurance, an allowance or drawback credited to the insurers on the cost of repairing a vessel for damage arising from the perils of the sea insured against. This allowance is usually one-third, and is made on the theory that the parts restored with new materials are better in that proportion than they were before the damage.

Deductions in respect of a decedent. Deductions accrued to the point of death but not recognizable on the final income tax return of a decedent because of the method of accounting used. Such items are allowed as deductions on the estate tax return and on the income tax return of the estate or the heir. An example of a deduction in respect of a decedent would be interest expense accrued up to the date of death by a cash basis debtor.

Deed. A conveyance of realty; a writing signed by grantor, whereby title to realty is transferred from one to another. National Fire Ins. Co. v. Patterson, 170 Okl. 593, 41 P.2d 645, 647. A written instrument, signed, and delivered, by which one person conveys land, tenements, or hereditaments to another.

At common law, a sealed instrument, containing a contract or covenant, delivered by the party to be bound thereby, and accepted by the party to whom the contract or covenant runs. 2 Bl.Comm. 295. A writing under seal by which lands, tenements, or hereditaments are conveyed for an estate not less than freehold. 2 Bl.Comm. 294. It is no longer necessary that the instrument be sealed.

See also Ancient deed; Bargain and sale deed; Contract for deed; Quitclaim deed; Sheriff's deed; Special warranty deed; Tax deed; Trust (Trust deed); Warranty deed.

Deed absolute. Deed which conveys absolute title as contrasted with mortgage deed which is defeasible on fulfillment of mortgage conditions.

Deed indented, or indenture. In common-law conveyancing, a deed executed or purporting to be executed in parts, between two or more parties, and distinguished by having the edge of the paper or parchment on which it is written indented or cut at the top in a particular manner. This was formerly done at the top or side, in a line resembling the teeth of a saw; a formality derived from the ancient practice of dividing chirographs; but the cutting is now made either in a waving line, or more commonly by notching or nicking the paper at the edge. 2 Bl.Comm. 295, 296.

Deed in fee. A deed conveying the title to land in fee simple with the usual covenants.

Deed of covenant. Covenants are sometimes entered into by a separate deed, for title, or for the indemnity of a purchaser or mortgagee, or for the production of title-deeds. A covenant with a penalty is sometimes taken for the payment of a debt, instead of a bond with a condition, but the legal remedy is the same in either case.

Deed of distribution. Deed of fiduciary by which real estate of decedent is conveyed.

Deed of gift. A deed executed and delivered without consideration.

Deed of release. One releasing property from the incumbrance of a mortgage or similar pledge upon payment or performance of the conditions. More specifically, where a deed of trust to one or more trustees has been executed, pledging real property for the payment of a debt or the performance of other conditions, substantially as in the case of a mortgage, a deed of release is the conveyance executed by the trustees, after payment or performance, for the purpose of divesting themselves of the legal title and revesting it in the original owner.

Deed of separation. An instrument by which, through the medium of some third person acting as trustee, provision is made by a husband for separation from his wife and for her separate maintenance.

Deed of settlement. A deed formerly used in England for the formation of joint stock companies constituting certain persons trustees of the partnership property and containing regulations for the management of its private affairs. They are now regulated by articles of association.

Deed of trust. An instrument in use in some states, taking the place and serving the uses of a mortgage, by which the legal title to real property is placed in one or more trustees, to secure the repayment of a sum of money or the performance of other conditions. Though differing in form from mortgage, it is essentially a security. In re Title Guaranty Trust Co., Mo.App., 113 S.W.2d 1053, 1057. See also Mortgage; Potomac mortgages; Trust (Trust deed).

Deed poll. A deed which is made by one party only. A deed in which only the party making it executes it or binds himself by it as a deed. It was originally so called because the edge of the paper or parchment was polled or cut in a straight line, wherein it was distinguished from a deed indented or indenture. As to a special use of this term in Pennsylvania in colonial times, see Herron v. Dater, 120 U.S. 464, 7 S.Ct. 620, 624, 30 L.Ed. 748 (citing Evans v. Patterson, 71 U.S. 224, 4 Wall. 224, 18 L.Ed. 393).

Deed to lead uses. A common law deed made before a fine or common recovery, to show the object thereof.
Deed, estoppel by.

"Estoppel by deed" is a bar which precludes one party to a deed and his privies from asserting as against the other party and his privies any right or title in derogation of the deed or from denying the truth of any material facts asserted in it. Denny v. Wilson County, 198 Tenn. 677, 281 S.W.2d 671, 675. Such estoppel precludes a party from denying a certain fact recited in deed executed or accepted by him in an action brought on the deed by a party who would be detrimentally affected by such denial. Cleveland Boat Service v. City of Cleveland, 102 Ohio App. 255, 130 N.E.2d 421, 425.

De ejectione custodia /diy ajëkshiyowniy kastowdiyiy/. A writ which lay for a guardian who had been forcibly ejected from his wardship.

De ejectione firmae /diy ajëkshiyowniy farniy/. A writ which lay at the suit of the tenant for years against the lessor, reversioner, remainderer, or stranger who had himself deprived the tenant of the occupation of the land during his term. 3 Bl.Comm. 199. By a gradual extension of the scope of this form of action its object was made to include not only damages for the unlawful detainer, but also the possession for the remainder of the term, and eventually the possession of land generally. And, as it turned on the right of possession, this involved a determination of the right of property, or the title, and thus arose the modern action of ejectment.

Deem. To hold; consider; adjudge; believe; condemn; determine; treat as if; construe.

Deemed transferor. The person holding an interest in a trust the expiration of which will lead to the imposition of a generation-skipping tax. Assume, for example, GF creates a trust, income payable to S (GF's son) for life and, upon S's death, remainder to GS (GF's grandson). Upon S's death, he will be the "deemed transferor" and the trust will be included in his gross estate for purposes of determining the generation-skipping transfer tax. I.R.S. § 2612. See Generation-skipping trust.

Deep pocket. A person or corporation of substantial wealth and resources from which a claim or judgment may be made.

Under the "deep pocket" theory in antitrust law, parent corporation's substantial assets will have an impact on competition in which subsidiary is engaged. U.S. v. Connecticut Nat. Bank, D.C.Conn., 362 F.Supp. 240, 277.

Deep Rock doctrine. A principle in bankruptcy law by which unfair or inequitable claims presented by controlling shareholders of bankrupt corporations may be subordinated to claims of general or trade creditors. The doctrine received its name from the corporate name of the subsidiary involved in the leading case articulating the doctrine. Taylor et al. v. Standard Gas & Electric Co. et al., 306 U.S. 307, 59 S.Ct. 543, 83 L.Ed. 669.

See Generation-skipping trust.

Deep pocket. A person or corporation of substantial wealth and resources from which a claim or judgment may be made.
cated person, where he had been liberated from prison without making satisfaction to the church, or giving security for that purpose.

De excusationibus /diy skskyuwzéshiyowynabas/.

“Concerning excuses.” This is the title of book 27 of the Pandects (in the Corpus Juris Civilis). It treats of the circumstances which excuse one from filling the office of tutor or curator. The bulk of the extracts are from Modestinus.

De executione facienda in withernamium /diy eksskyuwshiyowyni fas(h)iyenda in wiðornémyiyam/.

Writ for making execution in withernam. A species of capias in withernam.

De executione judicii /diy eksskyuwshiyowyni juwdishiyay/.

A writ directed to a sheriff or bailiff, commanding him to do execution upon a judgment.

De exemplificatione /diy skskyuwzéshiyowyni/. A writ of exemplification. A writ granted for the exemplification of an original.

De exoneratione sectae /diy agzdnsreyshiyowniy/.

Writ for exoneration of suit. A writ that lay for the exoneration of a sect.

De expensis civium et burgensium /diy askpénsas siviyam et börjénisyam/.

An obsolete writ addressed to the sheriff to levy the expenses of every citizen and burgess of parliament.

De expensis militum levandis /diy skspensas mibtam laveendas/.

Writ for levying the expenses of knights. A writ directed to the sheriff for levying the allowance for the sheriff to levy the expenses of every citizen and burgess of parliament.

De facie. To mar or destroy the face (that is, the physical appearance of written or inscribed characters as expressive of a definite meaning) of a written instrument, signature, inscription, etc., by obliteration, erasure, cancellation, or superinscription, so as to render it illegible or unrecognizable. To mar, injure or spoil. State v. Kasnett, 30 Ohio App.2d 77, 283 N.E.2d 636, 638. Also used in respect of injury to monument, buildings and other structures. See Cancel; Defile; Desecrate; Mar; Mutilation; Obliteration.

De facto /diy fékktow/. In fact, in deed, actually. This phrase is used to characterize an officer, a government, a past action, or a state of affairs which must be accepted for all practical purposes, but is illegal or illegitimate. Thus, an office, position or status existing under a claim or color of right such as a de facto corporation. In this sense it is the contrary of de jure, which means rightful, legitimate, just, or constitutional. Thus, an officer, king, or government de facto is one who is in actual possession of the office or supreme power, but by usurpation, or without lawful title; while an officer, king, or governor de jure is one who has just claim and rightful title to the office or power, but has never had plenary possession of it, or is not in actual possession. MacLeod v. United States, 229 U.S. 416, 33 S.Ct. 955, 57 L.Ed. 1280. A wife de facto is one whose marriage is voidable by decree, as distinguished from a wife de jure, or lawful wife. But the term is also frequently used independently of any distinction from de jure; thus a blockade de facto is a blockade which is actually maintained, as distinguished from a mere paper blockade. Compare De jure.

As to de facto Corporation; Court; Domicile; Government, Merger, and Officer, see those titles.

In old English law it means respecting or concerning the principal act of a murder, which was technically denominated factum.

De facto adoption. An agreement to adopt according to statutory procedures in a given state which will ripen into de jure adoption when the petition is properly presented. In The Matter of The Estate of Schultz, 220 Or. 350, 348 P.2d 22. An equitable adoption (q.v.).

De facto contract /diy fékktow kontraekt/.

One which has purported to pass the property from the owner to another but is defective in some element.

De facto court. See Court.

De facto government. One that maintains itself by a display of force against the will of the rightful legal government and is successful, at least temporarily, in overturning the institutions of the rightful legal government by setting up its own in lieu thereof. Wortham v. Walker, 133 Tex. 255, 128 S.W.2d 1138, 1145.

De facto judge. A judge who functions under color of authority but whose authority is defective in some procedural form. Riley v. Bradley, 252 Ala. 282, 41 So.2d 641.

De facto marriage. A marriage in which the parties live together as husband and wife under color of validity but which is defective for reasons of form, etc.

De facto officer. One who, while in actual possession of the office, is not holding such in a manner prescribed by law. Trost v. Tynatishon, 12 Ill.App.3d 406, 299 N.E.2d 14.

De facto segregation. Segregation which is inadvertent and without assistance of school authorities and not caused by any state action, but rather by social, economic and other determinates. DeFunis v. Odegard, 82 Wash.2d 11, 507 P.2d 1169. Compare De jure segregation.

De facto taking. This type of taking occurs when an entity clothed with power of eminent domain substantially deprives an owner of the use and enjoyment of his property. City of Philadelphia v. Sorrentino, 95 Pa. Cmwlth. 236, 605 A.2d 373, 374. Such occurs in extraor-
De faire échelle /da fəʁ ɛʃɛl/. In French law, a clause commonly inserted in policies of marine insurance, equivalent to a license to touch and trade at intermediate ports.

Defalcation /dɪˈfɔːləkʃən/. The act of a defaulter; act of embezzling; failure to meet an obligation; misappropriation of trust funds or money held in any fiduciary capacity; failure to properly account for such funds. Commonly spoken of officers of corporations or public officials.

For purposes of Bankruptcy Code section making nondischargeable a debt resulting from fraud or defalcation by debtor while acting in fiduciary capacity, is failure to meet an obligation, misappropriation of trust funds or money held in any fiduciary capacity, and failure to properly account for such funds. In re Anderson, Bkrtcy.N.D.Ill., 64 B.R. 331, 334.

Also set-off, recoupment or counterclaim. The diminution of a debt or claim by deducting from it a smaller claim held by the debtor or payor. See Defalk.

Defalk. To set off one claim against another; to deduct a debt due to one from a debt which one owes. This verb corresponds only to the second meaning of "defalcation" as given above; i.e. a public officer or trustee who misappropriates or embezzles funds in his hands is not said to "defalk."

De falso judicio /dɪˈfɔːləs dʒəˈdiʃi oʊ/. Writ of false judgment.

De falso moneta /dɪˈfɔːləs məˈneɪtə/. Of false money. The title of the English statute 27 Edw. I, ordaining that persons importing certain coins, called "pollards," and "crokards," should forfeit their lives and goods, and everything they could forfeit.

Defamation. An intentional false communication, either published or publicly spoken, that injures another's reputation or good name. Holding up of a person to ridicule, scorn or contempt in a respectable and considerable part of the community; may be criminal as well as civil. Includes both libel and slander.

Defamation is that which tends to injure reputation; to diminish the esteem, respect, goodwill or confidence in which the plaintiff is held, or to excite adverse, derogatory or unpleasant feelings or opinions against him. Statement which exposes person to contempt, hatred, ridicule or obloquy. McGowan v. Prentice, La. App., 341 So.2d 55, 57. The unprivileged publication of false statements which naturally and proximately result in injury to another. Wolfson v. Kirk, Fla.App., 273 So.2d 774, 776.

To recover against a public official or public figure, plaintiff must prove that the defamatory statement was published with malice. Malice as used in this context means that it was published either knowing that it was false or with a reckless disregard as to whether it was true or false. New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 84 S.Ct. 710, 11 L.Ed.2d 686.

A communication is defamatory if it tends so to harm the reputation of another as to lower him in the estimation of the community or to deter third persons from associating or dealing with him. The meaning of a communication is that which the recipient correctly, or mistakenly but reasonably, understands that it was intended to express. Restatement, Second, Torts §§ 559, 563.

See also Actionable per quod; Actionable per se; Journalist's privilege; Libel; Slander.

Defamatory. Calumnious; containing defamation; injurious to reputation; libelous; slanderous. See Defamation.

Defamatory libel. Written, permanent form of defamation as contrasted with slander which is oral defamation. See Libel.

Defamatory per quod /dɛfəˈməʊtəri pər kwɔd/. In respect of words, those which require an allegation of facts, aside from the words contained in the publication, by way of innuendo, to show wherein the words used libel the plaintiff. See Actionable per quod.

Defamatory per se /dɛfəˈməʊtəri pər sɪ. In respect of words, those which by themselves, and as such, without reference to extrinsic proof, injure the reputation of the person to whom they are applied. Conrad v. Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co., 228 Mo.App. 817, 73 S.W.2d 438, 446. See Actionable per se.

Defames /dɛfəˈmiːz/. L. Fr. Infamous.

Default. By its deriviation, a failure. An omission of that which ought to be done. Town of Milton v. Bruso, 111 Vt. 82, 10 A.2d 203, 205. Specifically, the omission or failure to perform a legal or contractual duty, Easterwood v. Willingham, Tex.Civ.App., 47 S.W.2d 393, 395; to observe a promise or discharge an obligation (e.g. to pay interest or principal on a debt when due), Bradbury v. Thomas, 135 Cal.App. 435, 27 P.2d 402; or to perform an agreement, Eastman v. Morgan, D.C.N.Y., 43 F.Supp. 637, 641. The term also embraces the idea of dishonesty, and of wrongful act, Greco v. S. S. Kresge Co., 277 N.Y. 26, 12 N.E.2d 557, 562; or an act of omission discreditable to one's profession, Hilkert v. Canning, 58 Ariz. 290, 119 P.2d 233, 236.

Default-judgment. Judgment entered against a party who has failed to defend against a claim that has been brought by another party. Under Rules of Civil Procedure, when a party against whom a judgment for affirmative relief is sought has failed to plead (i.e. answer) or otherwise defend, he is in default and a judgment by default may be entered either by the clerk or the court. Fed.R.Civil P. 55. See also Judgment.

Defaulter. One who is in default. One who misappropriates money held by him in an official or fiduciary character, or fails to account for such money.

Defeasance /de-fay-zəns/. An instrument which defeats the force or operation of some other deed, estate, or will. A collateral deed made at the same time with a feoffment or other conveyance, containing certain conditions, upon the performance of which the estate then created may be defeated or totally undone. 2 Bl.Comm. 327.

An instrument accompanying a bond, recognizance, or judgment, containing a condition which, when performed, defeats it. See also Defeasance clause; Defeasible.

Defeasance clause. That provision in a mortgage which assures the revesting of title in the mortgagor when all the terms and conditions of the mortgage have been met. A clause which permits the mortgagor-borrower to defeat the temporary and conditional conveyance by discharging the debt and thus causing a release of any interests in the real estate.

Defeasible. Subject to be defeated, annulled, revoked, or undone upon the happening of a future event or the performance of a condition subsequent, or by a conditional limitation. An estate which is not absolute, i.e., one which is determinable or subject to an executory limitation or condition subsequent. Usually spoken of estates and interests in land. For instance, a mortgagee's estate is defeasible (liable to be defeated) by the mortgagor's equity of redemption.

Defeasible fee. An estate in fee that is liable to be defeated, annulled, revoked, or undone upon the happening of a future event or the performance of a condition subsequent, or by a conditional limitation. An estate which is not absolute, i.e., one which is determinable or subject to an executory limitation or condition subsequent. Usually spoken of estates and interests in land. For instance, a mortgagee's estate is defeasible (liable to be defeated) by the mortgagor's equity of redemption.

Defeasible title. One that is liable to be annulled or made void, but not one that is already void or an absolute nullity.

Defeasibly vested remainder. Gift over to remainderman which, though not subject to condition precedent as in the case of a contingent remainder, is subject to divestment on the happening of a condition subsequent.

Defensive. Describes counterclaim which, if it prevails, will defeat right of plaintiffs to recover. Hayden v. Collins, 90 Utah 238, 63 P.2d 223, 225.

Defeat. To prevent, frustrate, or circumvent; as in the phrase "hinder, delay, or defeat creditors." To overcome or prevail against in any contest; as in speaking of the "defeated party" in an action at law, or "defeated candidate" in an election. Norcop v. Jordan, 216 Cal. 764, 17 P.2d 123, 124.

To annul, undo, or terminate; as, a title or estate. See Defeasible.

Defect. The want or absence of some legal requisite; deficiency; imperfection; insufficiency. Galloway v. City of Winchester, 259 Ky. 87, 184 S.W.2d 890, 892, 893. The absence of something necessary for completeness or perfection; a deficiency in something essential to the proper use for the purpose for which a thing is to be used. Some structural weakness in part or component which is responsible for damage. Egan v. Washington General Ins. Corp., Fla.App., 240 So.2d 875, 877. In a strict liability action, may consist of a manufacturing flaw, a design defect, or an inadequate warning. Butler v. PPG Industries, Inc., 201 N.J.Super. 558, 493 A.2d 619, 621. See also Apparent defects; Defective; Hidden defect; Latent defect.

Design defect. A "design defect" occurs when product is manufactured in conformity with intended design but design itself poses unreasonable dangers to consumers. Thibault v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 118 N.H. 802, 395 A.2d 843, 846.

Fatal defect. Of such serious nature as to nullify contract.

Latent defect. One which is not apparent to buyer by reasonable observation.

Patent defect. One which is apparent to buyer on normal observation.

Defective. Lacking in some particular which is essential to the completeness, legal sufficiency, or security of the object spoken of; as a "defective" service of process or return of service. A product is "defective" if it is not fit for the ordinary purposes for which such articles are sold and used, Manieri v. Volkswagenwerk, A.G., 151 N.J.Super. 422, 376 A.2d 1317, 1322; or if it is dangerous because it fails to perform in manner to be expected in light of its nature and intended function, Knapv. Hertz Corp., 17 Ill. Dec. 65, 59 Ill.App.3d 241, 375 N.E.2d 1349, 1353. See also Defect; Warranty.

Defective condition. A product is in a defective condition unreasonably dangerous to the user when it has a propensity for causing physical harm beyond that which would be contemplated by the ordinary user or consumer who purchases it, with the ordinary knowledge common to the foreseeable class of users as to its characteristics. A product is not defective or unreasonably dangerous merely because it is possible to be injured while using it. Mooney v. Massey-Ferguson, Inc., C.A.N.M., 429 F.2d 1184. See Strict liability.

Defective execution. Failure to comply with requirements in executing document with the result that document is legally inadequate or defective.

Defective pleadings. Complaint, answer, cross-claim, counterclaim, etc. which fail to meet minimum standards of sufficiency or accuracy in form or substance. Such defects may usually be cured by amendment. Fed. R.Civil P. 15.
Defective product. See Defect; Defective.

Defective record. May refer to record on appeal which does not conform to requisites of appellate rules. May also refer to state of title to real estate based on defects on the record in registry of deeds.

Defective title. With respect to negotiable paper within U.C.C. Article 3 (§ 3-201) the title of a person who obtains instrument or any signature thereto by fraud, duress, or force and fear, or other unlawful means, or for an illegal consideration, or when he negotiates it in breach of faith or under such circumstances as amount to fraud. See also Title (Defective title); Unmarketable title.

Defective verdict. Verdict lacking legitimacy because of some irregularity or inadequacy and hence one on which a judgment may not be based.

Defect of form. An imperfection in the style, manner, arrangement, or non-essential parts of a legal instrument, pleas, indictment, etc., as distinguished from a "defect of substance" (q.v.).

Defect of parties. Insufficiency of the parties before a court in any given proceeding to give it jurisdiction and authority to decide the controversy, arising from the omission or failure to join plaintiffs or defendants who should have been brought in. Rules of Civil Procedure have relaxed some of the former rigidity in requirements of joinder, but not all. Fed.R.Civ.P., Rules 19, 20. See Joinder.

Defect of substance. An imperfection in the body or substantive part of a legal instrument, plea, indictment, etc., consisting in the omission of something which is essential to be set forth. Sweeney v. Greenwood Indexpertise Co., D.C.S.C., 37 F.Supp. 484, 487.

Defectus /dêfektoos/. Lat. Defect; default; want; imperfection; disqualification.

Challenge propter defectum. A challenge to a juror on account of some legal disqualification, such as infancy, etc. See Challenge.

Defectus sanguinis. Failure of the blood, i.e., failure or want of issue.

Defend. To prohibit or forbid. To deny. To contest and endeavor to defeat a claim or demand made against one in a court of justice. To oppose, repel, or resist. To protect, to shield, to make a stand for, or uphold by force or argument. To vindicate, to maintain or keep secure, to guaranty, to agree to indemnify. To represent defendant in administrative, civil or criminal proceeding. See also Defense.

Defendant. The person defending or denying; the party against whom relief or recovery is sought in an action or suit or the accused in a criminal case. See also Joint defendants; Nominal defendant.

Defendare /dêndér-yar/. To answer for; to be responsible for.

Defendens /dênde-ne/z-mas/. Lat. A word used in grants and donations, which binds the donor and his heirs to defend the donee, if any one go about to lay any incumbrance on the thing given other than what is contained in the deed of donation.

Defender. (Fr.) To deny; to defend; to conduct a suit for a defendant; to forbid; to prevent; to protect. See Public defender.

In Scotch and canon law, a defendant.

Defendere se per corpus suum /dêfêndér-yay si-y pêr kórps su-y/wom/. To offer duel or combat as a legal trial and appeal. Abolished by 59 Geo. III, § 46. See Battel.

Defendere unica manu /dêfêndér-yay yiw-nak(y)ay wivw/. To wage law; a denial of an accusation upon oath. See Wager of law.

Defender of the faith. A peculiar title belonging to the sovereign of England, as that of "Catholic" to the king of Spain, and that of "Most Christian" to the king of France. These titles were originally given by the popes of Rome; and that of Defensor Fidei was first conferred by Pope Leo X on King Henry VIII, as a reward for writing against Martin Luther; and the bull for it bears date quintio Idus Octob., 1521.

Defendit vim et injuriam /dêfêndit vîm eyt ay-wa-re-yam/. He defends the force and injury.

Defendour /dê-yéndôr/. L. Fr. A defender or defendant; the party accused in an appeal.

Defenestration /diy-fê-nâ-sr-e-ya-shan/. The act of throwing something or somebody out of a window.

Defenestration /diy-fênâ-sr-e-ya-shan/. Act of throwing something or somebody out of a window.

Defensation /dê-fênsâ-sâ-shun/. The act of aiding or protecting, as in law; to help in an action or suit.

Defense. That which is offered and alleged by the party proceeded against in an action or suit, as a reason in law or fact why the plaintiff should not recover or establish what he seeks. That which is put forward to diminish plaintiff's cause of action or defeat recovery. Evidence offered by accused to defeat criminal charge.

With respect to defenses to a commercial instrument of which a holder in due course takes free, the term "defense" means a legally recognized basis for avoiding liability either on the instrument itself or on the obligation underlying the instrument.

A response to the claims of the other party, setting forth reasons why the claims should not be granted. The defense may be as simple as a flat denial of the other party's factual allegations or may involve entirely new factual allegations. In the latter situation, the defense is an affirmative defense. Under Rules of Civil Procedure, many defenses may be raised by motion as well as by answer (Rule 12(b), while others must be pleaded affirmatively (Rules 8(c), 9). See Affirmative defense; Answer; Equitable defense; Justification.

As regards defense to criminal charge, such defenses include alibi, consent, "corporate" liability defenses, de minimis infractions, duress, entrapment, ignorance or mistake, insanity, intoxication, law enforcement authority, necessity, protection of property, public... duty, legal impossibility, self defense and protection of others.

Defense also means the forcible repelling of an attack made unlawfully with force and violence, such as the defense of one's person or property or nation in time of war. See Self-defense.

Affidavit of defense. See Affidavit.

Fruivolous defense. One which at first glance can be seen to be merely pretensive, setting up some ground which cannot be sustained by argument. On motion, such defense may be ordered stricken from the pleadings. Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(f).

Legal defense. A defense which is complete and adequate in point of law. A defense which may be set up in court of law, as distinguished from an "equitable defense", which is cognizable only in a court of equity or court possessing equitable powers. This later distinction is no longer applicable with the procedural merger of law and equity under Rules of Civil Procedure.

Meritorious defense. One going to the merits, substance, or essentials of the case, as distinguished from dilatory or technical objections. For purposes of vacating default judgment is defense presumptively established when allegations of defendant's answer, if established on trial, would constitute a complete defense to the action, and defendant need not establish its defense beyond doubt in its pleading. Hritz v. Woma Corp., C.A.Pa., 732 F.2d 1178, 1181.

Partial defense. One which goes only to a part of the cause of action, or which only tends to mitigate the damages to be awarded.

Peremptory defense. A defense which insists that the plaintiff never had the right to institute the suit, or that, if he had, the original right is extinguished or determined.

Personal defense. In negotiable instruments law, a defense which, though not good as against a holder in due course, is good against certain parties, because of their participation in or knowledge of certain transactions or facts from which such defense arises. Such defenses include all defenses that are not real or absolute defenses. U.C.C. § 3-305.

Pretermitted defense. One which was available to a party and of which he might have had the benefit if he had pleaded it in due season, but which cannot afterwards be heard as a basis for affirmative relief.

Real defense. In negotiable instruments law, a defense inherent in the res and therefore good against anyone seeking to enforce the instrument, even a holder in due course. Real defenses include infancy, and such other incapacity, or duress, or illegality of the transaction, as renders the obligation of the party a nullity, and fraud in the factum. These defenses are good even against a holder in due course because, where they exist, no contract was formed. U.C.C. § 3-305(2). See also Real defenses.

Self defense. See Self-defense.

Sham defense. A false or fictitious defense, interposed in bad faith, and manifestly untrue, insufficient, or irrelevant on its face.

Defense attorney. Lawyer who files appearance in behalf of defendant and represents such in civil or criminal case. See Public defender.

Defense au fond en droit /deyfons ow fond on dr(w)6/. (Called, also, defense en droit). A demurrer.

Defense au fond en fait /deyfons ow fond on fey/. The general issue.

Défense bonds. United States Savings Bonds.

Défense of habitation. In criminal law, right to use force to defend one's home; interposed in criminal case in defense of crime. See Defense of property.

Defense of insanity. In criminal cases, an affirmative defense interposed to prove that defendant lacked essential mental capacity which is required for criminal responsibility. Model Penal Code, § 4.01. Fed.R.Crim.P. 12.2 requires the defendant to notify the prosecutor prior to trial of intention to assert such defense. See Insanity.

Defense of others. A justification defense available when one harms or threatens another in defense of a person other than oneself. See e.g., Model Penal Code § 3.05. See also Self-defense.

Defense of property. Affirmative defense in criminal case consisting of justified force in protecting one's property though such force must be reasonable under all circumstances.

Defensiva /d środkówya/va/. In old English law, a lord or earl of the marches, who was the warden and defender of his country.

Defensive allegation. In English ecclesiastical law, a species of pleading, where the defendant, instead of denying the plaintiff's charge upon oath, has any circumstances to offer in his defense. This entitles him, in his turn to the plaintiff's answer upon oath, upon which he may proceed to proofs as well as his antagonist. 3 Bl.Comm. 100.

Defensive collateral estoppel. Doctrine precluding plaintiff from relitigating identical issues by merely switching adversary; thus, defensive collateral estoppel gives plaintiff strong incentive to join all possible defendants in first action if possible. Baron v. Bryant, D.C. Hawaii, 556 F.Supp. 531, 536. See also Collateral estoppel.

Defenso /dafensow/. In old England, that part of any open field or place that was allotted for corn or hay, and upon which there was no common or feeding, was customarily said to be in defenso; so of any meadow ground that was laid in for hay only. The same term was applied to a wood where part was inclosed or fenced, to secure the growth of the underwood from the injury of cattle.
Canon law. The advocate or patron of a church. An officer who had charge of the temporalities of the church.

Civil law. A defender; one who assumed the defense of another's case in court. Also an advocate. A tutor or curator.

Old English law. A guardian, defender, or protector. The defendant in an action. A person vouched in to warranty.

Defensor civitatis /dafensar sitystetas/. Defender or protector of a city or municipality. An officer under the Roman empire, whose duty it was to protect the people against the injustice of the magistrates, the insolence of the subaltern officers, and the rapacity of the money-lenders. He had the powers of a judge, with jurisdiction of pecuniary causes to a limited amount, and the lighter species of offenses. He had also the care of the public records, and powers similar to those of a notary in regard to the execution of wills and conveyances.

Defensor fidei /dafensar faydiyay/. Defender of the faith. See Defender.

Defensum /dafensam/. A prohibition. An inclosure of land; any fenced ground. See Defenso.

Defer. Delay; put off; remand; postpone to a future time. The term does not have, however, the meaning of abolish, Moore v. Sampson County, 220 N.C. 232, 17 S.E.2d 22, 23, or omit, United States v. Murine Co., C.C.A.I11., 90 F.2d 549, 551.

Deferral. Act of delaying, postponing or putting off. Deferral of taxes. Postponement of taxes from one year to a later year. For example, individuals can defer taxes by contributing money to an individual retirement account (where contributions, as well as any earnings on the contributions, are taxed only when actually withdrawn from the IRA).

Deferral of taxes. Postponement of taxes from one year to a later year. For example, individuals can defer taxes by contributing money to an individual retirement account (where contributions, as well as any earnings on the contributions, are taxed only when actually withdrawn from the IRA).

Deferral period. Time span within which payment of expense, premium, interest, or the like, is delayed or in which income is postponed. See also Grace period.

Deferred annuity contract. An agreement in which the terms require payment to begin after a certain period of time has elapsed; e.g., payment will begin when the annuitant reaches the age of 60. See Annuity.

Deferred charge. Expense not recognized currently on the income statement and which is carried on the balance sheet; e.g. discount on bonds. Expenditure not recognized as an expense of the period when made but carried forward as an asset to be written off in future periods, such as for advance rent payments or insurance premiums.

Deferred claims. Claims which are postponed to a future date or to a subsequent accounting period.

Deferred compensation. Compensation that will be taxed when received and not when earned. An example is contributions by an employer to a qualified pension or profit-sharing plan on behalf of an employee. Such contributions will not be taxed to the employee until the funds are made available or distributed to the employee (e.g., upon retirement).

Nonqualified deferred compensation plans. Compensation arrangements which are frequently offered to executives. Such plans may include stock options, restricted stock, etc. Generally, an executive may defer the recognition of taxable income to future periods and the employer does not receive a tax deduction until the employee is required to include the compensation in income.

Deferred credits. Credits which are required to be spread over subsequent accounting periods such as the premium on bonds issued.

Deferred income. Income received but not yet earned, i.e., prepaid rent or insurance. Deferred income is recorded as a liability on the balance sheet until such time as the income is earned and recorded as revenue.

Deferred interest bonds. Bonds which carry a provision that interest payments are postponed for a certain period of time.

Deferred lien. Lien postponed or delayed in its effect until a future time as contrasted with a present lien; usually possessory in nature.

Deferred payments. Payments of principal or interest postponed to a future time; installment payments. See also Deferred income.

Deferred sentence. A sentence, the pronouncement of which has been postponed. It does not operate as a suspension of sentence. See Probation.

Deferred stock. See Stock.

Deficiency. A lack, shortage, or insufficiency. The amount by which the tax properly due exceeds the sum of the amount of tax shown on a taxpayer's return plus amounts previously assessed or collected as a deficiency, less any credits, refunds or other payments due the taxpayer; i.e., the amount a taxpayer is deficient in his tax payments. See Deficiency assessment; Deficiency notice.

That part of a debt secured by mortgage not realized from sale of mortgaged property. A judgment or decree for the amount of such deficiency is called a "deficiency judgment" or "deedee." See Deficiency judgment.
Deficiency assessment. In taxation, the excess of the amount of tax computed by the Internal Revenue Service over the amount computed by the taxpayer. I.R.C. § 6211 et seq. See also Deficiency; Deficiency notice; Jeopardy assessment.

Deficiency bill. In parliamentary practice, an appropriation bill covering items of expense omitted from the general appropriation bill or bills, or for which insufficient appropriations were made. If intended to cover a variety of such items, it is commonly called a "general deficiency bill"; if intended to make provision for expenses which must be met immediately, or which cannot wait the ordinary course of the general appropriation bills, it is called an "urgent deficiency bill."

Deficiency dividends. See Dividend.

Deficiency judgment. In mortgage law, imposition of personal liability on mortgagor for unpaid balance of mortgage debt after foreclosure has failed to yield full amount of due debt. In re Pittsburgh-Duquesne Development Co., C.A.Pa., 482 F.2d 243, 246. If a foreclosure sale yields less than the mortgage debt, most states permit the mortgagee to obtain a judgment for the difference. Such deficiency judgments are subject, however, to a substantial amount of statutory regulation. May also apply to debt due after repossession of personal property subject to security interest. See also Judgment.

Deficiency notice. Notice of tax deficiency (90 day letter) which is mailed to taxpayer by I.R.S. and which is prerequisite to jurisdiction of Tax Court. I.R.C. § 6212. See also Ninety day letter.

Deficiency suits. In mortgage law, action to recover difference between debt and amount realized on foreclosure. See also Deficiency judgment.

Deficit. An excess of expenditures over revenues. Excess of liabilities and debts over income and assets. A negative balance in the earnings and profits account. Financial loss in operation of business. Something wanting, generally in the accounts of one intrusted with money, or in the money received by him. The term is broad enough to cover defalcation, misappropriation, shrinkage, or costs, and, in its popular meaning, signifies deficiency from any cause.

In accounting, opposite of surplus on the balance sheet. May represent accumulated losses. A negative balance in the earnings and profits account.

Deficit spending. Expenditures in excess of income; usually from borrowed funds rather than from actual revenues or surplus.

De fide et officio judicis non recipitur quaestio, sed de scientia, sive sit error juris, sive facti /di fäydiy et ašfishiyow jüdwäsas nôn räsipatarkwes(h)itàiyow, sëd diy sayénšyi(ya), sâyviy st èhtër jûras sâyviy fäktay/. Concerning the fidelity and official conduct of a judge, no question is [will be] entertained; but [only] concerning his knowledge, whether the error [committed] be of law or of fact. The bona fides and honesty of purpose of a judge cannot be questioned, but his decision may be impugned for error either of law or fact. The law doth so much respect the certainty of judgments, and the credit and authority of judges, that it will not permit any error to be assigned which impeacheth them in their trust and office, and in willful abuse of the same; but only in ignorance and mistaking either of the law, or of the case and matter of fact. Thus, it cannot be assigned for error that a judge did that which he ought not to do; as that he entered a verdict for the plaintiff, where the jury gave it for the defendant.

De fidei lesioné /diy fâydiyay liyž(h)iyówni/. Of breach of faith or fidelity.

Defile. To corrupt purity or perfection of; to debase; to make ceremonially unclean; to pollute; to sully; to dishonor. State v. Kassett, 30 Ohio App.2d 77, 283 N.E.2d 636, 638. To debauch, deflower, or corrupt the chastity of a woman. The term does not necessarily imply force or ravishment, nor does it connote previous immaculateness. See also Desecrate.

Defilement /dâfsâylmánt/. Uncleanness; impurity; corruption of morals or conduct.

Define. To explain or state the exact meaning of words and phrases; to state explicitly; to limit; to determine essential qualities of; to determine the precise significance of; to settle; to establish or prescribe authoritative to; to make clear. Walling v. Yeakley, C.C.A.Colo., 140 F.2d 830, 832. To declare that a certain act shall constitute an offense is defining that offense. U. S. v. Arjona, 120 U.S. 479, 7 S.Ct. 628, 30 L.Ed. 728. See also Definition.

To "define" with respect to space, means to set or establish its boundaries authoritatively; to mark the limits of; to determine with precision or to exhibit clearly the boundaries of; to determine the end or limit; to fix or establish the limits. It is the equivalent to declare, fix or establish. Seeking out what exists already is not "defining." Redlands Foothill Groves v. Jacobs, D.C.Cal., 30 F.Supp. 995, 1004.

De fine force /diy fâyni fôr/. L. Fr. Of necessity; of pure necessity. See Fine-force.

De fine non capiendo pro pulchre placitando /diy fâyni nôn kâpiyëndô prôw pôlkriy plâststëndôw/. A writ prohibiting the taking of fines for beau pleader.

De fine pro redisseisina capiendo /diy fâyni prôw riydalslyzôns kâpiyëndôw/. A writ which lay for the release of one imprisoned for a re-disseisin, on payment of a reasonable fine.

De finibus levatis /diy fâynsôs lâvîytäs/. Concerning fines levied. The title of the English statute 27 Edw. I, requiring fines thereafter to be levied, to be read openly and solemnly in court.

DEFICIENCY ASSESSMENT
Definite. Fixed, determined, defined, bounded.

Definite sentence. Sentence calling for imprisonment for specified number of years as contrasted with indeterminate sentence which leaves duration to prison authorities (e.g. parole boards) and good behavior of prisoner. Also called “determinate sentence”.

Definitio /dɛfɪnɪʃ(ə)n/. Lat. Definition, or more strictly, limiting or bounding; as in the maxim of the civil law: Omnis definitio periculosa est, parum est enim ut non subverti possit, i.e., the attempt to bring the law within the boundaries of precise definitions is hazardous, as there are but few cases in which such a limitation cannot be subverted.

Definition. A description of a thing by its properties; an explanation of the meaning of a word or term. The process of stating the exact meaning of a word by means of other words. Such a description of the thing defined, including all essential elements and excluding all nonessential, as to distinguish it from all other things and classes. See also Define.

Definitive. That which finally and completely ends and settles a controversy. For example, a definitive sentence or judgment as opposed to an interlocutory judgment. See Definite sentence.

Definitive sentence. See Definite sentence.

Deflation. Decline in price of goods and services.

Deflect. To turn aside, to deviate from a straight or horizontal line or from a proper position, to swerve.

Defloration /dɛfələˈreɪʃən/. Seduction or debauching. The act by which a woman is deprived of her virginity.

Deforce. In old English law, to withhold wrongfully; to withhold the possession of lands from one who is lawfully entitled to them. 3 Bl.Comm. 172.

Deforcement. Deforcement is where a man wrongfully keeps lands to which another person is entitled. It therefore includes disseisin, abatement, discontinuance, and intrusion. But it is applied especially to cases, not falling under those heads, where the person entitled to the freehold has never had possession. 3 Bl.Comm. 172. Also, to detain dower from widow.

Deforciant /dɛfərʃənt/. One who wrongfully keeps the owner of lands and tenements out of the possession of them. 2 Bl.Comm. 350.

Deforcier /dɛfərʃər/. L. Lat. To withhold lands or tenements from the rightful owner. This is a word of art which cannot be supplied by any other word.

Deforcium /dɛfərʃiəm/. L. Lat. In old English law, a distress, distraint, or seizure of goods for satisfaction of a lawful debt.

De forisfactura maritagi /dɪˌfɔːrɪsfækʃərə mərɪˈteɪʃə/ˌ. Writ of forfeiture of marriage.

Deforciare /dɛfərˈʃiərə/. L. Lat. To withhold lands to which another person is entitled.

Deforciant /dɪˈfɔːrʃənt/. One who wrongfully keeps lands to which another person is entitled. It therefore includes disseisin, abatement, discontinuance, and intrusion. But it is applied especially to cases, not falling under those heads, where the person entitled to the freehold has never had possession. 3 Bl.Comm. 172. Also, to detain dower from widow.

Defraud. To make a misrepresentation of an existing material fact, knowing it to be false or making it recklessly without regard to whether it is true or false, intending one to rely and under circumstances in which such person does rely to his damage. To practice fraud; to cheat or trick. To deprive a person of property or any interest, estate, or right by fraud, deceit, or artifice. See also Collusion; Deceit; Fraud; Material fact; Misrepresentation.

Intent to defraud means an intention to deceive another person, and to induce such other person, in reliance upon such deception, to assume, create, transfer, alter or terminate a right, obligation or power with reference to property.

Defraudation. Privation by fraud.

Defunct. Having ceased to exist; no longer operative. Deceased; a deceased person. A business which has ceased to function.

Degaster /dɪˈɡæstər/. L. Fr. To waste.

De gestu et fama /dɪˈɡɛstju ət fæmə/. Of behavior and reputation. An old writ which lay in cases where a person’s conduct and reputation were impeached.

Degradation. A deprivation of dignity; dismissal from rank or office; act or process of degrading. Moral or intellectual decadence; degeneration; deterioration. An ecclesiastical censure, whereby a clergyman is divested of his holy orders. There are two sorts by the canon law,—one summary, by word only; the other solemn, by stripping the party degraded of those ornaments and rights which are the ensigns of his degree. Degradation is otherwise called “deposition,” but the canonists have distinguished between these two terms, deeming the former as the greater punishment of the two. There was likewise a degradation of a lord or knight at common law, and also by act of parliament.

Dégradations /dɛgrəˈdɑːʒəs/. A term for waste in the French law.

Degrade. See Degradation.

Degradation. Reviling; holding one up to public obloquy; lowering a person in the estimation of the public; exposing to disgrace, dishonor, or contempt.

De gratia /dɪˈɡreɪʃə/ˌ. Of grace or favor, by favor. De speciali gratia, of special grace or favor.
DEGREE

Degree. Extent, measure or scope of an action, condition or relation. Legal extent of guilt or negligence. Title conferred on graduates of school, college, or university. The state or civil condition of a person.

The grade or distance one thing may be removed from another; i.e., the distance, or number of removes, which separates two persons who are related by consanguinity. Thus we speak of a brother as being in the second degree of kindred.

Degree of proof. That measure of cogency required to prove a case depending upon the nature of the case. In a criminal case such proof must be beyond a reasonable doubt, whereas in most civil cases such proof is by a fair preponderance of the evidence. See also Burden of proof; Proof (Proof beyond a reasonable doubt); Preponderance of evidence; Reasonable doubt.

Degrees of crime. A term used to refer to similar conduct that is punishable to a greater or a lesser extent depending on the existence of one or more factors. A division or classification of one specific crime into several grades or stadia of guilt, according to the circumstances attending its commission. For example, in most states there are degrees of murder as “first” and “second” degree murder. Also, a division of crimes generally. Thus, a felony is punishable by imprisonment in state prison whereas a misdemeanor carries a maximum punishment of a short term sentence to a jail or house of correction and/or a fine. In some jurisdictions there are also petty misdemeanors. In addition, criminal codes in certain states classify felonies and misdemeanors into classes (e.g., class A, B, etc.) with corresponding punishment or sentencing categories. See also Classification of crimes; Crime.

Degrees of kin. The relationship between a deceased and the survivors which govern descent and distribution. See also Descent.

Degrees of negligence. The different grades of negligence which govern the liability of persons; e.g., ordinary negligence as contrasted with gross negligence. See Negligence.

De identitate nominis /diy adentateytiy nomanas/. A writ which lay for a man who had relapsed into heresy. 4 Bl.Comm. 46. See Hereticum comburendo.

De homaggio respectuando /diy homaiyjiyow raspek-tyuwsendow/. A writ for respite or postponing homage.

De homine capto in withernam /diy homaniy kaeptow an wißarnam/. (Lat. For taking a man in withernam.) A writ to take a man who had carried away a bondman or bondwoman into another country beyond the reach of a writ of replevin.

De homine replegando /diy homaniy raplyjiyewsendow/. (Lat. For replying to a man.) A writ which lies to reply a man out of prison, or out of the custody of a private person, upon giving security to the sheriff that the man shall be forthcoming to answer any charge against him. 3 Bl.Comm. 129. This writ has been superseded almost wholly, in modern practice, by that of habeas corpus; but it is still used, in some of the states, in an amended and altered form.

De identitate nominis /diy adentateytiy nomanas/. A writ which lay for a man arrested in a personal action and committed to prison under a mistake as to his identity, the proper defendant bearing the same name.

Dei gratia /diyay grésh(y)as/. Lat. By the grace of God. A phrase used in the formal title of a king or queen, importing a claim of sovereignty by the favor or commission of God. In ancient times it was incorporated in the titles of inferior officers (especially ecclesiastical), but in later use was reserved as an assertion of “the divine right of kings.”

De iis qui ponendi sunt in assisis /diy ayas kwá panenday sánt an asáyas/. Of those who are to be put on assises. The title of a statute passed 21 Edw. I, defining the qualifications of jurors.

Dei judicium /diyay juwdish(iy)am/. The judgment of God. The old Saxon trial by ordeal, so called because it was thought to be an appeal to God for the justice of a cause, and it was believed that the decision was according to the will and pleasure of Divine Providence.

De incremento /diyay ığrasmémontow/. Of increase; in addition. Costs de incremento, or costs of increase, are the costs adjudged by the court in civil actions, in addition to the damages and nominal costs found by the jury.

De ingressu /diy aggres(y)uw/. A writ of entry.

De injuria /diyay injuriyas/. Of [his own] wrong. In the technical language of common law pleading, a replication de injuria is one that may be made in an action of tort where the defendant has admitted the acts complained of, but alleges, in his plea, certain new matter by way of justification or excuse. By this replication the plaintiff aver that the defendant committed the grievances in question “of his own wrong, and without any such cause,” or motive or excuse, as that alleged in the plea (de injuria sua propria abaque tali causa); or, admitting part of the matter pleaded, “without the rest of the cause” alleged (abaque residuo cause). In form it is a species of traverse, and it is frequently used when the pleading of the defendant, in answer to which it is directed, consists merely of matter of excuse of the alleged trespass, grievance, breach of contract, or other cause of action. Its comprehensive character in putting in issue all the material facts of the defendant’s plea has also obtained for it the title of the general replication. Such technical pleading no longer exists under current rules practice.

De inofficioso testamento /diy inafis(h)iy6wsow testaméntow/. Concerning an inofficious or undutiful will.

A writ of intrusion /diy integrow/. A new; a second time. As it was before.

De intrusione /diy antruwzhiyówniy/. A writ of intrusion; where a stranger entered after the death of the tenant, to the injury of the reversioner.

De jactura evitanda /diy jsektyura evotáenda/. For avoiding a loss. A phrase applied to a defendant, as de lucro captando is to a plaintiff.

De jactura /diy jactura/. A taking of a solemn oath.

De jure corporation. Corporation which has been created as result of compliance with all of the constitutional or statutory requirements of state of incorporation.

De jure government. See Government.

De jure judices, de facto juratores respondent /diy júriy júwdsi7yiy, diy féktow júrastóriyiz ráspondant/. The judges find the law, the jury the facts.

De jure segregation. Generally refers to segregation directly intended or mandated by law or otherwise issuing from an official racial classification or in other words to segregation which has or had the sanction of law.

Term comprehends any situation in which the activities of school authorities have had a racially discriminatory impact contributing to the establishment or continuation of a dual system of schools, while “de facto segregation” is limited to that which is inadvertent and without the assistance or collusion of school authorities.

Compare De facto segregation.

De la plus beale, or belle /da pl(y)uw bé/ L. Fr. Of the most fair. A term applied to a species of dower, which was assigned out of the fairest of the husband’s tenements.

De latere /diy làtaryi/. From the side; on the side; collaterally; of collaterals.

Delatio /dályshiyow/. In the civil law, an accusation or information.

Delator /dálydor/. An accuser; an informer; a sycophant.

Delatura /dálatyúra/. In old English law, the reward of an accuser.

Delay. To retard; obstruct; put off; postpone; defer; procrastinate; prolong the time of or before; hinder; interpose obstacles; as, when it is said that a conveyance was made to “hinder and delay creditors.” The term does not necessarily, though it may, imply dishonesty or involve moral wrong.

Delay rental. Rent, usually on oil and gas leases, paid for additional time in which to utilize land. Periodic payments, usually annual, by oil and gas lessee for privilege of deferring exploration during primary term of lease. Amber Oil and Gas Co. v. Bratton, Tex.App.—Austin, 711 S.W.2d 741, 743. It does not depend on oil or gas produced, does not exhaust substance of land, and resembles a bonus payment, which is an advance royalty. Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Wilson, C.C.A. Tex., 76 F.2d 766, 769; State v. Magnolia Petroleum Co., Tex.Civ.App., 173 S.W.2d 186, 190.

Del bien estre /dél blýn é(s)tras/. L. Fr. In old English practice, of well being; of form. The same as de bene esse.

Del credere /dél krédryrey/. An agreement by which a factor, when he sells goods on credit, for an additional commission (called a “del credere commission”), guaranties the solvency of the purchaser and his performance of the contract. Such a factor is called a “del credere agent.” He is a mere surety, liable to his principal only in case the purchaser makes default. Agent who is obligated to indemnify his principal in event of loss to principal as result of credit extended by agent to third party.

Delectus personæ /délékts porśówniy/. Lat. Choice of the person. By this term is understood the right of a partner to exercise his choice and preference as to the Delegates, the high court

Delegable duty. An obligation which may be performed by another. Some duties are not delegable such as those which are highly personal, e.g., contract to sing for another. Contract rights are delegable in most instances. See U.C.C. § 2-210(1).

Delegata potestas non potest delegari /délégétà pòstèsistros nòn pówdast délégérày/. A delegated power cannot be delegated.

Delegate. A person who is appointed, authorized, delegated or commissioned to act in the stead of another. Landro v. Pacific Atlantic S. S. Co., D.C.Wash., 30 F.Supp. 538, 539. Transfer of authority from one to another. A person to whom affairs are committed by another.

A person elected or appointed to be a member of a representative assembly. Usually spoken of one sent to a special or occasional assembly or convention. Person selected by a constituency and authorized to act for it at a party or State political convention.

As a verb, it means to transfer authority from one person to another; to empower one to perform a task in behalf of another, e.g., a landlord may delegate his agent to collect rents.

See also Delegable duty; Delegation.

Delegates, the high court of. In English law, formerly the court of appeal from the ecclesiastical and admiralty courts. Abolished upon the judicial committee of the privy council being constituted the court of appeal in such cases.

Delegation. A sending away; a putting into commission; the assignment of a debt to another; the intrusting another with a general power to act for the good of those who depute him; a body of delegates. The transfer of authority by one person to another. The act of making or commissioning a delegate.

The body of delegates from a State to a national nominating convention or from a county to a State or other party convention. The whole body of delegates or representatives sent to a convention or assembly from one district, place, or political unit are collectively spoken of as a "delegation."

In civil law, a species of novation which consists in the change of one debtor for another, when he who is indebted substitutes a third person who obligates himself in his stead to the creditor, or to the person appointed by him so that the first debtor is acquitted and his obligation extinguished, and the creditor contents himself with the obligation of the second debtor. Delegation is essentially distinguished from any other species of novation, in this: that the former demands the consent of all three parties, but the latter that only of the two parties to the new debt. Delegation is novation effected by the intervention of another person whom the debtor, in order to be liberated from his creditor, gives to such creditor, or to him whom the creditor appoints; and such person so given becomes obliged to the creditor in the place of the original debtor. Perfect delegation exists when the debtor who makes the obligation is discharged by the creditor. Imperfect delegation exists when the creditor retains his rights against the original debtor.

Delegation of powers. Transfer of authority by one branch of government in which such authority is vested to some other branch or administrative agency.

U.S. Constitution delegates different powers to the executive, legislative and judicial branches of government. Exercise by the executive branch of the powers delegated to the legislative branch offends this separation and delegation of powers and hence is unconstitutional. Schechter Poultry Corp. v. U.S., 295 U.S. 495, 55 S.Ct. 837, 79 L.Ed. 1570. Certain powers may not be delegated from one branch of government to another such as the judicial powers or such congressional powers as power to declare war, impeach, or admit new states.

For distinction between delegated powers and various other types of constitutional powers, see Power (Constitutional powers).

De legatis et fidei commissis /di yi lagéytas ét fádiyay komiss/. Of legacies and trusts. The name of a title of the Pandects.

De legatis et fidei commissis non potest delegari /délégétàs et fádiyay komissi non pówdast délégérày/. A delegate cannot delegate; an agent cannot delegate his functions to a subagent without the knowledge or consent of the principal; the person to whom an office or duty is delegated cannot lawfully devolve the duty on another, unless he be expressly authorized so to do.

Delete /deliyl/. To erase; to remove; to strike out.

Deleterious /délétiriyoos/. Hurtful, morally or physically; injurious, as influence; poisonous; wholesome.

De libera falda /di yi libéra földa/. Writ of free fold. A species of quod permissat.

Deliberate, v. To weigh, ponder, discuss, regard upon, consider. To examine and consult in order to form an opinion. To weigh in the mind; to consider the reasons for and against; to consider maturely; reflect upon, as to deliberate a question; to weigh the arguments for and against a proposed course of action. People v. Thomas, 25 Cal.2d 880, 156 P.2d 7, 17, 18. See also Deliberation.

Deliberate, adj. Well advised; carefully considered; not sudden or rash; circumspect; slow in determining. Willful rather than merely intentional. Formed, arrived at, or determined upon as a result of careful thought and weighing of considerations, as a deliberate judgment or plan. Carried on coolly and steadily, especially according to a preconceived design; given to weighing facts and arguments with a view to a choice or decision; careful in considering the consequences of a Deliberate; Premeditation.

See also Deliberation; Premeditation.

Deliberate speed. Phrase used in mandate to desegregate public schools and means such speed as is consistent with the welfare of all people of the state, with the maintenance of law and order and with the preservation, if possible, of the common school system. Calhoun v. Members of Bd. of Ed., City of Atlanta, D.C.Ga., 188 F.Supp. 401, 404; Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483, 74 S.Ct. 686, 98 L.Ed. 873.

Deliberation. The act or process of deliberating. The act of weighing and examining the reasons for and against a contemplated act or course of conduct or a choice of acts or means.

In the context of jury function means that a properly formed jury, comprised of the number of qualified persons required by law, are within the secrecy of jury room analyzing, discussing and weighing evidence which they have heard with a view to reaching a verdict based upon law applicable to facts of case as they find them to be; such deliberation can only be carried on by a lawful number of jurors in the presence of all. Rushing v. State, Tenn.Cr.App., 565 S.W.2d 893, 895.

As used in context of an essential element of first-degree murder, is a weighing in the mind of consequences of course of conduct, as distinguished from acting upon a sudden impulse without exercise of reasoning powers. Davis v. State, 251 Ark. 771, 475 S.W.2d 155, 156.

For purposes of first-degree murder statute, "deliberation" means intent to kill carried out by defendant in cool state of blood, in furtherance of fixed design for revenge or to accomplish unlawful purpose and not under influence of violent passion, suddenly aroused by lawful or just cause or legal provocation. State v. Hamlet, 312 N.C. 162, 321 S.E.2d 837, 842.

See also Deliberate; Premeditation.

Delictual fault /daliktyuwal fölt/. An act, productive of obligations, which takes place between persons juridically strangers to each other; it supposes the absence of obligation and its result is the creation of one. Reserve Ins. Co. v. Fabre, 243 La. 982, 149 So.2d 413, 416.

Delictum /daliktm/. Lat. A delict, tort, wrong, injury, or offense. Actions ex delicto are such as are founded on a tort, as distinguished from actions on contract.

Culpability, blameworthiness, or legal delinquency. The word occurs in this sense in the maxim, "In part delicto melior est condito defendentis".

A challenge of a juror propter delictum is for some crime or misdemeanor that affects his credit and renders him infamous. 3 Bl.Comm. 363.

Delimit. To mark or lay out the limits or boundary line of a territory or country; to fix or to mark the limits of; to demarcate; to limit; bound. Walling v. Yeakley, C.C.A.Colo., 140 F.2d 830, 832.

Delimitation. The act of fixing, marking off, or describing the limits or boundary line of a territory, country, authority, right, statutory exception or the like. See Delimit.
Delinquency. Failure, omission, violation of law or duty. Failure to make payment on debts when due. State or condition of one who has failed to perform his duty or obligation.

Delinquency charges. As used in the commercial credit field, generally refer to specific pecuniary sums that are assessed against the borrower solely because of his failure to make his payment in timely manner. Johnson v. McCrackin-Sturman Ford, Inc., C.A.Pa., 527 F.2d 257, 265.

Delinquent, n. Person who has been guilty of some crime, offense, or failure of duty or obligation.

Delinquent, adj. As applied to a debt or claim, it means simply due and unpaid at the time appointed by law or fixed by contract; as due and unpaid taxes or mortgage payments.

Delinquent child. An infant of not more than specified age who has violated criminal laws or engages in disobedient, indecent or immoral conduct, and is in need of treatment, rehabilitation, or supervision. In re Garner, 230 Pa.Super. 426, 326 A.2d 581, 584. Defined by a state statute as: A child who (A) violates any federal or state law, or municipal or local ordinance; or (B) without just cause runs away from his parental home or other properly authorized and lawful place of abode; or (C) is beyond the control of his parents, parent, guardian or other custodian; or (D) has engaged in indecent or immoral conduct; or (E) has been habitually truant or, while in school, has been continuously and overtly defiant of school rules and regulations; or (F) has violated any lawful order of court. See 18 U.S.C.A. § 5001 et seq. See also Disobedient child.

With respect to parental liability for acts of delinquent child, see Parental liability.

Delinquent taxes. Past due and unpaid taxes.

Delirium /daliriyam/. Disturbed mental state characterized by a combination of motor restlessness displaying excitement, confusion, incoherence, perplexity, and disorientation, in combination with a dream-like state and some sensory disturbance, such as hallucinations and delusions. Sometimes caused by an infection or a toxic chemical substance.

Delirium febrile /daliriyam fébrilí/. A form of mental aberration incident to fevers, and sometimes to the last stages of chronic diseases.

Delirium tremens /daliriyam triymanz/. A delirium due to alcohol (Korsakow's Syndrome) or other drug poisoning or withdrawal, or to dietary metabolic deprivation resulting from sudden abstinence from alcohol.

Delisting. The process by which the privileges of a security listed on an exchange are suspended for failure to meet the requirements of listing. Such delisting may be permanent or temporary. See also Deregistration.

Deliverance. The verdict rendered by a jury.

At common law, a writ allowed a plaintiff in replevin, where the defendant has obtained judgment for return of the goods, by default or nonsuit, in order to have the same distress again delivered to him, giving the same security as before. 3 Bl.Comm. 150.

Delivery. The act by which the res or substance thereof is placed within the actual or constructive possession or control of another. Poor v. American Locomotive Co., C.C.A.II., 67 F.2d 626, 630. What constitutes delivery depends largely on the intent of the parties. It is not necessary that delivery should be by manual transfer, Jones v. Young, Tex.Civ.App., 539 S.W.2d 901, 904; e.g. "deliver" includes mail. Rev. Model Bus. Corp. Act, § 1.40. See also Drop shipment delivery; Misdelivery.

Absolute and conditional. An absolute delivery, as distinguished from conditional delivery or delivery in escrow, is one which is complete upon the actual transfer of the instrument from the possession of the grantor. A conditional delivery is one which passes the thing subject to delivery from the possession of the grantor, but is not to be completed by possession of the grantee, or a third person as his agent, until the happening of a specified event. One of the exceptions to parol evidence rule which permits introduction of evidence to the effect that document was delivered on condition that something be done and it is understood that document does not become operative until such action be taken.

Actual and constructive. Actual delivery consists in the giving real possession to the vendee or his servants or special agents who are identified with him in law and represent him. It is a formal immediate transfer of the property to the vendee.

Constructive delivery is a general term, comprehending all those acts which, although not truly conferring a real possession of the thing sold on the vendee, have been held, by construction of law, equivalent to acts of real delivery. A constructive delivery of personality takes place when the goods are set apart and notice given to the person to whom they are to be delivered, or when, without actual transfer of the goods or their symbol, the conduct of the parties is such as to be inconsistent with any other supposition than that there has been a change in the nature of the holding. "Constructive delivery" is a term comprehending all those acts which, although not truly conferring a real possession of the vendee, have been held by construction of law equivalent to acts of real delivery. Lakeview Gardens, Inc. v. State ex rel. Schneider, Kan., 557 P.2d 1286, 1290. See also Symbolical delivery, below.

Commercial law. Delivery with respect to instruments, documents of title, chattel paper or securities means voluntary transfer of possession. U.C.C. § 1-201(14).

The act by which seller parts with possession and buyer acquires possession. Delivery occurs whenever seller does everything necessary to put goods completely and unconditionally at buyer's disposal. Crowder v. Aurora Co-op. Elevator Co., 223 Neb. 704, 393 N.W.2d 250, 256.

Conditional delivery. Issuance of an instrument with the understanding that the instrument is ineffective, that is, the maker or drawer is not liable thereon, unless and until a specified event, i.e., a condition precedent, occurs.

Deed. The final and absolute transfer of a deed, properly executed, to the grantee, or to some person for his use, in such manner that it cannot be recalled by the grantor. Controlling factor in determining if there has been delivery of a deed is the intention of the grantor; to constitute "delivery" the deed must be placed in the hands of the grantee or within his control, with the intention that it is to become presently operative as a conveyance. Jones v. Young, 539 S.W.2d 901, 904.

Delivery bond. A bond given upon the seizure of goods (as under the revenue laws) conditioned for their restoration to the defendant, or the payment of their value, if so adjudged.

A guaranteed undertaking by a defendant whose property has been seized through attachment promising that, in exchange for return of the property to him pending resolution of the main action, he will surrender the property or its value in satisfaction of judgment against her. Another name for this bond is "forthcoming bond."

Delivery in escrow. Transfer physically of something such as a deed to escrow agent to be held on some condition which is not inconsistent with the primary transaction and which is to be released on the occurrence of some specific event or happening. See Escrow.

Delivery order. A written order to deliver goods directed to a warehouseman, carrier, or other person who in the ordinary course of business issues warehouse receipts or bills of lading. U.C.C. § 7-102(1)(d). The primary function of the delivery order is to aid in the breaking down into smaller lots of one large lot of goods (whether fungible or otherwise) which is represented by one bill of lading.

Drugs. In the context of illegal transfer of drugs, "deliver" means the actual, constructive, or attempted transfer from one person to another of a controlled substance. State v. Medina, 87 N.M. 394, 534 P.2d 486, 489.

Second delivery. The legal delivery by the depositary of a deed placed in escrow.

Symbolical delivery. The constructive delivery of the subject-matter of a sale, where it is cumbersome or inaccessible, by the actual delivery of some article which is conventionally accepted as the symbol or representative of it, or which renders access to it possible, or which is the evidence of the purchaser's title to it; as the key of a warehouse, or a bill of lading of goods on shipboard.

De lunatico inquiringo /diy ljuyuːmː老虎机ʊkˌɪŋkwɔːrɛnˈdʊ/. The name of a writ directed to the sheriff, directing him to inquire by good and lawful men whether the party charged is a lunatic or not.

Delusion. False, unshakeable belief which is (a) contrary to fact, (b) inappropriate to the person's education, intelligence or culture, and (c) adhered to in spite of tangible evidence that it is false. A reality judgment which cannot be accepted by people of the same class, education, race and period of life as the person who expresses it and which cannot be changed by logical argument or evidence against it. Three common delusions are: (1) delusions of persecution; (2) delusions of grandeur; and (3) delusions of personal unworthiness. The first two are common to schizophrenia. Delusion appears to spring from a distorted world view created by the subject in order to satisfy his inner needs or to reconcile conflicting elements of his personality. See Insane delusion.

Dem. An abbreviation for "demise"; e.g., Doe dem. Smith, Doe, on the demise of Smith.

De magnæ assisi eligenda /diy mæɡnə səʊˈʃiːzə əˈlɪdʒəndə/. A writ by which the grand assise was chosen and summoned.

Demain. See Demesne.

De majori et minori non variant jura /diy məˈdɔːrəri ət məˈmɔːrəri nəʊn vərˈvæntə dʒʉːrə/. Concerning greater and less laws do not vary.

De malo /diy məˈloʊ/. Of illness. This phrase was frequently used to designate several species of essoin (q.v.), such as de malo lecti, of illness in bed; de malo veniendi, of illness (or misfortune) in coming to the place where the court sat; de malo villæ, of illness in the town where the court sat.

Demand, v. To claim as one's due; to require; to ask relief. To summon; to call in court.

Demand, n. The assertion of a legal right; a legal obligation asserted in the courts. An imperative request preferred by one person to another, under a claim of right, requiring the latter to do or yield something or to abstain from some act. Request for payment of debt or amount due. An asking with authority, claiming or challenging as due. Smith v. Municipal Court of Glendale Judicial Dist., Los Angeles County, 167 Cal.App.2d 534, 334 P.2d 931.

The seeking after a commodity or service. It is not something static, but necessarily contains the idea of "competition" and a realization that markets are as much limited by sales efforts as by capacity to produce. Mendota Coal & Coke Co. v. Eastern Ry. & Lumber Co., C.C.A.Wash., 53 F.2d 77, 82.

See also Call; Liquidated demand; On demand; Payable on demand.

Cross-demand. A demand that is preferred by one party to an action in opposition to a demand already preferred against him by his adversary. See Counterclaim; Cross-claim.

Demand clause. Provision in note which allows holder to compel full payment if maker fails to meet any installment. See Demand note, below.

Demand deposits. Any bank deposit which the depositor may demand (withdraw) at any time in contrast to time deposit which requires depositor to wait the specified time before withdrawing or pay a penalty for early withdrawal. Funds accepted by bank subject to immediate withdrawal; such represent largest element in money supply of the United States. U. S. v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, D.C.Pa., 201 F.Supp. 348, 360.

Demand draft. Sight draft; draft payable on demand.

Demand instrument. An instrument that is payable on demand, at sight or on presentation. See U.C.C. § 3-108 (when an instrument is payable on demand). See also Demand note, below.

Demand loan. Loan which may be called by lender at any time because there is no fixed maturity date. A loan payable upon request by the creditor rather than on a specific date. See Demand note, below.

Demand note. A note with no set maturity date which expressly states that it is payable on demand, on presentation, or at sight. A note in which no time for payment is expressed. Kent v. Lampman, 59 Cal.App.2d 407, 139 P.2d 57, 59. A note issued, accepted or indorsed when overdue, as regards person so issuing, accepting or indorsing it. Nees v. Hagan, 22 Tenn.App. 78, 118 S.W.2d 566, 568. See also Demand instrument, above; and Sight draft.

Legal demand. A demand properly made, as to form, time, and place, by a person lawfully authorized.

Personal demand. A demand for payment of a bill or note, made upon the drawer, acceptor or maker, in person.

Demandant /dáməndant/. The plaintiff or party suing.

Demandress /dámnərs/. A female demandant.

Demand note. A demand properly made, as to form, time, and place, by a person lawfully authorized.

Demeanor /diːˈmɪnər/. As respects a witness or other person, relates to physical appearance; outward bearing or behavior. Faircloth v. State, 44 Ala.App. 295, 208 So.2d 66, 70. It embraces such facts as the tone of voice in which a witness' statement is made, the hesitation or readiness with which his answers are given, the look of the witness, his carriage, his evidences of surprise, his gestures, his zeal, his bearing, his expression, his yawns, the use of his eyes, his furtive or meaning glances, or his shrugs, the pitch of his voice, his self-possession or embarrassment, his air of candor or seeming levity. Rains v. Rains, 17 N.J.Misc. 310, 8 A.2d 715, 717.

Demeanor evidence. Species of real evidence consisting of behavior of witness on the witness stand and which may be considered by trier of fact on issue of credibility.

Demeanor evidence. Species of real evidence consisting of behavior of witness on the witness stand and which may be considered by trier of fact on issue of credibility.

De mediate lingua /diː miːdɪˈdɪstɛtɪj lɪŋɡwɪ/. Of the half tongue; half of one tongue and half of another. This phrase describes that species of jury which, at common law, was allowed in both civil and criminal cases where one of the parties was an alien, not speaking or understanding English. It was composed of six English denizens or natives and six of the alien's own countrymen.

De medice /diː miːdiˈdɪs/. A writ in the nature of a writ of right, which lay where upon a subinfeudation the mesne (or middle) lord suffered his under-tenant or tenant paravail to be distrained upon by the lord paramount for the rent due him from the mesne lord.

De melioribus damnis /diː miːliˈərəbəs destinəs/. Of or for the better damages. A term used in practice to denote the election by a plaintiff against which of several defendants (where the damages have been assessed separately) he will take judgment.

Judgment de melioribus damnis (of, or for, the better damages). Where, in an action against several persons for a joint tort, the jury by mistake sever the damages by giving heavier damages against one defendant than against the others the plaintiff may cure the defect by taking judgment for the greater damages (de mellioribus damnis) against that defendant, and entering a nolle prosequi (q.v.) against the others.

Demens /diːmənəs/. One whose mental faculties are enfeebled; one who has lost his mind; distinguished from amens, one totally insane.

Demented /diːməntəd/. Of unsound mind.

Dementtenant en avant /diː məntənt ən əvɔ̃t/. L. Fr. From this time forward.

Dementia /diːmənətʃ(ə)ˈliːə/. Form of mental disorder in which cognitive and intellectual functions of the mind are prominently affected; impairment of memory is early sign; total recovery not possible since organic cerebral disease is involved. See also insanity.

Dementia praecox /diːmənətʃ(ə)ˈpriːkɔks/. A term used to include a wide range of mental disorders which occur in early life. It is also called adolescent insanity and schizophrenia. Dementia praecox includes three types, namely, primary dementia, catatonia, and hebephrenia. See also insanity.

De mercatoribus /diː mərˈkaːtɔrəbəs/. "Concerning merchants." The name of an English statute passed in the eleventh year of Edw. I (1233), more commonly called the "Statute of Acton Burnel," authorizing the recognition by statute merchant. 2 BL.Comm. 161.

Demesne /diːməsən/. Domain; dominical; held in one's own right, and not of a superior; not allotted to tenants.
In the language of pleading, own; proper; original. Thus, son assault demesne, his own assault, his assault originally or in the first place.

Ancient demesne. See Ancient.

Demesne as of fee. A man is said to be seised in his demesne as of fee of a corporeal inheritance, because he has a property, dominicum or demesne, in the thing itself. But when he has no dominion in the thing itself, as in the case of an incorporeal hereditament, he is said to be seised as of fee, and not in his demesne as of fee. 2 Bl.Comm. 106.

Demesne lands. In old English law, those lands of a manor not granted out in tenancy, but reserved by the lord for his own use and occupation. Lands set apart and appropriated by the lord for his own private use, as for the supply of his table, and the maintenance of his family; the opposite of tenemental lands. Tenancy and demesne, however, were not in every sense the opposites of each other; lands held for years or at will being included among demesne lands, as well as those in the lord's actual possession. 2 Bl.Comm. 90.

Demesne lands of the crown. That share of lands reserved to the crown at the original distribution of landed property, or which came to it afterwards by forfeiture or otherwise. 1 Bl.Comm. 296.

Demesno. Pertaining to a demesne.

De minimis non curat lex. The law cares not for small things.

Demi /demi/-/. Fr. Half; the half. Used chiefly in De minimis non curat lex. De minimis doctrine. See De minimis non curat lex.

Demisio /demiyas(i)ow/. Latin. A declaration in ejectment might contain either one demise or several. When it contained only one, it was called a "declaration with a single demise."

Demised premises. That property, or portion of a property which is leased to a tenant.

Demisi /damisyay/-/. Lat. I have demised or leased. Demisi, concessi, et ad firmam tradidi; have demised, granted, and to farm let. The usual operative words in ancient leases, as the corresponding English words are in the modern forms. 2 Bl.Comm. 317, 318.

Demissio /demin(sh)iow/-/. Lat. A demise or letting. Chiefly used in the phrase ex demissione (on the demise), which formed part of the title of the cause in the old actions of ejectment, where it signified that the nominal De demonstrative bequest. A testamentary gift which, by its terms, must be paid from a specific fund; e.g. bequest of one thousand dollars to be paid from testator’s shares of stock in X Corporation. Hence, it is partly a general bequest and partly a specific bequest. See also Legacy.

Demonstrative evidence. That evidence addressed directly to the senses without intervention of testimony. Such evidence is concerned with real objects which illustrate some verbal testimony and has no probative value in itself. People v. Diaz, 111 Misc.2d 1083, 445 N.Y.S.2d 888, 889. Real (“thing”) evidence such as the gun in a trial of homicide or the contract itself in the trial of a contract case. Evidence apart from the testimony of witnesses concerning the thing. Such evidence may include maps, diagrams, photographs, models, charts, medical illustrations, X-rays.

Demonstrative legacy. See Legacy.

Demonstrator. One who stands, walks or parades in public in support of a cause to inform the public of the legitimacy of the cause and to enlist support for such cause.

Demonstration. Description; pointing out. That which is said or written to designate a thing or person. Show or display of attitudes toward a person, cause, or issue. See also False demonstration.

Demonstrative bequest. A testamentary gift which, by its terms, must be paid from a specific fund; e.g. bequest of one thousand dollars to be paid from testator’s shares of stock in X Corporation. Hence, it is partly a general bequest and partly a specific bequest. See also Legacy.
set forth they are insufficient for the plaintiff to proceed upon or to oblige the defendant to answer; or that, for some reason apparent on the face of the complaint or bill, or on account of the omission of some matter which ought to be contained therein, or for want of some circumstances which ought to be attendant thereon, the defendant ought not to be compelled to answer. The formal mode of disputing the sufficiency in law of the pleading of the other side. In effect it is an allegation forth a cause of action upon which relief can be granted, or part in most states) demurrers, pleas and exceptions attacking what appears on the face of the document. 87. A legal objection to the sufficiency of a pleading, law. Balsbaugh v. Rowland, 447 Pa. 423, 290 A.2d 85, 87. A legal objection to the sufficiency of a pleading, attacking what appears on the face of the document. People v. Hale, 232 Cal.App.2d 112, 42 Cal.Rptr. 533, 538. See Calif. Code of Civil Proc. § 430.10. See also Demurrer to evidence.

By Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (adopted in whole or part in most states) demurrers, pleas and exceptions for insufficiency of a pleading are abolished. Rule 7(c). Every defense in law shall be made by motion or by answer; motions going to jurisdiction, venue, process, or failure to state a claim are to be disposed of before trial, unless the court orders otherwise. While the Federal Rules do not provide for the use of a demurrer, an equivalent to a general demurrer is provided in the motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim on which relief may be granted. Fed.R. Civil P. 12(b). Objections to the pleadings by means of demurrer still exists however in certain states; see e.g. Calif. Code of Civil Proc. § 430.10 et seq.

Classification of Demurrers

General demurrer. A general demurrer is a demurrer framed in general terms, without showing specifically the nature of the objection, and which is usually resorted to where the objection is to matter of substance. Thus, a demurrer on the ground that the facts set forth no cause of action is a general demurrer (see e.g. Calif. Code of Civil Proc. § 430.10(e)), and a motion to dismiss a bill on ground that there is no equity apparent on the face thereof or that court has no jurisdiction is treated as a general demurrer.

A general demurrer to an indictment challenges only matters of form and substance appearing on its face. It is one which raises an objection that averments are insufficient in law to support the action or defense without specifying any particular cause or defect, and is sufficient only to reach matters of substance.

The Federal Rules equivalent to a general demurrer is a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim on which relief may be granted. Fed.R. Civil P. 12(b).

Special demurrer. A special demurrer goes merely to structure or form of pleading which it attacks, and usually only to some portion thereof, and must distinctly set forth wherein defect lies. Cameron v. Evans Securities Corp., 119 Cal.App. 164, 6 P.2d 272, 274. It is one which excepts to the sufficiency of the pleadings on the opposite side, and shows specifically the nature of the objection, and the particular ground of the exception. Johanson v. Cudahy Packing Co., 107 Utah 114, 152 P.2d 98, 105. See e.g. Calif. Code of Civil Proc. §§ 430.50, 430.60. The Federal Rules analogue of the special demurrer is the motion to make more definite and certain. Fed.R. Civil P. 12(e).

Speaking demurrer. A speaking demurrer is one which, in order to sustain itself, requires the aid of a fact not appearing on the face of the pleading objected to, or, in other words, which alleges or assumes the existence of a fact not already pleaded, and which constitutes the ground of objection and is condemned both by the common law and the code system of pleading. Preston A. Blair Co. v. Rose, 56 Idaho 114, 51 P.2d 209, 212. A speaking demurrer is one which alleges some new matter, not disclosed by the pleading against which the demurrer is aimed and not judicially known or legally presumed to be true.

Parol demurrer. A parol demurrer (not properly a demurrer at all) was a staying of the pleadings; a suspension of the proceedings in an action during the nonage of an infant, especially in a real action. Now abolished. 3 Bl.Comm. 300.

Demurrer book. A record of the issue on a demurrer at law, containing a transcript of the pleadings, with proper entries; and intended for the use of the court and counsel on the argument.

Demurrer ore tenus. An objection to the introduction of any evidence on the ground that the complaint or petition fails to state a cause of action. Peerless Fixture Co. v. Frick, Mo.App., 133 S.W.2d 1089, 1090. This name is sometimes given to a ruling on an objection to evidence, but is not properly a demurrer at all. It should be considered as a general demurrer only.

Demurrer to evidence. This proceeding is analogous to a demurrer to a pleading. It is an objection or exception by one of the parties in an action at law, to the effect that the evidence which his adversary produced is insufficient in point of law (whether true or not) to make out his case or sustain the issue. The practice has been largely superseded by motions for nonsuit and directed verdict. Thus, a motion to nonsuit, a motion to dismiss at close of plaintiff's evidence for failure to prove essential facts, and a defendant's motion for a directed verdict, made at close of the evidence, have been held to be equivalent to a "demurrer to the evidence" for insufficiency to sustain a verdict for plaintiff. A motion to exclude evidence has the effect of a demurrer to the evidence, the chief points of difference being the stage of the proceeding at which each is available and the consequences resulting from deferring the motion to exclude. Thornhill v. Thornhill, 172 Va. 553, 2 S.E.2d 318, 319.

Demurrer to interrogatories. Where a witness objects to a question propounded (particularly on the taking of a deposition) and states his reason for objecting or refusing to answer, it is called a "denmurrer to the interrogatory," though the term cannot here be understood as used in its technical sense.

Denial. A traverse in the pleading of one party of an allegation of the defendant. (Lat. "God's penny.") Denarius Dei (Diay). In old English law, liberty for ships or vessels to run aground, or come ashore (stranded themselves).

Denariate /daneryaist/. In old English law, as much land as is worth one penny per annum.

Denarii /daneriyay/. An ancient general term for any sort of pecunia numerata, or ready money. The French use the word "denier" in the same sense,— payer de ses propres deniers.

Denarius Dei /daneriyas diay/. (Lat. "God's penny.") Earnest money; money given as a token of the completion of a bargain. It differs from arrhoe in this: that arrhoe is a part of the consideration, while the denarius Dei is no part of it. The latter was given away in charity; whence the name.

Denationalization. As applied to a person, the act of depriving him of national rights or status. As applied to an industry or function, the act of returning it to private ownership and control after a period of national or sovereign ownership and control.

De nativo habendo /diy néytawov habéndow/. A writ which lays for a lord directed to the sheriff, commanding him to apprehend a fugitive villain, and restore him, with all his chattels, to the lord.

De natura brevium /diy natyúra břiyviysam/. (Lat.) Concerning the nature of writs. The title of more than one textbook of English Mediaeval law.

Denial. A traverse in the pleading of one party of an allegation of fact asserted by the other; a defense. A response by the defendant to matter(s) alleged by the plaintiff in the complaint. Under Rules of Civil Procedure, denials must be specific and directed at the particular allegations controverted. Denials may be made in part (i.e., specific denial) or in whole (i.e., general denial), but in the main should be specific and "fairly meet the substance of the averments denied." Fed.R.Civ.P. 8(d). Averments in pleadings to which a responsive pleading is required are admitted unless denied. Rule 8(d).

General and specific. In code pleading, a general denial is one which puts in issue all the material averments of the complaint or petition, and permits the defendant to prove and all facts tending to negative those averments or any of them. A specific denial is a separate denial applicable to one particular allegation of the complaint. An answer by way of a general denial is the equivalent of, and substitute for, the general issue under the common-law system of pleading. It gives to the defendant the same right to require the plaintiff to establish by proof all the material facts necessary to show his right to a recovery as was given by that plea.

Denier /danáyvr/. L. Fr. In old English law, denial; refusal. Denier is when the rent (being demanded upon the land) is not paid.

Denier à Dieu /danéy a dyúw/. In French law, earnest money; a sum of money given in token of the completion of a bargain. The phrase is a translation of the Latin denarius Dei (q.v.).

Denization /dénazeyshan/. The act of making one a denizen; the conferring of the privileges of citizenship upon an alien born. See Denizen.

Denize /danáz/. To make a man a denizen or citizen.

Denizen /dénzan/. In English law, a person who, being an alien born, has obtained, ex donatone regis, letters patent to make him an English subject,—a high and incommunicable branch of the royal prerogative. A denizen is in a kind of middle state between an alien and a natural-born subject, and partakes of the status of both of these. The term is used to signify a person who, being an alien by birth, has obtained letters patent making him an English subject. The king may denize, but not naturalize, a man; the latter requiring the consent of parliament, as under the naturalization act, 1870, 33 & 34 Vict., c. 14. A denizen holds a position midway between an alien and a natural-born or naturalized subject, being able to take lands by purchase or devise (which an alien could not until 1870 do), but not able to take lands by descent (which a natural-born or naturalized subject may do). The denizen becomes a British subject from the date of the letters while a naturalized person is placed in a position equivalent to that of a natural-born subject. Naturalization of aliens is now governed by British Nationality Act.

In American law, a dweller; a stranger admitted to certain rights in a foreign country or as one who lives habitually in a country but is not a native born citizen; one holding a middle state between an alien and a natural born subject. One who has some relation to the enemy nation which is not lost by the alien's presence within the United States. United States ex rel. D'Esquivel v. Uhl, 386 N.Y., 905. A denizen is when the rent (being demanded upon the land) is not paid.

Denman's (Lord) Act /lórd danémaz ákt/. An English statute, for the amendment of the law of evidence (6 & 7 Vict., c. 85), which provides that no person offered as a witness shall thereafter be excluded by reason of incapacity, from crime or interest, from giving evidence.

Denman's (Mr.) Act /mistár danémaz ákt/. An English statute, for the amendment of procedure in criminal trials (28 & 29 Vict., c. 18), allowing counsel to sum up the evidence in criminal as in civil trials, provided the prisoner be defended by counsel.

Denombrement /danôbramôn/. In French feudal law, a minute or act drawn up, on the creation of a fief, containing a description of the fief, and all the rights and incidents belonging to it.

Denominatio fieri debet a dignioribus /danômanéy-sh(i)yow fàyseyay débat éy digniýorobas/. Denomination should be made from the more worthy.

Denomination. The act of naming. A society of individuals known by the same name, usually a religious society.

Denominational, adj. /danômaneyshanal/. Of, or pertaining to, a denomination; sectarian.

Denominational institution. Institution controlled or operated by a religious sect or organization and hence forbidden to receive governmental aid because of constitutional separation of church and state.

De nomine proprio non est curandum cum in substantia non erretur; quia nomina mutabilia sunt, res autem immobiles /diy nômeni priôwprépiyw nôn ést kyarândem kàm in subsýtenshy(i)yow nôon sôyter, kwâyâ nômena myûwtëbiyô sânt, riy ôtam îmôwbaliy/>. As to the proper name it is not to be regarded where it errs not in substance, because names are changeable, but things immutable.

De non apparentibis, et non existentibus, eadem est ratio /diy nôn apairéntëbas et nôon ézgastëntëbas iyêyad ést réysh(i)yow/. As to things not apparent, and those not existing, the rule is the same.

De non decimando /diy nôon desâmândow/. Of not paying tithes. A term applied in English ecclesiastical law to a prescription or claim to be entirely discharged of tithes, and to pay no compensation in lieu of them. 2 Bl.Comm. 31.

De non procedendo ad assisam /diy nônon prôwssâdêndow ëd aâsyâram/. A writ forbidding the justices from holding an assise in a particular case.

De non residentia clerici regis /diy nôon rezàdëndësh(i)yow klèräys riîjës/. An ancient writ where a parson was employed in the royal service, etc., to excuse and discharge him of non-residence.

De non sane memorie /diy nônon séniy memô-rîriyjy/"sêniy mëmëriyjy/. L. Fr. Of unsound memory or mind; a phrase synonymous with non compos mentis.

Denounce. To declare (an act or thing) to be a crime and prescribe a punishment for it. To pronounce or condemn something as being evil or morally wrong. The word is also used (not technically but popularly) as the equivalent of "accuse" or "inform against."

The term is frequently used in regard to treaties, indicating the act of one nation in giving notice to another nation of its intention to terminate an existing treaty between the two nations. The French dénoncer means to declare, to lodge an information against.

Denunciation. Act of denouncing.

In the civil law, the act by which an individual informs a public officer, whose duty it is to prosecute offenders, that a crime has been committed.

The giving of an information in the ecclesiastical courts by one who was not the accuser.

Denuntiatio /danônisiêysh(i)yow/. In old English law, a public notice or summons.
Deny. To traverse. To give negative answer or reply to. To refuse to grant or accept. To refuse to grant a petition or protest. Safeway Stores v. Brown, Em.App., 138 F.2d 278, 280. See Denial.

Deodand /dɪˈdɑːnd/. (L. Lat. Deo dandum, a thing to be given to God.) In English law, any personal chattel which was the immediate occasion of the death of any reasonable creature, and which was forfeited to the crown to be applied to pious uses, and distributed in alms by the high almoner.

De odio et atia /dɪˈoʊ diˈɔː təˈtʃiə/. A writ anciently called "breve de bono et malo," addressed to the sheriff to inquire whether a man committed to prison upon suspicion of murder were committed on just cause of suspicion, or only upon malice and ill will (propter odium et atiam); and, if upon the inquisition, due cause of suspicion did not appear, then there issued another writ for the sheriff to admit him to bail. 3 Bl.Comm. 128.

De onerando pro rata portione /dɪˈoʊ nərˈændəʊ pɹoʊ rəˈtoʊnə/əʊn. A writ which lay for charging according to a rateable proportion. A writ which lay for a joint tenant, or tenant in common, who was distrained for more rent than his proportion of the land came to.

De pace et legalitate tenenda /dɪˈpeɪ sɛt ləˈɡɛlətəti təˈnɛnədə/. For keeping the peace, and for good behavior.

De pace et plagis /dɪˈpeɪ sɛt pˈlædʒɪs/. Of peace (breach of peace), and wounds. One of the kinds of criminal appeal formerly in use in England, and which lay in cases of assault, wounding, and breach of the peace.

De pace et roberia /dɪˈpeɪ sɛt rəˈbɛriə/. Of peace [breach of peace] and robbery. One of the kinds of criminal appeal formerly in use in England, and which lay in cases of robbery and breach of the peace.

De parco fracto /dɪˈpɛrko frəkˈtoʊ/ə. A writ or action for damages caused by a pound-breach (q.v.). It has long been obsolete. 3 Bl.Comm. 146.

Depart. To go away from; leave; die.

De partitione facienda /dɪˈpær tʃəˈʃiːndə/ə. A writ which lay to make partition of lands or tenements held by several as coparceners, tenants in common, etc.

Department. One of the territorial divisions of a country. The term is chiefly used in this sense in France, where the division of the country into departments is somewhat analogous, both territorially and for governmental purposes, to the division of an American state into counties.

One of the major administrative divisions of the executive branch of the government usually headed by an officer of cabinet rank; e.g. Department of State. Generally, a branch or division of governmental administration. Also, a division of a business, or of something comparable thereto. U. S. v. Elgin, J. & E. Ry. Co., Ill., 298 U.S. 492, 56 S.Ct. 841, 80 L.Ed. 1300.

Department of State. See State Department.

Departure. A deviation or divergence, from a standard rule, measurement or course of conduct.

A variance between pleading and proof. Kintner v. U. S., C.C.A.Colo., 71 F.2d 961, 962. In common law pleading, the statement of matter in a replication, rejoinder, or subsequent pleading, as a cause of action or defense, which is not pursuant to the previous pleading of the same party, and which does not support and fortify it. Under Rules of Civil Procedure, no provision is made for "departure" but there are liberal amendment provisions. Fed.R.Civil P. 15. See also Variance.

Departure in despite of court. In old English practice, the tenant in a real action, having once appeared, was considered as constructively present in court until again called upon. Hence if, upon being demanded, he failed to appear, he was said to have "departed in despite [i.e., contempt] of the court."

Depecage. The process whereby different issues in a single case arising out of a single set of facts are decided according to the laws of different states. Broome v. Antlers' Hunting Club, 595 F.2d 921, 923 n. 5 (3rd Cir., 1979). Under "depecage" choice of law theory, court considers issues on which there is disagreement among the contact states over which rule of law is applicable to each issue. Lazzara v. Howard A. Esser, Inc., D.C.Ill., 622 F.Supp. 382, 384.

Depeculation. In English law, a robbing of the prince or commonwealth; an embezzling of the public treasure.

Dependable, adj. Trustworthy or reliable; evidence.

Dependence. A state of looking to another for support or for reasonable necessaries consistent with the dependent's position in life. See Dependent; Partial dependency.

Dependency. A territory distinct from the country in which the supreme sovereign power resides, but belonging rightfully to it, and subject to the laws and regulations which the sovereign may think proper to prescribe. Posadas v. National City Bank of N. Y., Phil. Islands, 296 U.S. 497, 56 S.Ct. 349, 350, 80 L.Ed. 351. It differs from a colony, because it is not settled by the citizens of the sovereign or mother state; and from possession, because it is held by other title than that ofmere conquest. Dependencies of the United States include Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, Guam and other Pacific islands. See 48 U.S.C.A. § 731 et seq.

A relation between two persons, where one is sustained by another or looks to or relies on aid of another for support or for reasonable necessities consistent with dependent's position in life. See Dependent; Partial dependency.

Dependency exemption. An amount which may be subtracted in computing taxable income for each person who qualifies as a dependent of the taxpayer and whose gross income is less than the exemption amount or who is a child of the taxpayer and who has either not attained the age of 19 or who is a full time student. I.R.C. § 151(e).

Dependent, n. One who derives his or her main support from another. Means relying on, or subject to, someone else for support; not able to exist or sustain oneself, or to perform anything without the will, power, or aid of someone else. Fox-Vliet Wholesale Drug Co. v. Chase, Okl., 288 P.2d 391, 393. Generally, for workers' compensation purposes, "dependent" is one who relies on another for support or favor and one who is sustained by another. Industrial Indem. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Commission, 243 Cal.App.2d 700, 52 Cal.Rptr. 647, 651, 653. One who has relied upon decedent for support and who has reasonable expectation that such support will continue. Wheat v. Red Star Exp. Lines, 156 Conn. 245, 240 A.2d 859, 862, 863. See also Lawful dependents.

In taxation, a person who receives more than half of his or her support from the taxpayer during the calendar year; is a relative of the taxpayer, i.e., brother, child, parent, aunt, etc.; and is a citizen or resident of the U.S. See Dependency exemption.

Dependent, adj. Deriving existence, support, or direction from another; conditioned, in respect to force or obligation, upon an extraneous act or fact.

Dependent conditions. Mutual covenants which go to the whole consideration on both sides.

Dependent contract. One which depends or is conditional upon another. One which it is not the duty of the contractor to perform until some obligation contained in the same agreement has been performed by the other party.

Dependent covenant. See Covenant.

Dependent coverage. Provision in life and health insurance for protection of dependents of named insured.

Dependent promise. One which it is not the duty of the promisor to perform until some obligation contained in the same agreement has been performed by the other party.

Dependent intervening cause. A conclusory label used by the common law to refer to a cause that intervenes between the defendant's behavior and a given result such that it is still fair to hold the defendant responsible for the result. See also Cause.

Dependent relative revocation. The doctrine which regards as mutually dependent the acts of one destroying a will and thereupon substituting another instrument for distribution of estate, when both acts are result of one plan, so that, if second act, through incompleteness or other defect, fails to accomplish its intended purpose, and it thereby becomes evident that testator was misled when he destroyed his will, act of destruction is regarded as bereft of intent of revocation and way for probate of destroyed will is opened. In re Cuneo's Estate, 60 Cal.2d 196, 32 Cal.Rptr. 409, 412, 384 P.2d 1.

Depending. Pending or undetermined; in progress.

In patent law, a convenient means of saying that the parts of a device were so attached as to have a right-and-gagle relationship to each other, not a gravitational hanging of one part upon another. Alemtie Mfg. Corporation v. Rogers Products Co., C.C.A.N.J., 42 F.2d 648, 651.

De perambulatione facienda /diy parəmbiyaləʃhiyow- ni fiə(h)iəyənda/. A writ which lay where there was a dispute as to the boundaries of two adjacent lordships or towns, directed to the sheriff, commanding him to take with him twelve discreet and lawful knights of his county and make the perambulation and set the bounds and limits in certainty.

Depesas /dapəyəsə/"/-ə/. In Spanish-American law, spaces of ground in towns reserved for commons or public pasturage.

De pigneore surrepto furti, actio /əkʃəliyəw dıy pigniəriə sərəptəw fərta/. In the civil law, an action to recover a pledge stolen.

De plácito /diy pləstəw/. Of a plea; or in an action. Formal words used in declarations and other proceedings, as descriptive of the particular action brought.

De plagis et mahemio /dɪy pleyəs ət məhiəmyəw/. Of wounds and mayhem. The name of a criminal appeal formerly in use in England, in cases of wounding and maiming. See Appeal.

De plano /dɪy pləno/. Lat. On the ground; on a level. A term of the Roman law descriptive of the method of hearing causes, when the praetor stood on the ground with the suitors, instead of the more formal method when he occupied a bench or tribunal; hence informal, or summary.

De plegis acquietandis /dɪy plɪjəliəs økwəytəndəs/. Writ for acquitting or releasing pledges. A writ that lay for a surety, against him for whom he had become surety for the payment of a certain sum of money at a certain day, where the latter had not paid the money at the appointed day, and the surety was compelled to pay it.

Depletible economic interest. The interest in mineral land which is subject to depletion by the removal of the minerals by operation of an oil well, mine, or the like. Spalding v. U. S., C.C.A.Cal., 97 F.2d 697, 700; U. S. v. Spalding, C.C.A.Cal., 97 F.2d 701, 704. See Depletion.

Deplete. To reduce or lessen, as by use, exhaustion, or waste. McKnight v. U. S., C.C.A.Cal., 78 F.2d 931, 933.

Depletion. An emptying, exhausting or wasting of assets. A reduction during taxable year of oil, gas or other mineral deposits or reserves (i.e., wasting assets) as a result of production. The process by which the cost or other basis of a natural resource (e.g., an oil and gas interest) is recovered upon extraction and sale of the resource.

Depletion allowance. The tax laws allow a depletion allowance (deduction) to owners of oil, gas, mineral, and timber resources as such are exhausted. The two ways to determine the depletion allowance are the cost and percentage (or statutory) methods. Under the cost method, each unit of production sold is assigned a portion of the cost or other basis of the interest. This is deter-minded by dividing the cost or other basis by the total units expected to be recovered. I.R.C. § 611. Under the percentage (or statutory) method the tax law provides a special percentage factor for different types of minerals and other natural resources. Such depletion is based on a percentage of the estimated gross income to be earned during the period from a natural resource, without reference to the cost of the resource. This percentage is multiplied by the gross income from the interest to arrive at the depletion allowance. I.R.C. §§ 613 and 613A. See also Amortization.

Depletion allowance. See Depletion.

Depletion deduction. See Depletion.

Depletion reserve. In accounting, a charge to income to reflect the decrease in value of a wasting asset such as an oil well.

De ponendo sigillum ad exceptionem /diy ponéndow sájílhum ád ekspáshíyównm/. Writ for putting a seal to an exception. A writ by which justices were formerly commanded to put their seals to exceptions taken by a party in a suit.

Deponent /dapownant/. One who deposes (that is, testifies) to the truth of certain facts; one who gives under oath testimony which is reduced to writing; one who makes oath to a written statement. One whose deposition is given. A witness; an affiant. See Depose; Deposition.

Depopulatio agrorum /diypopyaleyshiyów agróróm/. In old English law, the crime of destroying, ravaging, or laying waste a country. 4 Bl.Comm. 373.

Depopulation. In old English law, a species of waste by which the population of the kingdom was diminished. Depopulation of houses was a public offense.

Deportatio /diyporteyshiyów/. Lat. In the civil law, a kind of banishment, where a condemned person was sent or carried away to some foreign country, usually to an island (in insulam deportatur), and thus taken out of the number of Roman citizens.

Deportation. Banishment to a foreign country, attended with confiscation of property and deprivation of civil rights. A punishment derived from the deportatio (q.v.) of the Roman law.

The transfer of an alien, excluded or expelled, from the United States to a foreign country. Petition for Milanovic, D.C.N.Y., 162 F.Supp. 890, 892. The removal or sending back of an alien to the country from which he came because his presence is deemed inconsistent with the public welfare, and without any punishment being imposed or contemplated. The list of grounds for deportation are set forth at 8 U.S.C.A. § 1251, and the procedures are provided for in §§ 1252-1254. See also Banishment. Compare Extradition.

Depose. To make a deposition; to give evidence in the shape of a deposition; to make statements which are written down and sworn to; to give testimony which is reduced to writing by a duly-qualified officer and sworn to by the deponent. See Deponent; Deposition.

To deprive an individual of a public employment or office against his will. The term is usually applied to the deprivation of all authority of a sovereign.

In ancient usage, to testify as a witness; to give evidence under oath.

Deposition. v. To commit to custody, or to lay down; to place; to put; to let fall (as sediment). Jefferson County ex rel. Grauman v. Jefferson County Fiscal Court, 273 Ky. 674, 117 S.W.2d 918, 924. To lodge for safe-keeping or as a pledge to intrust to the care of another. White v. Greenlee, 330 Mo. 135, 49 S.W.2d 132, 134.

Deposit, n. A bailment of goods to be kept by the baillee without reward, and delivered according to the object or purpose of the original trust. In general, an act by which a person receives the property of another, binding himself to preserve it and return it in kind. The delivery of chattels by one person to another to keep for the use of the bailor. The giving of the possession of personal property by one person to another, with his consent, to keep for the use, benefit, and safekeeping of the first or of a third person. Something intrusted to the care of another, either for a permanent or a temporary disposition.

Money placed with a person as an earnest or security for the performance of some contract, to be forfeited if the depositor fails in his undertaking. It may be deemed to be part payment, and to that extent may constitute the purchaser the actual owner of the estate.

The act of placing money in the custody of a bank or banker, for safety or convenience, to be withdrawn at the will of the depositor or under rules and regulations agreed on. Also, the money so deposited, or the credit which the depositor receives for it. Deposit, according to its commonly accepted and generally understood meaning among bankers and by the public, includes not only deposits payable on demand and subject to check, but deposits not subject to check, for which certificates, whether interest-bearing or not, may be issued, payable on demand, or on certain notice, or at a fixed future time.

A quantity of ore or other mineral substances occurring naturally in the earth; as, a deposit of gold, oil, etc. See Bailment: Earnest money; Escrow.

General Classification

According to the classification of the civil law, deposits are of the following several sorts: (1) Necessary, made upon some sudden emergency, and from some pressing necessity; as, for instance, in case of a fire, a shipwreck, or other overwhelming calamity, when property is confined to any person whom the depositor may meet without proper opportunity for reflection or choice, and thence it is called "miserable depositum." (2) Volunteer, which arises from the mere consent and agreement of the parties. The common law has made no such division. The civilians again divide deposits into "simple deposits," made by one or more persons having a common interest, and "sequestrations," made by one or more persons, each of whom has a different and adverse... interest in controversy touching it; and these last are of two sorts,—"conventional," or such as are made by the mere agreement of the parties without any judicial act; and "judicial," or such as are made by order of a court in the course of some proceeding. Thus, under Louisiana statutes, it is said that the difference between "sequestration" and "deposit" is that the former may have for its object both movable and immovable property, while the latter is confined to movables.

There is another class of deposits called "involuntary," which may be without the assent or even knowledge of the depositor; as lumber, etc., left upon another's land by the subsidence of a flood. An "involuntary" deposit is one made by the accidental leaving or placing of personal property in the possession of any person without negligence on the part of the owner. Another class of deposits is called "irregular," as when a person, having a sum of money which he does not think safe in his own hands, confides it to another, who is to return to him, not the same money, but a like sum when he shall demand it. A regular deposit is a strict or special deposit; a deposit which must be returned in specie; i.e., the thing deposited must be returned. A quasi deposit is a kind of implied or involuntary deposit, which takes place where a party comes lawfully to the possession of another person's property, by finding it. Particularly with reference to money, deposits are also classed as general or special. A general deposit is where the money deposited is not itself to be returned, but an equivalent in money (that is, a like sum) is to be returned. It is equivalent to a loan, and the money deposited becomes the property of the depositary. A special deposit is a deposit in which the identical thing deposited is to be returned to the depositor. The particular object of this kind of deposit is safekeeping. In banking law, this kind of deposit is contrasted with a "general" deposit, as above; but in the civil law it is the antithesis of an "irregular" deposit. A gratuitous or naked deposit is a bailment of goods to be kept for the depositor without hire or reward on either side, or one for which the depositary receives no consideration beyond the mere possession of the thing deposited. Properly and originally, all deposits are of this description; for according to the Roman law, a bailment of goods for which hire or a price is to be paid, is not called "depositum" but "locatio." If the owner of the property pays for its custody or care, it is a "locatio custodia;" if, on the other hand, the bailee pays for the use of it, it is "locatio rei." (See Locatio.) But in the modern law, a gratuitous or naked deposit is distinguished from a "deposit for hire," in which the bailee is to be paid for his services in keeping the article. There is also a specific deposit, which exists where money or property is given to a bank for some specific and particular purpose, as a note for collection, money to pay a particular note, or property for some other specific purpose.

See also Certificate of deposit; Involuntary deposit; Security deposit. For bank deposit, see Bank.

Demand deposit. Bank deposit which may be withdrawn at any time by the depositor, without prior notice to bank. Compare Time deposit, below.

Deposit box. Commonly referred to as a safe deposit box in which a person may keep valuables. See Safe deposit box.

Deposit company. A company whose business is the safe-keeping of securities or other valuable deposits in boxes or safes in its building which are leased to the depositors. See Depositary, Depository.

Deposit contract. Agreement between a payor bank and a customer that governs the rights and duties of the parties with respect to funds deposited by the customer in a demand or other account maintained at the bank, and that specifies, among other things, the circumstances under which items drawn against the account are properly payable and properly charged against the account.

Deposit in court. Person who acknowledges liability but is in doubt as to whom the liability runs may pay into court the sum of money representing his liability and be bound by the court's determination of who is entitled to it. See e.g. Fed.R. Civil P. 67. May also embrace payment into court pursuant to court order as in the case of rent pending outcome of eviction case.

Deposit insurance. Insurance coverage (e.g. Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation) for bank depositors protecting them from loss resulting from bank failure. See Deposit insurance Corporation.

Deposit of title-deeds. A method of pledging real property as security for a loan, by placing the title-deeds of the land in the keeping of the lender as pledgee.

Deposit premium. The initial premium paid by the insured on a provisional basis pending a premium adjustment in the case of policies subject to adjustment.

Deposit ratio. Ratio of total deposits to total capital.

Deposit slip. An acknowledgment that the amount named therein has been received by the bank. It is a receipt intended to furnish evidence as between the depositor and depositary that on a given date there was deposited the sum named therein, the time of deposit, and amount deposited, being also shown.

Time deposit. Bank deposit which is to remain for specified period of time, or on which notice must be given to bank before withdrawal.

Depository. The party or institution (e.g. bank or trust company) receiving a deposit. One with whom anything is lodged in trust, as "depository" is the place where it is put. A trustee; fiduciary; one to whom goods are bailed to be held without recompense. The obligation on the part of the depositor is that he keep the thing with reasonable care, and, upon request, restore it to the depositor, or otherwise deliver it, according to the original trust. This term should not be confused with "depository" which is the physical place of deposit.

Deposit Insurance Corporation. Independent federal agency (Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation) created to insure bank deposits up to a specified amount in national and most state banks, including commercial and savings and loan banks, and to protect depositors from hazards of bank closings. See Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Deposition. The testimony of a witness taken upon oral question or written interrogatories, not in open court, but in pursuance of a commission to take testimony issued by a court, or under a general law or court rule on the subject, and reduced to writing and duly authenticated, and intended to be used in preparation and upon the trial of a civil action or criminal prosecution. A pretrial discovery device by which one party (through his or her attorney) asks oral questions of the other party or of a witness for the other party. The person who is deposed is called the deponent. The deposition is conducted under oath outside of the courtroom, usually in one of the lawyer's offices. A transcript—word for word account—is made of the deposition. Testimony of witness, taken in writing, under oath or affirmation, before some judicial officer in answer to questions or interrogatories. Fed.R. Civil P. 26 et seq.; Fed.R. Crim.P. 15. See also Discovery; Interrogatories.

In ecclesiastical law, the act of depriving a clergyman, by a competent tribunal, of his clerical orders, to punish him for some offense and to prevent his acting in future in his clerical character.

Written questions. Form of discovery in which written questions are addressed to person interrogated. Fed.R. Civil Proc. 31.

Deposition de bene esse /dëpôzishon diə biyəni ˈeɪʃi/.
Testimony to be read at the trial, so far as relevant and competent, as though the witness were present in court. Milprint, Inc. v. Macleod Laboratories, 127 N.J.L. 333, 22 A.2d 566, 567.

Déposito /deˈposiˌtɔ/. In Spanish law, deposit; the species of bailment so called.

A real contract by which one person confides to the custody of another an object on the condition that it shall be returned to him whenever he shall require it.

Depositor. One who makes a deposit. One who delivers and leaves money with a bank on his order or subject to check.

Depository. The place where a deposit (q.v.) is placed and kept; e.g. bank, savings and loan institutions, credit union, trust company. Place where something is deposited or stored as for safekeeping or convenience; e.g. safety deposit box.

This term should not be confused with “depository” which is the person or institution taking responsibility for the deposit, rather than the place itself.

United States depositories are banks selected and designated to receive deposits of the public funds (e.g. taxes) of the United States.

Depository bank. The first bank to which an item is transferred for collection even though it may also be the payor bank. U.C.C. § 4-105(a).

Depository transfer check (DTC). An unsigned, non-negotiable check used to transfer funds from a local collection bank to a concentration bank.

Deposito /depôˈstɔ/. Lat. In the civil law, one of the forms of the contract of bailment, being a naked bailment of goods to be kept for the use of the bailor without reward. See Deposit.

One of the four real contracts specified by Justinian, and having the following characteristics: (1) The depository or depositee is not liable for negligence, however extreme, but only for fraud, dolus; (2) the property remains in the depository, the depository having only the possession. Precarium and sequestre were two varieties of the depositum.

De post disseisina /diə pôwst ˈdæsiːzənə/. Writ of post disseisin. A writ which lay for him who, having recovered lands or tenements by praecipe quod reddat, on default, or redemption, was again disseised by the former disseisor.

Dépôt /deˈpɔ/. In French law, the depositum of the Roman and the deposit of the English law. It is of two kinds, being either (1) dépôt simply so called, and which may be either voluntary or necessary, and (2) séquestre, which is a deposit made either under an agreement of the parties, and to abide the event of pending litigation regarding it, or by virtue of the direction of the court or a judge, pending litigation regarding it.

De praorogativa regis /diə praˌroʊɡəˈtɑːvə rɪˈrɪs/. The English statute 17 Edw. I, St. 1, c. 9, defining the prerogatives of the crown on certain subjects, but especially directing that the king shall have ward of the lands of idiots, taking the profits without waste, and finding them necessaries.

De praesenti /diə prəˈzɛnti/. Of the present; in the present tense. See Per verba de praesenti.

Deprave. To defame; to corrupt morally; vilify; exhibit contempt for. Corrupt, perverted or immoral state of mind.

Depraved. As an adjective means marked by debasement, corruption, perversion or deterioration. State v. Weso, 60 Wis.2d 404, 210 N.W.2d 442, 446.

Depraved mind. An inherent deficiency of moral sense and rectitude, equivalent to statutory phrase "depravity of heart" defined as highest grade of malice. A corrupt, perverted, or immoral state of mind. As required for conviction of second-degree murder, is one which is indifferent to the life of others. Jones v. State, 70 Wis.2d 41, 233 N.W.2d 430, 435. Such state of mind is equitable with malice in commonly understood sense of ill will, hatred, spite or evil intent. Weaver v. State, Fla.App., 220 So.2d 53, 60.

Depreciable. Assets subject to depreciation; assets that decline in value or usefulness over a period of time through use or obsolescence. An example of depreciable assets includes machinery and equipment; land is a non-depreciable asset. See Depreciation.

Depreciable life. For an asset, the time period over which depreciable cost is to be allocated. For tax returns, depreciable life may be shorter than estimated service life.

Depreciation /dəpriʃiəʃiən/. In accounting, spreading out the cost of a capital asset over its estimated useful life. Depreciation expense reduces the taxable income of an entity but does not reduce the cash. A decline in value of property caused by wear or obsolescence and is usually measured by a set formula which reflects these elements over a given period of useful life of property. State Highway Commission v. Tubbs, 147 Mont. 296, 411 F.2d 739, 744. Consistent, gradual process of estimating and allocating cost of capital investments over estimated useful life of asset in order to match cost against earnings. Coca-Cola Bottling Co. of Baltimore v. U.S., 203 Ct.Cl. 18, 487 F.2d 528, 534. The depreciation expense recorded on the entity's tax return may differ from that recorded on the entity's financial statements. An entity usually uses an accelerated method on its tax return and the straight-line method on its financial statements due to the larger write-offs in the early years. As to intangible assets, see Amortization. As to natural resources, see Depletion. See also Accelerated Cost Recovery System; Accrued depreciation; Annual depreciation; Asset Depreciation Range; Recapture of depreciation; Useful life.

Depreciation Methods

Accelerated depreciation. Various methods of depreciation that yield larger deductions in the earlier years of the life of an asset than the straight-line method. Examples include the double declining-balance and the sum of the years' digits methods of depreciation.

Accrued depreciation. See Accrued depreciation, and Accumulated depreciation, below.

Accumulated depreciation. Total depreciation recorded on an asset to date. On the balance sheet, accumulated depreciation reflects the book value of an asset. See also Accrued depreciation.

Declining balance method. Under the declining balance method, the annual depreciation allowance is computed by multiplying the undepreciated cost of the asset each year by a uniform rate up to double the straight-line rate or 150 percent, as the case may be.

Double declining method. Spreading the initial cost of a capital asset over time by deducting in each period double the percentage recognized by the straight-line method and applying that double percentage to the undepreciated balance existing at the start of each period. No salvage value is used in the calculation.

Replacement cost method. The amortization or depreciation of an asset in which the value is fixed in terms of replacement cost.

Sinking fund method. A process of recovering the value of an asset by setting up a sinking fund.

Straight-line method. Under the straight-line method of depreciation, the cost or other basis (e.g., fair market value in the case of donated assets) of the asset, less its estimated salvage value, if any, is determined first; then this amount is written off in equal amounts over the period of the estimated useful life of the asset. Taking the initial cost of a capital asset, deducting the expected salvage value at the time it is expected to be discarded, and spreading the difference in equal installments per unit of time over an estimated life of the asset.

Sum-of-the-year's digits method. Under this method, the annual depreciation allowance is computed by multiplying the depreciable cost basis (cost less salvage value) by a constantly decreasing fraction. The numerator of the fraction is represented by the remaining years of useful life of the asset at the beginning of each year, and the denominator is always represented by the sum of the years' digits of useful life at the time of acquisition.

Unit method. A depreciation or amortization method used in which an asset is written off in direct relation to the productivity of the asset. The cost of the asset is divided by the estimated total number of units to be produced. This unit cost is then multiplied by the number of units sold during the year resulting in the depreciation or amortization expense for the year.

Depreciation reserve. An account kept on the books, as of a public utility, to offset the depreciation of the property due to time and use. It does not represent the actual depreciation of its properties which is to be deducted from the reproduction cost new to ascertain the present value for rate purposes; but only what observation and experience suggest as likely to happen, with a margin over. In taxation, when gain is realized on disposition of depreciable property the gain must be reported as ordinary income, not capital gain, to the extent of depreciation previously taken as a deduction. I.R.C. §§ 1245, 1250.

In French law, pillage, waste, or spoliation of goods, particularly of the estate of a decedent.

Depression. A period of economic stress; usually accompanied by poor business conditions and high unemployment. McCuiston v. Haggard, 21 Tenn.App. 277, 109 S.W.2d 413. A sharp decline in aggregate business activity that persists over an extended period of time. In economic parlance, a "depression" is more severe than a "recession."

A hole or hollow.
Mental syndrome manifested by sense of inadequacy, self-depreciation, melancholy, and guilt feelings.

Depressive reaction. Mental or emotional condition, precipitated by some external factor and manifested by guilt, self-depreciation, psychomotor retardation, delusion and/or sense of inadequacy; generally considered to be a neurosis.

Depravity /dépravéysh/. A taking away or confiscation; as the deprivation of a constitutional right or the taking of property under eminent domain without due process of law (i.e. without just compensation). See also Deprivation of property.

Deprivation of property. Due process guarantee which is abridged when government takes private property without just compensation except under extraordinary circumstances of the police power, though for deprivation of property there is not required an actual, physical taking for private or public use. Even a temporary deprivation of property constitutes a "deprivation" within meaning of Fourteenth Amendment. Remm v. Landrieu, D.C.La., 418 F.Supp. 542, 545. See Condemnation; Eminent domain; Expropriation; Just compensation; Taking.

Deprive. As used in the statute proscribing the offense of receiving stolen property means to withhold property from the owner permanently or to use or dispose of the property in a manner that makes recovery of the property by the owner unlikely. State v. Freeman, Mo.App., 667 S.W.2d 443, 446. See Deprive permanently.

Deprive permanently. To "deprive permanently" means to: (a) Take from the owner the possession, use or benefit of his property, without an intent to restore the same; or (b) Retain property without intent to restore the same or with intent to restore it to the owner only if the owner purchases or leases it back, or pays a reward or other compensation for its return; or (c) Sell, give, pledge or otherwise dispose of any interest in property or subject it to the claim of a person other than the owner.

De procedendo ad judicium /díy pró(w)sédéndow əd júwdish(y)əm/. An old English writ proceeding out of chancery and ordering the judges of any court to proceed to judgment. 3 Bl.Comm. 109.

Deprogramming. As the term has become known, is the term used to refer to the taking away or confiscation of certain religious groups as a scheme of brainwashing or mind control in an attempt to dissuade them of their religious beliefs. Baer v. Baer, D.C.Cal., 450 F.Supp. 481, 485.

De proprietate probanda /díy prápráyatétyiy próbañdə/. Writ for proving property. An old English writ directed to the sheriff, to inquire of the property or goods distrained, where the defendant in an action of replevin claims the property. 3 Bl.Comm. 148.

Deputize. To appoint a deputy; to appoint or commission one to act as deputy to an officer. In a general sense, the term is descriptive of empowering one person to act for another in any capacity or relation, but in law it is almost always restricted to the substitution of a person appointed to act for an officer of the law.

Deputy. A substitute; a person duly authorized by an officer to exercise some or all of the functions pertaining to the office, in the place and stead of the latter. One appointed to substitute for another with power to act for him in his name or behalf. A substitute for another and is empowered to act for him in his name and behalf in all matters in which principal may act. Williams v. Ferrentino, Fla.App., 199 So.2d 504, 511.

Deputy consul. See Consul.

Deputy sheriff. One appointed to act in the place and stead of the sheriff in the official business of the latter's office. A general deputy (sometimes called "undersheriff") is one who, by virtue of his appointment, has authority to execute all the ordinary duties of the office of sheriff, and who executes process without any special authority from his principal. A special deputy, who is an officer pro hac vice, is one appointed for a special occasion or a special service, as, to serve a particular writ or to assist in keeping the peace when a riot or tumult is expected or in progress. He acts under a specific and not a general appointment and authority.

Deputy steward. In English law steward of a manor could depute or authorize another to hold a court; and the acts done in a court so helden were as legal as if the court had been helden by the chief steward in person. So an under steward or deputy could authorize another as subdeputy, pro hac vice, to hold a court for him; such limited authority not being inconsistent with the rule delegatus non potest delegare.

Special deputy. One appointed to exercise some special function or power of the official or person for whom he is appointed. See also Deputy sheriff, above.

De quarantina habenda /díy kwôrantáyna habéndə/. At common law, a writ which a widow entitled to quarantine might sue out in case the heir or other persons ejected her. It seems to have been a summary process, and required the sheriff, if no just cause were shown against it, speedily to put her into possession.

De quibus sur disseisin /díy kwibəs sər dazíyən/. An ancient writ of entry.

De quo /díy kwów/ and de quibus /díy kwibəs/. Of which. Formal words in the simple writ of entry, from which it was called a writ of entry "in the quo," or "in the quibus."

De quota litis /díy kwôwə láytəs/. In the civil law, a contract by which one who has a claim difficult to recover agrees with another to give a part, for the purpose of obtaining his services to recover the rest.

Deraign /dəréyn/. To prove; to vindicate; to disprove allegations.

Derangement. See Insanity.

De raptu virginum /díy répt(y)uw várjənəm/. Of the ravishment of maids. The name of an appeal formerly in use in England in cases of rape.
A boat or vessel found entirely deserted or abandoned on the sea without hope or intention of recovery or return by the master or crew, whether resulting from wreck, accident, necessity, or voluntary abandonment. When a vessel, without being abandoned, is no longer under the control or direction of those on board (as where part of the crew are dead, and the remainder are physically and mentally incapable of providing for their own safety), she is said to be quasi derelict. When the crew have left their vessel temporarily, with the intention of returning to resume possession, she is not technically a derelict, but is what may be termed a “quasi derelict.”

Dereliction /dérélı́kʃən/. The gaining of land from the water, in consequence of the sea, river, or stream shrinking back below the usual water mark; the opposite of alluvion (q.v.). Mexico Beach Corp. v. St. Joe Paper Co., 97 So.2d 708, 710. Also, land left dry by running water retreating imperceptibly from one of its shores and encroaching on the other. "Dereliction" or "renunciation" of property as sea as well as on land requires both the intention to abandon and external action. The No. 105, C.C.A.Fl., 97 F.2d 425, 426. See also Accretion; Avulsion; Relicction.

In the civil law, the voluntary abandonment of goods by the owner, without the hope or return of the hope to the possession.

De reparatione facienda /díy réperaréshiyównýa/. A writ by which one tenant in common sought to compel another to aid in repairing the property held in common.

De rescussu /díy raskášyiyu/. Writ of rescue or rescous. A writ which lay where cattle distrained, or persons arrested, were rescued from those taking them.

De retorno habendo /díy ratóñow habéndow/. For having a return; to have a return. A term applied to the judgment for the defendant in an action of replevin, awarding him a return of the goods replevied; and to the writ or execution issued thereon. 3 Bl.Comm. 149. Applied also to the sureties given by the plaintiff on commencing the action.

D.E.R.I.C. An abbreviation used for De ea re ita censuere concerning that matter have so decreed, in recording the decrees of the Roman senate.

De rien culpable /da ríyñ kálpabal/. L. Fr. Guilty of nothing; not guilty.

Derivative. Coming from another; taken from something preceding; secondary. That which has not its origin in itself, but owes its existence to something foregoing. Anything obtained or deduced from another.

Derivative action. A suit by a shareholder to enforce a corporate cause of action. The corporation is a necessary party, and the relief which is granted is a judgment against a third person in favor of the corporation. Price v. Gurney, Ohio, 324 U.S. 100, 65 S.Ct. 513, 516, 89 L.Ed. 776. An action is a derivative action when the action is based upon a primary right of the corporation, but is asserted on its behalf by the stockholder because of the Accretion; Avulsion; Relicction.

De recordo et processu mittendis /díy rakordow et praséshiyabal/. Writ to send the record and process of a cause to a superior court; a species of writ by which one had an estate in an advowson, by verdict, and afterward was put in possession thereof by the decrees of the Roman senate.

Derelict /dérélı́k/. Forsaken; abandoned; deserted; cast away. Personal property abandoned or thrown away by the owner in such manner as to indicate that he intends to make no further claim thereto.

Land left uncovered by the receding of water from its former bed. See Dereliction.
DERIVATIVE ACTION

corporation's failure, deliberate or otherwise, to act upon the primary right. Lehrman v. Godebaux Sugars, 207 Misc. 314, 138 N.Y.S.2d 163, 168. Procedure in such actions in federal courts is governed by Fed.R. Civil P. 23.1. Most states also have similar procedural rules or statutes for such actions.

Term is also used in reference to actions based on injury to another; e.g., action for loss of consortium by husband against third person for injuries to wife. See Consortium; also, Derivative liability.

Derivative contraband. Items of property not otherwise illegal but subject to forfeiture according to use to which they are put. Kane v. McDaniel, D.C.Ky., 407 F.Supp. 1239, 1242.

Derivative conveyances. Conveyances which presuppose some other conveyance precedent, and serve to enlarge, confirm, alter, restrain, restore, or transfer the interest granted by such original conveyance. They are releases, confirmations, surrenders, assignments, and defeasances. 2 Bl.Comm. 324.

Derivative evidence. Evidence which is derived or spawned from other illegally obtained evidence is inadmissible because of the primary taint. See Fruit of poisonous tree doctrine.

Derivative jurisdiction doctrine. Under this doctrine, a case is not properly removable unless it is within the subject matter jurisdiction of the state court from which it is removed. Harvey v. Price, D.C.III., 603 F.Supp. 1205, 1207.

Derivative liability. There are two distinct categories of "derivative liability": in the first category is the action which a plaintiff may institute to redress a wrong done to another; in the second category is the action which a plaintiff may institute to redress a wrong done to himself which is proximately caused by a wrong done to another. Garfield v. U.S., D.C.Wis., 297 F.Supp. 891, 900. See also Derivative action; Vicarious liability.

Derivative suit. See Derivative action.

Derivative title. The common-law principle, codified repeatedly in the U.C.C., that a transferee of property acquires only the transferor's rights therein.

Derivative tort. Tort liability may be imposed on a principal for wrong committed by agent and to this extent the principal's liability is derivative. See also Derivative liability; Vicarious liability.

Derivative work. Under the copyright law, a work based on a pre-existing work, such as a translation, musical arrangement, filmpersonalization, motion picture version, abridgment or any other form in which a work may be recast, transformed or adapted, is a derivative work. Only the holder of copyright in the underlying work (or one acting with his permission) may prepare a derivative work. The preparation of such a work by any other party constitutes infringement. See Copyright Act, 17 U.S.C.A. § 101.

Derive. To receive from a specified source or origin. Crews v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.10, 89 F.2d 412, 416. To proceed from property, sever from capital, however invested or employed, and to come in, receive or draw by taxpayer for his separate use, benefit, and disposal. Staples v. United States, D.C.Pa., 21 F.Supp. 737, 739.

Derived. Received from specified source.

Derogation /dərəɡəˈʃən/. The partial repeal or abolishing of a law, as by a subsequent act which limits its scope or impairs its utility and force. Distinguished from abrogation, which means the entire repeal and annulment of a law.

Derogation from grant. Provision in an instrument of transfer such as a deed which diminishes or militates against the grant itself.

Derogatory clause. In a will, this is a sentence or secret character, inserted by the testator, of which he reserves the knowledge to himself, with a condition that no will he may make thereafter shall be valid, unless this clause be inserted word for word. This is done as a precaution to guard against later wills being extorted by violence, or otherwise improperly obtained. Such a provision is anomalous.

Derogatur legi, cum pars detrahir; abrogatur legi, cum prorsus tollitur /dərəɡəˈtər lejɪ, kəm pɜːr səs tolɪtər/. To derogate from a law is to take away part of it; to abrogate a law is to abolish it entirely.

Desafuero /dəˈsaʃuəroʊ/,. In Spanish law, an irregular action committed with violence against law, custom, or reason.

De salva gardia /dɪˈsəlwɔ ˈɡɑrdɪə/. A writ of safeguard allowed to strangers seeking their rights in English courts, and apprehending violence or injury to their persons or property.

De salvo conductu /dɪˈsælvɵ kənˈdʌktə ju/,. A writ of safe conduct.

Desamortizacion /deˈsamɔrtiˌsəzəˈwoʊn/,. In Mexican law, the desamortizacion of property is to take it out of mortmain (dead hands); that is, to unloose it from the grasp, as it were, of ecclesiastical or civil corporations. The term has no equivalent in English.

De sa vie /də sə vɪ/,. L. Fr. Of his or her life; of his or her own life; as distinguished from pur autre vie, for another's life.

De scaccario /dɪˈskækərɪəʊ/,. Of or concerning the exchequer. The title of a statute passed in the fifty-first year of Henry III.

Descend. To pass by succession; as when the estate vests by operation of law in the heirs immediately upon the death of the ancestor. The term, as used in some statutes, includes an acquisition by devise. Cordon v. Gregg, 164 Or. 306, 101 P.2d 414, 415. To pass down from generation to generation. To go or pass to; often used as a word of transfer. As used in wills, the word is often regarded as a general expression equivalent to the words "go to" or "belong to," and as indicating a passing Descendant or descendent. Those persons who are in the blood stream of the ancestor. Term means those descended from another, persons who proceed from a body of another such as a child or grandchild, to the remotest degree; it is the opposite of "ascendants". Bassett v. Merlin, Inc., Fla.App., 304 So.2d 543, 544. In the plural, the term means issue, offspring or posterity generally. Also, all those to whom an estate descends, whether in a direct or collateral line from the intestate. See Descendant.

Lineal descendant. One who is in the line of descent from the ancestor. The term may include an adopted child.

Descender. Descent; in the descent. See Formedon.

Descendibility of future interests. Legal suitability of a future interest such as a remainder or executory interest to pass by inheritance on death of the holder.

Descendible. Capable of passing by descent, or of being inherited or transmitted by devise (spoken of estates, titles, offices, and other property).

Descent. Hereditary succession. Succession to the ownership of an estate by inheritance, or by any act of law, as distinguished from "purchase." Title by descent is the title by which one person, upon the death of another, acquires the real estate of the latter as his heir at law. 2 Bl.Comm. 201. The title by inheritance is in all cases called descent, although by statute law the title is sometimes made to ascend.

The division among those legally entitled thereto of the real property of intestates.

See also Per capita; Per stirpes.

Classification

Descents are of two sorts, lineal and collateral. Lineal descent is descent in a direct or right line, as from father or grandfather to son or grandson. Collateral descent is descent in a collateral or oblique line, that is, up to the common ancestor and then down from him, as from brother to brother, or between cousins. They are also distinguished into mediate and immediate descends. But these terms are used in different senses. A descent may be said to be a mediate or immediate descent of the estate or right; or it may be said to be mediate or immediate, in regard to the mediateness or immediate¬ness of the pedigree or consanguinity. Thus, a descent from the grandfather, who dies in possession, to the grandson, who dies intestate, is immediate; but a descent from grandfather to grandson, the father being dead, or from uncle to nephew, the brother being dead, is deemed mediate; the father and the brother being, in these latter cases, the medium deferen, as it is called, of the descent or consanguinity.

Descent was denoted, in the Roman law, by the term "successio," which is also used by Bracton, from which has been derived the succession of the Scotch and French jurisprudence.

Line of Descent

The order or series of persons who have descended one from the other or all from a common ancestor, considered as placed in a line of succession in the order of their birth, the line showing the connection of all the blood-relatives.

Collateral line. A line of descent connecting persons who are not directly related to each other as ascendants or descendants, but whose relationship consists in common descent from the same ancestor.

Direct line. A line of descent traced through those persons only who are related to each other directly as ascendants or descendants.

Maternal line. A line of descent or relationship between two persons which is traced through the mother of the younger.

Paternal line. A similar line of descent traced through the father.

Descent cast. The devolving of realty upon the heir on the death of his ancestor intestate.

Another name for what was formerly called a "descent which tolls entry." When a person had acquired land by disseisin, abatement, or intrusion, and died seised of the land, the descent of it to his heir took away or tolled the real owner's right of entry, so that he could only recover the land by an action.

Describe. To narrate, express, explain, set forth, relate, recount, narrate, depict, delineate, portray; sketch. Of land, to give the metes and bounds.

Description. A delineation or account of a particular subject by the recital of its characteristic accidents and qualities.

A written enumeration of items composing an estate, or of its condition, or of titles or documents; like an inventory, but with more particularity, and without involving the idea of an appraisement.

An exact written account of an article, mechanical device, or process which is the subject of an application for a patent.

A method of pointing out a particular person by referring to his relationship to some other person or his character as an officer, trustee, executor, etc.
That part of a conveyance, advertisement of sale, etc., which identifies the land or premises intended to be affected.

A fair portrayal of the chief features of the proposed law in words of plain meaning, so that it can be understood by the persons entitled to vote. Sawyer Stores v. Mitchell, 103 Mont. 148, 62 P.2d 342, 348.

That part of affidavit for search warrant describing the place to be searched.

For description of criminal suspect, see Lineup.

See also Identification.

Descriptio personae /dəskrɪpʃ(ə)yər pərˈsɔnəli/. Lat. Description of the person. By this is meant a word or phrase used merely for the purpose of identifying or pointing out the person intended, and not as an intimation that the language in connection with which it occurs is to apply to him only in the official or technical character which might appear to be indicated by the word. Forrester v. Cantley, 227 Mo.App. 325, 51 S.W.2d 550, 551.

In wills, it sometimes happens that the word heir is used as a descriptio personae. A legacy "to the eldest son" of A would be a designation of the person.

Descriptive. Containing a description; serving or aiming to describe; having the quality of representing. Sawyer Stores v. Mitchell, 103 Mont. 148, 62 P.2d 342, 348. See also Identification.

Descriptive mark. A trademark which merely describes the goods to which it is affixed. A descriptive mark will only be protected or registrable if the user can demonstrate secondary meaning. See also Secondary meaning.

If trademark imparts information directly, it is "descriptive"; if it stands for an idea which requires some operation of the imagination connected with the goods, it is "suggestive"; the information imparted may concern a characteristic, quality or ingredient of the product. Union Carbide Corp. v. Ever-Ready, Inc., C.A.I11., 531 F.2d 366, 378.

Descriptive term. See Descriptive mark.

De scutagio habendo /diː səˈkwətəjɪˌjoʊ həˈbɛndəʊ/. Writ for having (or to have) escuage or scutage. A writ which anciently lay against tenants by knight-service, to compel them to serve in the king's wars or send substitutes or to pay escuage; that is a sum of money. The same writ lay for one who had already served in the king's army, or paid a fine instead, against those who held of him by knight-service, to recover his escuage or scutage.

De se bene gerendo /diː sə ˈbɪnəli jəˈrɛnədəʊ/. For behaving himself well; for his good behavior.

Desecrate. To violate sanctity of, to profane, or to put to unworthy use. Offense consists of defacing, damaging, polluting or otherwise physically mistreating in a way that the actor knows will outrage the sensibilities of persons likely to observe or discover his action. Model Penal Code, § 250.9. See also Deface; Defile; Flag desecration.

De secta ad molendinum /diː sɛktə əd məˈlɛndənəm/. Of suit to a mill. An old English writ which lay to compel one to continue his custom (of grinding) at a mill. 3 Bl.Comm. 235.

Desegregation. The judicial mandate eliminating color of a person as a basis for disqualification to attend the school of his or her choice or to work at place of employment of his or her choice. See Brown decision; Discrimination.

Desert. To leave or quit with an intention to cause a permanent separation; to forsake utterly; to abandon. It is essentially willful in nature.

Desertion. The act by which a person abandons and forsakes, without justification, or unauthorized, a station or condition of public, social, or family life, renouncing its responsibilities and evading its duties. A willful abandonment of an employment or duty in violation of a legal or moral obligation.

Criminal desertion is a husband's or wife's abandonment or willful failure without just cause to provide for the care, protection or support of a spouse who is in ill health or necessitous circumstances.

See also Abandonment; Desertion and non-support; Non-support.

Adoption. As used in statute providing that parental consent to adoption is not required when parent has willfully deserted child evinces settled purpose to forego, abandon, or desert all parental duties and parental rights in child. Moody v. Voorhies, 257 Or. 105, 475 P.2d 579, 581.

Constructive desertion. That arising where an existing cohabitation is put an end to by misconduct of one of the parties, provided such misconduct is itself a ground for divorce. For example, where one spouse, by his or her words, conduct, demeanor, and attitude produces an intolerable condition which forces the other spouse to withdraw from the joint habitation to a more peaceful one. West v. West, 264 Ky. 826, 96 S.W.2d 789, 790.

Divorce law. As a ground for divorce, an actual abandonment or breaking off of matrimonial cohabitation, by either of the parties, and a renouncing or refusal of the duties and obligations of the relation, with an intent to abandon or forsake entirely and not to return to or resume marital relations, occurring without legal justification either in the consent or the wrongful conduct of the other party. The elements of offense of "desertion" as ground for divorce are a voluntary intentional abandonment of one party by the other, without cause or justification and without consent of party abandoned. See also Constructive desertion, above; and Desertion and non-support.
Maritime law. The act by which a seaman deserts and abandons a ship or vessel, in which he had engaged to perform a voyage, before the expiration of his time, and without leave. By desertion, in the maritime law, is meant, not a mere unauthorized absence from the ship without leave, but an unauthorized absence from the ship, with an intention not to return to her service, or, as it is often expressed, animo non revertendi; that is, with an intention to desert. The Cripple Creek, D.C.Pa., 52 F.Supp. 710, 712 (strike); The Youngstown, C.C.A.La., 110 F.2d 968, 970. Desertion, within statute providing for forfeiture of wages of deserting seaman, consists of seaman's unconsented abandonment of duty by quitting ship before termination of engagement specified in articles he signed, without justification and with intention of not returning. Petition of Russo, D.C.Cal., 232 F.Supp. 650, 651.

Military law. Any member of the armed forces who—(1) without authority goes or remains absent from his unit, organization, or place of duty with intent to remain away therefrom permanently; (2) quits his unit, organization, or place of duty with intent to avoid hazardous duty or to shirk important service; or (3) without being regularly separated from one of the armed forces enlists or accepts an appointment in the same or another one of the armed forces without fully disclosing the fact that he has not been regularly separated, or enters any foreign armed service except when authorized by the United States; is guilty of desertion. Code of Military Justice, 10 U.S.C.A. § 885.

Non-support. Desertion is frequently accompanied by non-support, which may be a crime. See also Desertion and non-support; Non-support.

Obstinate desertion. See Obstinate desertion.

Desertion and non-support. While both desertion and non-support go hand in hand in many cases, they are distinguishable because a man may be guilty of desertion and not guilty of non-support. The converse is also true because a man may be guilty of willfully failing to support though he remains in the marital home. See also Desertion; Non-support.

Deserving. Worthy or meritorious, without regard to condition or circumstances. In no sense of the word is it limited to persons in need of assistance, or objects which come within the class of charitable uses.

Deshonra /deysonora/. In Spanish law, dishonor; injury; slander.

Design. To form plan or scheme of, conceive and arrange in mind, originate mentally, plan out, contrive. Also, the plan or scheme conceived in mind and intended for subsequent execution; preliminary conception of idea to be carried into effect by action; contrivance in accordance with preconceived plan. A project, an idea. As a term of art, the giving of a visible form to the conceptions of the mind, or invention.

In evidence, purpose or intention, combined with plan, or implying a plan in the mind.

In patent law, the drawing or depiction of an original plan or conception for a novel pattern, model, shape, or configuration, to be used in the manufacturing or textile arts or the fine arts, and chiefly of a decorative or ornamental character. "Design patents" are contrasted with "utility patents," but equally involve the exercise of the inventive or originative faculty. Design, in the view of the patent law, is that characteristic of a physical substance which, by means of lines, images, configuration, and the like, taken as a whole, makes an impression, through the eye, upon the mind of the observer. The essence of a design resides not in the elements individually, nor in their method of arrangement, but in the total ensemble—in that indefinable whole that awakens some sensation in the observer's mind. Impressions thus imparted may be complex or simple. But whatever the impression, there is attached in the mind of the observer, to the object observed, a sense of uniqueness and character.

Designate. To indicate, select, appoint, nominate, or set apart for a purpose or duty, as to designate an officer for a command. To mark out and make known; to point out; to name; indicate. New Haven Federation of Teachers v. New Haven Bd. of Ed., 27 Conn.Sup. 298, 237 A.2d 373, 380. See also Identification.

Designating petition. Means used to designate a candidate for a party nomination at a primary election or for election to party position.

Designatio justiciariorum est a rege; jurisdictio vero ordinaria a lege /dez3gneysh(iy)ow jastishiyeriyoram est ey riyljy; jür3sdiksh(iy)ow vîrî ordanêrîya ey liyjîy/. The appointment of justices is by the king, but their ordinary jurisdiction by the law.

Designation. An addition to a name, as of title, profession, trade, or occupation, to distinguish the person from others. A description or descriptive expression by which a person or thing is denoted in a will without using the name. Also, an appointment or assignment, as to a particular office. The act of pointing out, distinguishing by marks of description, or calling by a distinctive title. See also Identification.

Designatio personae /d3zagnêysh(iy)ow parsow'nîy/. The description of a person or a party to a deed or contract. See also Descriptio personae.

Designatio unius est exclusio alterius, et expressum facit cessare tacitum /d3zagnêysh(iy)ow yuynw'ays est aksklûwzh(iy)ow ol'tarûyjes, et aksprêom yësasîrî têstam/. The specifying of one is the exclusion of the other, and that which is expressed makes that which is understood to cease. (The appointment or designation of one is the exclusion of the other; and that which is expressed prevails over that which is implied.)

Designed. Contrived or taken to be employed for a particular purpose. Fit, adapted, prepared, suitable, appropriate. Intended, adapted, or designated. The term may be employed as indicating a bad purpose with evil intent.
De similibus ad similia eadem ratione procedendum est /dīlí similabas ēd similīya iēydam rēśhīōwīni prōwswstēndēm ēst/. From like things to like things we are to proceed by the same rule or reason [i.e., we are allowed to argue from the analogy of cases].

Desposorio /desposoriyow/. In Spanish law, espousals; mutual promises of future marriage.

Despojar /deyspowhar/. A possessory action of the kind to take possession of immovable property, of which one has been despoiled (despojado) by another. See also Despoil.

Desponsation /dasponseyshan/. The act of betrothing, or espousals; mutual promises of future marriage.

De similibus idem est judicandum /dīlí similabas ēd jūdwakāndēm/. Of [respecting] like things [in like cases], the judgment is to be the same.

De son tort demesne /dō sown tōr(t)/. L. Fr. Of his own wrong. A use which owner has intentionally set for end of journey; terminal point to which one directs his course.

De son tort /dō sown tōr(t)/. L. Fr. Of his own wrong. An executor de son tort is an executor of his own wrong. A person who assumes to act as executor of an estate without any lawful warrant or authority, but who, by his intermeddling, makes himself liable as an executor to a certain extent. If a stranger takes upon him to act as executor without any just authority, he is called in law an “executor of his own wrong,” de son tort. 2 Bl.Comm. 507.

De son tort desmesne /dō sown tōr(t) dāmiyin/. Of his own wrong. The law French equivalent of the Latin phrase de injuria (q.v.).

Despotism /despatizam/. That abuse of government which extends to all his property; this deprivation, which extends to all his rights, is called “dessaisissement.”

De statuto mercatorio /dī statyuwtow mārktāriyow/. The writ of statute merchant.

Despoil. This word, in its original and most simple acceptation, signifies master and supreme lord; it is synonymous with monarch. A ruler with absolute power and authority, but taken in bad sense, as it is usually employed, it signifies a tyrant. In some nations, despot is the title given to the sovereign, as king is given in others.

Despot. This word, in its original and most simple acceptation, signifies master and supreme lord; it is synonymous with monarch. A ruler with absolute power and authority, but taken in bad sense, as it is usually employed, it signifies a tyrant. In some nations, despot is the title given to the sovereign, as king is given in others.

Desposorio /desposoriyow/. In Spanish law, espousals; mutual promises of future marriage.

DESIGNEDLY.

Designedly. Sometimes equivalent to the words “wilfully,” “knowingly,” “unlawfully,” and “feloniously.”

Despoil. This word, in its original and most simple acceptation, signifies master and supreme lord; it is synonymous with monarch. A ruler with absolute power and authority, but taken in bad sense, as it is usually employed, it signifies a tyrant. In some nations, despot is the title given to the sovereign, as king is given in others.

Despotism /dēspotizam/. That abuse of government where the sovereign power is not divided, but united and unlimited in the hands of a single man, whatever may be his official title. It is not, properly, a form of government.

"Despotism" is not exactly synonymous with "autocracy," for the former involves the idea of tyranny or abuse of power, which is not necessarily implied by the latter. Every despotism is autocratic; but an autocracy is not necessarily despotic.

Desposorio /dēsposoríyow/. In Spanish law, espousals; mutual promises of future marriage.

De son tort /dō sown tōr(t)/. L. Fr. Of his own wrong. An executor de son tort is an executor of his own wrong. A person who assumes to act as executor of an estate without any lawful warrant or authority, but who, by his intermeddling, makes himself liable as an executor to a certain extent. If a stranger takes upon him to act as executor without any just authority, he is called in law an "executor of his own wrong," de son tort. 2 Bl.Comm. 507.

De son tort desmesne /dō sown tōr(t) dāmiyin/. Of his own wrong. The law French equivalent of the Latin phrase de injuria (q.v.).

Despotus /dēspōtus/. Contempt. A contemptible person.

Despoil /dēspōyl/. This word involves, in its significa-Despojar /dēspōwēhār/. A possessory action of the Mexican law. It is brought to recover possession of immovable property, of which one has been despoiled (despojado) by another. See also Despoil.

Desponsation /dēspōnēshyan/. The act of betrothing persons to each other.

Desposorio /dēspōwōriyow/. In Spanish law, espousals; mutual promises of future marriage.
Destitute or necessitous circumstances. Circumstances in which one needs the necessaries of life, which cover not only primitive physical needs, things absolutely indispensable to human existence and decency, but those things, also, which are in fact necessary to the particular person left without support.

Destroy. Term is susceptible of applications in a variety of contexts, but in general, it means to ruin completely and may include a taking. State v. Robinson, 266 Minn. 166, 123 N.W.2d 812. To ruin the structure, organic existence or condition of a thing; to demolish; to injure or mutilate beyond possibility of use; to nullify. State by Clark v. Wolkoff, 250 Minn. 504, 85 N.W.2d 401, 410.

As used in policies of insurance, leases, and in maritime law, and under various statutes, this term is often applied to an act which renders the subject useless for its intended purpose, though it does not literally demolish or annihilate it.

In relation to wills, contracts, and other documents, the term "destroy" does not import the annihilation of the instrument or its resolution into other forms of matter, but a destruction of its legal efficacy, which may be by cancellation, obliterating, tearing into fragments, etc.

Destructibility. Capability of being destroyed by some action or turn of events or by operation of law. In estates, a characteristic of contingent remainders which requires them to have become vested remainders on or before the time they are to become possessory or else suffer total destruction. See term below.

Destructibility of contingent remainders. Doctrine dealing with future interest which may be destroyed by failure of condition. Such destructible future interest as a contingent remainder is subject to Rule Against Perpetuities unlike future interest which is destructible by act of the grantor or owner of present estate.

Destructible trust. Trust susceptible of being terminated or destroyed by happening of certain events or by operation of law.

Desuetude /déswət(y)əwld/. Disuse; cessation or discontinuance of use, especially in the phrase, "to fall into desuetude." Applied to obsolete practices and statutes.

De superoneratione pastura /diy suwŋprorənəˈrɛ-ʃiˈɒʊnvni pɛstəˈriʊrə/. Old English writ of surcharge of pasture. A judicial writ which lay for him who was impleaded in the county court, for surcharging a common with his cattle, in a case where he was formerly impleaded for it in the same court, and the cause was removed into one of the courts at Westminster.

De tabulis exhibendis /diy təˈbiːəls ɪɡˈzəbəndəs/. Of showing the tablets of a will.

Detachare /dəˈtæʃəri/-. To seize or take into custody another's goods or person by writ of attachment or course of law.

Detail, v. To enumerate minutely, specify, particularize.

Detail, n. An individual part, an item, a particular.

One who belongs to the army, but is only detached, or set apart, for the time to some particular duty or service, and who is liable at any time to be recalled to his place in the ranks.

Detain. To retain as the possession of personality. To arrest, to check, to delay, to hinder, to hold, or keep in custody, to retard, to restrain from proceeding, to stay, to stop, to withhold. State v. King, 303 S.W.2d 930, 934. See Confinement; Custody.

Detainer. The act (or the juridical fact) of withholding from a person lawfully entitled the possession of land or goods, or the restraint of a man's personal liberty against his will; detention. The wrongful keeping of a person's goods is called an "unlawful detainer" although the original taking may have been lawful. See also Forcible detainer; Unlawful detainer.

Request filed by criminal justice agency with institution in which prisoner is incarcerated, asking institution either to hold prisoner for agency or to notify agency when release of prisoner is imminent. Carchman v. Nash, 473 U.S. 716, 105 S.Ct. 3401, 87 L.Ed.2d 516. Under Interstate Agreement on Detainers, a "detainer" is a notification filed with institution in which prisoner is serving a sentence, advising that he is wanted to face pending criminal charges in another jurisdiction. It must be a formal notice initiated by a prosecuting or law enforcement agency within member state where criminal charges are pending that prisoner is wanted to face criminal charges and notice must be filed with institution in which prisoner is serving a sentence.

Detainment. Act of detaining. This term is used in policies of marine insurance, in the clause relating to "arrests, restraints, and detainments." The last two words are construed as equivalents, each meaning the effect of superior force operating directly on the vessel.

De tallagio non concedendo /diy tæləˈziəʊnə nɒn kɒnˈsɛdəndəʊ/. Of not allowing talliage. The name given to the English statutes 25 and 34 Edw. I. restricting the power of the king to grant talliage.

Detection. A discovery or laying open of that which was hidden; investigation.

Detective. One whose business it is to detect criminals or discover matters of secret and pernicious import for the protection of the public. Such may be either a private detective engaged by an individual, or a member of a police force.

Detector. Device which reveals the presence of electric waves or radioactivity or the presence of metal or indicates the presence of eavesdropping equipment ("bug"). See also Polygraph; Wiretapping.

De tempore cujus contrarium memoria hominum non existit /diy tɛmˈpɔrɪ ˈkjuːpɔrɪ rɪˈmɔrɪə məˈməʊrɪə həʊˈmɪnəm nɒn əɡzɪstət/. From time whereof the memory of man does not exist to the contrary.

De tempore in tempus et ad omnia tempora /diy tɛmˈpɔrɪ ɪn tɛmˈpɔːs əd əd əmˈnɪə tɛmˈpɔːrə/. From time to time, and at all times.
Determination. The decision of a court or administrative agency. It implies an ending or finality of a controversy or suit. Piccone v. U.S., 186 Ct.Cl. 752, 407 F.2d 866, 873. To settle or decide by choice of alternatives or possibilities. The ending or expiration of an estate or interest in property, or of a right, power, or authority. The coming to an end in any way whatever.

A "determination" is a "final judgment" for purposes of appeal when the trial court has completed its adjudication of the rights of the parties in the action. Thomas Van Dyken Joint Venture v. Van Dyken, 90 Wis. 236, 279 N.W.2d 459, 463.

Also, an estimate. As respects an assessment, the term implies judgment and decision after weighing the facts.

See also Determination; Decision; Decree; Finding; Judgment; Opinion.

Determination letter. Document issued by a District Director of Internal Revenue Service, upon request of a taxpayer, giving an opinion as to the tax significance of a past or prospective transaction. Determination letters are most frequently used to clarify employee status, to determine whether a retirement or profit-sharing plan "qualifies" under the Internal Revenue Code, and to determine the tax exempt status of certain non-profit organizations.

Determinative issues. The "determinative issues" which are to be embraced in a special verdict form are the ultimate issues which, when decided, will definitely settle the entire controversy between or among the parties and leave nothing for the court to do but enter judgment for party, or parties, in whose favor such determinative issues have been resolved by jury. Miller v. McAllister, 169 Ohio St. 487, 160 N.E.2d 231, 237.

Determinism. A philosophy which teaches that human behavior is governed, in the main, by pre-existing conditions such as environment and family patterns and leaves no room for freedom of the will.

Deterrent. Anything which impedes or has a tendency to prevent; e.g., punishment is a "deterrent" to crime.

De theolonio /diθiɔlɔˈniːoʊ/ A writ which lay for recovery of goods, under a contract to deliver them.

Detinet /dɛtɪˈnet/. Lat. He detains. In old English law, a species of action of debt, which lay for the specific recovery of goods, under a contract to deliver them.

An action of debt is said to be in the detinet when it is alleged merely that the defendant withholds or unjustly detains from the plaintiff the thing or amount demanded.

An action of replevin is said to be in the detinet when the defendant retains possession of the property until after judgment in the action.

Detinu /dɛtɪˈnuː/ A form of action which lies for the recovery, in specie, of personal chattels from one who acquired possession of them lawfully, but retains it without right, together with damages for the detention. Possessory action for recovery of personal chattels unjustly detained. Durst v. Durst, 232 Md. 311, 193 A.2d 26. See also Replevin.

The action of detinu is defined in the old books as a remedy founded upon the delivery of goods by the owner to another to keep, who afterwards refuses to redeliver.
them to the bailor; and it is said that to authorize the maintenance of the action, it is necessary that the defendant should have come lawfully into the possession of the chattel, either by delivery to him or by finding it.
In fact, it was once understood to be the law that detinue does not lie where the property had been tor-tiously taken. But it is, upon principle, very unimportant in what manner the defendant's possession com-cenced, since the gist of the action is the wrongful detainer, and not the original taking.

It is only incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove property in himself, and possession in the defendant. The action of detinue is proper in every case where the owner prefers recovering the specific property to damages for its conversion, and no regard is had to the manner in which the defendant acquired the possession.

Detinue of goods in frank marriage /détan(y)waw av gúdz in fréñk márraj/. A writ formerly available to a wife after a divorce, for the recovery of the goods given with her in marriage.

Detinuit /dístinyuwat/. An action of replevin is said to be in the detinuit when the plaintiff acquires possession of the property claimed by means of the writ. The right to retain is, of course, subject in such case to the judgment of the court upon his title to the property claimed.

Detour. A temporary turning aside from usual or regular route, course or procedure or from a task or employment. See also Deviation.

A temporary road or a longer road in temporary use because of an obstruction or state of disrepair on regularly used road.

Detournement. The misappropriation by a servant of funds the property of his master; fraudulent abstraction of documents; or "abus de confiance" which is frauduently misusing or spending to anybody's prejudice goods, cash, bills, documents, or contracts handed over for a special object. See also Embezzlement.

Detraction. The removal of property from one state to another upon a transfer of the title to it by will or inheritance.

De transgressione /diy trënzwgrishiyówniy/. A writ of trespass.

De transgressione, ad audiendum et terminandum /diý trënzgrishiyówni, âd ðodiýwendam ét tærmanándam/. A writ or commission for the hearing and determining any outrage or misdemeanor.

Detriment. Any loss or harm suffered in person or property; e.g., the consideration for a contract may consist not only in a payment or other thing of value given, but also in loss or "detriment" suffered by the promisee. In that connection, "detriment" means that the promisee has, in return for the promise, forborne some legal right which he otherwise would have been entitled to exercise, or that he has given up something which he had a right to keep, or done something which he had a right not to do. Irving v. Irwin, 133 Cal.App.
374, 24 P.2d 215. See Consideration; Legal detriment.

Detrimental reliance. Response by promisee by way of act to offer of promisor in a unilateral contract. See also Promissory estoppel.

Detriment to promisee. In contracts, consideration offered by promisee to promisor, especially in a unilateral contract which calls for an act from the promisee though the promisor may revoke his offer before the completion of the act. See also Consideration; Culpa in contraendo.

Detunica /dístywnskékár/-. To discover or lay open to the world.

De una parte /dï yúwna pártiya/. A deed de una parte is one where only one party grants, gives, or binds himself to do a thing to another. It differs from deed inter partes (q.v.).

Deuterogamy /diýwtørógamuy/. The act, or condition, of one who marries after the death of a former wife or husband.

De uxore rapta et abducta /dïy askóriy réptá ed abdúkta/. Old English writ which lay where a man's wife had been ravished and carried away. A species of writ of trespass. 3 Bl.Comm. 139.

Devadiatus, or divadiatus /davádjiýytas/. In old English law, an offender without sureties or pledges.

Devaluation. Reduction in value of a currency or of a standard monetary unit. See also Revaluation.

Devastation. Wasteful use of the property of a deceased person, as for extravagant funeral or other unnecessary expenses. 2 Bl.Comm. 508.

Devastaverunt /davástávírunt/. They have wasted. A term applied in old English law to waste by executors and administrators, and to the process issued against them therefor. See Devastavit.

Devastavit /dëvástávîyt/. Lat. He has wasted. The act of an executor or administrator in wasting the goods of the deceased; mismanagement of the estate by which a loss occurs. A breach of trust or misappropriation of assets held in a fiduciary character; any violation or neglect of duty by an executor or administrator, involvning loss to the decedent's estate, which makes him personally responsible to heirs, creditors, or legatees.

De vasto /dïy vástów/. Writ of waste. Old English writ which might be brought by him who had the immediate estate of inheritance in reversion or remainder, against the tenant for life, in dower, by curtesy, or for years, where the latter had committed waste and destruction in the place named, to the disinherison (ad exhaeredationem) of the plaintiff. 3
Bl.Comm. 227, 228. Abolished by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c.
27.

De ventre inspiciendo /diý vëndriy ñąspis(h)jyýndów/.
A common law writ to inspect the body, where a woman feigned to be pregnant, to see whether she was with child. It lay for the heir presumptive to examine a widow suspected to be feigning pregnancy in order to enable a supposititious heir to obtain the estate. 1 Bl.Comm. 456. It lay also where a woman sentenced to death pleaded pregnancy. 4 Bl.Comm. 395. This writ was also formerly recognized in America. See Matrons, jury of.

De verbo in verbum /dīy vārbō in vārbam/. Word for word. Literally, from word to word.

Devvest. To deprive or dispossess of a title or right (e.g. of an estate).

Deviation. Departure from established or usual conduct or ideology. A change made in the progress of a work from the original terms or design or method agreed upon. Ward v. City of Monrovia, 16 Cal.2d 815, 108 P.2d 425, 429. A voluntary departure by railroad carrier, without necessity or reasonable cause, from the regular or usual route or from a stipulated or customary mode of carriage. Ward v. Gulf, M. & N. R. Co., 23 Tenn.App. 533, 134 S.W.2d 917, 924. A wandering from the way, variation from the common way, from an established rule, standard, or position. S. J. Groves & Sons Co. v. West Virginia Turnpike Commission, D.C.W.Va., 164 F.Supp. 816, 821.

In employment, departure of employee from his course of employment and duties to employer for purposes entirely personal. Such term comes into use and is applied in workers’ compensation cases and in actions against employer by third persons for injuries caused by employee. See also Scope of employment.

In insurance, term refers to variance from the risks insured against, as described in the policy, without necessity or just cause, after the risk has begun. Such deviation may void the liability or responsibility of the insurer.

In shipping, a voluntary, unnecessary or unexcused departure without reasonable cause from the course of the voyage insured, or an unreasonable delay in pursuing the voyage, or the commencement of an entirely different voyage. The Willdomino v. Citro Chemical Co. of America, 272 U.S. 718, 47 S.Ct. 261, 262, 71 L.Ed. 491.

Deviation doctrine. In wills and trusts, principle which permits variation from terms of trust where circumstances are such that purposes of trust would otherwise be defeated. Connecticut Bank & Trust Co. v. Johnson Memorial Hospital, 30 Conn.Sup. 1, 294 A.2d 586, 591. In agency, principle which permits agent to vary activity slightly from scope of master’s permission. Johnson v. Maryland Casualty Co., C.C.A.Wis., 125 F.2d 337.

Device. An invention or contrivance; any result of design, as in the phrase “gambling device,” which means a machine or contrivance of any kind for the playing of an unlawful game of chance or hazard. A plan or project; a scheme to trick or deceive; a stratagem or artifice, as in the laws relating to fraud and cheating. Also, an emblem, pictorial representation, or distinquishing mark or sign of any kind; as in the laws prohibiting the marking of ballots used in public elections with “any device.”

In patent law, a plan or contrivance, or an application, adjustment, shaping, or combination of materials or members, for the purpose of accomplishing a particular result or serving a particular use, chiefly by mechanical means and usually simple in character or not highly complex, but involving the exercise of the inventive faculty.

That which is devised, or formed by design; a contrivance; an invention. Ernst and Ernst v. Hochfelder, 425 U.S. 185, 96 S.Ct. 1375, 1384, 47 L.Ed.2d 668.

De vicineto /dīy vāsinatow/. From the neighborhood, or vicinage. 3 Bl.Comm. 360. A term applied to a jury.

De vi laica amovenda /dīv vāy léyaks éymavénda/. Writ of (or for) removing lay force. A writ which lay where two parsons contended for a church, and one of them entered into it with a great number of laymen, and held out the other vi et armis; then he that was holden out had this writ directed to the sheriff, that he remove the force.

Devilling /dēvallig/. A term used in London of a barrister recently admitted to the bar, who assists a junior barrister in his professional work, without appearing in any way in the matter.

Devil on the neck. An instrument of torture, formerly used to extort confessions, etc. It was made of several irons, which were fastened to the neck and legs, and wrenched together so as to break the back.

Devisable. Capable of being devised.

Devisavit vel non /dēvazéyvat vēl nōn/. The name of an issue sent out of a court of chancery, or one which exercises chancery jurisdiction, to a court of law, to try the validity of a paper asserted and denied to be a will, to ascertain whether or not the testator did devise, or whether or not that paper was his will.

Devise /dāvāyz/. A testamentary disposition of land or realty; a gift of real property by the last will and testament of the donor. When used as a noun, means a testamentary disposition of real or personal property and when used as a verb, means to dispose of real or personal property by will. Uniform Probate Code, § 1-201(7). See also Bequest; Executory devise; Legacy.

To contrive; plan; scheme; invent; prepare.

Classification

Devises are contingent or vested; that is, after the death of the testator. Contingent, when the vesting of any estate in the devisee is made to depend upon some future event, in which case, if the event never occur, or until it does occur, no estate vests under the devise. But, when the future event is referred to merely to determine the time at which the devisee shall come into the use of the estate, this does not hinder the vesting of the estate at the death of the testator. Devises are also classed as general or specific. A general devise is one which passes lands of the testator without a particular enumeration or description of them; as, a devise of “all my lands” or “all my other lands.” In a more restricted sense, a general devise is one which grants a parcel of land without the addition of any words to show how great an estate is meant to be given, or without words indicating either a grant in perpetuity or a grant for a limited term; in this case it is construed as granting a life estate. Specific devises are devises of lands particularly specified in the terms of the devise, as opposed to general and residuary devises of land, in which the local or other particular descriptions are not expressed. For example, “I devise my Hendon Hall estate” is a specific devise; but “I devise all my lands,” or “all my other lands,” is a general devise or a residuary devise. But all devises are (in effect) specific, even residuary devises being so. At common law, all devises of land were deemed to be “specific” whether the land was identified in the devise or passed under the residuary clause. A conditional devise is one which depends upon the occurrence of some uncertain event, by which it is either to take effect or be defeated. An executory devise of lands is such a disposition of them by will that thereby no estate vests at the death of the devisor, but only on some future contingency. It differs from a remainder in three very material points: (1) That it needs not any particular estate to support it; (2) that by it a fee-simple or other less estate may be limited after a fee-simple; (3) that by this means a remainder may be limited of a chattel interest, after a particular estate for life created in the same. 2 Bl.Com. 172. In a stricter sense, a limitation by will of a future contingent interest in lands, contrary to the rules of the common law. A limitation by will of a future estate or interest in land, which cannot, consistently with the rules of law, take effect as a remainder. A future interest taking effect as a fee in derogation of a defeasible fee devised or conveyed to the first taker, when created by will, is an “executory devise,” and, when created by deed, is a “conditional limitation,” and in either event is given effect as a shifting or springing use.

The estates known as a contingent remainder and an “executory devise” are both interests or estates in land to take effect in the future and depend upon a future contingency; an “executory devise” being an interest which the rules of law do not permit to be created in conveyances, but allow in case of wills. It follows a fee estate created by a will. A contingent remainder may be created by will or other conveyance and must follow a particular or temporary estate created by the same instrument of conveyance.

Lapsed devise. A devise which fails, or takes no effect, in consequence of the death of the devisee before the testator; the subject-matter of it being considered as not disposed of by the will.

Residuary devise. A devise of all the residue of the testator’s real property, that is, all that remains over and above the other devises. See also general definition above.

Devisee /dəváiziy/. The person to whom lands or other real property are devised or given by will. In the case of a devise to an existing trust or trustee, or to a trustee on trust described by will, the trust or trustee is the devisee and the beneficiaries are not devisees. Uniform Probate Code, § 1-201(8).

Residuary devisee. The person named in a will, who is to take all the real property remaining over and above the other devises.

Devisor /dəváizər/. A giver of lands or real estate by will; the maker of a will of lands; a testator.

Devoir /dəvō(r)/dəvawär/. Fr. Duty. It is used in the statute of 2 Rich. II, c. 3, in the sense of duties or customs.

Devolution. The transfer or transition from one person to another of a right, liability, title, estate, or office. Transference of property from one person to another. Hermann v. Crossen, Ohio App., 160 N.E.2d 404, 408. See also Descent.

In ecclesiastical law, the forfeiture of a right or power (as the right of presentation to a living) in consequence of its non-user by the person holding it, or of some other act or omission on his part, and its resulting transfer to the person next entitled.

Devolve /dəvəlv/. To pass or be transferred from one person to another; to fall on, or accrue to, one person as the successor of another; as a title, right, office, liability. The term is said to be peculiarly appropriate to the passing of an estate from a person dying to a person living. See Descent; Devolution.

Devy /dəvá/. L. Fr. Dies; deceases.

De warrantia charte /diw ohrándshiy káritiy/. Writ of warranty of charter. A writ which lay for him who was enfeoffed, with clause of warranty [in the charter of feoffment], and was afterwards impleaded in an assise or other action, in which he could not vouch or call to warranty; in which case he might have this writ against the feoffor, or his heir, to compel him to warrant the land unto him. Abolished by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 27.

De warrantia diei /diw worándshiy dāyiyay/. A writ that lay where a man had a day in any action to appear in proper person, and the king at that day, or before, employed him in some service, so that he could not appear at the day in court. It was directed to the justices, that they should not record him to be in default for his not appearing.

Dextrarius /dëkstrériyəs/. One at the right hand of another.

Dextras dare /dëkstras dèrīy/. To shake hands in token of friendship; or to give up oneself to the power of another person.

Diaconate /diyēkənast/ˈdeɪ-//. The office of a deacon.

Diaconus /diyēkənəs/. A deacon.

Diagnosis /dīəgnəˈwəʊsəs/. A medical term, meaning the discovery of the source of a patient’s illness or the determination of the nature of his disease from a study. of its symptoms. The art or act of recognizing the presence of disease from its symptoms, and deciding as to its character, also the decision reached, for determination of type or condition through case or specimen study or conclusion arrived at through critical perception or scrutiny. A "clinical diagnosis" is one made from a study of the symptoms only, and a "physical diagnosis" is one made by means of physical measure, such as palpation and inspection.

Diagnostic tests. Tests to determine and identify the nature of a disease; including laboratory and exploratory tests.

Dialectics /däylɛktaks/. That branch of logic which teaches the rules and modes of reasoning.

Diallage /dayɛlzajiy/. A rhetorical figure in which arguments are placed in various points of view, and then turned to one point.

Dialogus de scaccario /dayaebgas diy skakeriyow/. In old English law, dialogue of or about the exchequer. An ancient treatise on the court of exchequer, attributed by some to Gervase of Tilbury, by others to Richard Fitz Nigel, bishop of London in the reign of Richard I. It is quoted by Lord Coke under the name of Ockham.

Dianatic /dæynɛtak/. A logical reasoning in a progressive manner, proceeding from one subject to another.

Diarium /dayɛriyam/. Daily food, or as much as will suffice for the day.

Diatim /dayɛytam/. In old records, daily; every day; from day to day.

Dica /dýka/. In old English law, a tally for accounts, by number of cuts (tailles), marks, or notches. See Tallia; Tally.

Dicast /dýkæst/. An officer in ancient Greece answering in some respects to our juryman, but combining, on trials had before them, the functions of both judge and jury. The dicasts sat together in numbers varying, according to the importance of the case, from one to five hundred.

Di colonna /dý kolóna/. In maritime law, the contract which takes place between the owner of a ship, the captain, and the mariners, who agree that the voyage shall be for the benefit of all. The term is used in the Italian law.

Dicta /diktə/. Opinions of a judge which do not embody the resolution or determination of the specific case before the court. Expressions in court's opinion which go beyond the facts before court and therefore are individual views of author of opinion and not binding in subsequent cases as legal precedent. State ex rel. Foster v. Naftalin, 246 Minn. 181, 74 N.W.2d 249. See also Dictum.

Dictate. To order or instruct what is to be said or written. To pronounce, word by word, what is meant to be written by another. See Dictation.

Dictation. In Louisiana, this term is used in a technical sense, and means to pronounce orally what is destined to be written at the same time by another. It is used in reference to nuncupative wills. The dictation of a will refers to the substance, and not the style, and it is sufficient if the will, as written, conveys the identity of thought expressed by the testator, though not the identity of words used by him.

Dictator. One in whom supreme authority in any line is invested, one who rules autocratically, and one who prescribes for others authoritatively, and offer oppressively. Houston Printing Co. v. Hunter, Tex.Civ.App., 105 S.W.2d 312, 317.

In Roman law, a magistrate invested with unlimited power, and created in times of national distress and peril. Among the Romans, he continued in office for six months only, and had unlimited power and authority over both the property and lives of the citizens.

Dictores. Arbitrators.

Dictum /diktəm/. A statement, remark, or observation. Gratis dictum; a gratuitous or voluntary representation; one which a party is not bound to make. Simplex dictum; a mere assertion; an assertion without proof.

The word is generally used as an abbreviated form of obiter dictum, "a remark by the way:" that is, an observation or remark made by a judge in pronouncing an opinion upon a cause, concerning some rule, principle, or application of law, or the solution of a question suggested by the case at bar, but not necessarily involved in the case or essential to its determination; any statement of the law enunciated by the court merely by way of illustration, argument, analogy, or suggestion. Statements and comments in an opinion concerning some rule of law or legal proposition not necessarily involved nor essential to determination of the case in hand are obiter dicta, and lack the force of an adjudication.

Wheeler v. Wilkin, 98 Colo. 568, 58 P.2d 1223, 1226. Dicta are opinions of a judge which do not embody the resolution or determination of the court, and made without argument, or full consideration of the point, are not the professed deliberate determinations of the judge himself.

In old English law, dictum meant an arbitrament, or the award of arbitrators.

In French law, the report of a judgment made by one of the judges who has given it.

Dictum de Kenilworth. The edict or declaration of Kenilworth. An edict or award between King Henry III, and all the barons and others who had been in arms against him; and so called because it was made at Kenilworth Castle in Warwickshire, in the fifty-first year of his reign, containing a composition of five years' rent for the lands and estates of those who had forfeited them in that rebellion.

Die. v. To expire; cease to live; the equivalent to the phrase "lose his life." See also Death.

Diei dictio /dayiyyay dikshiyow/. Lat. In Roman law, this name was given to a notice promulgated by a magistrate of his intention to present an impeachment against a citizen before the people, specifying the day Diem clausit extremum /dáyam klózat əkstrijam/. (Lat. He has closed his last day, i.e. died.) A writ which formerly lay on the death of a tenant in capite, to ascertain the lands of which he died seised, and reclaim them into the king’s hands. It was directed to the king’s escheators.

A writ awarded out of the exchequer after the death of a crown debtor, the sheriff being commanded by it to inquire by a jury when and where the crown debtor died, and what chattels, debts, and lands he had at the time of his decease, and to take and seize them into the crown’s hands.

Dies /dáyiy/. Lat. A day; days. Days for appearance in court. Provisions or maintenance for a day. The king’s rents were ancienly reserved by so many days’ provisions.

Dies amoris /dáyiy smórs/. A day of favor. The name given to the appearance day of the term on the fourth day, or quarto die post. It was the day given by the favor and indulgence of the court to the defendant for his appearance, when all parties appeared in court, and had their appearance recorded by the proper officer.

Dies a quo /dáyiy əy kwów/. (The day from which.) In the civil law. The day from which a transaction begins; the commencement of it; the conclusion being the dies ad quem.

Dies cedit /dáyiy síyd/. The day begins; dies venit, the day has come. Two expressions in Roman law which signify the vesting or fixing of an interest, and the interest becoming a present one.

Dies communes in banco /dáyiy kamyúwniy iz in bægkw/. Regular days for appearance in court; called, also “common return-days.”

Dies datus /dáyiy dýytas/. A day given or allowed (to a defendant in an action); amounting to a continuance. But the name was appropriate only to a continuance before a declaration filed; if afterwards allowed, it was called an “imparlance.”

Dies datus in banco /dáyiy dýytas in bægkw/. A day given in the bench (or court of common pleas). A day given in bank, as distinguished from a day at nisi prius.

Dies datus partibus /dáyiy dýytas partabas/. A day given to the parties to an action; an adjournment or continuance.

Dies datus pro parte partium /dáyiy dýytas prýysiy párshom/. A day given on the prayer of the parties.

Dies dominicus /dáyiy daminýkas/. The Lord’s day; Sunday.

Dies dominicus non est juridicus /dáyiy daminýkas nón èst járidýkas/. Sunday is not a court day, or day for judicial proceedings, or legal purposes.

Dies excrescens /dáyiy əskriýsyz/. In old English law, the added or increasing day in leap year.

Dies fasti /dáyiy fástay/. In Roman law, days on which the courts were open, and justice could be legally administered; days on which it was lawful for the prætor to pronounce (fari) the three words “do,” “dico,” “addico.” Hence called “trieribal days,” answering to the dies juridici of the English law.

Dies feriati /dáyiy fariýeytay/. In the civil law, holidays.

Dies gratiar /dáyiy gréshiy/. In old English practice, a day of grace, courtesy, or favor. The quarto die post was sometimes so called.

Dies inceptus pro completo habetur /dáyiy anséptas prów kampílytw hábytýar/. A day begun is held as complete.

Dies incertus pro conditione habetur /dáyiy ansártas prów kandíshiyówniy hábytýar/. An uncertain day is held as a condition.

Dies intercisi /dáyiy intárzáyzay/. In Roman law, divided days; days on which the courts were open for a part of the day.

Dies juridicus /dáyiy járidýkas/. A lawful day for the transaction of judicial or court business; a day on which the courts are or may be open for the transaction of business.

Dies legítimus /dáyiy lajitýmas/. In the civil and old English law, a lawful or law day; a term day; a day of appearance.

Dies marchiæ /dáyiy márkiýiy/. In old English law, the day of meeting of English and Scotch, which was annually held on the marches or borders to adjust their differences and preserve peace.

Dies nefasti /dáyiy niyfástay/. In Roman law, days on which the courts were closed, and it was unlawful to administer justice; answering to the dies non juridici of the English law.

Dies non /dáyiy nón/. An abbreviation of Dies non juridicus (q.v.).

Dies non juridicus /dáyiy nón járidýkas/. A day not juridical; not a court day. A day on which courts are not open for business, such as Sundays and some holidays.

Dies pacis /dáyiy péyys/. (Days of peace.) The year was formerly divided into the days of the peace of the church and the days of the peace of the king, including in the two divisions all the days of the year.

Dies solaris /dáyiy saléras/. In old English law, a solar day, as distinguished from what was called “dies lunar-is” (a lunar day); both composing an artificial day. See Day.

Dies solidis /dáyiy sówów/. In the civil and old English law, Sunday (literally, the day of the sun).

Dies utiles /dáyiy yúwtaliý/. Juridical days; useful or available days. A term of the Roman law, used to designate those especial days occurring within the limits of a prescribed period of time upon which it was lawful, or possible, to do a specific act.

Diet. A general legislative assembly is sometimes so called on the continent of Europe.

Dieta /dayeeta/. A day's journey; a day's work; a day's expenses.

Di. et fl. /day at fay/(daléktow et fédilyay)/. L. Lat. In old writs, an abbreviation of dílektō et fidelī (to his beloved and faithful).

Dieu et mon droit /dyew ey môn drōw/. Fr. God and my right. The motto of the royal arms of England, first assumed by Richard I.

Dieu son acte /dyew sôn akt/. L. Fr. In old law, God his act; God's act. An event beyond human foresight or control. See Act of God.

Die without issue. See Dying without issue.

Diffacere /dafesary/. To destroy; to disfigure or deface.

Difference. In an agreement for submission to arbitration, a disagreement or dispute. As respects contract specifications or material described therein, a state of being unlike. Disagreement in opinion, interpretation or conclusion. Instance or cause of disagreement. See also Disagreement.

Difforciare /dafaörsh(i)lyériy/. In old English law, to deny, or keep from one. Difforciare rectum, to deny justice to any one, after having been required to do it.

Diffuse. To spread widely; scatter; disperse.

Digama, or digamy /digamiy/. Second marriage; marriage to a second wife after the death of the first, as "bigamy," in law, is having two wives at once. Originally, a man who married a widow, or married again after the death of his wife, was said to be guilty of bigamy.

Digest. A collection or compilation, embodying the chief matter of numerous books, articles, court decisions, etc. in one, disposed under proper heads or titles, and usually by an alphabetical arrangement, for facility in reference.

An index to reported cases, providing brief statements of court holdings or facts of cases, which is arranged by subject and subdivided by jurisdiction and courts. See American Digest System; Special digests, below.

As a legal term, "digest" is to be distinguished from "abridgment." The latter is a summary or epitome of the contents of a single work, in which, as a rule, the original order or sequence of parts is preserved, and in which the principal labor of the compiler is in the matter of consolidation. A digest is wider in its scope; is made up of quotations or paraphrased passages, and has its own system of classification and arrangement. An "index" merely points out the places where particular matters may be found, without purporting to give such matters in extenso. A "treatise" or "commentary" is not a compilation, but an original composition, though it may include quotations and excerpts.

A reference to the "Digest," or "Dig.," is often understood to designate the Digest (or Pandects) of the Justinian collection; that being the digest par eminence, and the authoritative compilation of the Roman law.

American Digest System. The American Digest System is a subject classification scheme whereby digests of decisions that were reported chronologically in the various units of the National Reporter System are rearranged by subject, bringing together all cases on a similar point of law. The system divides the subject of law into seven main classes. Each class is then divided into sub-classes and then each sub-class into topics. There are over 400 digest topics, each of which corresponds to a legal concept. The system consists of a Century Digest (1668–1896), eight Decennial Digests (1897–1905, 1906–1915, 1916–1925, 1926–1935, 1936–1945, 1946–1955, 1956–1966, and 1966–1976), (the Ninth Decennial Digest, Part 1 (1976–1981), the Ninth Decennial Digest, Part 2 (1981–1986), and the General Digest, 7th Series (1986 to date). The American Digest System is the master index to all reported case law. See also Key number system; and Special digests, below.

Special digests. Decisions included in the American Digest System are as well included in special digests covering the federal courts and also in regional, state, and topical digests. The "U.S. Supreme Court Digest" covers decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court. The Federal Digest (cases decided prior to 1939), Modern Federal Practice Digest (1939–1961), West's Federal Practice Digest 2d (1961–1975) and West's Federal Practice Digest 3rd and 4th (1975 to date) cover Federal court cases. Specialty federal digests include the Bankruptcy Digest, the Claims Court Digest, and West's Military Justice Digest. State court decisions from geographical areas are also published in "Regional Digests" (Atlantic, Northwestern, Pacific, Southeastern, Southern Digests; several of these are in 1st and 2d series). Also, individual "State Digests" are published for most states. Other specialty digests include West's Education Law Digest and the Merit Systems Protection Board Digest.

Digests. The ordinary name of the Pandects of Justinian, which are now usually cited by the abbreviation "Dig." instead of "Ft.," as formerly. Sometimes called "Digest," in the singular. See also Digest.

Dignitary. In canon law, a person holding an ecclesiastical benefice or dignity, which gave him some pre-eminence above mere priests and canons. To this class exclusively belonged all bishops, deans, archdeacons, etc.; but it now includes all the prebendaries and canons of the church.

Dignity. In English law, an honor; a title, station, or distinction of honor. Dignities are a species of incorporeal hereditaments, in which a person may have a property or estate. 2 Bl.Comm. 37; 1 Bl.Comm. 396.

Dijudication /dajyjuwdakéyshun/. Judicial decision or determination.
Dilapidation. A species of ecclesiastical waste which occurs whenever the incumbent suffers any edifices of his ecclesiastical living to go to ruin or decay. It is either voluntary, by pulling down, or permissive, by suffering the church, parsonage-houses, and other buildings thereunto belonging, to decay. And the remedy for either lies either in the spiritual court, where the canon law prevails, or in the courts of common law. It is also held to be good cause of deprivation if the bishop, parson, or other ecclesiastical person dilapidates buildings or cuts down timber growing on the patrimony of the church, unless for necessary repairs; and that a writ of prohibition will also lie against him in the common-law courts. 3 Bl.Comm. 91.

The term is also used, in the law of landlord and tenant, to signify the neglect of necessary repairs to a building, or suffering it to fall into a state of decay, or the pulling down of the building or any part of it.

Dilations in lege sunt odiose /dalyshyownyz in liyly sënt owdiyowsiy/. Delays in law are odious.

Dilatory /dlst(o)ry/. Tending or intended to cause delay or to gain time or to put off a decision.

Dilatory defense. In chancery practice, one the object of which is to dismiss, suspend, or obstruct the suit, without touching the merits, until the impediment or obstacle insisted on shall be removed. 3 Bl.Comm. 301, 302. See also Dilatory pleas.

Dilatory exceptions. Such as do not tend to defeat the action, but only to retard its progress.

Dilatory pleas. A class of defenses at common law, founded on some matter of fact not connected with the merits of the case, but such as might exist without impeaching the right of action itself. They were either pleas to the jurisdiction, showing that, by reason of some matter therein stated, the case was not within the jurisdiction of the court; or pleas in suspension, showing some matter of temporary incapacity to proceed with the suit; or pleas in abatement, showing some matter for abatement or quashing the declaration. Davis v. Thie-de, 138 Ind.App. 537, 203 N.E.2d 835. Under modern civil procedure such defenses are raised by motion or answer. See Plea (Plea in abatement).

Diligence. Vigilant activity; attentiveness; or care, of which there are infinite shades, from the slightest momentary thought to the most vigilant anxiety. Attentive and persistent in doing a thing; steadily applied; active; sedulous; laborious; unremitting; untiring. National Steel & Shipbuilding Co. v. U. S., 190 Ct.Cl. 247, 419 F.2d 863, 875. The attention and care required of a person in a given situation is the opposite of negligence. Turnquist v. Kjelbak, N.D., 77 N.W.2d 854, 861.

The civil law is in perfect conformity with the common law. It lays down three degrees of diligence,—ordinary (diligentia); extraordinary (exactissima diligentia); slight (levissima diligentia).

There may be a high degree of diligence, a common degree of diligence, and a slight degree of diligence, with their corresponding degrees of negligence. Common or ordinary diligence is that degree of diligence which men in general exercise in respect to their own concerns; high or great diligence is of course extraordinary diligence, or that which very prudent persons take of their own concerns; and low or slight diligence is that which persons of less than common prudence, or indeed of any prudence at all, take of their own concerns.

See also Care.

Due diligence. Such a measure of prudence, activity, or assiduity, as is properly to be expected from, and ordinarily exercised by, a reasonable and prudent man under the particular circumstances; not measured by any absolute standard, but depending on the relative facts of the special case.

Extraordinary diligence. That extreme measure of care and caution which persons of unusual prudence and circumspection use for securing and preserving their own property or rights.

Great diligence. Such a measure of care, prudence, and assiduity as persons of unusual prudence and discretion exercise in regard to any and all of their own affairs, or such as persons of ordinary prudence exercise in regard to very important affairs of their own.

High diligence. The same as great diligence.

Low diligence. The same as slight diligence.

Necessary diligence. That degree of diligence which a person placed in a particular situation must exercise in order to entitle him to the protection of the law in respect to rights or claims growing out of that situation, or to avoid being left without redress on account of his own culpable carelessness or negligence.

Ordinary diligence is that degree of care which men of common prudence generally exercise in their affairs, in the country and the age in which they live.

Reasonable diligence. A fair, proper and due degree of care and activity, measured with reference to the particular circumstances; such diligence, care, or attention as might be expected from a man of ordinary prudence and activity.

Special diligence. The measure of diligence and skill exercised by a good business man in his particular specialty, which must be commensurate with the duty to be performed and the individual circumstances of the case; not merely the diligence of an ordinary person or non-specialist.

Diligent. Attentive and persistent in doing a thing; steadily applied; active; sedulous; laborious; unremitting; untiring.

Diligent inquiry. Such inquiry as a diligent man, intent upon ascertaining a fact, would ordinarily make, and it is inquiry made with diligence and good faith to ascertain the truth, and must be an inquiry as full as the circumstances of the situation will permit. Liepelt v. Baird, 17 Ill.2d 428, 161 N.E.2d 854, 857.

Diligius /daliyjytas/. (Fr. De lege ejectus, Lat.) Outlawed.

Dillon's Rule. Rule used in construction of statutes delegating authority to local government: “. . . [A] municipal corporation possesses and can exercise the following powers and no others: First, those granted in express words; second, those necessarily implied or necessarily incident to the powers expressly granted; third, those absolutely essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation—not simply convenient, but indispensable . . . .” Merriam v. Moody's Executives, 25 Iowa 163, 170 (1868).

Dilution. In corporate law, refers to the reduction in value of outstanding shares resulting from the issuance of additional shares. The dilution may be of voting power if shares are not issued proportionately to the holdings of existing shareholders, or it may be financial, if shares are issued disproportionately and the price at which the new shares are issued is less than the market or book value of the outstanding shares prior to the issuance of the new shares.

Dilution doctrine. A trademark doctrine protecting strong marks against use by other parties even where there is no competition or likelihood of confusion. The concept is most applicable where subsequent user used the trademark of prior user for a product so dissimilar from the product of the prior user and there is no likelihood of confusion of the products or sources, but where the use of the trademark by the subsequent user will lessen uniqueness of the prior user's mark with the possible future result that a strong mark may become a weak mark. Holiday Inns, Inc. v. Holiday Out in America, C.A.Fla., 481 F.2d 445, 450.

Dimidia, dimidium, dimidius /damiydiya(m)/damiydiya(s)/. Half; a half; the half.

Dimidietas /dmiydaystas/. The moiety or half of a thing.

Diminished capacity doctrine. This doctrine recognizes that although an accused was not suffering from a mental disease or defect when the offense was committed sufficient to exonerate him from all criminal responsibility, his mental capacity may have been diminished by intoxication, trauma, or mental disease so that he did not possess the specific mental state or intent essential to the particular offense charged. State v. Correria, R.I., 430 A.2d 1251, 1253. See also Diminished responsibility doctrine.

Diminished responsibility doctrine /daminaasht respnbsabiliy doktron/. Term used to refer to lack of capacity to achieve state of mind requisite for commission of crime. McGuire v. Superior Court for Los Angeles County, 274 Cal.App. 583, 79 Cal.Rptr. 155, 161. The concept of diminished responsibility, also known as partial insanity, permits the trier of fact to regard the impaired mental state of the defendant in mitigation of the punishment or degree of the offense even though the impairment does not qualify as insanity under the prevailing test. A number of courts have adopted the concept. In some jurisdictions, mental retardation and extremely low intelligence will, if proved, serve to reduce first degree murder to manslaughter. See also Insanity.

Diminuto /diman(y)awshiyow/. In the civil law, diminution; a taking away; loss or deprivation. Diminutio capitis, loss of status or condition. See Capitis diminutio.

Diminution /diman(y)awshan/. Incompleteness. Act or process of diminishing, taking away, or lessening. A word signifying that the record sent up from an inferior to a superior court for review is incomplete, or not fully certified.

Diminution in value. Rule of damages which provides for difference between "before" and "after" value of property which has been damaged or taken. Big Rock Mountain Corp. v. Stearns-Roger Corp., C.A.S.D., 388 F.2d 165, 168. If breach of contract results in defective or unfinished construction, and loss in value to injured party is not proved with sufficient certainty, the affected party may recover damages based on diminution in market price of property caused by breach. Restatement, Second, Contracts, § 348(2)(a). See also Damages (Expectancy damages).

Diminution of damages. See Mitigation of damages.

Dimisi /damaysay/. In old conveyancing, I have demised. Dimisi, concessi, et ad firmam tradidi, have demised, granted, and to farm let. The usual words of operation in a lease. 2 Bl.Comm. 317, 318.

Dimisit /damayyst/. In old conveyancing, [he] has demised. See Dimisi.

Dimissoriae litterae /dimasoriyiy littariy/. In the civil law, letters dimissory or dismissory, commonly called "apostles" (quae vulgo apostoli dicuntur). See Apostoli, Apostles.

Dimissorius letters /dimasoriy létarz/. Where a candidate for holy orders has a title of ordination in one diocese in England, and is to be ordained in another, the bishop of the former diocese gives letters dimissory to the bishop of the latter to enable him to ordain the candidate.

Dinarchy /dynarki/. A government of two persons.

Diocesan /dayosasan/. Belonging to a diocese; a bishop, as he stands related to his own diocese.

Diocesan courts. In English law, the consistorial courts of each diocese, exercising general jurisdiction of all matters arising locally within their respective limits, with the exception of places subject to peculiar jurisdiction, and administering the other branches of the ecclesiastical law.

Diocesan mission. A mission which does missionary work in single diocese.

Diocese /dayassas/. The territorial extent of a bishop’s jurisdiction. The circuit of every bishop’s jurisdiction.
Diocchia /daylykiya/. The district over which a bishop exercised his spiritual functions.

Diploma. In the civil law, a royal charter; letters patent granted by a prince or sovereign. Instrument conferring some honor, privilege, or authority. Commonly used to denote document given by educational institution on graduation and awarding of degree.

Diplomacy. The art and practice of conducting negotiations between foreign governments for the attainment of mutually satisfactory political relations. Negotiation or intercourse between nations through their representatives. The rules, customs, and privileges of representatives at foreign courts.

Diplomatic agent. In international law, a general name for all classes of persons charged with the negotiation, transaction, or superintendence of the diplomatic business of one nation with that of another. See also Ambassador.

Diplomatic relations. Established and formal communications and acknowledgment between one country and another in which diplomatic agents are exchanged.

Diplomatics. The science of diplomas, or of ancient writings and documents. The art of judging of ancient charters, public documents, diplomas, etc., and discriminating the true from the false.

Dipsomania /dipsaméyniya/. A mental disease characterized by an uncontrollable desire for intoxicating drinks. An irresistible impulse to indulge in intoxication, either by alcohol or other drugs.

Dipsomaniac /dipsaméyniyék/. A person subject to dipsomania. One who has an irresistible desire for alcoholic liquors. See Insanity.

Diptycha /diptika/. Diptychs; tablets of wood, metal, or other substance, used among the Romans for the purpose of writing, and folded like a book of two leaves. The diptychs of antiquity were especially employed for public registers. They were used in the Greek, and afterwards in the Roman, church, as registers of the names of those for whom supplication was to be made, and are ranked among the earliest monastic records.

Direct, v. To point to; guide; order; command; instruct. To advise; suggest; request.

Direct, adj. Immediate; proximate; by the shortest course; without circuitry; operating by an immediate connection or relation, instead of operating through a medium; the opposite of indirect. Carter v. Carter Coal Co., App.D.C., 298 U.S. 238, 56 S.Ct. 855, 80 L.Ed. 1160.

In the usual or natural course or line; immediately upwards or downwards; as distinguished from that which is out of the line, or on the side of it. In the usual or regular course or order, as distinguished from that which diverts, interrupts, or opposes. The opposite of cross, contrary, collateral or remote.

Without any intervening medium, agency or influence; unconditional.

Direct and proximate cause. See Direct cause.

Direct attack. A direct attack on a judgment or decree is an attempt, for sufficient cause, to have it annulled, reversed, vacated, corrected, declared void, or enjoined, in a proceeding instituted for that specific purpose, such as an appeal, writ of error, bill of review, or injunction to restrain its execution; distinguished from a collateral attack, which is an attempt to impeach the validity or binding force of the judgment or decree as a side issue or in a proceeding instituted for some other purpose. Ernell v. O’Fiel, Tex.Civ.App., 441 S.W.2d 653, 655. A direct attack on a judicial proceeding is an attempt to void or correct it in some manner provided by law. Compare Collateral attack.

Direct cause. That which sets in motion train of events which brings about result without intervention of any force operating or working actively from new and independent source; or, as one without which the injury would not have happened. Norbeck v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co., 3 Wash.App. 582, 476 P.2d 546, 547. See Cause; Proximate cause.

Direct charge-off method. A method of accounting for bad debts whereby a deduction is permitted only when an account becomes partially or completely worthless.

Direct contempt. Such contempt consists of contumacious words or acts expressed in presence of court, while “indirect contempt” consists of similar misconduct or other disobedient acts performed outside court’s presence. State v. Wisniewski, 103 N.M. 430, 708 P.2d 1031, 1035. See also Contempt.

Direct costs. Costs of direct material and labor, and variable overhead incurred in producing a product.

Direct damages. See Damages.

Direct verdict. In a case in which the party with the burden of proof has failed to present a prima facie case for jury consideration, the trial judge may order the entry of a verdict without allowing the jury to consider it, because, as a matter of law, there can be only one such verdict. Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(a). In a criminal case, in federal court, the judge may render a judgment of acquittal in favor of defendant (in place of a motion for directed verdict, what has been abolished). Fed.R.Crim.P. 29. A directed verdict may be granted either on the court’s own initiative or on the motion of a party. See also Verdict.

Direct estoppel. Form of estoppel by judgment where issue has been actually litigated and determined in action between same parties based upon same cause of action. Napper v. Anderson et al., C.A.Tex., 500 F.2d 634, 636. See also Collateral estoppel doctrine.
Direct evidence. Evidence in form of testimony from a witness who actually saw, heard or touched the subject of questioning. State v. Baker, 249 Or. 549, 438 P.2d 978, 980. Evidence, which if believed, proves existence of fact in issue without inference or presumption. State v. McClure, Mo.App., 504 S.W.2d 664, 668. That means of proof which tends to show the existence of a fact in question, without the intervention of the proof of any other fact, and is distinguished from circumstantial evidence, which is often called "indirect." Direct evidence means evidence which in the first instance applies directly to the factum probandum, or which immediately points to a question at issue, or is evidence of the precise fact in issue and on trial by witnesses who can testify that they saw the acts done or heard the words spoken which constituted the precise fact to be proved.

Evidence that directly proves a fact, without an inference or presumption, and which in itself, if true, conclusively establishes that fact. Calif.Evid.Code.

Compare Circumstantial evidence.

Direct examination. The first interrogation or examination of a witness, on the merits, by the party on whose behalf he is called. The first examination of a witness upon a matter that is not within the scope of a previous examination of the witness. Calif.Evid.Code.

This is to be distinguished from an examination in pais, or on the voir dire, which is merely preliminary, and is had when the competency of the witness is challenged; from the cross-examination, which is conducted by the adverse party; and from the redirect examination which follows the cross-examination, and is had by the party who first examined the witness.

Compare Cross examination. See also Leading question; Redirect examination.

Direct financing. A means whereby a person obtains credit for the purchase or lease of property or services by getting a loan from a bank or other third person who is not the supplier of the property or services.

Direct injury. A wrong which directly results in the violation of a legal right and which must exist to permit a court to determine the constitutionality of an act of Congress.

Direct interest. A direct interest, such as would render the interested party incompetent to testify in regard to the matter, is an interest which is certain, and not contingent or doubtful. A matter which is dependent alone on the successful prosecution of an execution cannot be considered as uncertain, or otherwise than direct, in this sense.

Directors. Persons appointed or elected according to law, authorized to manage and direct the affairs of a corporation or company. The whole of the directors collectively form the board of directors.

Board of directors. See Board of directors.

Directors liability insurance. See Insurance.

Inside director. Director who is an employee, officer or major stockholder of corporation.

Interlocking director. Person who is a director of more than one corporation having allied interests. See Interlocking directors.

Outside director. Non-employee director with no, or only minimal, direct interest in corporation.

Directory, adj. A provision in a statute, rule of procedure, or the like, which is a mere direction or instruction of no obligatory force, and involving no invalidating consequence for its disregard, as opposed to an imperative or mandatory provision, which must be followed. The general rule is that the prescriptions of a statute relating to the performance of a public duty are so far directory that, though neglect of them may be punishable, yet it does not affect the validity of the acts done under them, as in the case of a statute requiring an officer to prepare and deliver a document to another officer on or before a certain day.
A "directory" provision in a statute is one, the observance of which is not necessary to the validity of the proceeding to which it relates; one which leaves it optional with the department or officer to which it is addressed to obey or not as he may see fit. Generally, statutory provisions which do not relate to essence of thing to be done, and as to which compliance is matter of convenience rather than substance are "directory," while provisions which relate to essence of thing to be done, that is, matters of substance, are "mandatory." Rodgers v. Meredith, 274 Ala. 179, 146 So.2d 308, 310.

Under a general classification, statutes are either "mandatory" or "directory," and, if mandatory, they prescribe, in addition to requiring the doing of the things specified, the result that will follow if they are not done, whereas, if directory, their terms are limited to what is required to be done. A statute is mandatory when the provision of the statute is the essence of the thing required to be done; otherwise, when it relates to form and manner, and where an act is incident, or after jurisdiction acquired, it is directory merely.

Directory trust. Where, by the terms of a trust, the fund is directed to be vested in a particular manner till the period arrives at which it will be appropriated, this is called a "directory trust." It is distinguished from a discretionary trust, in which the trustee has a discretion as to the management of the fund.

Directory, n. Book containing names, addresses, and occupations of inhabitants of city. Also any list or compilation, usually in book or pamphlet form, of persons, professional organizations, firms or corporations forming some class separate and distinct from others, e.g. telephone directory, lawyer's directory, hotel directory, etc.

Direct payment. One which is absolute and unconditional as to the time, amount, and the persons by whom and to whom it is to be made.

Direct placement. With respect to securities offerings, the negotiation by a borrower, such as an industrial or utility company, directly with the lender, such as a life insurance company or group of investors, for sale of an entire issue of securities. No underwriter is involved and the transaction is exempt from SEC filing. This is also called a private placement (q.v.)

Direct selling. Selling directly to customer rather than to distributor or dealer; or to retailer rather than to wholesaler.

Direct tax. One that is imposed directly upon property, according to its value. It is generally spoken of as a property tax or an ad valorem tax. Distinguishable from an indirect tax which is levied upon some right or privilege.

Diribitores /dirso'tóriyz/. In Roman law, officers who distributed ballots to the people, to be used in voting.

Diriment impediments /dirmánt impédàments/. In canon law, absolute bars to marriage, which would make it null ab initio.

Disability. The want of legal capability to perform an act. Term is generally used to indicate an incapacity for the full enjoyment of ordinary legal rights; thus, persons under age, insane persons, and convicts are said to be under legal disability. Sometimes the term is used in a more limited sense, as when it signifies an impediment to marriage, or the restraints placed upon clergymen by reason of their spiritual avocations, or lack of legal qualifications to hold office.

As used in connection with workers' compensation acts, disability is a composite of (1) actual incapacity to perform the tasks usually encountered in one's employment and the wage loss resulting therefrom (i.e. impairment of earning capacity), and (2) physical impairment of the body that may or may not be incapacitating. Russell v. Bankers Life Co., 46 Cal.App.3d 405, 120 Cal.Rptr. 627, 633.

Statutory definition of a "disability," for social security benefits purposes, imposes three requirements: (1) that there be a medically determinable physical or mental impairment which can be expected to result in death or to be of long-continued and indefinite duration; (2) that there be an incapacity to engage in any substantial gainful employment; and (3) that the inability be by reason of the impairment. 42 U.S.C.A. §§ 416(i)(1), 423(d). Pierce v. Gardner, C.A.III., 388 F.2d 846, 847. Inability to work without some pain or discomfort does not necessarily satisfy test of disability. DeFontes v. Celebrezze, 226 F.Supp. 327, 330 (D.C.R.I.). However, pain by itself or pain in conjunction with other injuries may be the basis for "disability" within meaning of the Social Security Act. Farmer v. Weinberger, D.C.Pa., 368 F.Supp. 1, 5.

Absence of competent physical, intellectual, or moral powers; impairment of earning capacity; loss of physical function that reduces efficiency; inability to work. Rorabaugh v. Great Eastern Casualty Co., 117 Wash. 7, 200 P.2d 587, 590.

Under Uniform Probate Code, an incapacitated person is one who is impaired by reason of physical disability.

See also Capacity; Civil disabilities; Incapacity; Incompetency; Loss of earning capacity; Permanent injury; Temporary disability; Total disability.

General Classification

Disability may be either general or special; the former when it incapacitates the person for the performance of all legal acts of a general class, or giving to them their ordinary legal effect; the latter when it debars him from one specific act. Disability may also be either personal or absolute; the former where it attaches to the particular person, and arises out of his status, his previous act, or his natural or juridical incapacity; the latter where it originates with a particular person, but extends also to his descendants or successors. The term civil disability is used as equivalent to legal disability, both these expressions meaning disabilities or disqualifications created by positive law, as distinguished from physical disabilities. A physical disability is a disability or incapacity caused by physical defect or infirmity, or bodily... imperfection, or mental weakness or alienation; as distinguished from civil disability, which relates to the civil status or condition of the person, and is imposed by the law.

Partial disability. Under workers' compensation law, incapacity in part from returning to work performed before accident. Such exists if employee is unable to perform duties in which he was customarily engaged when injured or duties of same or similar character, nature, or description, but is able to engage in gainful activity at some job for which he is fitted by education, training or experience. Daney v. Argonaut Ins. Co., La.App., 421 So.2d 331, 338.

Permanent disability. Incapacity forever from returning to work formerly performed before accident, though this incapacity may be either total or partial. See also Permanent disability.

Temporary disability. Temporary, as distinguished from permanent, disability is a condition that exists until the injured employee is as far restored as the permanent character of the injuries will permit.

Total disability. Total disability to follow insured's usual occupation arises where person is incapacitated from performing any substantial part of his ordinary duties, though still able to perform a few minor duties and be present at his place of business. "Total disability" within an accident policy does not mean absolute physical disability to transact any business pertaining to insured's occupation, but disability from performing substantial and material duties connected with it. The term may also apply to any impairment of mind or body rendering it impossible for insured to follow continuously a substantially gainful occupation without seriously impairing his health, the disability being permanent when of such nature as to render it reasonably certain to continue throughout the lifetime of insured. See also Permanent disability; Wholly disabled.

Disability clause. Provision in insurance policy calling for waiver of premiums during period of disability.

Disability compensation. Payments from public or private funds to one during period of disability and incapacity from work; e.g. social security or workers' compensation disability benefits.

Disability insurance. Insurance coverage purchased to protect insured financially during periods of incapacity from working. Often purchased by professionals.

Disability retirement. Plan of retirement which is invoked when person covered is disabled from working to normal retirement age or increased benefits when person retires because of disability.

Disable. Ordinarily, to take away the ability of, to render incapable of proper and effective action. Federal Union Life Ins. Co. of Cincinnati, Ohio v. Richey's Adm'x, 266 Ky. 262, 75 S.W.2d 767, 768. See Civil death; Disability.

In the old language of pleading, to disable is to take advantage of one's own or another's disability. Thus, it was an express maxim of the common law that the party shall "not disable himself"; but "this disability to disable himself is personal."

Disabled person. Person who lacks legal capacity to act sui juris or one who is physically or mentally disabled from acting in his own behalf or from pursuing occupation. See Civil death; Disability.

Disabling restraints. Restraints on alienation of property which are normally void as against public policy. Lohmann v. Adams, Okl., 540 P.2d 552, 556.

Disabling statutes. English acts of parliament, restraining and regulating the exercise of a right or the power of alienation; the term is specially applied to 1 Eliz., c. 19, and similar acts restraining the power of ecclesiastical corporations to make leases.

Disadvocare. To deny a thing.

Disaffirm. To repudiate; to revoke a consent once given; to recall an affirmation. To refuse one's subsequent sanction to a former act; to disclaim the intention of being bound by an antecedent transaction.

Disaffirmance. The repudiation of a former transaction. The refusal by one who has the legal power to refuse (as in the case of a voidable contract), to abide by his former acts, or accept the legal consequences of them. It may either be "express" (in words) or "implied" from acts inconsistent with a recognition of validity of former transaction.

Disafforestation. To restore to their former condition lands which have been turned into forests. To remove from the operation of the forest laws. 2 Bl. Comm. 416.

Disagreement. Difference of opinion or want of uniformity or concurrence of views; as, a disagreement among the members of a jury, among the judges of a court, or between arbitrators.

The refusal by a grantee, lessee, etc., to accept an estate, lease, etc., made to him. The annulling of a thing that had essence before. No estate can be vested in a person against his will. Consequently, no one can become a grantee, etc., without his agreement. The law implies such an agreement until the contrary is shown, but his disagreement renders the grant, etc., inoperative.

Disallow. To refuse to allow, to deny the need or validity of, to disown or reject.

Disalit /dasalt/. To disable a person.

Disappropriation. In ecclesiastical law, this is where the appropriation of a benefice is severed, either by the patron presenting a clerk or by the corporation which has the appropriation being dissolved. 1 Bl. Comm. 385.

Disapprove. To pass unfavorable judgment upon; to refuse official approbation to; to disallow; to decline to sanction; to refuse to confirm, ratify or consent to.

Disaster. For common disaster, see Common.
Disaster loss. If a casualty is sustained in an area designated as a disaster area by the President of the U.S., the casualty is designated a disaster loss. In such an event, the disaster loss may be treated as having occurred in the taxable year immediately preceding the taxable year in which the disaster actually occurred. Thus, immediate tax benefits are provided to victims of a disaster. See Casually loss.

Disavow /disəvɔː/. To repudiate the unauthorized acts of an agent; to deny the authority by which he assumed to act.

Disbarment. Act of court in suspending attorney's license to practice law. A disbarment proceeding is neither civil nor criminal action; it is special proceeding peculiar to itself, disciplinary in nature, and of summary character resulting from inherent power of courts over their officers. In re Prisock, 244 Miss. 427, 143 So.2d 434, 436. See also Debarment.

Disbocatio /dɪsˈbəkjəˈʃiən/. In old English law, to discharge or unload, as a vessel. Carcare et discarcare; discharge and to load and unload.

Disbursement /dɪsˈbɜːrzmənt/. To pay out, commonly from a fund. To make payment in settlement of a debt or account payable.

D.I.S.C. Domestic International Sales Corporation (q.v.).

Discarcare /dɪskɑːrˈkɛrɪ/. In old English law, to discharge, to unload; as a vessel. Carcare et discarcare; to charge and discharge; to load and unload.

Discargare /dɪskɑrˈɡɛrɪ/. In old European law, to discharge or unload, as a wagon.

Disceptio causae /dɪsˈsɛptiəˈkoʊʒə/. In Roman law, the argument of a cause by the counsel on both sides.

Discharge. To release; liberate; annul; unburden; discharge; dismiss. To extinguish an obligation (e.g. a person's liability on an instrument); terminate employment of person; release, as from prison, confinement or military service.

Discharge is a generic term; its principal species are rescission, release, accord and satisfaction, performance, judgment, composition, bankruptcy, merger.

In contract law, discharge occurs either when the parties have performed their obligations in the contract, or when events, the conduct of the parties, or the operation of law releases the parties from performing.

As applied to demands, claims, rights of action, incumbrances, etc., to discharge the debt or claim is to extinguish it, to annul its obligatory force, to satisfy it. And here also the term is generic; thus a debt, a mortgage, a legacy, may be discharged by payment or performance, or by any act short of that, lawful in itself, which the creditor accepts as sufficient. U.C.C. § 3-601 et seq. governs discharge of commercial instruments. To discharge a person is to liberate him from the binding force of an obligation, debt, or claim.

See also Performance; Release.

Bankruptcy. The release of a debtor from all of his debts which are provable in bankruptcy, except such as are excepted by the Bankruptcy Code. The discharge of the debtor is the step which regularly follows the filing of a petition in bankruptcy and the administration of his estate. By it the debtor is released from the obligation of all his debts which were or might be proved in the proceedings, so that they are no longer a charge upon him, and so that he may thereafter engage in business and acquire property without its being liable for the satisfaction of such former debts. Bankruptcy Code §§ 523, 524. See also Bankruptcy proceedings.

Constructive discharge. That which occurs when an employer deliberately makes an employee's working conditions so intolerable that the employee is forced into involuntary resignation. Pittman v. Hattiesburg Municipal Separate School Dist., C.A.Miss., 644 F.2d 1071, 1077.

Contract. To cancel the obligation of a contract; to make an agreement or contract null and inoperative. As a noun, the word means the act or instrument by which the binding force of a contract is terminated, irrespective of whether the contract is carried out to the full extent contemplated (in which case the discharge is the result of performance) or is broken off before complete execution.

Criminal law. The act by which a person in confinement, held on an accusation of some crime or misdemeanor, is set at liberty.

Equity practice. In the process of accounting before a master in chancery, the discharge is a statement of expenses and counter-claims brought in and filed, by way of set-off, by the accounting defendant; which follows the charge in order.

Jury. To discharge a jury is to relieve them from any further consideration of a cause. This is done when the continuance of the trial is, by any cause, rendered impossible; also when the jury, after deliberation, has rendered a verdict or cannot agree on a verdict.

Military discharge. The release or dismissal of a soldier, sailor, or marine, from further military service, either at the expiration of his term of enlistment, or previous thereto on special application therefor, or as a punishment. An "honorable" discharge is one granted at the end of an enlistment and accompanied by an official certificate of good conduct during the service. A "dishonorable" discharge is a dismissal from the service for bad conduct or as a punishment imposed by sentence of a court-martial for offenses against the military law. There is also in occasional use a form of "discharge without honor," which implies censure, but is not in itself a punishment.

Mortgage. Formal document which recites that a mortgage debt has been satisfied and which is generally Disciplinary proceedings. Proceedings which are brought against attorney to secure his or her censure, suspension or disbarment for various acts of unprofessional conduct. Most states have procedural rules governing such proceedings including Disciplinary Rules for attorneys. See Code of Professional Responsibility; Disbarment; Disciplinary rules.

Disciplinary rules. Name of the Disciplinary Rules of the ABA Model Code of Professional Responsibility. They stated "the minimum level of conduct below which no lawyer can fall without being subject to disciplinary action." These rules have been superseded by the ABA Model Rules of Professional Conduct (q.v.).

Discipline. Instruction, comprehending the communication of knowledge and training to observe and act in accordance with rules and orders.

Correction, chastisement, punishment, penalty. To bring order upon or bring under control.

Disclaimer. The repudiation or renunciation of a claim or power vested in a person or which he had formerly alleged to be his. The refusal, or rejection of an estate or right offered to a person. The disavowal, denial, or renunciation of an interest, right, or property imputed to a person or alleged to be his. Also the declaration, or renunciation of knowledge and training to observe and act in accordance with rules and orders.

To bring order upon or bring under control.

Estate. The act by which a party refuses to accept an estate which has been conveyed to him.

Patents. When the title and specifications of a patent do not agree, or when part of that which it covers is not strictly patentable, because neither new nor useful, the patentee is empowered, with leave of the court, to enter a disclaimer of any part of either the title or the specification, and the disclaimer is then deemed to be part of the letters patent or specification, so as to render them valid for the future.

Pleading. In common law pleading, a renunciation by the defendant of all claim to the subject of the demand made by the plaintiff's bill. See also Denial.

Qualified disclaimer. A refusal by a person to accept an interest in property. A qualified disclaimer must be in writing and must be received by the transferee not later than 9 months from the time the interest is created. Once the property is accepted and enjoyed by the individual, the property can not be disclaimed.

Warranty. Words or conduct which tend to negate or limit warranty in sale of goods and which in certain instances must be conspicuous and refer to specific warranty to be excluded. U.C.C. § 2-316.

"Disclaimer of warranties" is means of controlling liability of seller by reducing number of situations in which seller can be in breach of contract terms. Collins Radio Co. of Dallas, Tex. v. Bell, Okl.App., 623 P.2d 1039, 1049. See also Warranty.

Disclaimer clause. Device used to control seller's liability by reducing number of situations in which seller can be in breach of warranty. Lecates v. Hertrich Pontiac Buick Co., Del.Super., 515 A.2d 163, 171. See e.g. Warranty (Limited warranty).

Discovery. To bring into view by uncovering; to expose; to make known; to lay bare; to reveal to knowledge; to free from secrecy or ignorance, or make known. See Discovery.

Disclosure. Act of disclosing. Revelation; the impartation of that which is secret or not fully understood.

In patent law, the specification; the statement of the subject-matter of the invention, or the manner in which it operates.

In securities law, the revelation of certain financial and other information believed relevant to investors considering buying securities in some venture; the requirement that sufficient information be provided prospective investors so that they can make an intelligent evaluation of a security. See Prospectus.

Under Truth in Lending Act "disclosure" is a term which refers to the manner in which certain information (e.g., total cost of loan), deemed basic to an intelligent assessment of a credit transaction, shall be conveyed to the consumer. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1601 et seq. Doggett v. Ritter Finance Co. of Louisa, D.C.Va., 384 F.Supp. 150, 153. See Disclosure statement.

Disclosure by parties. Term sometimes used in law of deceit or fraud as to the obligation of parties to reveal fact which is material if its revelation is necessary because of the position of the parties to each other. See also Material fact.

Disclosure statement. The Federal Truth in Lending Act requires that the finance charge, annual percentage rate, number and amount of periodic payments, and other credit terms, be fully disclosed in consumer loan agreements. This is commonly done by means of a disclosure statement which accompanies or is made a part of the agreement. See also Truth in Lending Act.

Discommon /diskómən/. To deprive commonable lands of their commonable quality, by inclosing and appropriating or improving them.

Discontinuance /diskontinyuwns/. Ending, causing to cease, ceasing to use, giving up, leaving off. Refers to the termination or abandonment of a project, structure, highway, or the like.
The cessation of the proceedings in an action where the plaintiff voluntarily puts an end to it, either by giving notice in writing to the defendant before any step has been taken in the action subsequent to the answer, or at any other time by order of the court of a judge. A non-suit; dismissal. Under Rules practice, "dismissal" is appropriate term for discontinuance; may be voluntary or involuntary and may effect counterclaim, cross claim or third party claim. Costs may be assessed. Fed.R. Civil P. 41. See Dismissal.

In common law pleading, that technical interruption of the proceedings in an action which follows where a defendant does not answer the whole of the plaintiff's declaration, and the plaintiff omits to take judgment for the part unanswering.

Discontinuance of an estate. The termination or suspension of an estate-tail, in consequence of the act of the tenant in tail, in conveying a larger estate in the land than he was by law entitled to do. 2 Bl.Comm. 275; 3 Bl.Comm. 171. An alienation made or suffered by tenant in tail, or by any that, is seised in autre droit, whereby the issue in tail, or the heir or successor, or those in reversion or remainder, are driven to their action, and cannot enter. The cesser of a seisin under an estate, and the acquisition of a seisin under a new and necessarily a wrongful title.

Disconvenable /diskənvəˈnəbəl/. L. Fr Improper; unfit.

Discount. In a general sense, an allowance or deduction made from a gross sum on any account whatever. In a more limited and technical sense, the taking of interest in advance.

A deduction from an original price or debt, allowed for paying promptly or in cash. Method of selling securities (e.g., treasury bills) which are issued below face value and redeemed at face value. Difference between a bond's current market price and its face value. Reduction in normal selling price of goods.

The low initial interest rate lenders offer on adjustable-rate mortgages. It usually applies for one or two years. After the discount period ends, the rate usually increases, depending on the index used to determine the interest rate.

To purchase an instrument or other right to the payment of money, usually for an amount less than the face amount or value of the right.

A discount by a bank means a drawback or deduction made upon its advances or loans of money, upon negotiable paper or other evidences of debt payable at a future day, which are transferred to the bank. Although the discounting of notes or bills, in its most comprehensive sense, may mean lending money and taking notes in payment, yet, in its more ordinary sense, the discounting of such means advancing a consideration for a bill or note, deducting or discounting the interest which will accrue for the time the note has to run. Discounting by a bank means lending money upon a note, and deducting the interest or premium in advance. That step in lending transaction where interest on loan is taken in advance by deducting amount therefor for term of loan, giving borrower face value of obligation less interest. Russell v. Lumbermen's Mortg. Co., Com.Pl., 27 Ohio Misc. 171, 273 N.E.2d 803, 804. See also Rebate; Rediscount; Rediscount rate.

Quantity discount. Allowed manufacturers or wholesalers for purchases in large amounts. Robinson Patman Act requires that such be justified by savings of seller.

Trade discount. Price reduction to different classes of customers; e.g. discount given by lumber dealers to builders and contractors.

Discount bond. A bond sold for less than face or maturity value. No interest is paid annually, but all interest accrues to the maturity date when it is paid.

Discount broker. A bill broker; one who discounts bills of exchange and promissory notes, and advances money on securities. A securities broker that executes buy and sell orders at rates lower than full service brokers.

Discount loan. A loan in which the bank deducts the interest in advance at the time the loan is made.

Discount market. Segment of the money market in which banks and other financial institutions trade commercial paper.

Discount rate. Percentage of the face amount of commercial paper which a holder pays when he transfers such paper to a financial institution for cash or credit. Rate charged for discounting loan. See Discount; Rediscount rate.

The rate of interest used in the process of finding present values (discounting).

The discount rate is the rate charged Federal Reserve System member banks for borrowing from the country's district Federal Reserve banks. The rate, which is set by the Federal Reserve Board, controls the supply of money available to banks for lending and provides a floor for interest rates.

Discount shares. Shares of stock issued as fully paid and nonassessable for less than the full lawful consideration. Par value shares issued for cash less than par value. Discount shares are considered a species of watered shares and may impose a liability on the recipient equal to the difference between the par value and the cash for which such shares were issued.

Discount stock. See Discount shares.

Discount yield. Yield on a security sold at a discount.

Discover. To uncover that which was hidden, concealed, or unknown from every one. To get first sight or knowledge of; to get knowledge of what has existed but has not theretofore been known to the discoverer.

Shellmar Products Co. v. Allen-Quailey Co., C.C.A.II., 87 F.2d 104, 108. Under U.C.C., refers to knowledge rather than reason to know. U.C.C. § 1–201(25). See also Discovery; Notice.

Discovered peril doctrine. The doctrine of discovered peril (or "last clear chance") is regarded as a limitation of, or an exception to, the general rule of contributory negligence precluding a plaintiff’s recovery. It is founded on considerations of public policy, deduced from humanitarian principles, which impose a moral duty upon everyone to avoid injuring another unnecessarily. The three essential elements which comprise the doctrine of discovered peril are: (1) the exposed condition brought about by the negligence of the plaintiff, (2) the actual discovery by defendant or his agents of plaintiff’s perilous situation in time to have averted the injury by use of all means at their command commensurate with their own safety, and (3) failure thereafter to use such means. The party raising the issue of discovered peril must also prove that the opposing party’s negligent conduct was a proximate cause of the injuries he sustained. Welch v. Ada Oil Co., Tex.Civ.App., 302 S.W.2d 175, 179. See also Last clear chance doctrine.

Discover /diskəvər/. Not married; not subject to the disabilities of a coverture. It applies equally to a maid and a widow.

Discovery. In a general sense, the ascertaining of that which was previously unknown; the disclosure or coming to light of what was previously hidden; the acquisition of notice or knowledge of given acts or facts; as, in regard to the “discovery” of fraud affecting the running of the statute of limitations, or the granting of a new trial for newly “discovered” evidence.

International law. As the foundation for a claim of national ownership or sovereignty, discovery is the finding of a country, continent, or island previously unknown, or previously known only to its uncivilized inhabitants.

Mining claim. See Mining location.

Patent law. The finding out some substance, mechanical device, improvement, or application, not previously known. It is something less than invention, and may be the result of industry, application, or be perhaps merely fortuitous. A. O. Smith Corporation v. Petroleum Iron Works Co. of Ohio, C.C.A. Ohio, 73 F.2d 531, 538.

Trial practice. The pre-trial devices that can be used by one party to obtain facts and information about the case from the other party in order to assist the party’s preparation for trial. Under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (and in states which have adopted rules patterned on such), tools of discovery include: depositions upon oral and written questions, written interrogatories, production of documents or things, permission to enter upon land or other property, physical and mental examinations and requests for admission. Rules 26–37. Term generally refers to disclosure by defendant of facts, deeds, documents or other things which are in his exclusive knowledge or possession and which are necessary to party seeking discovery as a part of a cause of action pending, or to be brought in another court, or as evidence of his rights or title in such proceeding. Hardenbergh v. Both, 247 Iowa 153, 73 N.W.2d 103, 106.

In criminal proceedings, “discovery” emphasizes right of defense to obtain access to evidence necessary to prepare its own case. Britton v. State, 44 Wis.2d 109, 170 N.W.2d 785, 789. Discovery and inspection in federal criminal cases is governed by Fed.R.Crim.P. 16 and 26.2; most states having similar court rule or statutory discovery provisions.

See also Deposition; Fishing trip or expedition; Good cause; Inspection; Interrogatories; Jencks Act or Rule; Perpetuating testimony; Work product rule.

Discovery, bill of. In equity pleading, a bill for the discovery of facts resting in the knowledge of the defendant, or of deeds or writings, or other things in his custody or power; but seeking no relief in consequence of the discovery, though it may pray for a stay of proceedings at law until the discovery is made.

Discovery rule. Under the “discovery rule,” limitation statute in malpractice cases does not start to run, i.e., the cause of action does not accrue, until the date of discovery of the malpractice, or the date when, by the exercise of reasonable care and diligence, the patient should have discovered the wrongful act. Shinabarger v. Jatoi, D.C.S.C., 385 F.Supp. 707, 710.

Discovery vein. See Vein.

Discredit. To destroy or impair the credibility of a person; to impeach; to lessen the degree of credit to be accorded to a witness or document, as by impugning the veracity of the one or the genuineness of the other; to disparage or weaken the reliability upon the testimony of a witness, or upon documentary evidence, by any means whatever. See Impeachment.

Discreetly. Prudently; judiciously; with discernment.

Discrepancy. A difference between two things which ought to be identical, as between one writing and another; a variance (q.v.). Also discord, discordance, dissonance, disobedience, disagreement, difference.

Discretely. Separately; disjunctively.

Discretio est discernere per legem quid sit justum /diskrēsh(i)y)ow ēst dāsārnēy păr līyj boy kwīd sīt jāstām/. Discretion is to know through law what is just.

Discretio est scire per legem quid sit justum /diskrēsh(i)y)ow ēst sāyri păr līyj boy kwīd sīt jāstām/. Discretion consists in knowing what is just in law.

Discretion. When applied to public functionaries, discretion means a power or right conferred upon them by law of acting officially in certain circumstances, according to the dictates of their own judgment and conscience, uncontrolled by the judgment or conscience of others. As applied to public officers connotes action taken in light of reason as applied to all facts and with view to rights of all parties to action while having regard for what is right and equitable under all circumstances and law. State v. Whitman, R.I., 431 A.2d 1229, 1233.

In criminal law and the law of torts, it means the capacity to distinguish between what is right and wrong, lawful or unlawful, wise or foolish, sufficiently to render one amenable and responsible for his acts.
Wise conduct and management; cautious discernment, especially as to matters of propriety and self-control; prudence; circumspection; wariness.

See Discretionary acts.

Abuse of discretion. See Abuse (Discretion).

Judicial and legal discretion. These terms are applied to the discretionary action of a judge or court, and mean discretion bounded by the rules and principles of law, and not arbitrary, capricious, or unrestrained. It is not the indulgence of a judicial whim, but the exercise of judicial judgment, based on facts and guided by law, or the equitable decision of what is just and proper under the circumstances. It is a legal discretion to be exercised in discerning the course prescribed by law and is not to give effect to the will of the judge, but to that of the law. The exercise of discretion where there are two alternative provisions of law applicable, under either of which court could proceed. A liberty or privilege to decide and act in accordance with what is fair and equitable under the peculiar circumstances of the particular case, guided by the spirit and principles of the law, and exercise of such discretion is reviewable only for an abuse thereof. Manekas v. Allied Discount Co., 6 Misc.2d 1079, 166 N.Y.S.2d 366, 369. For “abuse of discretion”, see Abuse.

Discretionary account. An account in which customer gives broker discretion, as to purchase and sales of securities or commodities, including selection, timing, and price to be paid or received. Stevens v. Abbott, Proctor and Paine, D.C.Va., 286 F.Supp. 836, 839.

Discretionary acts. Those acts wherein there is no hard and fast rule as to course of conduct that one must or must not take and, if there is clearly defined rule, such would eliminate discretion. Elder v. Anderson, 205 Cal.App.2d 326, 23 Cal.Rptr. 48, 51. Option open to judges and administrators to act or not as they deem proper or necessary and such acts or refusal to act may not be overturned without a showing of abuse of discretion, which means an act or failure to act that no conscientious person acting reasonably could perform or refuse to perform. One which requires exercise in judgment and choice and involves what is just and proper under the circumstances. Burgdorf v. Funder, 246 Cal. App.2d 443, 54 Cal.Rptr. 805. Compare Ministerial act. See also Discretion.

Discretionary damages. Those which are measurable by enlightened conscience of impartial jurors.

Discretionary function. See Discretionary acts.

Discretionary power. One which is not imperative or, if imperative, the time, manner, or extent of execution of which is left to donee’s discretion. The power to do or to refrain from doing a certain thing. City of San Antonio v. Zogheib, Tex.Civ.App., 70 S.W.2d 333, 334.

Discretionary review. Form of appellate review which is not a matter of right but rather occurs only at the discretion of the appellate court; e.g. appeal to U.S. Supreme Court. See Certiorari.

Discretionary trusts. Such as are not marked out on fixed lines, but allow a certain amount of discretion in their exercise. Those which cannot be duly administered without the application of a certain degree of prudence and judgment. Trusts where the trustee or another party has the right to accumulate (rather than pay out) the income for each year. Depending on the terms of the trust instrument, such income may be accumulated for future distributions to the income beneficiaries or added to corpus for the benefit of the remainder. See also Trust.

Discrimination. In constitutional law, the effect of a statute or established practice which confers particular privileges on a class arbitrarily selected from a large number of persons, all of whom stand in the same relation to the privileges granted and between whom and those not favored no reasonable distinction can be found. Unfair treatment or denial of normal privileges to persons because of their race, age, sex, nationality or religion. A failure to treat all persons equally where no reasonable distinction can be found between those favored and those not favored. Baker v. California Land Title Co., D.C.Cal., 349 F.Supp. 235, 238, 239.

Federal statutes prohibit discrimination in employment on basis of sex, age, race, nationality, religion, or being handicapped; e.g. Title VII of 1964 Civil Rights Act, Age Discrimination in Employment Act, Equal Pay Act, Sex Discrimination in Employment Based on Pregnancy Act. Other federal acts, as supplemented by court decisions, prohibit discrimination in voting rights, housing, extension of credit, public education, and access to public facilities.

With reference to common carriers, a breach of the carrier’s duty to treat all shippers alike, and afford them equal opportunities to market their product. A carrier’s failure to treat all alike under substantially similar conditions.

See also Age Discrimination Act; Bias; Disparate treatment; Equal protection clause; Equal protection of the law; Invidious discrimination; Price discrimination; Protected class; Redlining; Reverse discrimination.

Discussion. In the civil law, a proceeding, at the instance of a surety, by which the creditor is obliged to exhaust the property of the principal debtor, towards the satisfaction of the debt, before having recourse to the surety; and this right of the surety is termed the “benefit of discussion.”

Disease. Deviation from the healthy or normal condition of any of the functions or tissues of the body. An alteration in the state of the body or of some of its organs, interrupting or disturbing the performance of the vital functions, and causing or threatening pain and weakness. Illness; sickness; disorder; malady; bodily infirmity. An illness or an abnormal state having a definite pattern of symptoms. See also Industrial disease; Occupational disease.

Disentailing deed /diżentəˈlɪŋ diːd/. In English law, an enrolled assurance barring an entail, pursuant to 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 74.
Dishonesty. Disposition to lie, cheat, deceive, or defraud; untrustworthiness; lack of integrity. Lack of honesty, probity or integrity in principle; lack of fairness and straightforwardness; disposition to defraud, deceive or betray. Tucker v. Lower, 200 Kan. 1, 434 P.2d 320, 324.

Dishonor. To refuse to accept or pay a draft or to pay a promissory note when duly presented. An instrument is dishonored when a necessary or optional presentment is duly made and due acceptance or payment is refused, or cannot be obtained within the prescribed time, or in case of bank collections, the instrument is seasonably returned by the midnight deadline; or presentment is excused and the instrument is not duly accepted or paid. U.C.C. § 3-507(1); § 4–210. Includes the insurer of a letter of credit refusing to pay or accept a draft or demand for payment. For bank's liability for wrongful dishonor, see U.C.C. § 4–402. See also Notice of dishonor; Protest.

As respects the flag, to deface or defile, imputing a lively sense of shaming or an equivalent acquiescent callousness. State v. Schlueter, 127 N.J.L. 496, 23 A.2d 249, 251. 18 U.S.C.A. § 700. See Deface; Defile.

Disinfect. Made free from injurious or contagious diseases. Immunization.

Disinflation. Slowing down of rate at which prices increase. Compare Deflation.

Disinherited. Not concerned, in respect to possible gain or loss, in the result of the pending proceedings or transactions. Not having any interest in matter referred to or in controversy; free from prejudice or partiality; impartial or fair minded; not interested or prejudiced. Schipper & Block, Inc. v. Carson Pirie Scott & Co., 122 Ill.App.2d 34, 256 N.E.2d 854, 857. Compare Bias.

Disinterested witness. One who has no interest in the cause or matter in issue, and who is lawfully competent to testify.

Disintermediation. When free market interest rates exceed the regulated interest ceiling for time deposits, some depositors withdraw their funds and invest them elsewhere at a higher interest rate (e.g. in U.S. Treasury bills). This process is known as "disintermediation."

Disjunctim /dəsɪŋktaɪtm/. Lat. In the civil law, separately; severally. The opposite of conjunctim (q.v.).
Disjunctive allegation. A statement in a pleading or indictment which expresses or charges a thing alternatively, with the conjunction "or"; for instance, an averment that defendant "murdered or caused to be murdered," etc., would be of this character.

Disjunctive allegations of indictment are those which charge that defendant did one thing or another, and whenever the word "or" would leave averment uncertain as to which of two or more things is meant, it is inadmissible. Austin v. State, Okl., 419 P.2d 569.

In civil actions, relief in the alternative or of several different types may be demanded. Fed.R.Civ.P. 8(a). See Alternative pleading.

Disjunctive term. One which is placed between two contraries, by the affirming of one of which the other is taken away; it is usually expressed by the word "or".

Dislocation. To put out of proper place.

Disloyal. Not true to; unfaithful.

Dislocation. To put out of proper place.

Dismiss. To send away; to discharge; to discontinue; to dispose of; to cause to be removed temporarily or permanently; to relieve from duty. To dismiss an action or suit without any further consideration or hearing. See also Discharge.

Dismissal. An order or judgment finally disposing of an action, suit, motion, etc., without trial of the issues involved. Such may be either voluntary or involuntary. Fed.R. Civil P. 41.

A release or discharge from employment.

Involuntary dismissal. Under rules practice, may be accomplished on court's own motion for lack of prosecution or on motion of defendant for lack of prosecution or failure to introduce evidence of facts on which relief may be granted. Fed.R. Civil P. 41(b).

Voluntary dismissal. Under rules practice, may be accomplished by plaintiff without leave of court if filed before answer or by stipulation signed by all parties after answer is filed. Fed.R. Civil P. 41(a).

Dismissal and nonsuit. Termination of case because of plaintiff's failure to prosecute or plaintiff's desire to discontinue.

Dismissal compensation. The payment of a specific sum, made by employer to employee for permanently terminating employment. Also called severance or separation pay.

Dismissal for cause. See For cause.

Dismissal without prejudice. Term meaning dismissal without prejudice to the right of the complainant to sue again on the same cause of action. The effect of the words "without prejudice" is to prevent the decree of dismissal from operating as a bar to a subsequent suit.

Dismissal with prejudice. Term meaning an adjudication on the merits, and final disposition, barring the party from maintaining an action on the same claim or cause. It is res judicata as to every matter litigated.

Dismissed for want of equity. A phrase used to indicate a decision on the merits, as distinguished from one based upon some formal defect. The dismissal may be because the averments of complaint have been found untrue in fact, or because they are insufficient to entitle complaint to the relief sought. Reinman v. Little Rock, 237 U.S. 171, 35 S.Ct. 511, 513, 59 L.Ed. 900.

Dismortgage /dɪsmɔːrɡ/). To redeem from mortgage. See Redemption.

Disobedience. See Civil disobedience; Civil disorder.

Disobedient child. Child who may be adjudicated delinquent in some jurisdictions under law governing stubborn children. May be subject of petition as child in need of social services. Child who willfully refuses to honor requests of parents or legal guardian or other person in whose custody he is. See also Delinquent child.

Disorder. Turbulent or riotous behavior; immoral or indecent conduct. The breach of the public decorum and morality. See also Breach of the peace; Civil disobedience; Civil disorder; Riot; Unlawful assembly.

A slight, partial, and temporary physical ailment. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. McCombs, 188 Ark. 52, 64 S.W.2d 333.

Disorderly. Contrary to the rules of good order and behavior; violative of the public peace or good order; turbulent, riotous, or indecent.

Disorderly conduct. A term of loose and indefinite meaning (except when defined by statutes), but signifying generally any behavior that is contrary to law, and more particularly such as tends to disturb the public peace or decorum, scandalize the community, or shock the public sense of morality. An offense against public morals, peace or safety. State v. Cherry, 185 Neb. 103, 173 N.W.2d 887, 888. Disorderly conduct statutes must sufficiently specify the prohibited conduct or they may be held to be unconstitutional. Baker v. Bindner, D.C. Ky., 274 F.Supp. 668.

A person is guilty of disorderly conduct if, with purpose to cause public inconvenience, annoyance or alarm, or recklessly creating a risk thereof, he: (a) engages in fighting or threatening, or in violent or tumultuous behavior; or (b) makes unreasonable noise or offensively coarse utterance, gesture or display, or addresses abusive language to any person present; or (c) creates a hazardous or physically offensive condition by any act which serves no legitimate purpose of the actor. Model Penal Code, § 250.2.

See also Breach of the peace.

Disorderly house. House or place where residents or inhabitants behave in such a manner as to become a nuisance to the neighborhood. One where acts are performed which tend to corrupt morals of community or promote breaches of peace. Payne v. U. S., D.C.Mun. App., 171 A.2d 509, 511. It has a wide meaning, and includes bawdy houses, gambling houses, houses of prostitution and places of a like character. At common law, it was misdemeanors to keep such house. Burgess v. Johnson, 223 Ga. 427, 156 S.E.2d 78. Under current laws, such activity, generally, would constitute a breach of the peace or disorderly conduct. The specific acts (e.g. prostitution) might also be crimes.

Disorderly persons. Such as are dangerous or hurtful to the public peace and welfare by reason of their misconduct or vicious habits, and are therefore amenable to police regulation. The phrase is chiefly used in statutes, and the scope of the term depends on local regulations. One who violates peace and good order of society.

Disorderly picketing. See Unlawful picketing.

Disorientation. Inability to identify time, place or surroundings.

Disparagement /disparajmant/. In old English law, an disparage /dasparaj/. To connect unequally; to match disparagatio /disparageysh(iy)ow/. In old English law, to disparagare /disparageriy/. In old English law, to bring together those that are unequal (dispares conferre); to connect in an indecorous and unworthy manner; to connect in marriage those that are unequal in blood and parentage.

Disparagement of goods. A statement about a competitor’s goods which is untrue or misleading and is made to influence or tend to influence the public not to buy. Aerosonic Corp. v. Todyne Corp., 402 F.2d 223, 231. See Disparagement.

Disparagement of title. Actionably tortuous detraction from title for which person may be required to respond in damages. Injurious falsehood in which aspersion is cast on person’s title to property. Publication made without privilege or justification of matter that is untrue and disparaging to another’s property in land, chattels or intangible things under such circumstances as would lead reasonable man to foresee that conduct of third person as purchaser or lessee thereof might be determined thereby and results in pecuniary loss from impairment of vendability thus caused. Hill v. Allan, 259 Cal.App.2d 470, 66 Cal.Rptr. 676, 689.

Disparaging instructions. Jury charge which tends to detract or defame person or party to litigation.

Disparity. Marked difference in quantity or quality between two things or among many things.

Dispatch. A sending off, completion or settlement with speed.

In maritime law, diligence, due activity, or proper speed in the discharge of a cargo; the opposite of delay. Customary dispatch is such as accords with the rules, customs, and usages of the port where the discharge is made. Dispatch money is in the nature of a reward to charterer of ship for loading or unloading in shorter time than provided for or than stipulated as “lay days”, The West Noska, D.C.N.Y., 2 F.Supp. 547. Quick dispatch is speedy discharge of cargo without allowance for the customs or rules of the port or for delay from the crowded state of the harbor or wharf.

Dispauper /dispopar/. When a person, by reason of his poverty, is admitted to sue in formâ pauperis, and afterwards, before the suit be ended, acquires any lands, or personal estate, or is guilty of anything whereby he is liable to have this privilege taken from him, then he loses the right to sue in formâ pauperis, and is said to be dispaupered.

Dispel. To drive away by scattering, to clear away, to banish, to dissipate.

Dispensary. Place where a drug is prepared or distributed.

Dispensatio est mali prohibiti provida relaxatio, uti dispensatio est vulnus, quod vulnerat jus commune. A dispensation is a wound, which wounds the custom or rules of the port or for delay from the crowded state of the harbor or wharf.

Disparagement of goods. A statement about a competitor’s goods which is untrue or misleading and is made to influence or tend to influence the public not to buy. Aerosonic Corp. v. Todyne Corp., 402 F.2d 223, 231. See Disparagement.

Disparagement of title. Actionably tortuous detraction from title for which person may be required to respond in damages. Injurious falsehood in which aspersion is cast on person’s title to property. Publication made without privilege or justification of matter that is untrue and disparaging to another’s property in land, chattels or intangible things under such circumstances as would lead reasonable man to foresee that conduct of of an individual. In the United States, no power exists, except in the legislature, to dispense with law; and then it is not so much a dispensation as a change of the law. See also Exemption.

Dispense. Etymologically, "dispense" means to weigh out, pay out, distribute, regulate, manage, control, etc., but when used with "with," it has, among other meanings, that of "doing without," and "doing away with," being synonymous with "abolish."

Dispersion /dispərɪsnərɪ/. To scandalize or disparage.

Displace. To crowd out; to take the place of. Ford v. Department of Water and Power of City of Los Angeles, 4 Cal.App.2d 526, 41 P.2d 188, 189.

Displaced person. Person left homeless in his own country because of war or for other reason.

Displacement. Shifting of emotional emphasis from one object to another as a means of disguising or avoiding unacceptable ideas or tendencies.

In copyright law, to "display" a work means to show a copy of it, either directly or by means of a film, slide, television image, or any other device or process or, in the case of a motion picture or other audiovisual work, to show individual images nonsequentially. Copyright Act, 17 U.S.C.A. § 101.

As applied to printing, means a varying arrangement of lines, as by the use of unequal lengths or different styles or sizes of type faces; also matter thus printed. Display advertising means advertising not under specific headings in newspapers, magazines and trade papers. Rust v. Missouri Dental Board, 348 Mo. 616, 155 S.W.2d 80, 85.

Dispono /dispənɔʊnə/. Lat. To dispose of, grant, or convey. Disponent, he grants or alienates. Jus disponendi, the right of disposition, i.e., of transferring the title to property.

Disposable earnings. That portion of person's income which he is free to spend or invest as he sees fit after payment of taxes and other obligations.

Disposable portion. That portion of a man's property which he is free to dispose of by will to beneficiaries other than his wife and children. By the ancient common law, this amounted to one-third of his estate if he was survived by both wife and children. 2 Bl.Comm. 492. In the civil law (by the Lex Falcidia) it amounted to three-fourths.

Disposal. Sale, pledge, giving away, use, consumption or any other disposition of a thing. To exercise control over; to direct or assign for a use; to pass over into the control of someone else; to alienate, bestow, or part with.

Dispose of. To alienate or direct the ownership of property, as disposition by will. Used also of the determination of suits. To exercise finally, in any manner, one's power of control over; to pass into the control of someone else; to alienate, relinquish, part with, or get rid of; to put out of the way; to finish with; to bargain away. Often used in restricted sense of "sale" only, or so restricted by context.

Disposing capacity or mind. These are alternative or synonymous phrases in the law of wills for "sound mind," and "testamentary capacity" (q.v.).

Disposition. Act of disposing; transferring to the care or possession of another. The parting with, alienation of, or giving up property. See Bequeath; Testamentary Testamentary disposition.

In criminal procedure, the sentencing or other final settlement of a criminal case.

With respect to a mental state, means an attitude, prevailing tendency, or inclination.

Disposition hearing. Judicial proceeding in which a criminal defendant is sentenced or otherwise disposed of. See Sentencing.

Disposition without trial. The sentencing or other treatment of a criminal defendant who has pleaded guilty or admitted to sufficient facts for finding of guilty without a trial on the merits.

Dispositive facts. Jural facts, or those acts or events that create, modify or extinguish jural relations.

Dispossess. To oust a person from land by legal process (e.g., eviction by landlord). To eject, to exclude from possession of realty. See Eviction; Forcible entry and detainer; Process (Summary process).

Dispossession. Ouster; a wrong that carries with it the amotion of possession. An act whereby the wrongdoer gets the actual occupation of the land or hereditament. It includes abatement, intrusion, disseisin, discontinuance, deereform.

Dispossess proceedings. Summary process by a landlord to oust the tenant and regain possession of the premises for nonpayment of rent or other breach of the conditions of the lease. See also Ejectment; Eviction; Forcible entry and detainer; Process (Summary process).

Disproportionate. Not pro rata or ratable.

Disprove. To refute; to prove to be false or erroneous; not necessarily by mere denial, but by affirmative evidence to the contrary.

Dispensable. In old English law, not answerable. Not punishable; e.g. "This murder is dispensable."

Disputable presumption. A species of evidence that may be accepted and acted upon when there is no other evidence to uphold contention for which it stands; and when evidence is introduced supporting such contention, evidence takes place of presumption, and there is no necessity for indulging in any presumption. A rule of law to be laid down by the court, which shifts to the party against whom it operates the burden of evidence merely. City of Montpelier v. Town of Calais, 114 Vt. 5, 39 A.2d 350, 356. See Presumption.

Disputatio fori /dispuytwéysh(i)ow foray/. In the civil law, discussion or argument before a court.

Dispute. A conflict or controversy; a conflict of claims or rights; an assertion of a right, claim, or demand on one side, met by contrary claims or allegations on the other. The subject of litigation; the matter for which a suit is brought and upon which issue is joined, and in relation to which jurors are called and witnesses examined. See Cause of action; Claim; Controversy; Justiciable controversy; Labor dispute.

Disqualify. To divest or deprive of qualifications; to incapacitate; to render ineligible or unfit, as, in speaking of the "disqualification" of a judge by reason of his interest in the case, of a juror by reason of his holding a fixed preconceived opinion, or of a candidate for public office by reason of non-residence, lack of statutory age, previous commission of crime, etc.

Disrate /disréyt/. In maritime law, to deprive a seaman or petty officer of his "rating" or rank; to reduce to a lower rate or rank.

Disrationare, or dirationare /di(s)reyshaneriy/. To justify; to clear one's self of a fault; to traverse an indictment; to disprove.

Disregard. To treat as unworthy of regard or notice; to take no notice of; to leave out of consideration; to ignore; to overlook; to fail to observe.

Disregard of corporate entity. To treat a corporation as if it did not exist for tax or certain other liability purposes. In such event, each shareholder would account for an allocable share of all corporate transactions possessing tax or other liability consequences. See also Piercing the corporate veil.

Disrepair. The state of being in need of repair or restoration after decay or injury.

Disrepute. Loss or want of reputation; ill character; disesteem; discredit.

Disruptive conduct. Disorderly or contemptuous conduct generally within the framework of a judicial or quasi judicial proceeding. See Contempt.

Dissection /dasékshan/. The act of cutting into pieces an animal or vegetable for the purpose of ascertaining the structure and use of its parts. The anatomical examination of a dead body by cutting into pieces or excising one or more parts or organs. The process of separating tissues along their natural lines of separation from each other; the act of separating into constituent parts for the purpose of critical examination.

Disseise /dasiyz/. To dispossess; to deprive.

Disseisee /dasiyzé/. One who is wrongfully put out of possession of his lands; one who is disseised.

Disseisitrix /daslyzatraks/. A female disseisor; a disseisitrix.

Disseisinam satis facit, qui uti non permittit possesoram, vel minus comodo, licet omnino non expelat /dasiyzanam sätas féyest kwáy yúwty nón përmitat pówzesórám, vel máyns kómádiy, láyest ományañn non akspléát/. He makes disseisin enough who does not permit the possessor to enjoy, or makes his enjoyment less beneficial, although he does not expel him altogether.

Disseisitrix /dasiyzatraks/. A female disseisor; a disseisitrix.

Disseisitus /dasiyzats/. One who has been disseised.

Disseisor /dasiyzar/. One who puts another out of his land, this is termed a "disseisin," being a deprivation of that actual seisin or corporal possession of the freehold which the tenant before enjoyed. In other words, a disseisin is said to be when one enters intending to usurp the possession, and to oust another from the freehold. To constitute an entry a disseisin, there must be an ouster of the freehold, either by taking the profits or by claiming the inheritance.

Equitable disseisin is where a person is wrongfully deprived of the equitable seisin of land, e.g., of the rents and profits.

Disseisin by election is where a person alleges or admits himself to be disseised when he has not really been so.

Disseisinam /dasiyzanam/. Dispossession; a deprivation of possession; a privation of seisin; a usurpation of the right of seisin and possession, and an exercise of such powers and privileges of ownership as to keep out or displace him to whom these rightfully belong. It is a wrongful putting out of him that is seised of the freehold, not, as in abatement or intrusion, a wrongful entry, where the possession was vacant, but an attack upon him who is in actual possession, and turning him out. It is an ouster from a freehold in deed, as abatement and intrusion are ousters in law.

When one man invades the possession of another, and by force or surprise turns him out of the occupation of his lands, this is termed a "disseisin," being a deprivation of that actual seisin or corporal possession of the freehold which the tenant before enjoyed. In other words, a disseisin is said to be when one enters intending to usurp the possession, and to oust another from the freehold. "dissenting." A dissent may or may not be accompanied by a dissenting opinion.

Ecclesiastical law. A refusal to conform to the rites and ceremonies of the established church.

Dissenter. One who dissents. For shareholder dissenter rights, see Appraisal remedy.

Dissentiente /désénsiyenté/ /déséntiyenté/. (Lat. dissenting.) Used with the name of one or more judges, it indicates a dissenting opinion in a case. Nemo dissentiente /némanay/. No one dissenting; unanimous.

Dissignare /disaignéry/. In old law, to break open a seal.

Dissimulatione tollitur injuria. /dasimyaleyshiyowniy tólsstar injúriya/. An injury is extinguished by the forgiveness or reconciliation of the party injured.

Dissipate. To destroy or waste, as to expend funds foolishly. Also, to break up a crowd. See also Drain.

Dissolute. Loosed from restraint, unashamed, lawless, loose in morals and conduct, recklessly abandoned to sensual pleasures, profligate, wanton, lewd, debauched.

Dissolution. Act or process of dissolving; termination; winding up. In this sense it is frequently used in the phrase "dissolution of a partnership." See Partnership, below, this topic.

Contracts. The dissolution of a contract is the cancellation or abrogation of it by the parties themselves, with the effect of annulling the binding force of the agreement, and restoring each party to his original rights.

Corporation. The dissolution of a corporation is the termination of its legal existence. This may take place in several ways; as by act of the legislature, by surrender or forfeiture of its charter; by expiration of its charter by lapse of time; by proceedings for winding it up under the law; by loss of all its members or the reduction below the statutory limit; by bankruptcy. Bruun v. Katz Drug Co., 351 Mo. 731, 173 S.W.2d 906, 909.

Dissolution of a corporation can be either voluntary (initiated and approved by board of directors and shareholders) or involuntary. Involuntary dissolutions may be "administrative" (e.g., by state for failure of corporation to file reports or pay certain taxes) or "judicial" (e.g., by attorney general for abuse of corporate authority; by shareholders because of deadlock in management; by unpaid creditors) or can result from bankruptcy of corporation. Procedures for corporate dissolution are usually provided for in state statutes. See e.g. Rev.Model Bus.Corp.Act § 14.01 et seq.

See also Articles of dissolution; Liquidation.

Marriage. The act of terminating a marriage; divorce; but the term does not include annulment. Deihl v. Jones, 170 Tenn. 217, 94 S.W.2d 47, 48. See Divorce.

Partnership. The dissolution of a partnership is the change in the relation of the partners caused by any partner ceasing to be associated in the carrying on as distinguished from the winding up of the business. Uniform Partnership Act, § 29.

Dissolution of parliament. The crown may dissolve parliament either in person or by proclamation; the dissolution is usually by proclamation, after a prorogation.

Dissolve. To terminate; abrogate; cancel; annul; disintegrate. To release or unloose the binding force of anything. As to "dissolve a corporation," see Dissolution.

Dissolving bond. A bond given to obtain the dissolution of a legal writ or process, particularly an attachment or an injunction, and conditioned to indemnify the opposite party or to abide the judgment to be given.

Dissuade. In criminal law, to advise and procure a person not to do an act.

To dissuade a witness from giving evidence against a person indicted is an indictable offense at common law.

Distance. A straight line along a horizontal plane from point to point and is measured from the nearest point of one place to the nearest point of another.

Distill. To subject to a process of distillation, i.e., vaporizing the more volatile parts of a substance and then condensing the vapor so formed. In law, the term is chiefly used in connection with the manufacture of intoxicating liquors.

Distilled liquor or distilled spirits. A term which includes all potable alcoholic liquors obtained by the process of distillation (such as whisky, brandy, rum, and gin).

Distiller. One who produces distilled spirits (i.e. alcoholic liquors) or who brews or makes mash, wort, or wash, fit for distillation or for the production of spirits, or who, by any process of evaporation, separates alcoholic spirit from any fermented substance.

Distillery. A place or building where alcoholic liquors are distilled or manufactured.

Distinct. Clear to the senses or mind; easily perceived or understood; plain; unmistakable. Evidently not identical; observably or decidedly different.

Distinguished by nature or station; not the same; different in the place or the like; separate; individual; that which is capable of being distinguished; actually divided or apart from other things. Gavin v. Webb, Tex.Civ.App., 99 S.W.2d 372, 379.

Distincte et aperte /dastígktiy et afrápiy/. In old English practice, distinctly and openly. Formal words in writs of error, referring to the return required to be made to them.

Distinctively. Characteristically, or peculiarly, but not necessarily exclusively.

Distinctiveness. An essential element of a device claimed to be a trademark is that it identify the goods of a particular merchant and distinguish them from the goods of others. A word, symbol, shape, or color serving this purpose is said to be distinctive. Certain marks are inherently distinctive while others only acquire distinctiveness over time (see Secondary meaning). A distinctive mark may lose its distinctiveness over time and become generic.

Distinguish. To point out an essential difference; to prove a case cited as applicable, inapplicable.

Distinguishing mark. A birth mark, scar, or other like feature which distinguishes a person. A mark on a ballot which takes away its secrecy. Any deliberate marking of ballot by voter that is not made in attempt to indicate his choice of candidates and which is also effective as mark by which his ballot may be distinguished.

In reference to trademark law, see Distinctiveness.

Distort. To twist out of natural or regular shape; to twist aside physically; to force or put out of true posture; to wrest, or deform.

Distracted person. A term used in the statutes of certain states to express a state of insanity.

Distractio /d3strseksh(i)yow/. Lat. In the civil law, a separation or division into parts; also an alienation or sale. Sometimes applied to the act of a guardian in appropriating the property of his ward.

Distractio bonorum /d3strseksh(i)yow bsnorsm/. The sale at retail of the property of an insolvent estate, under the management of a curator appointed in the interest of the creditors, and for the purpose of realizing as much as possible for the satisfaction of their claim.

Distraction rule. If plaintiff's attention is diverted from known danger by a sufficient cause, under this rule the question of contributory negligence is for jury.

Distractio pignoris /dsstraeksh(i)yow pignoras/. The sale of a thing pledged or hypothecated, by the creditor or pledgee, to obtain satisfaction of his claim on the debtor's failure to pay or redeem.

Distrabhere /dstréy(h)ar(i)y/. To sell; to draw apart; to dissolve a contract; to divorce.

Distrain. To take as a pledge property of another, and keep it until he performs his obligation or until the property is reclaimed by the sheriff. Remedy used to secure an appearance in court, payment of rent, performance of services, etc. Also, any detention of personal property, whether lawful or unlawful, for any purpose. See Distrain; Distress.

Distrainer or distrainor. He who seizes property under a distress.

Distrain. Seizure; the act of distraining or making a distress. The inchoate right and interest which a landlord has in the property of a tenant located on the demised premises. Upon a tenant's default, a landlord may in some jurisdictions distrain upon the tenant's property, generally by changing the locks and giving notice, and the landlord will then have a lien upon the goods. The priority of the lien will depend on local law. See Distress.

Distress. A common-law right of landlord, now regulated by statute, to seize a tenant's goods and chattels in a nonjudicial proceeding to satisfy an arrears of rent.

The taking of goods and chattels out of the possession of a wrong-doer into the custody of the party injured to procure a satisfaction for a wrong committed; as for non-payment of rent. The taking of personal property by way of pledge, to enforce the performance of something due from the party distrained upon. Hall v. Marshall, 145 Or. 221, 27 P.2d 193. The taking of a defendant's goods, in order to compel an appearance in court.

Certain state statutes, insofar as they authorize distress for rents by landlords, have been held to be unconstitutional. See e.g. Van Ness Industries v. Claremont Painting, 129 N.J.Super. 507, 324 A.2d 102.

The seizure of personal property to enforce payment of taxes, to be followed by its public sale if the taxes are not voluntarily paid; also the thing taken by distraining, i.e. that which is seized to procure satisfaction.

See Distrain; Landlord's warrant.

Distress infinite. At common law, one that had no bounds with regard to its quantity, and could be repeated from time to time, until the stubbornness of the party was conquered. Such were distresses for reality or suit of court, and for compelling jurors to attend. 3 Bl.Comm. 231.

Distress warrant. A writ authorizing an officer to make a distraint; particularly, a writ authorizing the levy of a distress on the chattels of a tenant for non-payment of rent.

A power of attorney by which landlord delegates exercise of his right to his duly authorized agent. In re Koizim, D.C.N.J., 52 F.Supp. 357, 358.

Grand distress, writ of. A writ formerly issued in England in the real action of quaere impedit, when no appearance had been entered after the attachment; it commanded the sheriff to distrain the defendant's lands and chattels in order to compel appearance. It is no longer used, 23 & 24 Vict., c. 128, § 26, having abolished the action of quaere impedit, and substituted for it the procedure in an ordinary action.

Second distress. A supplementary distress for rent in arrear, allowed by law in some cases, where the goods seized under the first distress are not of sufficient value to satisfy the claim.

Distress and danger. The "distress" and "danger" to which a ship needs to be exposed to entitle its rescuer to salvage need not be actual or immediate, or the danger imminent and absolute. It is sufficient if at the time the assistance is rendered, the ship has encountered any damage or misfortune which might possibly expose her to destruction if the services were not rendered, or if a vessel is in a situation of actual apprehension though not of actual danger.

Distressed goods. Goods sold at a distressed sale.
Distressed property. Property that must be sold because of mortgage foreclosure or on probate of insolvent estate.

Distressed sale. Form of liquidation sale (e.g. "going out of business" sale) in which the seller receives less for his goods than he would under normal selling conditions.

Distributable net income (DNI). The measure that limits the amount of the distributions from estates and trusts that the beneficiaries thereof will have to include in income. Also, DNI limits the amount that estates and trusts can claim as a deduction for such distributions. I.R.C. § 643(a).

Distributee /dastribyuwtiy/. An heir; a person entitled to share in the distribution of an estate. This term is used to denote one of the persons who is entitled, under the statute of distributions, to the personal estate of one who is dead intestate. See also Beneficiary.

Distribution. The giving out or division among a number, sharing or parceling out, allotting, dispensing, apportioning.

Corporate. A direct or indirect transfer of money or other property (except its own shares) or incurrence of indebtedness by a corporation to or for the benefit of its shareholders in respect of any of its shares. A distribution may be in the form of a declaration or payment of a dividend; a purchase, redemption, or other acquisition of shares; a distribution of indebtedness; or otherwise. Rev. Model Bus.Corp. Act, § 1.40.

Partnership. A payment by a partnership to a partner. The payment may be in the form of cash or property. A payment to a partner may be out of current earnings or it may be an advance against future earnings to provide cash flow to the partner. A distribution may also consist of the partners' capital in the event of the partners' liquidation. I.R.C. § 731.

Probate. The apportionment and division, under authority of a court, of the remainder of the estate of an intestate, after payment of the debts and charges, among those who are legally entitled to share in the same. See Distributive share.

Securities offering. A public offering of securities of an issuer, whether by an underwriter, statutory underwriter or by the issuer itself. Such offering may be controlled, i.e. an offering to the public of securities by selling stockholders or an issuer through a broker-dealer acting as an underwriter for such persons pursuant to a formal underwriting arrangement; or uncontrolled, i.e. an offering to the public of securities by selling stockholders on a random basis through any number of brokers who are willing to assist such persons; or an offering to the public by such persons without the use of a broker.

Statutes of distribution. State laws prescribing the manner of the distribution of the estate of an intestate among his heirs or relatives.

Trust. The amount paid or credited to the beneficiaries of a trust. The payment may be in the form of cash or property and is generally income to the beneficiary. I.R.C. § 643(a).

Distribution in kind. A transfer of property "as is." If, for example, a corporation distributes land to its shareholders, a distribution in kind has taken place. A sale of land followed by a distribution of the cash proceeds would not be a distribution in kind of the land. See also Like-kind exchange.

Distribution in liquidation. Distribution of assets upon dissolution of corporation. Liquidating dividend is amount distributed in complete or partial liquidation of corporation and such amount is treated as in full payment for the stock of the corporation. I.R.C. § 331(a). Compare Nonliquidating distribution.

Distributive. That which exercises or accomplishes distribution; that which apportions, divides, and assigns in separate items or shares.

Distributive clause. That provision in trust which governs distribution of income and ultimate distributions or gifts over.

Distributive deviation. Distribution of principal to income beneficiaries for whom income is inadequate, without the consent of the remaindermen who are entitled to receive the entire principal at a later time under the terms of the trust.

Distributive finding of the issue. The jury are bound to give their verdict for that party who, upon the evidence, appears to them to have succeeded in establishing his side of the issue. But there are cases in which an issue may be found distributively, i.e., in part for plaintiff, and in part for defendant. Thus, in an action for goods sold and work done, if the defendant pleaded that he never was indebted, on which issue was joined, a verdict might be found for the plaintiff as to the goods, and for the defendant as to the work. See also Comparative negligence.

Distributive justice. See Justice.

Distributive share. The share or portion which a given heir receives on the legal distribution of an intestate estate; or from a dissolved partnership. Helvering v. Enright's Estate, 312 U.S. 636, 61 S.Ct. 777, 781, 85 L.Ed. 1093. Sometimes, by an extension of meaning, the share or portion assigned to a given person on the distribution of any estate or fund, as, under an assignment for creditors or under insolvency proceedings.

Distributor. Any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal relationship which stands between the manufacturer and the retail seller in purchases, consignments, or contracts for sale of consumer goods. A wholesaler, jobber or other merchant middleman authorized by a manufacturer or supplier to sell chiefly to retailers and commercial users. Aaron E. Levine & Co., Inc. v. Calkraft Paper Co., D.C.Mich., 429 F.Supp. 1039, 1046. See also Dual distributor.

District. One of the territorial areas into which an entire state or country, county, municipality or other political subdivision is divided, for judicial, political, electoral, or administrative purposes. State ex rel. Schur v. Payne, 57 Nev. 286, 63 P.2d 921, 925.

The circuit or territory within which a person may be compelled to appear. Circuit of authority; province.

As to Fire; Judicial; Land; Levee; Metropolis; Mineral; Mining; Road; School; and Tax (districts), see those titles.

Congressional district. Geographical district of state which may send (vote) a representative to U.S. Congress.

District attorney. Under the state governments, the prosecuting officer who represents the state in each of its judicial districts. Also, the prosecuting officer of the United States government in each of the federal judicial districts. In some states, where the territory is divided, for judicial purposes, into sections called by some other name than "districts," the same officer is denominated "prosecuting attorney", "county attorney" or "state's attorney." See also United States Attorney; Prosecutor.

District clerk. The clerk of a district court of either a state or the United States.

District courts. Each state is comprised of one or more federal judicial districts, and in each district there is a district court. 28 U.S.C.A. § 81 et seq. The United States district courts are the trial courts with general Federal jurisdiction over cases involving federal laws or offenses and actions between citizens of different states. Each State has at least one district court, though many have several judicial districts (e.g. northern, southern, middle districts) or divisions. There is also a United States district court in the District of Columbia. In addition, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico has a United States district court with jurisdiction corresponding to that of district courts in the various States. Only one judge is usually required to hear and decide a case in a district court, but in some kinds of cases it is required that three judges be called together to comprise the court (28 U.S.C.A. § 2284). In districts with more than one judge, the judge senior in commission who has not reached his seventieth birthday acts as the chief judge. See Diversity of citizenship; Federal question jurisdiction.

Also, name for inferior state courts of record having general jurisdiction.

District judge. The judge of a United States district court; also, in some states, the judge of a district court of the state.

District parishes. Ecclesiastical divisions of parishes in England, for all purposes of worship, and for the celebration of marriages, christenings, churchings, and burials, formed at the instance of the queen's commissioners for building new churches.

Districting. Term refers to defining lines of electoral districts. Moolenaar v. Todman, D.C.Virgin Islands, 317 F.Supp. 226, 231. The establishment of the precise geographical boundaries of each such unit or constituency. Seaman v. Fedourich, 16 N.Y.2d 94, 262 N.Y.S.2d 444, 209 N.E.2d 778, 779. See Apportionment; Reapportionment.

Districtio /distriksh(ə)yəʊ/. Lat. A distress; a distraint.

District of Columbia. A territory situated on the Potomac river, and being the seat of government of the United States. It was originally ten miles square, and was composed of portions of Maryland and Virginia ceded by those states to the United States; but in 1846 the tract coming from Virginia was retroceded. Legally it is neither a state nor a territory, but is made subject, by the Constitution, to the exclusive jurisdiction of Congress.

Distringas /dstrigas/. In English practice, a writ formerly directed to the sheriff of the county in which a defendant resided or had any goods or chattels, commanding him to distress upon the goods and chattels of the defendant for forty shillings, in order to compel his appearance. This writ issued in cases where it was found impracticable to get at the defendant personally, so as to serve a summons upon him.

A distress was also used in equity, as the first process to compel the appearance of a corporation aggregate.

A form of execution in the actions of detinue and assise of nuisance.

Distringas juratores /dstrigas jərəˈtɔrɪz/. In old English law, a writ commanding the sheriff to have the bodies of the jurors, or to disturb them by their lands and goods, that they may appear upon the day appointed. It issued at the same time with the venire, though in theory afterwards, founded on the supposed neglect of the juror to attend.

Distringas nuper vice comitem /dstrigas n(y)əwpr vəˈsiː kəmɪtəm/. In Old English law, a writ to distress the goods of one who lately filled the office of sheriff, to compel him to do some act which he ought to have done before leaving the office; as to bring in the body of a defendant, or to sell goods attached under a fi. fa.

Distringas vice comitem /dstrigas vəˈsiː kəmɪtəm/. In Old English law, a writ of distress, directed to the coroner, issued against a sheriff if he neglected to execute a writ of venditione exponas.

Distringere /dstrɪŋərɪ/. In feudal and old English law, to distress; to coerce or compel.

Disturb. To throw into disorder; to move from a state of rest or regular order; to interrupt a settled state of; to throw out of course or order.

Disturbance. Any act causing annoyance, disquiet, agitation, or derangement to another, or interrupting his peace, or interfering with him in the pursuit of a lawful and appropriate occupation or contrary to the usages of a sort of meeting and class of persons assembled that interferes with its due progress or irritates the assembly in whole or in part. See Disturbance of peace; Riot.

At common law, a wrong done to an incorporeal hereditament by hindering or disquieting the owner in the enjoyment of it. Blackstone enumerated five types of such disturbances: Disturbances of franchises, common, tenure, ways, and patronage. 3 Bl.Comm. 235.

Disturbance of common. At common law, the doing any act by which the right of another to his common is incommoded or diminished; as where one who has no right of common puts his cattle into the land, or where one who has a right of common puts in cattle which are not commonable, or surcharges the common; or where the owner of the land, or other person, incloses or otherwise obstructs it.

Disturbance of franchise. The disturbing or incommoding a man in the lawful exercise of his franchise, whereby the profits arising from it are diminished. 3 Bl.Comm. 236.

Disturbance of patronage. The hindrance or obstruction of a patron from presenting his clerk to a benefice. 3 Bl.Comm. 242.

Disturbance of peace. Interruption of the peace, quiet, and good order of a neighborhood or community, particularly by unnecessary and distracting noises. Conduct which tends to annoy all good citizens and which does in fact annoy anyone present not favoring it. Com. v. Orlando, Mass., 359 N.E.2d 810. In some jurisdictions (e.g. Calif.) term includes an affray. "Breach of the peace" and "disturbing the peace" are synonymous terms. People v. Cohen, 1 C.A.3d 94, 81 Cal.Rptr. 503, 505. See also Breach of the peace; Disorderly conduct; Riot.

Disturbance of public meetings. It was a misdemeanor at common law to be guilty of conduct which tended to disturb a public assembly, though the prosecution, in most instances, was required to prove that the disturbance was caused wantonly or wilfully. In most jurisdictions there is statutory crime for such conduct and the disturbance need not be so turbulent as to constitute a riot.

Disturbance of public or religious worship. Any acts or conduct which interfere with the peace and good order of an assembly of persons lawfully met together for religious exercises.

Disturbance of tenure. In the law of tenure, disturbance was where a stranger, by menaces, force, persuasion, or otherwise, caused a tenant to leave his tenancy; this disturbance of tenure was an injury to the lord for which an action could lie.

Disturbance of ways. This happened where a person who had a right of way over another's ground by grant or prescription was obstructed by inclosures or other obstacles, or by plowing across it by which means he could not enjoy his right of way, or at least in so commodious a manner as he might have done. 3 Bl. Comm. 241.

Ditching, diking, or tilling. Every kind of work necessary to convert parts of arid lands, particularly sagebrush lands, into farms and orchards,—the word "diking" as applied to arid regions implying a leveling of the land, and the term "clearing land" as applied to arid regions covered with sagebrush meaning not only the removal or the destruction of the brush but the plowing or breaking up of the roots as well.

Divers /dáyvars/. Various, several, sundry; a collective term grouping a number of unspecified persons, objects, or acts.

Diversion. A turning aside or altering the natural course or route of a thing. The term is chiefly applied to the unauthorized change or alteration of a water course to the prejudice of a lower riparian, or to the unauthorized use of funds.

Diversion program. A disposition of a criminal defendant either before or after adjudication of guilt in which the court directs the defendant to participate in a work or educational program as part of a probation.

Diversité des cours /dive-résstay déy kúɐ(t)œ/. A treatise on courts and their jurisdiction, written in French in the reign of Edward III as is supposed, and by some attributed to Fitzherbert. It was first printed in 1525, and again in 1534.

Diversity /davɜɪstɪə/. In criminal pleading at common law, a plea by the prisoner in bar of execution, alleging that he was not the same who was attainted, upon which a jury was immediately impaneled to try the collateral issue thus raised, viz., the identity of the person, and not whether he was guilty or innocent, for that had been already decided. 4 Bl.Comm. 396.

Diversity jurisdiction. See Diversity of citizenship.

Diversity of citizenship. A phrase used with reference to the jurisdiction of the federal courts, which, under U.S.Const. Art. III, § 2, extends to cases between citizens of different states, designating the condition existing when the party on one side of a lawsuit is a citizen of one state, and the party on the other side is a citizen of another state, or between a citizen of a state and an alien. The requisite jurisdictional amount must, in addition, be met. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1332. See Outcome test.

Divert /dsvàrт/. To turn aside; to turn out of the way; to alter the course of things. Usually applied to watercourses or to the unauthorized use of funds. See Diversion.

Dives /dávvyiːz/. In the practice of the English chancery division, "dives costs" are costs on the ordinary scale, as opposed to the costs formerly allowed to a successful pauper suing or defending in formâ pauperis, which consisted only of his costs out of pocket.

Divest. Equivalent to devest (q.v.).

Divestitive fact /dævɪstətɪv fækt/. Any act or event that extinguishes or modifies a jural relation.
Divestiture /davéstatyoor/. In anti-trust law, the order of court to a defendant (e.g., corporation) to divest itself of property, securities or other assets. U. S. v. E. I. duPont de Nemours and Co., 366 U.S. 316, 81 S.Ct. 1243, 6 L.Ed.2d 318. A firm’s act of selling off one or more of its parts, such as a subsidiary, a plant, or certain assets that create productive capacity. Divestiture is sometimes mandated by the courts in merger and monopolization cases.

Divestment. In property law, the cutting short of an interest prior to its normal termination. Restatement, Second, Property, § 16. The complete loss of an interest in land (total divestment) or the partial loss of it by virtue of others sharing it (partial divestment).

Divide. To cut into parts, disunite, separate, keep apart. The term is synonymous with distribute.

Divide and pay over rule. Substance of such rule is that when the only words of gift are found in direction to divide or pay at a future time, use of such words imports a condition of survival, but if postponement of payment is for purpose of letting in an intermediate estate, then interest shall be deemed vested at death of testator and class of legatee is to be determined as of that date for futurity is not annexed to substance of the gift. In re Bogart’s Will, 62 Misc.2d 114, 308 N.Y.S.2d 594, 602.

Divided court. Appellate court whose opinion or decision is not unanimous in a particular case. See also Division of opinion.

Divided custody. See Custody.

Dividend. The distribution of current or accumulated earnings to the shareholders of a corporation pro rata based on the number of shares owned. Dividends are usually issued in cash. However, they may be issued in the form of stock or property. The dividend on preferred shares is generally a fixed amount; however, on common shares the dividend varies depending on such things as the earnings and available cash of the corporation, as well as future plans for the acquisition of property and equipment by the corporation. See also Allocation of dividends.

Accumulated dividend. A cumulative dividend which has not been paid when due.

Asset dividend. Dividend paid in the form of an asset of the company; normally a product. See Property dividend, below.

Bond dividend. Type of dividend distribution which is rare but one in which the shareholder receives bonds instead of scrip, property or money.

Cash dividend. See that title.

Consent dividend. For purposes of avoiding or reducing the penalty tax on the unreasonable accumulation of earnings or the personal holding company tax, a corporation may declare a consent dividend. In a consent dividend no cash or property is distributed to the shareholders although the corporation obtains a dividends paid deduction. The consent dividend is taxed to the shareholders and increases the basis in their stock investment. IRC § 565.

Constructive dividend. A taxable benefit derived by a shareholder from his or her corporation although such benefit was not designated as a dividend. Examples include unreasonable compensation, excessive rent payments, bargain purchases of corporate property, and shareholder use of corporate property. The pass-through of undistributed taxable income (i.e., UTI) to the shareholders of a Subchapter S corporation sometimes is referred to as a constructive dividend. Constructive dividends generally are a problem limited to closely-held corporations.

If a stockholder has an unqualified right to a dividend, such a dividend is called constructive for tax purposes though he does not actually receive it because it is subject to his demand and the corporation has set it aside for this purpose. Clark v. C.I.R., C.AFed., 266 P.2d 499.

Cumulative dividend. A typical feature of preferred stock that requires any past-due preferred stock dividends to be paid before any common stock dividends can be paid. A dividend that if not paid annually (or periodically as provided in the stock certificate) will ultimately have to be paid before any common stock dividend can be paid. The arrearage is said to accumulate.

Deferred dividend. One declared, but due to be paid at some future date.

Deficiency dividend. Once the IRS has established a corporation’s liability for the personal holding company tax in a prior year, the tax may be reduced or avoided by the issuance of a deficiency dividend under I.R.C. § 547. The deficiency dividend procedure is not available in cases where the deficiency was due to fraud with intent to evade tax or to a willful failure to file the appropriate tax return (§ 547(g)). Nor does the deficiency dividend procedure avoid the usual penalties and interest applicable for failure to file a return or pay a tax.

Dividend addition. Something added to the policy in the form of paid-up insurance, and does not mean un apportioned assets or surplus. The term does not refer to dividends added directly to the loan value. Anderson v. Liberty Life Ins. Co. of Topeka, 149 Kan. 447, 87 P.2d 499, 502.

Ex-dividend. Term used by stock brokers, meaning that a sale of corporate stock does not carry with it the seller’s right to receive his proportionate share of a dividend already declared and shortly payable. See Ex dividend.

Extra dividend. One paid in addition to regular dividends; normally because of exceptional profits of corporation during dividend period.

Extraordinary dividend. See that title.

Liquidation dividend. See that title.

Nimble dividends. Dividends paid out of current earnings at a time when there is a deficit in earned surplus.
(or other financial account from which dividends may be paid). Some state statutes do not permit nimble dividends. These statutes require current earnings to be applied against prior deficits rather than being used to pay a current dividend.

Noncumulative dividends. See that title.

Passed dividend. Dividend not paid when due by company which has history of paying regular dividends.

Preferred dividend. One paid on the preferred stock of a corporation. A dividend paid to one class of shareholders in priority to that paid to another.

Property dividend. Consists of a portion of corporate property paid to shareholders instead of cash or corporate stock. See Asset dividend, above.

Scrip dividend. One paid in scrip, or in certificates of the ownership of a corresponding amount of capital stock of the company thereafter to be issued. Dividend paid in a short term promissory note which, in effect, divides profits but enables the corporation to postpone actual distribution of cash. Billingham v. E. P. Gleason Mfg. Co., 101A.D. 476, 91 N.Y.S. 1046.

Stock dividend. A dividend paid in the form of stock rather than cash. A stock dividend is usually expressed as a percentage of the number of shares already held by the shareholder. A corporation normally elects to issue a stock dividend in order to conserve cash. The tax advantage of a stock dividend to a shareholder is that a stock dividend is taxable at the time of sale, while a cash dividend is taxable when received.

Tax treatment. A nondeductible distribution to the shareholders of a corporation. A dividend constitutes gross income to the recipient if it is from the current or accumulated earnings and profits of the corporation. See also Dividend received deduction, infra.

Unpaid dividend. Dividends declared by a corporation, but not yet paid. Unpaid dividends are a liability on the balance sheet of a corporation.

Year-end dividend. Type of extra dividend paid at end of fiscal year with amount dependent on profits. See also Extra dividend, above.

Dividenda /divəˈdɛndə/. An indenture; one counterpart of an indenture.

Dividend income. Species of gross income derived from dividend distribution and subject to tax. I.R.C. §§ 61(a)(7), 301(c).

Dividend received deduction. A deduction allowed a corporate shareholder for dividends received from a domestic corporation. As a result of the Tax Reform Act of 1986, corporations are allowed an 80% deduction for dividends received in 1987, and a deduction of 70% for dividends received after 1987. However, if the corporation owns more than 80% of the stock of the distributing corporation, the deduction allowed is 80%. I.R.C. §§ 243-246.

Dividend yield. The current annual dividend divided by the market price per share.

Divinare /dɪvəˈnɛrə/. Lat. To divine; to conjecture or guess; to foretell. Divinatio, a conjecturing or guessing.

Divine laws. Those ascribed to God. See Natural law.

Divine right of kings. The right of a king to rule as posited by the patriarchal theory of government, especially under the doctrine that no misconduct and no dispossession can forfeit the right of a monarch or his heirs to the throne, and to the obedience of the people. This theory was in its origin directed, not against popular liberty, but against papal and ecclesiastical claims to supremacy in temporal as well as spiritual affairs.

Divine service. Divine service was the name of a feudal tenure, by which the tenants were obliged to do some special divine services in certain; as to sing so many masses, to distribute such a sum in alms, and the like. It differed from tenure in frankalmoign, in this: that, in case of the tenure by divine service, the lord of whom the lands were held might distrain for its nonperformance, whereas, in case of frankalmoign, the lord has no remedy by distress for neglect of the service, but merely a right of complaint to the visitor to correct it.

Divisa /dɪˈvæzə/. In old English law, a device, award, or decree; also a devise; also bounds or limits of division of a parish or farm, etc. Also a court held on the boundary, in order to settle disputes of the tenants.

Divisible. That which is susceptible of being divided.

Divisible contract. One which is in its nature and purposes susceptible of division and apportionment, having two or more parts in respect to matters and things contemplated and embraced by it, not necessarily dependent on each other nor intended by the parties so to be.

Divisible divorce. Decree of divorce may be divided as between provisions for support and alimony and provisions dissolving the marriage. Doctrine applied in cases under full faith and credit clause in connection with effect of foreign divorce on support provisions. Rymanski v. Rymanowski, 105 R.I. 89, 249 A.2d 407.

Divisible obligation. See Obligation.

Divisible offense. One that includes one or more offenses of lower grade, e.g., murder includes assault, battery, assault with intent to kill, and other offenses. See Lesser included offense.

Divisim /dɪˈvæzɪm/. In old English law, severally; separately.

Division. Act of distributing among a number. Portion of territorial area marked off for a particular purpose. Operating or administrative unit of government, court, business, or school system. Condition of being divided in opinion. Major military unit. Separation of members of a legislative body to take a vote. See also Range.

Division, action for. Action to compel obligee to divide his claim against debtors and collect as if each debtor were liable only for his portion. Central Bank v. Winn Farmers Co-op., La.App., 298 So.2d 442, 445.
Divisional courts. Courts in England, consisting of two or (in special cases) more judges sitting to transact certain kinds of business which cannot be disposed of by one judge. There exist divisional courts of the Queen's Bench Division, Chancery Division, and Family Division. Established originally in 1873 and now governed by Supreme Court Act, 1981, § 66.

Divisional securities. Special type of securities issued to finance particular projects.

Division of opinion. In the practice of appellate courts, this term denotes such a disagreement among the judges that there is not a majority in favor of any one view, and hence no decision can be rendered on the case. But it also commonly denotes a division into two classes, one of which may comprise a majority of the judges; as when we speak of a decision having proceeded from a "divided court." See also Divided court.

Division of powers. See Separation of powers.

Division order. A direction and authorization to purchaser of oil to distribute purchase price in specified manner; its purpose is to assure that purchaser pays only those parties who are entitled to payment. Blausay v. Stein, 61 Ohio St.2d 264, 15 O.O.3d 268, 400 N.E.2d 408, 410.

Divisum imperium /daváyám impiriýam/. Lat. A divided jurisdiction. Applied, e.g., to the jurisdiction of courts of common law and equity over the same subject.

Divorce. The legal separation of man and wife, effected/daváyám impiriýam/. Lat. A division of powers. See Separation of powers.

Divisum imperium /daváyám impiriýam/. Lat. A divided jurisdiction. Applied, e.g., to the jurisdiction of courts of common law and equity over the same subject.

Divorce. The legal separation of man and wife, effected by the judgment or decree of a court, and either totally dissolving the marriage relation, or suspending its effects so far as concerns the cohabitation of the parties.

See also Alimony; Equitable distribution; Ex parte divorce; Legislative divorce; Living separate and apart; Mail order divorce; Mexican divorce; Migratory divorce; Rabbinical divorce.

Divisible divorce. Decree of divorce may be divided as between provisions for support and alimony and provisions dissolving the marriage. Doctrine applied in cases under Full Faith and Credit Clause in connection with effect of foreign divorce on support provisions.

Divorce a mensa et thoro /dáváym ey mensa et thoro/. A divorce from table and bed, or from bed and board. A partial or qualified divorce, by which the parties are separated and forbidden to live or cohabit together, without affecting the marriage itself.

Divorce a vinculo matrimonii /dáváym ey vičkułóy mátramówniyay/. A divorce from the bond of marriage. A total, absolute divorce of husband and wife, dissolving the marriage tie, and releasing the parties wholly from their matrimonial obligations.

Divorce by consent (no-fault). Type of no-fault divorce in which parties are not required to prove fault or grounds for divorce beyond a showing of irretrievable breakdown of marriage or irreconcilable differences. The majority of states have no-fault divorce statutes in one form or another. See, e.g., Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act, §§ 302, 305.

Divorce from bed and board. See Divorce a mensa et thoro, above.

Foreign divorce. A divorce obtained out of the state or country where the marriage was solemnized.

Limited divorce. A divorce from bed and board; or a judicial separation of husband and wife not dissolving the marriage tie. See also Separation of spouses.

Migratory divorce. Term used to describe a divorce secured by a spouse or spouses who leave(s) his/her domicile and move(s) to, or reside(s) temporarily in, another state or country for purpose of securing the divorce. See also Ex parte divorce.

No-fault divorce. See Divorce by consent, above.

Parliamentary divorce. A divorce decreed by the British Parliament or by a legislative act in contrast to a divorce granted by a court. See Lady's friend.

Divorce proctors. Person, generally an attorney, appointed to protect children or the interests of the state in a divorce action. Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act, § 310.

Divortium dicitur a divertendo, quia vir divertitur ab uxore /daváyám disátar ey dáyvartendow, kvía vár dávártar ab áksóri/. Divorce is called from divertendo, because a man is diverted from his wife.

Divulge /daváj/. To disclose or make known, as to divulge secret or classified information.

D. J. An abbreviation for "District Judge."

DNA identification. DNA profiling or fingerprinting is an analysis of Deoxyribonucleic Acid (DNA) resulting in the identification of an individual's patterned chemical structure of genetic information. A method of determining distinctive patterns in genetic material in order to identify the source of a biological specimen, such as blood, tissue or hair. Cobey v. State, 80 Md.App. 31, 559 A.2d 391. A forensic technique used in criminal cases to identify, or rule out, crime suspect and in paternity cases to identify, or rule out, father of child. See e.g. Ann.Code of Md., Cts. & Jud.Proc. § 10-915.

Do /dò/. Lat. I give. The ancient and aptest word of feoffment and of gift.

Dock, v. To curtail or diminish, as to dock a person's wages for, e.g. lateness or poor work.

Dock, n. The cage or inclosed space in a criminal court where prisoners stand when brought in for trial.

Dockage. A charge against vessels for the privilege of mooring to the wharves or in the slips. A pecuniary compensation for the use of a dock while a vessel is undergoing repairs. See also Demurrage, Moorage.

Docket, v. To abstract and enter in a book. To make a brief entry of any proceeding in a court of justice in the docket.

Docket, n. A minute, abstract, or brief entry; or the book containing such entries. A formal record, entered in brief, of the proceedings in a court of justice. A book containing an entry in brief of all the important acts done in court in the conduct of each case, from its inception to its conclusion. The name of "docket" or "trial docket" is sometimes given to the list or calendar of causes set to be tried at a specified term, prepared by the clerks for the use of the court and bar.

General Classification

An appearance docket is one in which the appearances in actions are entered, containing also a brief abstract of the successive steps in each action. A bar docket is an unofficial paper consisting of a transcript of the docket for a term of court, printed for distribution to members of the bar. An execution docket is a list of the executions sued out or pending in the sheriff's office. A judgment docket is a list or docket of the judgments entered in a given court, methodically kept by the clerk or other proper officer, open to public inspection, and intended to afford official notice to interested parties of the existence or lien of judgments. See also Judgment docket; Preferred docket.

Civil docket. Fed.R. Civil P. 79(a), and analogous state rules, requires that the clerk keep a "civil docket" of all actions pending before the court. Actions shall be assigned consecutive file numbers. The file number of each action shall be noted on the folio of the docket whereon the first entry of the actions is made. All papers filed with the clerk, all process issued and returns made thereon, all appearances, orders, verdicts, and judgments shall be entered chronologically in the civil docket on the folio assigned to the action and shall be marked with its file number. The entry of an order or judgment shall show the date the entry is made. When in an action trial by jury has been properly demanded or ordered the clerk shall enter the word "jury" on the folio assigned to that action.

Docket fee. An attorney's fee, of a fixed sum, chargeable with or as a part of the costs of the action, for the attorney of the successful party; so called because chargeable on the docket, not as a fee for making docket entries.

Dock-master. In England, an officer invested with powers within the docks, and a certain distance therefrom, to direct the mooring and removing of ships, so as to prevent obstruction to the dock entrances.

Dock receipt. Also known as dock warrant. A type of interim certificate issued by maritime shipping company upon delivery of goods at the dock, often entitling the designated person to have a bill of lading issued to him. Trade usage may in some cases entitle such paper to be treated as a document of title. If the receipt actually represents a storage obligation undertaken by the shipping company, then it is a warehouse receipt. See also Document (Document of title); Warehouse receipt.

Dock sale. Exists where a purchaser uses its owned or rented vehicles to take possession of the product at the seller's shipping dock. In most states, the sale is appor tioned to the operating state of the purchaser, rather than the seller.

Dock warrant. See Dock receipt.

Doctor, v. To prescribe or treat medically or to treat as a doctor or physician.

Doctor, n. A learned man; one qualified to give instruction of the higher order in a science or art, particularly, one who has received the highest academical degree in his art or faculty, as, a doctor of laws, medicine, or theology. In colloquial language, however, the term is practically restricted to practitioners of medicine; i.e. physicians, surgeons.

Doctor-patient privilege. In law of evidence, right of patient to exclude from evidence communications made by him to his physician; recognized in most jurisdictions but sometimes limited; e.g. to communications to psychotherapist.

Doctrinal interpretation. See Interpretation.

Doctrine. A rule, principle, theory, or tenet of the law; as, e.g. Abstention doctrine; Clean hands doctrine, etc.

Document. An instrument on which is recorded, by means of letters, figures, or marks, the original, official, or legal form of something, which may be evidentially used. In this sense the term "document" applies to writings; to words printed, lithographed, or photographed; to maps or plans; to seals, plates, or even stones on which inscriptions are cut or engraved. In the plural, the deeds, agreements, title-papers, letters, receipts, and other written instruments used to prove a fact. As used as a verb, to support with documentary evidence or authorities.

Within meaning of the best evidence rule, document is any physical embodiment of information or ideas; e.g. a letter, a contract, a receipt, a book of account, a blueprint, or an X-ray plate. Strico v. Cotto, 67 Misc.2d 636, 324 N.Y.S.2d 483, 486. See also Documentary evidence.

See also instrument.

Ancient documents. Deeds, wills, and other writings more than thirty years (twenty years under Fed.Evid.R. 803(16)) old are so called; they are presumed to be genuine without express proof, when coming from the proper custody.

Commercial law. Under U.C.C., any paper including document of title, security, invoice, certificate, notice of default and the like. U.C.C. § 5-103. See also Documentary draft.

Conflicts of law. (1) Whether a right is embodied in a document is determined by the law which governs the right. (2) As between persons who are not both parties to the conveyance, (a) the effect of a conveyance of a right embodied in a document depends upon the effect of the conveyance of the document; and (b) the effect of a conveyance of an interest in a document in which a right is embodied is determined by the law that would be applied by the courts of the state where the document was at the time of the conveyance. These courts would usually apply their own local law in determining such questions. Restatement, Second, Conflicts, § 249.

Document of title. A written description, identification or declaration of goods "which in the regular course of business or financing is treated as adequately evidencing that the person in possession of it is entitled to receive, hold and dispose of the document and the goods it covers. To be a document of title a document must purport to be issued by or addressed to a bailee and purport to cover goods in the bailee's possession which are either identified or are fungible portions of an identified mass." U.C.C. § 1-201(15). Examples are: bill of lading, dock warrant, dock receipt, warehouse receipt or order for the delivery of goods. Id. See also Order document; Order instrument.

Foreign document. One which was prepared or executed in, or which comes from, a foreign state or country.

Judicial documents. Proceedings relating to litigation. They are divided into (1) judgments, decrees, and verdicts; (2) depositions, examinations, and inquisitions taken in the course of a legal process; (3) writs, warrants, pleadings, etc., which are incident to any judicial proceedings.

Public document. A state paper, or other instrument of public importance or interest, issued or published by authority of congress or a state legislature. Also any document or record, evidencing or connected with the public business or the administration of public affairs, preserved in or issued by any department of the government. One of the publications printed by order of congress or either house thereof. Broadly any document open to public inspection.

Documentary credit. Credit which is extended on documents of title or other legal documents.

Documentary draft. A "documentary draft" or a "documentary demand for payment" is one the honor of which is conditioned upon the presentation of a document or documents. "Document" means any paper including document of title, security, invoice, certificate, notice of default and the like. U.C.C. § 4-104(f).

Any negotiable or non-negotiable draft with accompanying documents, securities or other papers to be delivered against honor of the draft. U.C.C. § 4-104(f).

Check with accompanying documents which are to be delivered when payment is made is "documentary draft." Wiley v. Peoples Bank & Trust Co., C.A.Miss., 438 F.2d 513, 516.

Documentary evidence. Evidence derived from conventional symbols (such as letters) by which ideas are represented on material substances. Such evidence as is furnished by written instruments, inscriptions, documents of all kinds, and also any inanimate objects admissible for the purpose, as distinguished from "oral" evidence, or that delivered by human beings viva voce. People v. Purcell, 22 Cal.App.2d 126, 70 P.2d 706, 709. See also Authentication; Document.

Documentary instructions. Term for written agreement between importer and exporter covering disposition of the various documents relating to the shipment, and disposition of the goods.

Documentary originals rule. See Best evidence.

Documentary stamp. Stamp required by federal (prior to 1968) and state law to be affixed to deeds and other documents of transfer before they may be recorded, the cost of which is generally governed by the consideration recited in the document. Federal Revenue Stamps were abolished in 1968.

Documentation. See Authorities.

DOD. Department of Defense.

Do, dico, addico /dów, dikow, adikow/. Lat. I give, I say, I adjudge. Three words used in the Roman law, to express the extent of the civil jurisdiction of the praetor. Do denoted that he gave or granted actions, exceptions, and judices; dico, that he pronounced judgment; addico, that he adjudged the controverted property, or the goods of the debtor, etc., to the plaintiff.

DOE. Department of Energy.

Doe, John. The name of the fictitious plaintiff in certain types of actions; e.g. ejectment action. See also John Doe.

Dé office /d(s) owfiys/ L. Fr. Of office; in virtue of office; officially; in the discharge of ordinary duty.

Dog-draw. In old English forest law, the manifest apprehension of an offender against venison in a forest, when he was found drawing after a deer by the scent of a hound led in his hand; or where a person had wounded a deer or wild beast, by shooting at him, or otherwise, and was caught with a dog drawing after him to receive the same.

Dogma. Definite authoritative opinions or tenets. Formally stated and proclaimed doctrines on faith or morals. In the civil law, a word occasionally used as descriptive of an ordinance of the senate.

DOHSA. Death on High Seas Act.

Doing. The formal word by which services were reserved and expressed in old conveyances; as "rendering" (redendo) was expressive of rent.

Doing business. Within statutes on service of process on foreign corporations, means equivalent to carrying on, conducting or managing business. A foreign corporation is "doing business", making it amenable to process within state, if it does business therein in such a manner as to warrant the inference that it is present there. Or that it has subjected itself to the jurisdiction and laws in which the service is made. The doing of business is the exercise in the state of some of the ordinary functions for which the corporation was organized. What constitutes "doing business" depends on the facts in each particular case. The general rule is that the business need only have certain "minimum contacts" with the state to make it amenable to process in that state. International Shoe Co. v. State of Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 66 S.Ct. 154, 90 L.Ed. 95. And, such contacts may be as minimal as selling a single insurance contract. McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., 355 U.S. 220, 78 S.Ct. 199, 2 L.Ed.2d 223; Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 78 S.Ct. 1228, 2 L.Ed.2d 1283. See also Long arm statutes; Minimal contacts.

The determination as to what constitutes “doing business” may differ as to whether the term is being used with reference to amenability to service of process or to taxation, and also may vary in definition from state to state.

Doitkin, or doit /dɔɪt(ə)n/. A base coin of small value prohibited by Henry the Fifth. We still retain the phrase, in the common saying, when we would undervalue a man, that he is not worth a doit.

Do, lego. Lat. I give, I bequeath; or I give and bequeath. The formal words of making a bequest or legacy, in the Roman law. The expression is literally retained in modern wills.

Dolg-bote /dɔłgbət/. A recompense for a scar or wound.

Doli. Lat. See Dolus.

Doli capax /dɔwlæw kəpæks/. Capable of malice or criminal intention; having sufficient discretion and intelligence to distinguish between right and wrong, and so to become amenable to the criminal laws.

Doli incapax /dɔwlæw ɪnkəpæks/. Incapable of criminal intention or malice; not of the age of discretion; not possessed of sufficient discretion and intelligence to distinguish between right and wrong to the extent of being criminally responsible for his actions.

Dollar. The money unit employed in the United States of the value of one hundred cents, or of any combination of coins totalling 100 cents.

Dollar averaging. Investment term for practice of purchasing a fixed dollar amount of a given security at regular intervals.

Dolo /dɔlwəl/. In Spanish law, bad or mischievous design.

Dolo facit qui petit quod redditurum est /dɔlwəl ˈfɛsɪt kwət kwɔd rɛdɪtʊrʊm ɛst/. He acts with guile who demands that which he will have to return.

Dolo malo pactumse non servaturum /dɔlwəl ˈmæləʊ ˈpæktʌmsez nɔn ˈsɜrvətərʊm/. An agreement induced by fraud cannot stand.

Dolosus versatur in generalibus /dɔlɔsəs ˈvɜrsətər in ˈɡɛnəralɪbəs/. A person intending to deceive deals in general terms.

Dolus ex indiciis perspicuus probati convenit /dɔlus ɛks ɪndɪʃiəs pɜrsˈpɪkjʊəs prɔbəˈreɪ ˈkənvənɪt/. Fraud should be proved by clear tokens.

Dolus /dɔlus/. In the civil law, guile; deceitfulness; malicious fraud. A fraudulent address or trick used to deceive some one; a fraud. Any subtle contrivance by words or acts with a design to circumvent.

Such acts or omissions as operate as a deception upon the other party, or violate the just confidence reposed by him, whether there be a deceitful intent (malus animus) or not.

Fraud, willfulness, or intentionality. In that use it is opposed to culpa, which is negligence merely, in greater or less degree. The policy of the law may sometimes treat extreme culpa as if it were dolus, upon the maxim culpa dolo comparatur. A person is always liable for dolus producing damage, but not always for culpa producing damage, even though extreme.

Dolus auctoris non nocet successori /dɔlus ˈɔktɔriəs nɔn ˈnɔset ˈsɛkssərɪəri/. The fraud of a predecessor prejudices not his successor.

Dolus bonus, dolus malus /dɔlus ˈbʌnuːs, ˈmæluːs/. In a wide sense, the Roman law distinguishes between “good,” or rather “permissible” dolus and “bad” or fraudulent dolus. The former is justifiable or allowable deceit; it is that which a man may employ in self-defense against an unlawful attack, or for another permissible purpose, as when one assembles the truth to prevent a lunatic from injuring himself or others. The latter exists where one intentionally misleads another or takes advantage of another’s error wrongfully, by any form of deception, fraud, or cheating.

Dolus circuittu non purgatur /dɔlus ˈsɜːrktju ˈnɔn ˈpɜrɡətər/. Fraud is not purged by circuitry.

Dolus dans locum contractui /dɔlus ˈdænz ləʻkwəm ˈkɔntrəktʃuˌi/. Fraud (or deceit) giving rise to the contract; that is, a fraudulent misrepresentation made by one of the parties to the contract, and relied upon by the other, and which was actually instrumental in inducing the latter to enter into the contract.

Dolus est machinatio, cum aliud dissimulat aliud agit /dɔlus ˈɛst ˈmæʃəˈneɪʃə(ə)n kəm əliuð ˈdɪsɪˈmələt əliuð ˈæɡɪt/. Deceit is an artifice, since it pretends one thing and does another.

Dolus et fraus nemini patrocinentur, patrocinari derent) /dɔlus ət ˈfros nəˈmənət ˈpætrəʊsənəntər (ˈpætrəʊsənərəˌdiˈɛnt). Deceit and fraud shall excuse or benefit no man.

Dolus latet in generalibus /dɔlus ˈlɛytət in ˈɡɛnəralɪbəs/. Fraud lurks in generalities.

Dolus versatur in generalibus /dɔlus ˈvɜrsətər in ˈɡɛnəralɪbəs/. Fraud deals in generalities.

Domain. The complete and absolute ownership of land; a paramount and individual right of property in land. Also the real estate so owned. The inherent sovereign power claimed by the legislature of a state, of controlling private property for public uses, is termed the “right of eminent domain.” See Condemnation; Eminent domain.

National domain is sometimes applied to the aggregate of the property owned directly by a nation. Public domain embraces all lands, the title to which is in the United States, including as well land occupied for the purposes of federal buildings, arsenals, dock-yards, etc., as land of an agricultural or mineral character not yet granted to private owners.

Sphere of influence. Range of control or rule; realm.

Domestic authority. The right of parents and, by extension, the right of teachers, to discipline and compel obedience to their lawful commands from their children. See Corporal punishment.

Domestic bill. Draft which is payable in the state in which it is drawn, as contrasted with a foreign bill which is payable in another state.

Domestic corporation. When a corporation is organized and chartered in a particular state, it is considered a domestic corporation of that state. Term is used in contrast to foreign corporation which has been incorporated in another state, territory or country. For tax purposes, a corporation created or organized in the U.S. or under the law of the U.S. or any state or territory. I.R.C. § 7701(a)(4). Compare Foreign corporation.

Domestic courts. Those existing and having jurisdiction at the place of the party's residence or domicile.

Domestic exports. Goods originally grown, produced, or manufactured in the United States, in contrast to goods originally imported and then re-exported.

Domestic International Sales Corporation (DISC). A U.S. corporation, usually a subsidiary, whose income is primarily attributable to exports. Income tax on a certain percentage of a DISC's income is usually deferred resulting, generally, in a lower overall corporate tax for the parent than would otherwise be incurred. I.R.C. § 991 et seq.

Domestic jurisdiction. Power of court over a person or action within its district or state.

Domestic relations. That branch or discipline of the law which deals with matters of the household or family, including divorce, separation, custody, support and adoption.

Domestic servant. A person hired or employed primarily for the performance of household duties and chores, the maintenance of the home, and the care, comfort and convenience of members of the household. Hardware Dealers Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. King, Tex.Civ.App., 408 S.W.2d 790, 791. See also Domestic.

Domesticus /doméstikos/. In old European law, a seneschal, steward, or major domo; a judge's assistant; an assessor (q.v.).

Domicellus /domišlás/. In old English law, a better sort of servant in monasteries; also an appellation of a king's bastard.

Domicile. A person's legal home. That place where a man has his true, fixed, and permanent home and to which whenever he is absent he has the intention of returning. Smith v. Smith, 206 Pa.Super. 310, 213 A.2d 94. Generally, physical presence within a state and the intention to make it one's home are the requisites of establishing a "domicile" therein. Montoya v. Collier, 85 N.M. 356, 512 P.2d 684, 686. The permanent residence of a person or the place to which he intends to return even though he may actually reside elsewhere. A person may have more than one residence but only one domicile. The legal domicile of a person is important since it, rather than the actual residence, often controls the jurisdiction of the taxing authorities and determines where a person may exercise the privilege of voting and other legal rights and privileges. The established, fixed, permanent, or ordinary dwellingplace or place of residence of a person, as distinguished from his temporary and transient, though actual, place of residence. It is his legal residence, as distinguished from his temporary place of abode; or his home, as distinguished from a place to which business or pleasure may temporarily call him. See also Abode; Residence.

"Citizenship," "habitancy," and "residence" are severally words which in particular cases may mean precisely the same as "domicile," while in other uses may have different meanings. "Residence" signifies living in particular locality while "domicile" means living in that locality with intent to make it a fixed and permanent home. Schreiner v. Schreiner, Tex.Civ.App., 502 S.W.2d 840, 843.

For purpose of federal diversity jurisdiction, "citizenship" and "domicile" are synonymous. Hendry v. Masonite Corp., C.A.Miss., 455 F.2d 955.

Commercial domicile. A domicile acquired by the maintenance of a commercial establishment. A concept employed to permit taxation of property or activity of nonresident corporation by state in which managerial activities occurred in quantity and character sufficient to avoid contention of nonresident corporation that taxation of its activities and property located outside bounds of taxing state amounted to deprivation of property without due process. North Baton Rouge Development Co., Inc. v. Collector of Revenue, La., 304 So.2d 293, 297.

Corporate domicile. Place considered by law as center of corporate affairs and place where its functions are discharged. See also Commercial domicile, above.

Domicile of choice. The essentials of "domicile" of choice are the fact of physical presence at a dwelling place and the intention to make that place home. New York Trust Co. v. Riley, 24 Del.Ch. 354, 16 A.2d 772, 776, 783, 785.

Domicile of origin. The home of the parents. That which arises from a man's birth and connections. The domicile of the parents at the time of birth, or what is termed the "domicile of origin," constitutes the domicile of an infant, and continues until abandoned, or until the acquisition of a new domicile in a different place. Struble v. Struble, Tex.Civ.App., 177 S.W.2d 279, 283.

Domicile of succession. As distinguished from a commercial, political, or forensic domicile, the actual residence of a person within some jurisdiction, of such a character as shall, according to the well-established principles of public law, give direction to the succession of his personal estate.

Domicile of trustee. Jurisdiction which appoints trustee is domicile of trustee.

Elected domicile. The domicile of parties fixed in a contract between them for the purposes of such contract.

Foreign domicile. A domicile established by a citizen or subject of one sovereignty within the territory of another.

Matrimonial domicile. The place where a husband and wife have established a home, in which they reside in the relation of husband and wife, and where the matrimonial contract is being performed.

Municipal domicile. One which as distinguished from "national domicile" and "quasi national domicile" (see those titles, infra), has reference to residence in a country, township, or municipality.

National domicile. The domicile of a person, considered as being within the territory of a particular nation, and not with reference to a particular locality or subdivision of a nation.

Natural domicile. The same as domicile of origin or domicile by birth.

Necessary domicile. That kind of domicile which exists by operation of law, as distinguished from voluntary domicile or domicile of choice.

Quasi national domicile. One involving residence in a state. See also National domicile, above.

Domiciled /dόmαsNeedld/dόmαsNeedyl/ /d. Established in a given domicile; belonging to a given state or jurisdiction by right of domicile.

Domiciliary /dόmαsilil/ /d. Pertaining to domicile; relating to one's domicile. Existing or created at, or connected with, the domicile of a suitor or of a decedent.

Domiciliary administration. Administration of estate in state where person was domiciled at time of death is deemed principal or primary administration and is ordinarily termed "domiciliary administration." First Nat. Bank v. Blessing, 231 Mo.App. 268, 98 S.W.2d 149, 151.

Domiciliate /dόmαsNeedlyet/ /d. To establish one's domicile; to take up one's fixed residence in a given place. To establish the domicile of another person whose legal residence follows one's own.

Domiciliation /dόmαsNeedlyeNeedshsn/. In Spanish law, the acquisition of domiciliary rights and status, nearly equivalent to naturalization, which may be accomplished by being born in the kingdom, by conversion to the Catholic faith there, by taking up a permanent residence in some settlement and marrying a native woman, and by attaching oneself to the soil, purchasing or acquiring real property and possessions.

Domicilium /dόmαsNeedlyeNeedshm/. Lat. Domicile (q.v.).

Domigerium /dόmαjεrεsNeedym/. In old English law, power over another; also danger.

Domina (dame) /dόmαnst/. A title given to honorable women, who anciently, in their own right of inheritance, held a barony.

Dominant estate or tenement /dόmαnstεNeedet/. Land that benefits from easement on another (usually adjacent) property. That to which a servitude or easement is due, or for the benefit of which it exists. A term used in the civil and Scotch law, and later in ours, relating to servitudes, meaning the tenement or subject in favor of which the service is constituted; as the tenement over which the servitute extends is called the "servient tenement." That particular parcel of land that is benefited as a result of an easement on a servient estate.

Possessor of dominant estate is entitled to benefit of uses authorized by easement. In such case, easement is said to be appurtenant to dominant estate. See also Servient tenement.

Dominant tenant. The person who holds the benefit of an easement.

Dominant theme. Within meaning of requirement that before any material can be found to be obscene the dominant theme of material taken as a whole must appeal to prurient interest in sex means prevailing, governing, influencing or controlling idea. State ex rel. Dowd v. "Pay the Baby Sitter", Com.Pl., 31 Ohio Misc. 208, 287 N.E.2d 650, 654. See also Obscene; Obscenity.

Dominate /domeñéyt/. To master, to rule, or to control. Humble Oil & Refining Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, C.C.A.5, 113 F.2d 85, 88, 90.

Dominatio /domeñéysh(i)yow/. In old English law, lordship.

Dominical. That which denotes the Lord's day, or Sunday.

Dominicide /domínnsáyd/. The act of killing one's lord or master.

Dominicum /domínkom/. Lat. Domain; demain; demense. A lordship. That of which one has the lordship or ownership. That which remains under the lord's immediate charge and control. In Domesday Book it meant the home farm as distinguished from the holdings of the tenants.

Property; domain; anything pertaining to a lord. In ecclesiastical law, a church, or any other building consecrated to God.

Dominicum antiquum /domínkom antáykwam/. In old English law, ancient demesne.

Dominio /domiñiyow/. Sp. In Spanish law, a term corresponding to the most complete right of ownership. It is derived from the Latin dominium (q.v.). Dominio alto, eminent domain; dominio directo, immediate ownership; dominio util, beneficial ownership.

Dominion. Generally accepted definition of "dominion" is perfect control in right of ownership. The word implies both title and possession and appears to require a complete retention of control over disposition. Eastex Aviation, Inc. v. Sperry & Hutchinson Co., C.A.Tex., 522 F.2d 1299, 1307. Title to an article of property which arises from the power of disposition and the right of claiming it.

Sovereignty; as the dominion of the seas or over a territory.

In the civil law, with reference to the title to property which is transferred by a sale of it, dominion is said to be either "proximate" or "remote," the former being the kind of title vesting in the purchaser when he has acquired both the ownership and the possession of the article, the latter describing the nature of his title when he has legitimately acquired the ownership of the property but there has been no delivery.

See also Ownership; Title.

Dominium /dámiñiyam/. In the civil and old English law, ownership; property in the largest sense, including both the right of property and the right of possession or use.

The mere right of property, as distinguished from the possession or usufruct. The right which a lord had in the fee of his tenant.

Sovereignty or dominion. Dominium maris, the sovereignty of the sea.

Dominium directum /dámiñiyam daréktam/. In the civil law, strict ownership; that which was founded on strict law, as distinguished from equity. In later law, property without use; the right of a landlord. In feudal law, right or proper ownership; the right of a superior or lord, as distinguished from that of his vassal or tenant. The title or property which the sovereign in England is considered as possessing in all the lands of the kingdom, they being held either immediately or mediately of him as lord paramount.

Dominium directum et utile /dámiñiyam daréktam et yúwtaliy/. The complete and absolute dominion in property; the union of the title and the exclusive use.

Dominium eminens /dámiñiyam émanèn(d)z/. Eminent domain.

Dominium non potest esse in pendenti /dámiñiyam nón pówtest ésiy in pendentay/. Lordship cannot be in suspense, i.e., property cannot remain in abeyance.

Dominium plenum /dámiñiyam plynøm/. Full ownership; the union of the dominium directum with the dominium utile.

Dominium utile /dámiñiyam yúwtaliy/. In the civil law, equitable or pretorian ownership; that which was founded on equity. In later law, use without property; the right of a tenant. In feudal law, useful or beneficial ownership; the usufruct, or right to the use and profits of the soil, as distinguished from the dominium directum (q.v.) or ownership of the soil itself; the right of a vassal or tenant.

Domino volente /dómonow valéntiy/. Lat. The owner being willing; with the consent of the owner.

Dominus /dómanes/. In feudal and ecclesiastical law, a lord, or feudal superior. Dominus rex, the lord the king; the king's title as lord paramount. Dominus capitalis, a chief lord. Dominus medius, a mesne or intermediate lord. Dominus ligius, liege lord or sovereign.

Lord or sir; a title of distinction. It usually denoted a knight or clergyman; and was sometimes given to a gentleman of quality, though not a knight, especially if he were lord of a manor.
The owner or proprietor of a thing, as distinguished from him who uses it merely. A master or principal, as distinguished from an agent or attorney.

In the civil law, a husband; a family.

Dominus capitalis loco haeredis habetur, quoties per Dominus litis /domanas laytas/. Lat. The master of Dominus rex nullum habere potest parem, multo /domanas Dominus non maritabit pupillum nisi semel Dominus navis /domanas neyvas/. In the civil law, the 487 /dowmas konvarsoram/. An abstraction of Domus conversorum /domanas laytas/. Lat. The master of the suit; i.e., the person who was really and directly interested in the suit as a party, as distinguished from his attorney or advocate. But the term is also applied to one who, though not originally a party, has made himself such, by intervention or otherwise, and has assumed entire control and responsibility for one side, and is treated by the court as liable for costs. Virginia Electric & Power Co. v. Bowers, 181 Va. 542, 25 S.E.2d 361, 363.

Dominus navis /domanas nýyas/. In the civil law, the owner of a vessel.

Dominus non maritabit pupillum nisi semel /dómanas nómaritóyóst pyuuwplám náyay sémal/. A lord cannot give a ward in marriage but once.

Dominus rex nullum habere potest parem, multo minus superiorem /dómanas réks nóslám habiriy pówtrast páram, málów máynas sapiriyórm/. The king cannot have an absolute property. 2 Bl.Comm. 391.

Dommages intéressés. In French law, damages.

Domo reparanda /dówmw répáránda/. A writ that lay for one against his neighbor, by the anticipated fall of whose house he feared a damage and injury to his own.

Dom. Proc. An abbreviation of Domus Procerum or Domo Procerum; the house of lords in England. Sometimes expressed by the letters D. P.

Domus conversorum /dówmas konvársóram/. An ancient house built or appointed by King Henry III for such Jews as were converted to the Christian faith; but King Edward III, who expelled the Jews from the kingdom, deputed the place for the custody of the rolls and records of the chancery.

Domus dei /dówmas diýay/. The house of God; a name applied to many hospitals and religious houses.

Domus procerum /dówmas pró(w)saram/. The house of lords, abbreviated into Dom. Proc., or D. P.

Domus sua cuique est tutissimum refugium /dówmas š(y)uwa k(yu)wátykiy est tyuwtisamam šyu-yúyjyam/. To every man his own house is his safest refuge. The house of every one is to him as his castle and fortress, as well for his defense against injury and violence as for his repose. A man’s dwellinghouse is his castle, not for his own personal protection merely, but also for the protection of his family and his property therein.

Domus tutissimum cuique refugium atque receptaculum sit /dówmas tyuwtisamam k(yu)wátykiy šyu-yúyjyam ráxétykiyam ráséptykiyam sit/. A man’s house should be his safest refuge and shelter. The habitation of each one is an inviolable asylum for him. A maxim of the Roman law.

Dona clandestina sunt semper suspiciosa /dówma kléândstáýáno sín témpr sapíshiyówá/. Clandestine gifts are always suspicious.

Donari videtur, quod nullo jure cogente conceditur /dónmw ráy vadiytar kóow nálow júriy kájénty konsíydtar/. A thing is said to be given when it is yielded otherwise than by virtue of right (that is considered to be given which is granted when no law compels).

Donatarius /dówntéryáw/. A donee; one to whom something is given. See Donee.

Donated stock. Securities given to a corporation by its own stockholders commonly for resale.

Donated surplus. Contribution of assets to a corporation generally in the form of stock from its stockholders.

Donatio /dównéysh(i)yöw/. Lat. A gift. A transfer of the title to property to one who receives it without paying for it. The act by which the owner of a thing voluntarily transfers the title and possession of the same from himself to another person, without any consideration.

By the civil law (adopted into the English and American law) donations are either inter vivos (between living persons) or mortis causa (in anticipation of death). As to these forms, see infra. A donatio or gift as between living persons is called donatio mera or pura when it is a simple gift without compulsion or consideration, that is, resting solely on the generosity of the donor, as in the case of most charitable gifts. It is called donatio remuneratoria when given as a reward for past services, but still not under any legal compulsion, as in the case of pensions and land-grants. It is called donatio sub modo (or modalis) when given for the attainment of some special object or on condition that the donee shall do something not specially for the benefit of the donor, as in the case of the endowment of hospitals, colleges, etc., coupled with the condition that they shall be established and maintained. The following terms are also used: Donatio conditionalis, a conditional gift; donatio relata, a gift made with reference to some service already done, donatio stricta et coarctura, a restricted gift, as an estate tail.
Donatio causa mortis. A gift of personal property made by a party in expectation of death, then imminent, subject to condition that donor die as anticipated; establishment of gift calls for proof of delivery. Scherer v. Hyland, 75 N.J. 127, 380 A.2d 698, 700. See Donatio mortis causa.

Donatio inofficiosa /dównęsysh(i)yow inafis(h)iýówswa/. An inofficious (undutiful) gift; a gift of so great a part of the donor's property that the birthright portion of his heirs is diminished.

Donatio inter vivos /dównęsysh(i)yow źntar vávwows/. A gift between the living. The ordinary kind of gift by one person to another. A term derived from the civil law. A donation inter vivos (between living persons) is an act by which the donor divests himself at present and irrevocably of the thing given in favor of the donee who accepts it.

There are three kinds of "donations inter vivoe", namely, "gratuitous donations", "onerous donations", and "remunerative donations", the first being based on mere liberality, the second being burdened with charges imposed by the donee, and the third being recompense for services rendered. White v. White, La.App., 7 So.2d 255, 257.

Donatio mortis causa /dównęsysh(i)yow mórtas kóza/. A gift made by a person in sickness, who, apprehending his death, delivers, or causes to be delivered, to another the gift made by a party in expectation of death, then imminent, subject to condition that donor die as anticipated; establishment of gift calls for proof of delivery. Elbert v. Waples-Platter Co., Tex.Civ.App., 156 S.W.2d 146, 150, 151.

Donator /dównéyta/. A donor; one who makes a gift (donatio).

Donatorius /dównatőrióys/. A donee; a person to whom a gift is made; a purchaser.

Donator nunquam desinit possidere, antequam donatorius incipient possidere /dównętyów nšńękwam desanat póskdridrí ámtakwam dównatőrióys inspréyát póskdridri/. The donor never ceases to possess, until the donee begins to possess.

Donatory /dównatőriy/. The person on whom the king bestows his right to any forfeiture that has fallen to the crown.

Done. Completed; brought to an end; over.

Donec /dównek/. Lat. As long as; while; until; within a certain time.

Donec probetur in contrarium /dównek prowbytawr in kontráriyom/. [Given] until proof to the contrary.

Donee. The recipient of a gift. One to whom a gift is made or a bequest given. One who is invested with a power of appointment; the party executing a power, otherwise called the "appointer." He to whom lands or tenements are given in tail. In old English law, he to whom lands were given; the party to whom a donatio was made.

Donee beneficiary. A person not a party to a contract but to whom the benefits of a contract flow as a direct result of an intention to make a gift to that person. In a third party contract, the person who takes the benefit of the contract though there is no privity between him and the contracting parties.

Where performance of a promise in a contract will benefit a person other than the promisee, that person is a "donee beneficiary" if it appears from the terms of the promise in view of the accompanying circumstances that the purpose of the promisee in obtaining the promise is to make a gift to the beneficiary or to confer upon him a right against the promissor to some performance not due from the promisee to the beneficiary. Bain v. Gillispie, Iowa App., 357 N.W.2d 47, 50.

Donee of power. The person to whom the settlor or donor of a power of appointment gives such power to be exercised. In the case of a special power, in favor of a limited class such as members of a family, or, in the case of a general power, in favor of any one including the donee himself.

Donis, Statute de /státyuwt diy dównas/. See De donis.

Donneur d'avai /dónár davál/. In French law, guarantor of negotiable paper other than by indorsement.

Donor. The party conferring a power. One who makes a gift. One who creates a trust. He who gives lands or tenements to another in tail. In old English law, he by whom lands were given to another; the party making a donatio.

Donum /dównam/. Lat. In the civil law, a gift; a free gift. The difference between donum and munus is said to be that donum is more general, while munus is specific.

Door closing doctrine. The principle invoked when a loop-hole in a law is closed by a statute or decision.

Dope. Any thick liquid or pasty preparation, as of opium for medicinal purposes, of grease for a lubricant, etc., and in popular meaning signifies opium derivative, ranging from harmless concoction to most powerful narcotics containing heroin or opium as ingredient.

Dormacy. Lapse in the executability of a judgment, and also in the effectiveness of the judgment lien, which is cured through revival of the judgment.

Dormant. Literally, sleeping; hence, inactive; in abeyance; unknown; concealed; silent.

Dormant claim. One which is in abeyance.

Dormant corporation. An inactive but legal corporation which is capable of being activated, but is presently not operating.

Dormant execution. One which a creditor delivers to the sheriff with directions to levy only, and not to sell, until further orders, or until a junior execution is received.

Dormant judgment. One which has not been satisfied, nor extinguished by lapse of time, but which has remained so long unexecuted that execution cannot now be issued upon it without first reviving the judgment, or one which has lost its lien on land from the failure to issue execution on it or take other steps to enforce it within the time limited by statute. See Judgment; Revival.

Dormant partner. See Partner.

Dormiunt aliquando leges, nunquam moriuntur /dórmiyant ëlëkwándow fëljíyj, náskwam mórìyántar/. The laws sometimes sleep, never die.

Dorsum /dórsam/. Lat. The back. In dorso recordi, on the back of the record.

Dos /dóws/. In Roman law, dowry; a wife's marriage portion; all that property which on marriage is transferred by the wife herself or by another to the husband with a view of diminishing the burden which the marriage will entail upon him. It is of three kinds. Profectitia dos is that which is derived from the property of the wife's father or paternal grandfather. That dos is termed adventitia which is not profectitia in respect to its source, whether it is given by the wife from her own estate or by the wife's mother or a third person. It is termed receptitia dos when accompanied by a stipulation for its reclamation by the constitutor on the termination of the marriage.

In old English law, the portion given to the wife by the husband at the church door, in consideration of the marriage; dower; the wife's portion out of her deceased husband's estate in case he had not endowed her.

Dos de dote peti non debit /dóws diý dówtiy pétya nón débít/. Dower ought not to be demanded of dower. A widow is not dowable of lands assigned to another woman.

Dos rationabilis /dóws rëshänéybałas/. A reasonable marriage portion. A reasonable part of her husband's estate, to which every widow is entitled, of lands of which her husband may have endowed her on the day of marriage. Dower, at common law. 2 Bl.Com. 134.

Dos rationabilis vel legítima est cujuslibet mulieris de quoquecumque tenemento tertia pars omnium terrarum et tenementorum, qua vir suus tenuit in domino suo ut de feodo, etc. /dóws rëshänéybalas vél lajítama ét kyuujášlásat myūwliyíras dly kowkäškwiy ténämén tow täršíyó pázr ómínýam tehémor ét ténentémor, kwly vár s(y)kas ténuywat in dómín(i)yow s(y)kas Nóow át dý fúwydow/. Reasonable or legitimate dower belongs to every woman of a third part of all the lands and tenements of which her husband was seised in his demesne, as of fee, etc.

Dossier /dós(i)yéy/dós(i)yéy/. Fr. A brief; a bundle of papers.

Dot. (A French word, adopted in Louisiana.) The fortune, portion, or dowry which a woman brings to her husband by the marriage.

DOT. Department of Transportation.
Double assessment. The imposition of same tax, by same taxing power, upon same subject matter. Aragon v. Empire Gold Mining & Milling Co., 47 N.M. 299, 142 P.2d 539, 541.

Double commissions. Commissions or fees paid by both seller and buyer or paid to the same person in different capacities, such as executor and trustee.

Double complaint /dabdol kampleynt/, double quarrel /'kwohral/ or duplex querela /dyewpleks kwarryla/. A grievance made known by a clerk or other person, to the archbishop of the province, against the ordinary, for delaying or refusing to do justice in some cause ecclesiastical, as to give sentence, institute a clerk, etc. It is termed a "double complaint," because it is most commonly made against both the judge and him at whose suit justice is denied or delayed; the effect whereof is that the archbishop, taking notice of the delay, directs his letters, under his authentic seal, to all clerks of his province, commanding them to admonish the ordinary, within a certain number of days, to do the justice required, or otherwise to appear before him or his official, and there allege the cause of his delay; and to signify to the ordinary that if he neither perform the thing enjoined, nor appear nor show cause against it, he himself, in his court of audience, will forthwith proceed to do the justice that is due. In current usage, a complaint in the nature of an appeal from the ordinary to his next immediate superior, as from a bishop to an archbishop. This complaint is available to a clergyman who, having been presented to a living, is refused institution by the ordinary. See Duplicity.

Double costs. See Costs.

Double creditor. One who has a lien on two funds.

Double damages. See Damages.

Double eagle. A gold coin of the United States of the value of twenty dollars.

Double entry. A system of bookkeeping, in which the entries are posted twice into the ledger, once as a credit and once as a debit.

Double (or multiple) hearsay. Hearsay statements which contain further hearsay statements within them. A statement made outside of court is hearsay when introduced in court to prove the truth of the statement. However, certain exceptions permit the introduction of hearsay if the out-of-court statement was made on the personal knowledge of the declarant as in the case of a declaration of a deceased person. If such statement of the deceased person was not made on his personal knowledge, the hearsay would be double or totem pole hearsay.

Double house. A building having accommodations for two families, divided vertically instead of horizontally. Also called "duplex".

Double indemnity. Payment of twice the basic benefit in event of loss resulting from specified causes or under specified circumstances. Provision in life insurance contract requiring payment of twice the face amount of the policy by the insurer in the event of death by accidental means.

Double insurance. Exists where the same person is insured by several insurers separately in respect to the same subject and interest.

Double jeopardy. Fifth Amendment guarantee, enforceable against states through Fourteenth Amendment, protects against second prosecution for same offense after acquittal or conviction, and against multiple punishments for same offense. North Carolina v. Pearce, 395 U.S. 711, 89 S.Ct. 2072, 23 L.Ed.2d 656. The evil sought to be avoided is double trial and double conviction, not necessarily double punishment. Breed et al. v. Jones, 421 U.S. 519, 95 S.Ct. 1779, 44 L.Ed.2d 346. See also Former jeopardy; Jeopardy; Same evidence test.

Double patenting. A doctrine of patent law which prevents single patentee from obtaining two patents on same invention. Anchor Hocking Corp. v. Eyetel Specialty Co., D.C.Del., 377 F.Supp. 98, 101. The test respecting “double patenting” is whether the claims of both patents, when properly construed in the light of the descriptions given, define essentially the same things. Occurs only when claims of two patents issued to one applicant are the same.

Double plea, double pleading. See Duplicity; Plea; Pleadings.

Double proof. Species of evidence required for conviction of certain crimes in which the government must offer corroboration.

Double recovery. Recovery which represents more than the total maximum loss which all parties have sustained.

Double rent. In English law, rent payable by a tenant who continues in possession after the time for which he has given notice to quit, until the time of his quitting possession. See the Distress for Rent Act, 1737, § 18.

Doubles. Letters-patent.

Double standard. Set of principles which permit greater opportunity for one class of people than another and commonly based on differences such as sex, race or color and hence invidious standards which may offend equal protection of law to the discriminated minority. See Discrimination.

Double taxation. The taxing of the same item or piece of property twice to the same person, or taxing it as the property of one person and again as the property of another, but this does not include the imposition of different taxes concurrently on the same property or income (e.g. federal and state income taxes), nor the taxation of the same piece of property to different persons when they hold different interests in it or when it represents different values in their hands, as when both the mortgagor and mortgagee of property are taxed in respect to their interests in it, or when a tax is laid upon the profits of a corporation and also upon the dividends paid to its shareholders. “Double taxation” means taxing twice for the same purpose in the same year some of the property in the territory in which the tax is laid without taxing all of it. Amarillo-Pecos Valley Truck Lines v. Gallegos, 44 N.M. 120, 99 P.2d 447, 451. To constitute “double taxation,” two taxes must be imposed on same property by same governing body during same taxing period and for same taxing purpose. Second St. Properties, Inc. v. Fiscal Court of Jefferson County, Ky., 445 S.W.2d 709, 715.

Term also refers to the structure of taxation under the Internal Revenue Code which subjects income earned by a corporation to an income tax at the corporate level and a second tax at the shareholder level if the same income is distributed to shareholders in the form of dividends.

Double tax rule. Collections made in taxable year on sales made in prior years, and which had already been taxed in prior years. Hoover-Bond Co. v. Denman, C.C. A. Ohio, 59 F.2d 909, 910.

Double use. In patent law, an application of a principle or process, previously known and applied, to some new use, but which does not lead to a new result or the production of a new article.

Double value. In old English law, a penalty on a tenant for life or years hold over any lands, etc., after the determination of his estate, after demand made, and notice in writing given, for delivering the possession thereof, by the landlord, or the person having the reversion or remainder therein, or his agent thereunto lawfully authorized, such tenant so holding over shall pay to the person so kept out of possession at the rate of double the yearly value of the lands, etc., so detained, for so long a time as the same are detained.

Double voucher. In old English law, this was when a common recovery was had, and an estate of freehold was first conveyed to any indifferent person against whom the praecipe was brought, and then he vouched the tenant in tail, who vouched over the common voucher. For, if a recovery were had immediately against a tenant in tail, it barred only the estate in the premises of which he was then actually seised, whereas, if the recovery were had against another person, and the tenant in tail were vouchee, it barred every latent right and interest which he might have in the lands recovered. 2 Bl.Comm. 359.

Double waste. When a tenant bound to repair suffers a house to be wasted, and then unlawfully falls timber to repair it, he is said to commit double waste.

Double will. A will in which two persons join, each leaving his property and estate to the other, so that the survivor takes the whole. See Reciprocal wills.

Doubt, v. To question or hold questionable.

Doubt, n. Uncertainty of mind; the absence of a settled opinion or conviction; the attitude of mind towards the acceptance of or belief in a proposition, theory, or statement, in which the judgment is not at rest but inclines alternately to either side.

Reasonable doubt. This is a term often used, probably quite well understood, but not easily defined. It does not mean a mere possible doubt, because everything relating to human affairs, and depending on moral evidence, is open to some possible or imaginary doubt. It is that state of the case which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of jurors in that condition that they cannot say they feel an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the truth of the charge. If upon proof there is reasonable doubt remaining, the accused is entitled to the benefit of it by an acquittal; for it is not sufficient to establish a probability, though a strong one, arising from the doctrine of chances, that the fact charged is more likely to be true than the contrary, but the evidence must establish the truth of the fact to a reasonable and moral certainty, i.e. a certainty that convinces and directs the understanding and satisfies the reason and judgment of those who are bound to act conscientiously upon it. This is proof beyond reasonable doubt; because if the law, which mostly depends upon considerations of a moral nature, should go further than this, and require absolute certainty, it would exclude circumstantial evidence altogether.

Proof "beyond a reasonable doubt" is not beyond all possible or imaginary doubt, but such proof as precludes every reasonable hypothesis except that which it tends to support. It is proof "to a moral certainty"; such proof as satisfies the judgment and consciences of the jury, as reasonable men, and applying their reason to the evidence before them, that the crime charged has been committed by the defendant, and so satisfies them as to leave no other reasonable conclusion possible.

A "reasonable doubt" is such a doubt as would cause a reasonable and prudent man in the graver and more important affairs of life to pause and hesitate to act upon the truth of the matter charged. But a reasonable doubt is not a mere possibility of innocence, nor a caprice, shadow, or speculation as to innocence not arising out of the evidence or the want of it.

See also Reasonable doubt.

Doubtful title. One as to the validity of which there exists some doubt, either as to matter of fact or of law; one which invites or exposes the party holding it to property or has bid it in at public sale. Marketable See which is of such a character that the courts will compel its acceptance by a purchaser who has agreed to buy the property or has bid it in at public sale. See Marketable title.

Dowen /dawen/. L. Fr. A gift. Otherwise written "dow" and "done." The thirty-fourth chapter of Britton is entitled "De Dounes."

Do ut des /dow at diyz/. Lat. I give that you may give; I give [you] that you may give [me]. A formula in the civil law, constituting a general division under which those contracts (termed "innominate") were classed in which something was given by one party as a consideration for something given by the other.

Do ut facias /dow at feys(h)iyys/. Lat. I give that you may do; I give [you] that you may do or make [for me]. A formula in the civil law, under which those contracts were classed in which one party gave or agreed to give money, in consideration the other party did or performed certain work. In this and the foregoing phrase, the conjunction "ut" is not to be taken as the technical means of expressing a consideration. In the Roman usage, this word imported a modus, that is, a qualification; while a consideration (causa) was more aptly expressed by the word "quia."

Dovetail seniority. Combining two or more seniority lists (usually of different companies being merged) into a master seniority list, with each employee keeping the seniority he had previously acquired even though he may thereafter be employed by a new employer.

Dowable /dawable/. Subject to be charged with dower; as dowable lands. Entitled or entitling to dower. Thus, a dowable interest in lands is such as entitles the owner to have such lands charged with dower.

Dowager /dawajar/. A widow who is endowed, or who has a jointure in lieu of dower. Widow holding property or a title received from her deceased husband. In England, this is a title or addition given to the widows of princes, dukes, earls, and other noblemen, to distinguish them from the wives of the heirs, who have right to bear the title. 1 Bl.Comm. 224.

Dowager-queen /dawajar kwyn/. The widow of the king. As such she enjoys most of the privileges belonging to her as queen consort. It is not treason to conspire her death or violate her chastity, because the succession to the crown is not thereby endangered. No man, however, can marry her without a special license from the sovereign, on pain of forfeiting his lands or goods. 1 Bl.Comm. 233.

Dower. The provision which the law makes for a widow out of the lands or tenements of her husband, for her support and the nurture of her children. 2 Bl.Comm. 130; In re Miller's Estate, 44 N.M. 214, 100 P.2d 908, 911. A species of life-estate which a woman is, by law, entitled to claim on the death of her husband, in the lands and tenements of which he was seised in fee during the marriage, and which her issue, if any, might by possibility have inherited. The life estate to which every married woman is entitled on death of her husband, intestate, or, in case she dissents from his will, one-third in value of all lands of which husband was beneficially seized in law or in fact, at any time during coverture.

Dower has been abolished in the majority of the states and materially altered in most of the others.

See also Curtesy; Election (Law of wills); Election by spouse; Inchoate dower.

Dower ad ostium ecclesie /dawar ad ostiyam skliziyi/. Dower at the church door or porch. An ancient kind of dower in England, where a man (being tenant in fee-simple, of full age), openly at the church door, where all marriages were formerly celebrated, after affiance made and troth plighted between them, endowed his wife with the whole of his lands, or such quantity as he pleased, at the same time specifying and ascertaining the same. 2 Bl.Comm. 133.

Dower by common law. The ordinary kind of dower in English and American law, consisting of a life interest in one-third of the lands of which the husband was seised in fee at any time during the coverture. 2 Bl.Comm. 132. Abolished by the Administration of Estates Act, 1945, § 45.

Dower by custom. A kind of dower in England, regulated by custom, where the quantity allowed the wife different from the proportion of the common law; as that the wife should have half the husband’s lands; or, in some places, the whole; and, in some, only a quarter. 2 Bl.Comm. 132.

Dower de la plus belle (de 1a pluis beale). A species of dower in ancient English law, incident to the old tenures, where there was a guardian in chivalry, and the wife occupied lands of the heir as guardian in socage. If the wife brought a writ of dower against such guardian in chivalry, he might show this kind of dower was abolished with the military tenures. 2 Bl.Comm. 132.

Dower ex assensu patris /dáwar éks sénse(h)/yiw pétras/. Dower by the father’s assent. A species of dower ad ostium ecclesiae, made when the husband’s father was alive, and the son, by his consent expressly given, endowed his wife with parcel of his father’s lands. 2 Bl.Comm. 133.

Dower unde nihil habet /dáwar éndiy náy(h)/al hýbat/. A writ of right which lay for a widow to whom no dower had been assigned.

Dow Jones Average. A stock market performance indicator that consists of the price movements in the top 30 industrial companies in the United States.

Dowel stones. Stones dividing lands, etc.

Dowement. In old English law, endowment; dower.

Down payment. The portion of purchase price which is generally required to be paid at time purchase and sale agreement is signed and is generally paid in cash or its equivalent. An amount of money paid to the seller at the time of sale, which represents only a part of the total cost. See Earnest money.

Dowress /dáwa(h)ras/. A woman entitled to dower; a tenant in dower.

Dowry. The property which a woman brings to her husband in marriage; also sometimes called a “portion.” See Dos.

Dozen peers /dázan pírrz/. Twelve peers assembled at the instance of the barons, in the reign of Henry III, to be privy counselors, or rather conservators of the kingdom.

D. P. An abbreviation for Domus Procerum, the house of lords.

Dr. An abbreviation for “doctor”. Also, in commercial usage, for “debtor,” indicating the items or particulars in a bill or in an account-book chargeable against the person to whom the bill is rendered or in whose name the account stands, as opposed to “Cr.” (“Credit” or “creditor”), which indicates the items for which he is given credit.

Drachma /drákma/. A term employed in old pleadings and records, to denote a great.

An Athenian silver coin, of the value of about fifteen cents.

Draconian laws /drakóniyan lóz/. A code of laws prepared by Draco, the celebrated lawgiver of Athens. These laws were exceedingly severe, and the term is now sometimes applied to any laws of unusual harshness.

Druff. Waste matter, sweepings, refuse, lees, or dregs. In weighing commodities the term signifies dust and dirt, and not what is generally meant by “draught” or “draft” (q.v.).

Draft. A written order by the first party, called the drawer, instructing a second party, called the drawee (such as a bank), to pay money to a third party, called the payee. An order to pay a sum certain in money, signed by a drawer, payable on demand or at a definite time, and to order or bearer. People v. Norwood, 26 Cal.App.3d 148, 103 Cal.Rptr. 7, 11. An unconditional order to pay money drawn by drawer on drawee to the order of the payee; same as a bill of exchange. U.C.C. § 3–104. See also Check; Documentary draft; Redraft; Sight draft; Trade acceptance.

A tentative, provisional, or preparatory writing out of any document (as a will, contract, lease, etc.) for purposes of discussion and correction, which is afterwards to be prepared in its final form.

Compulsory conscription of persons into military service.

Also, a small arbitrary deduction or allowance made to a merchant or importer, in the case of goods sold by wright or taxable by weight, to cover possible loss of weight in handling or from differences in scales.

Bank draft. One drawn by one bank on another.

Clean draft. One which has no shipping documents attached.

Documentary draft. One to which various shipping documents are attached.

Overdraft. Writing a check for more money than is in account.

Sight draft. One which is payable on presentation or demand. U.C.C § 3–108.

Time draft. One payable a certain number of days after sight or after presentation for acceptance. The number of days must be specified. U.C.C § 3–109.
DRAFT BOARD

Draft board. Federal agency that registers, classifies and selects men for compulsory military service. See also Selective Service System.

Draftsman. Any one who draws or frames a legal document, e.g., a will, conveyance, pleading, etc. One who draws plans and specifications for machinery, structures, etc.

Dragnet clause. Provision in a mortgage in which mortgagor gives security for past and future advances as well as present indebtedness. A type of mortgage provision that attempts to make the mortgaged real estate security for other, usually unspecified, debts that the mortgagor may already or in the future owe to the mortgagee. While it is a species of future advances mortgage, the mortgagor and mortgagee rarely have in mind any specific future advances.

Drago doctrine. The principle asserted by Luis Drago, Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Argentine Republic, in a letter to the Argentine Minister at Washington, December 29, 1902, that the forcible intervention of states to secure the payment of public debts due to their citizens from foreign states is unjustifiable and dangerous to the security and peace of the nations of South America. The subject was brought before the Conference by the United States and a Convention was adopted in which the contracting powers agreed, with some restrictive conditions, not to have recourse to armed force for the recovery of contract debts claimed by their nationals against a foreign state. See Calvo doctrine.

Drain, v. To conduct water from one place to another, for the purpose of drying the former. To make dry; to draw off water; to rid land of its superfluous moisture by adapting or improving natural water courses and supplementing them, when necessary, by artificial ditches. To "drain," in its larger sense, includes not only the supplying of outlets and channels to relieve the land from water, but also the provision of ditches, drains, and embankments to prevent water from accumulating.

To totally consume or exhaust.

Drain, n. A trench or ditch to convey water from wet land; a channel through which water may flow off. The word has no technical legal meaning. Any hollow space in the ground, natural or artificial, where water is collected and passes off, is a ditch or drain.

Also, sometimes, the easement or servitude (acquired by grant or prescription) which consists in the right to drain water through another's land. See Drainage rights.

Public drainage way. The land reserved or dedicated for the installation of storm water sewers or drainage ditches, or required along a natural stream or water course for preserving the channel and providing for the flow of water to safeguard the public against flood damage, sedimentation, and erosion.

Drainage district. A political subdivision of the state, created for the purpose of draining and reclaiming wet and overflowed land, as well as to preserve the public health and convenience.

Drainage rights. A landowner may not obstruct or divert the natural flow of a watercourse or natural drainage course to the injury of another. In urban areas, "natural drainage course" is narrowly interpreted to include only streams with well-defined channels and banks. In rural areas, the term is more broadly construed, apparently including the flow and direction of diffused surface waters. Chamberlin v. Claffoni, 373 Pa. 430, 436, 437, 96 A.2d 140, 143. See also Water (Water rights).

Dram. A drink of some substance containing alcohol; something which can produce intoxication. An apothecary system measurement of fluid, roughly equivalent to 4 or 5 cc, or one teaspoonful.

Drama. A term descriptive of any representation in which a story is told, a moral conveyed, or the passions portrayed, whether by words and actions combined, or by mere actions alone.

Dramatic composition. In copyright law, a literary work setting forth a story, incident, or scene from life, in which, however, the narrative is not related, but is represented by a dialogue and action; may include a descriptive poem set to music, or a pantomime.

Dram shop. A drinking establishment where liquors are sold to be drunk on the premises; a bar or saloon.

Dram Shop Acts. Many states have Dram Shop or Civil Liability Acts which impose liability on the seller of intoxicating liquors (which may or may not include beer), when a third party is injured as a result of the intoxication of the buyer where the sale has caused or contributed to such intoxication. Some acts apply to gifts as well as sales. Such acts protect the third party not only against personal injuries and property damages resulting directly from affirmative acts of the intoxicated man, such as resulting from negligent operation of a vehicle or assault and battery, but also against the loss of family support due to such injuries.

Draw, v. To draw a firearm or deadly weapon is to point it intentionally. To draw a bead on; to bring into line with the bead or fore sight of a rifle and the hind sight; to aim at.

The act of a drawer in creating a draft. To draw a bill of exchange, check, or draft, is to write (or cause it to be written) and sign it; to make, as a note.

To compose and write out in due form, as, a deed, complaint, petition, memorial, etc.

To draw a jury is to select the persons who are to compose it, either by taking their names successively, but at hazard, from the jury box, or by summoning them individually to attend the court. See impanel.

In old criminal practice, to drag (on a hurdle) to the place of execution. Anciently no hurdle was allowed, but the criminal was actually dragged along the road to the place of execution. A part of the ancient punishment of traitors was to be thus drawn. 4 Bl.Comm. 92, 377.

To withdraw money; i.e., to take out money from a bank, treasury, or other depository in the exercise of a lawful right and in a lawful manner. To periodically advance money on a construction loan agreement or against future sales commissions. See also Drawing account.

Drawback. In the customs laws, an allowance made by the government upon the duties due on imported merchandise when the importer, instead of selling it here, re-exports it; or the refunding of such duties if already paid. This allowance amounts, in some cases, to the whole of the original duties; in others, to a part only. See 19 U.S.C.A. § 1313.

Drawee. The person on whom a bill or draft is drawn.

A person to whom a bill of exchange or draft is directed, and who is requested to pay the amount of money therein mentioned. The drawee of a check is the bank on which it is drawn.

When drawee accepts, he engages that he will pay the instrument according to its tenor at the time of his engagement or as completed. U.C.C. § 3-413(1).

Drawer. The person who draws a bill or draft.

The drawer of a check is the person who signs it. The person who creates or executes a draft, that is, issues it, and in signing the instrument gives the order to pay contained therein.

The drawer engages that upon dishonor of the draft and any necessary notice of dishonor or protest, he will pay the amount of the draft to the holder or to any indorser who takes it up. The drawer may disclaim this liability by drawing without recourse. U.C.C. § 3-413(2).

Drawing account. Fund of money from which salesperson or other employees may draw in anticipation of future earnings or commissions; may be used to pay current expenses.

Drawing lots. An act in which selection is based on pure chance and in which the result depends upon the particular lot which is drawn. See also Lottery.

Drawlatches. /drələchəz/. Thieves; robbers.

Drayage. A charge for the local transportation of property. Similar to cartage.

Dred Scott Case. The case in which the United States Supreme Court held that descendants of Africans who were imported into this country, and sold as slaves, were not included in the word "Citizens" in the Constitution, whether emancipated or not, and remained without rights or privileges except as those which the government might grant them. Dred Scott v. Sandford, 60 U.S. (19 How.) 393, 15 L.Ed. 691.

Dreit-dreit. /driyt-driyt/. Droit-droit. (Also written without the hyphen.) Double right. A union of the right of possession and the right of property. 2 Bl. Comm. 199.

Drenches, or drenges. In Saxon law, tenants in capite. They are said to be such as, at the coming of William the Conqueror, being put out of their estates, where afterwards restored to them, on their making it appear that they were the true owners thereof, and neither in auxilio or consilio against him.

Drengage. /drɛŋɡeɪdʒ/. The tenure by which the drenches, or drenges, held their lands. A variety of feudal tenure by serjeanty (q.v.), often occurring in the northern counties of England, involving a kind of general service.

Driftland, drofland, or dryfland. A Saxon word, signifying a tribute or yearly payment made by some tenants to the king, or their landlords, for driving their cattle through a manor to fairs or markets.

Drifts of the forest. In old English law, a view or examination of what cattle were in a forest, chase, etc., that it could be known whether such be surcharged or not; and whose the beasts were, and whether they were commonable. These drifts were made at certain times in the year by the officers of the forest, when all cattle were driven into some pound or place inclosed, for the before-mentioned purposes, and also to discover whether any cattle of strangers be there, which ought not to be common.

Drift-stuff. This term signifies, not goods which are the subject of salvage, but matters floating at random, without any known or discoverable ownership, which, if cast ashore, will probably never be reclaimed, but will, as a matter of course, accrue to the riparian proprietor.

Drinking-shop. A place where intoxicating liquors are sold to be drunk on the premises; a bar or saloon.

Drip rights. A species of easement or servitude obligating one man to permit the water falling from another man’s house to fall upon his own land. See also Eaves-drip.

Drive-it-yourself cars. A term used to describe automobiles which their owners, as a regular business, rent out for hire without furnishing drivers. More commonly termed "rental" or "leased" cars.

Driver. A person actually doing driving, whether employed by owner to drive or driving his own vehicle.

Driver's license. The certificate or license issued by a state which authorizes a person to operate a motor vehicle. Generally, a written and driving examination is required for obtaining such.

Driving. To urge forward under guidance, compel to go in a particular direction, urge onward, and direct the course of.

Driving while intoxicated (DWI). An offense committed by one who operates a motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicating liquor or drugs. A showing of complete intoxication is not required. State statutes specify levels of blood alcohol content at which a person is presumed to be under the influence of intoxicating liquor. See also Blood alcohol count; Blood test evidence; Breathalyzer test; Consent (Implied consent); Drunk-o-meter; Field sobriety tests; Intoxilizer; Intoximeter; Sobriety checkpoint.

DRIVING WHILE INTOXICATED
Drofland /drófland/. In old English law, a quit rent, or yearly payment, formerly made by some tenants to the king, or their landlords, for driving their cattle through a manor to fairs or markets.

Droit Fr. /dróht/. In French law, right, justice, equity, law, the whole body of law; also a right.

This term exhibits the same ambiguity which is discoverable in the German equivalent, "recht" and the English word "right." On the one hand, these terms answer to the Roman "jus," and thus indicate law in the abstract, considered as the foundation of all rights, or the complex of underlying moral principles which impart the character of justice to all positive law, or give it an ethical content. Taken in this abstract sense, the terms may be adjectives, in which case they are equivalent to "just," or nouns, in which case they may be paraphrased by the expressions "justice," "morality," or "equity." On the other hand, they serve to point out a right; that is, a power, privilege, faculty, or demand, inherent in one person, and incident upon another. In the latter signification, droit (or recht or right) is the correlative of "duty" or "obligation." In the former sense, it may be considered as opposed to wrong, injustice, or the absence of law. Droit has the further ambiguity that it is sometimes used to denote the existing body of law considered as one whole, or the sum total of a number of individual laws taken together. See Jus; Recht; Right.

A person was said to have droit droit, plurimum juris, and plurimum possessionis, when he had the freehold, the fee, and the property in him.

In old English law, law; right; a writ of right. Autre droit. The right of another.

Droit-close /dróht klóws/. An ancient writ, directed to the lord of ancient demesne on behalf of those of his tenants who held their lands and tenements by charter in fee-simple, in fee-tail, for life, or in dower.

Droit common /dróht kóman/. The common law.

Droit coutumier /dróht kwootýmý. Common law.

Droit d'accession /dróht daksésýawn/. That property which is acquired by making a new species out of the material of another. It is equivalent to the Roman "specificatio."

Droit d'accroissement /dróht dakra(w)wasmón/. The right which an heir or legatee has of combining with his own interest in a succession the interest of a coheir or colegatee who either refuses to or cannot accept his interest.

Droit d'aubaine /dróht dωwbé(y)n/. A rule by which all the property of a deceased foreigner, whether movable or immovable, was confiscated to the use of the state, to the exclusion of his heirs, whether claiming ab intestato or under a will of the deceased. Finally abolished in 1819.

Droit de bris /dróht dabrý/. A right formerly claimed by the lords of the coasts of certain parts of France, to shipwrecks, by which not only the property, but the persons of those who were cast away, were confiscated for the prince who was lord of the coast. Otherwise called "droit de bris sur le naufrage." This right prevailed chiefly in Bretagne, and was solemnly abrogated by Henry III as duke of Normandy, Aquitaine, and Guienne, in a charter granted A.D. 1226, preserved among the rolls at Bordeaux.

Droit de détraction /dróht də détraktsyown/. A tax upon the removal from one state or country to another of property acquired by succession or testamentary disposition; it does not cover a tax upon the succession to or transfer of property. Cf. Duties of detraction.

Droit de garde /dróht da gár/. In French feudal law, right of ward. The guardianship of the estate and person of a noble vassal, to which the king, during his minority, was entitled.

Droit de gite /dróht da zhiyt/. In French feudal law, the duty incumbent on a roturier, holding lands within the royal domain, of supplying board and lodging to the king and to his suite while on a royal progress.

Droit de greffe /dróht da gré/. In old French law, the right of selling various offices connected with the custody of judicial records or notarial acts. A privilege of the French kings.

Droit de maitrise /dróht d(o) meytriyz/. In old French law, a charge payable to the crown by any one who, after having served his apprenticeship in any commercial guild or brotherhood, sought to become a master workman in it on his own account.

Droit de naufrage /dróht d(o) nowfráz/. The right of a seigneur, who owns the seashore, or the king, when a vessel is wrecked, to take possession of the wreckage and to kill the crew or sell them as slaves.

Droit de prise /dróht d(o) príyz/. In French feudal law, the duty (incumbent on a roturier) of supplying to the king on credit, during a certain period, such articles of domestic consumption as might be required for the royal household.

Droit de quint /dróht də kán(t)/. In French feudal law, a relief payable by a noble vassal to the king as his seigneur, on every change in the ownership of his fief.

Droit de suite /dróht də swiyt/. The right of a creditor to pursue the debtor's property into the hands of third persons for the enforcement of his claim.

Droit d'exécution /dróht dəkseykýwyzyown/. The right of a stockbroker to sell the securities bought by him for account of a client, if the latter does not accept delivery thereof. The same expression is also applied to the sale by a stockbroker of securities deposited with him by his client, in order to guarantee the payment of operations for which the latter has given instructions.

Droit-droit. A double right; that is, the right of possession and the right of property. These two rights were, by the theory of our ancient law, distinct; and the above phrase was used to indicate the concurrence of both in one person, which concurrence was necessary to constitute a complete title to land.
Droit écrit /drwó eykriy/. In French law, the written law. The Roman civil law, or Corpus Juris Civilis.

Droit international /drwó ânternâsyonâl/. International law.

Droit maritime /drwó marâtylym/. Maritime law.

Droit moral /drwo märiyttym/. A European doctrine of "artistic integrity" that gives artists the right to prevent others from altering their work without permission. Non-pecuniary right based upon the dual relationship between society and its artists, and the artist and his work. The basic rights sought to be protected under this concept comprise: the right to create; the right to disclose or publish; the right to withdraw from publication; the right to be identified with the work; and, the right to integrity with respect to the work, including the right to object to the mutilation or distortion of the work.

Droit naturel /drwó natyrel/. The law of nature.

Droit ne doit pas morir /drwó na poyâ pà mouriy/. Right cannot die.

Droits civils /drwó sivil/. This phrase in French law denotes private rights, the exercise of which is independent of the status (qualité) of citizen. Foreigners enjoy them; and the extent of that enjoyment is determined by the principle of reciprocity. Conversely, foreigners may be sued on contracts made by them in France.

Droits of admiralty /droyts əv ədmâraltîy/. Rights or perquisites of the admiralty. A term applied to goods found derelict at sea. Applied also to property captured in time of war by non-commissioned vessels of a belligerent nation. In England, it has been usual in maritime wars for the government to seize and condemn, as droits of admiralty, the property of an enemy found in her ports at the breaking out of hostilities. The power to exercise such a right has not been delegated to, nor has it ever been claimed by, the United States government.

Droitural /drwótyral/. That belongs of right; relating to right; as real actions are either droitural or possessory,—droitural when the plaintiff seeks to recover the property.

Dromones, dromos, dromunda /dromównyjts, drów-mow, drów-mända/. These were at first high ships of great burden, but afterwards those which we now call "men-of-war."

Drop. In English practice, when the members of a court are equally divided on the argument showing cause against a rule nisi, no order is made, e.g., the rule is neither discharged nor made absolute, and the rule is said to drop. In practice, there being a right to appeal, it has been usual to make an order in one way, the junior judge withdrawing his judgment.

Drop-letter. A letter addressed for delivery in the same city or district in which it is posted.

Drop shipment delivery. Shipment of goods directly from manufacturer to dealer or consumer rather than first to wholesaler, though wholesaler still earns profit because he took order for such.

Drop shipper. Type of wholesaler described above.

Drove. A number of animals collected and driven together in a body; a flock or herd of cattle in process of being driven, indefinite as to number, but including at least several.

Drover's pass. A free pass given by a railroad company, accepting a drove of cattle for transportation, to the drover who accompanies and cares for the cattle on the train.

Drug. An article intended for use in the diagnosis, cure, mitigation, treatment, or prevention of disease in man or other animals and any article other than food intended to affect the structure or any function of the body of man or other animals. 21 U.S.C.A. § 321(g)(1). The general name of substances used in medicine; any substance, vegetable, animal, or mineral, used in the composition or preparation of medicines; any substance used as a medicine. See Controlled Substance Acts.

Drug abuse. State of chronic or periodic intoxication detrimental to the individual and to society, produced by the repeated consumption of a drug, natural or synthetic. See also Addict; Drug dependence.

The voluntary, habitual, and excessive use of drugs is a ground for divorce in many states.

Drug addict. A person subject to drug abuse. See Addict; Drug abuse; Drug dependence.

Drug dependence. Habituation to, abuse of, and/or addiction to a chemical substance. See Addict.

Druggist. A dealer in drugs; one whose business is to mix, compound, dispense, and sell drugs.

Drugless healer. Any person who practises or holds himself out in any way as practising the treatment of any ailment, disease, defect, or disability of the human body by manipulation, adjustment, manual or electrotherapy, or by any similar method. State v. Houck, 32 Wash.2d 681, 203 P.2d 693, 699. See Chiropractor.

Drummer. A term applied to commercial agents who travel for wholesale merchants and supply the retail trade with goods or take orders for goods to be shipped to the retail dealer. Term most commonly refers to traveling salesmen. See also Commercial traveler.

Drungarius /drugöriyas/. In old European law, the commander of a drungus, or band of soldiers. Applied also to a naval commander.

Drungus /drögas/. In old European law, a band of soldiers (globus militum).

Drunk. See Drunkenness; Intoxication.

Drunkard. One who is habitually intoxicated. A "common" drunkard is defined by statute in some states as a person who has been convicted of drunkenness (or proved to have been drunk) a certain number of times within a limited period. Elsewhere the word "common" in this connection is understood as being equivalent to "habitual."

Drunkleness. State of intoxication. The condition of a person whose mind is affected by the consumption of intoxicating drinks; the state of one who is "drunk." The effect produced upon the mind or body by drinking intoxicating liquors to such an extent that the normal condition of the subject is changed and his capacity for rational action and conduct is substantially lessened. See also Driving while intoxicated; Intoxication.

While some states have decriminalized public drunkleness (e.g. Mass.), there is no constitutional infirmity in a criminal statute which penalizes being drunk in public. Powell v. Texas, 392 U.S. 514, 88 S.Ct. 2145, 20 L.Ed.2d 1254.

Drunk-o-meter. Device used for measuring blood alcohol content by chemical analysis of the breath. The results of such tests are generally used in prosecutions for drunk driving or operating a vehicle under the influence of liquor. See also Blood alcohol count; Breathalyzer test; Consent (Implied consent); Driving while intoxicated; Field sobriety tests; Intoximeter; Intoximeter.

Dry, adj. In the vernacular, this term means desiccated or free from moisture; but, in legal use, it signifies formal or nominal, without imposing any duty or responsibility, or unfruitful, without bringing any profit or advantage; e.g. dry trust.

Dry, n. Term used to designate a person who is opposed to allowing the sale of intoxicating liquors; a prohibitionist, in contradistinction to a "wet," or antiprohibitionist.

Dry-craft. Witchcraft; magic.

Dry exchange. In English law, a term formerly in use, said to have been invented for the purpose of disguising and covering usury; something being pretended to pass on both sides, whereas, in truth, nothing passed but on one side, in which respect it was called "dry."

Dry hole agreement. A support agreement in which the contributing party agrees to make a cash contribution in exchange for geological or drilling information, if a dry hole is drilled.

Dry hole clause. A provision in an oil and gas lease specifying what a lessee must do to maintain the lease for the remainder of the primary term after drilling an unproductive well. A dry hole clause is intended to make clear that the lease may be maintained by payment of delay rentals for the remainder of the primary term.

Dry mortgage. One which creates a lien on land for the payment of money, but does not impose any personal liability upon the mortgagor, collateral to or over and above the value of the premises.

Dry receivership. Receivership wherein there is no equity to be administered for general creditors, even if action is in statutory form.

Dry rent. Rent seek; a rent reserved without a clause of distress.

Dry state. State wherein sale of intoxicating liquors is prohibited.

Dry trust. A passive trust; one which requires no action on the part of the trustee beyond turning over money or property to the cestui que trust.

Dual business. Such business must show units of substantial separateness and completeness, such as might be maintained as an independent business and capable of producing profit in and of themselves.

Dual capacity doctrine. Under this doctrine employer normally shielded from tort liability by exclusive remedy of workers' compensation law may become liable in tort to his employee if he occupies, in addition to his capacity as employer, a second capacity that confers on him obligations independent of those imposed on him as employer. Pavlek v. Forbes Steel and Wire Corp., 358 Pa.Super. 316, 517 A.2d 564, 565.

Dual citizenship. Citizenship in two different countries. Status of citizens of United States who reside within a state; i.e., persons who are born or naturalized in the U.S. are citizens of the U.S. and the state wherein they reside.

Dual court system. Term descriptive of Federal and State court systems of United States.

Dual distributor. A firm that sells goods simultaneously to buyers on two different levels of the distribution chain—such as a manufacturer who sells directly to both wholesalers and retailers—is called a dual distributor.

Dual listing. See Listed security.

Dual purpose doctrine. The dual purpose doctrine is that if the work of an employee creates a necessity for travel, he is in the course of his employment while doing that work even though at the same time he is serving some purpose of his own. Snowden v. Orscheln Bros. Truck Lines, Inc., Mo.App., 446 S.W.2d 494, 496. Doctrine is that injury during trip which serves both business and personal purpose is within course of employment if trip involves performance of service for employer which would have caused trip to be taken by someone even if it had not coincided with personal journey. Stoskin v. Board of Ed. of Montgomery County, 11 Md.App. 355, 274 A.2d 397, 400.

Duas uxores eodem tempore habere non licet. It is not lawful to have two wives at the same time. 1 Bl.Comm. 436.
Dubitante /ˈdjuːbɪtænti/ - Doubting. Term is affixed to the name of a judge, in the reports, to signify that he doubted the decision rendered.

Dubitatur /ˈdjuːbɪtətər/ - It is doubted. A word frequently used in the reports to indicate that a point is considered doubtful.

Dubitavit /ˈdjuːbɪtəvɪt/ - Doubted.

Ducat /ˈdʊkat/ - A foreign coin, varying in value in different countries.

Ducatus /ˈdʊkətəs/ - In feudal and old English law, a ducy, the dignity or territory of a duke.

Ducem tecum /ˈdʊxɪm tɛkəm/ - (Lat. Bring with you.) The name of certain species of writs, of which the subpoena duces tecum is the most usual, requiring a party who is summoned to appear in court to bring with him some document, piece of evidence, or other thing to be used or inspected by the court. See Subpoena duces tecum.

Duces tecum licet languidus /ˈdʊsɪm tɛkəm ləˈŋkwɪdəs/ - (Brin with you, although sick.) In practice, an ancient writ, now obsolete, directed to the sheriff, upon a return that he could not bring his prisoner without danger of death, he being adeo languidus (so sick); whereupon the court granted a habeas corpus in the nature of a duces tecum licent languidus.

Duchy Court of Lancaster. - A tribunal of special jurisdiction, held before the chancellor of the ducy, or his deputy, concerning all matters of equity relating to lands held of the crown in right of the duchy of Lancaster; which is a thing very distinct from the county palatine (which has also its separate chancery, for sealing of writs, and the like), and comprises much territory which lies at a vast distance from it; as particularly a very large district surrounded by the city of Westminster. The proceedings in this court are the same as were those on the equity side of the court of chancery, so that it seems not to be a court of record; and, indeed, it has been held that the court of chancery has a concurrent jurisdiction with the ducy court, and may take cognizance of the same causes. Although not formally abolished, this court has not sat since 1835.

Duchy of Lancaster /ˈdʊʃi ɔv ˈlæŋkəstər/ - Those lands which formerly belonged to the dukes of Lancaster, and now belong to the crown in right of the duchy. The duchy is distinct from the county palatine of Lancaster, and includes not only the county, but also much territory at a distance from it, especially the Savoy in London and some land near Westminster. 3 Bl.Comm. 78.

Ducking-stool. - See Castigatory.

Ducroire /ˈdjuːkwərər/ - In French law, guaranty; equivalent to del credere (which see).

Due. - Just; proper; regular; lawful; sufficient; reasonable, as in the phrases "due care," "due process of law," "due notice."

Owing; payable; justly owed. That which one contracts to pay or perform to another; that which law or justice requires to be paid or done.

DUE CONSIDERATION

Owed, or owing, as distinguished from payable. A debt is often said to be due from a person where he is the party owing it, or primarily bound to pay, whether the time for payment has or has not arrived. The same thing is true of the phrase "due and owning."

Payable. A bill or note is commonly said to be due when the time for payment of it has arrived.

The word "due" always imports a fixed and settled obligation or liability, but with reference to the time for its payment there is considerable ambiguity in the use of the term, the precise signification being determined in each case from the context. It may mean that the debt or claim in question is now (presently or immediately) matured and enforceable, or that it matured at some time in the past and yet remains unsatisfied, or that it is fixed and certain but the day appointed for its payment has not yet arrived. But commonly, and in the absence of any qualifying expressions, the word "due" is restricted to the first of these meanings, the second being expressed by the term "overdue," and the third by the word "payable."

Due and proper care. - That degree of care which is required of one for prevention of the accident. See Due care.

Due and reasonable care. - Care which reasonably prudent man would exercise under same or similar circumstances. See Due care.

Due bill. - Written acknowledgment of a debt, or promise to pay. See IOU.

Due care. - Just, proper, and sufficient care, so far as the circumstances demand; the absence of negligence. That degree of care that a reasonable person can be expected to exercise to avoid harm reasonably foreseeable if such care is not taken. That care which an ordinarily prudent person would have exercised under the same or similar circumstances. Strickland v. Hughes, 2 N.C. App. 395, 163 S.E.2d 24, 26. "Due care" is care proportioned to any given situation, its surroundings, peculiarities, and hazards. It may and often does require extraordinary care. "Due care," "reasonable care," and "ordinary care" are often used as convertible terms.

This term, as usually understood in cases where the gist of the action is the defendant's negligence, implies not only that a party has not been negligent or careless, but that he has been guilty of no violation of law in relation to the subject-matter or transaction which constitutes the cause of action.

Due compensation. - Term as used in eminent domain is the value of land taken and the damages, if any, which result to owner as a consequence of the taking without considering either general benefits or injuries. See Just compensation.

Due consideration. - To give such weight or significance to a particular factor as under the circumstances it seems to merit, and this involves discretion. United States ex rel. Maine Potato Growers & Shippers Ass'n v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 66 App.D.C. 398, 88

DUE CONSIDERATION

F.2d 780, 783. As regards sufficient consideration in contract law, see Consideration.

Due course holder. See Holder in due course.

Due course of law. This phrase is synonymous with "due process of law," or "the law of the land," and the general definition thereof is "law in its regular course of administration through courts of justice." See Due process of law.

Due date. In general, the particular day on or before which something must be done to comply with law or contractual obligation.

Due diligence. See Diligence.

Due influence. Influence obtained by persuasion and argument or by appeals to the affections. In re Chamberlain's Estate, Cal.App., 109 P.2d 449, 452. See also Coercion; Dueress.

Duel. A duel is any combat with deadly weapons fought between two or more persons, by previous agreement or upon a previous quarrel.

Dueling. The fighting of two persons, one against the other, at an appointed time and place, upon a precedent quarrel. If death results, the crime is murder. It differs from an affair in this, that the latter occurs on a sudden quarrel, while the former is always the result of design.

Duellum /duwelom/. The trial by battel or judicial combat. See Battel.

Due negotiation. Transferring a negotiable document of title under such conditions that the transferee takes the document and the goods free of certain claims enforceable against the transferor. See U.C.C. §§ 7-501(4) & 7-502(1). Due negotiation is the good faith purchase exception to the doctrine of derivative title as applied to documents.

Due notice. Sufficient, legally prescribed notice. Notice reasonably intended, and with the likelihood of, reaching the particular person or public. No fixed rule can be established as to what shall constitute "due notice." "Due" is a relative term, and must be applied to each case in the exercise of the discretion of the court in view of the particular circumstances. See Notice.

Due-on-encumbrance clause. Mortgage language that gives the mortgagor the option to accelerate the mortgage debt in the event the mortgagor further encumbers or mortgages the real estate without mortgagor's consent.

Due-on-sale clause. A provision usually found in a note or mortgage whereby the entire debt becomes immediately due and payable at mortgagee's option upon sale of mortgaged property. Such clauses are generally used to prevent subsequent purchasers from assuming existing loans at lower than current market rates. The validity of such provisions has been upheld by the Supreme Court.

Due posting. Stamping and placing letter in United States mail.

Due process clause. Two such clauses are found in the U.S. Constitution, one in the 5th Amendment pertaining to the federal government, the other in the 14th Amendment which protects persons from state actions. There are two aspects: procedural, in which a person is guaranteed fair procedures and substantive which protects a person's property from unfair governmental interference or taking. Similar clauses are in most state constitutions. See Due process of law.

Due process of law. Law in its regular course of administration through courts of justice. Due process of law in each particular case means such an exercise of the powers of the government as the settled maxims of law permit and sanction, and under such safeguards for the protection of individual rights as those maxims prescribe for the class of cases to which the one in question belongs. A course of legal proceedings according to those rules and principles which have been established in our systems of jurisprudence for the enforcement and protection of private rights. To give such proceedings any validity, there must be a tribunal competent by its constitution—that is, by the law of its creation—to pass upon the subject-matter of the suit; and, if that involves merely a determination of the personal liability of the defendant, he must be brought within its jurisdiction by service of process within the state, or his voluntary appearance. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 733, 24 L.Ed. 565. Due process of law implies the right of the person affected thereby to be present before the tribunal which pronounces judgment upon the question of life, liberty, or property, in its most comprehensive sense; to be heard, by testimony or otherwise, and to have the right of controverting, by proof, every material fact which bears on the question of right in the matter involved. If any question of fact or liability be conclusively presumed against him, this is not due process of law.

An orderly proceeding wherein a person is served with notice, actual or constructive, and has an opportunity to be heard and to enforce and protect his rights before a court having power to hear and determine the case. Kazubowski v. Kazubowski, 45 Ill.2d 405, 259 N.E.2d 282, 290. Phrase means that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, property or of any right granted him by statute, unless matter involved first shall have been adjudicated against him upon trial conducted according to established rules regulating judicial proceedings, and it forbids condemnation without a hearing. Pettit v. Penn, La.App., 180 So.2d 66, 69. The concept of "due process of law" as it is embodied in Fifth Amendment demands that a law shall not be unreasonable, arbitrary, or capricious and that the means selected shall have a reasonable and substantial relation to the object being sought. U. S. v. Smith, D.C.Iowa, 249 F.Supp. 515, 516. Fundamental requisite of "due process" is the opportunity to be heard, to be aware that a matter is pending, to make an informed choice whether to acquiesce or contest, and to assert before the appropriate decision-making body the reasons for such choice. Trinity Episcopal Corp. v. Romney, D.C.N.Y., 387 F.Supp. 1044, 1084. Aside from all else, "due process"

Embodied in the due process concept are the basic rights of a defendant in criminal proceedings and the requisites for a fair trial. These rights and requirements have been expanded by Supreme Court decisions and include, timely notice of a hearing or trial which informs the accused of the charges against him or her; the opportunity to confront accusers and to present evidence on one’s own behalf before an impartial jury or judge; the presumption of innocence under which guilt must be proven by legally obtained evidence and the verdict must be supported by the evidence presented; the right of an accused to be warned of constitutional rights at the earliest stage of the criminal process; protection against self-incrimination; assistance of counsel at every critical stage of the criminal process; and the guarantee that an individual will not be tried more than once for the same offense (double jeopardy).

See also Procedural due process; Substantive due process.

Due process rights. All rights which are of such fundamental importance as to require compliance with due process standards of fairness and justice. Procedural and substantive rights of citizens against government actions that threaten the denial of life, liberty, or property. See Due process of law.

Due proof. Within insurance policy requirements, term means such a statement of facts, reasonably verified, as, if established in court, would prima facie require payment of the claim, and does not mean some particular form of proof which the insurer arbitrarily demands. National Life Ins. Co. v. White, D.C.Mun.App., 38 A.2d 663, 666. Sufficient evidence to support or produce a conclusion; adequate evidence. See Burden of proof; Proof.

Due regard. Consideration in a degree appropriate to demands of the particular case.

Dues. Certain payments; rates or taxes. As applied to clubs and other membership organizations, refers to sums paid toward support and maintenance of same and as a requisite to retain membership.

Due to. Expressions "sustained by," "caused by," "due to," "resulting from," "sustained by means of," "sustained in consequence of," and "sustained through" have been held to be synonymous.

D.U.I. The crime of driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs. See Driving while intoxicated.

Duke. In English law, is a title of nobility, ranking immediately next to the Prince of Wales. It is only a title of dignity. Conferring it does not give any domain, territory, or jurisdiction over the place whence the title is taken. Duchess, the consort of a duke.

Duke of Exeter’s Daughter. The name of a rack in the Tower, so called after a minister of Henry VI, who sought to introduce it into England.

Dulocracy /dyʊlɒkrəsi/. A government where servants and slaves have so much license and privilege that they dominate.

Duly. In due or proper form or manner; according to legal requirements. Regularly; properly; suitable; upon a proper foundation, as distinguished from mere form; according to law in both form and substance. See Due process of law.

Duly ordained minister of religion. Person who has been ordained in accordance with the ceremonial, ritual, or discipline of a recognized church, religious sect, or religious organization, to teach and preach its doctrines and to administer its rites and ceremonies and public worship, and who customarily performs those duties.

Duly qualified. Being “duly qualified” to fill an office, in the constitutional sense and in the ordinary acceptance of the words, means that the officer shall possess every qualification; that he shall in all respects comply with every requisite before entering on duties of the office; and that he shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support the Constitution, and to perform the duties of the office with fidelity.

Dum /dəm/. Lat. While; as long as; until; upon condition that; provided that.

Dumb-bidding. In sales at auction, when the minimum amount which the owner will take for the article is written on a piece of paper, and placed by the owner under an object, and it is agreed that no bidding shall avail unless equal to that, this is called “dumb-bidding.”

Dum bene se gesserit /dəm biyniy sīy ħesarat/. While he shall conduct himself well; during good behavior. Expressive of a tenure of office not dependent upon the pleasure of the appointing power, nor for a limited period, but terminable only upon the death or misconduct of the incumbent.

Dum fervet opus /dəm ʃəvət əwpəs/. While the work glows; in the heat of action.

Dum fuit infra statum /dəm fyʊwat ɪnfrə lɪtətɔm/. (While he was within age.) In old English practice, a writ of entry which formerly lay for an infant after he had attained his full age, to recover lands which he had aliened in fee, in tail, or for life, during his infancy; and, after his death, his heir had the same remedy.

Dum fuit in prigosa /dəm fyʊwat in prɪzɔnə/. In old English law, a writ which lay for a man who had aliened lands under duress by imprisonment, to restore to him his proper estates. Abolished by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 27.

Dummodo /dəməwədə/. Provided; provided that. A word of limitation in the Latin forms of conveyances, of frequent use in introducing a reservation; as in reserving a rent.

Dummy, n. One who purchases property and holds legal title for another, usually to conceal the identity of the true owner; a straw man. Space 6½ feet in width between street railroad tracks.

Dummy, adj. Sham; make-believe; pretended; imitation. Person who serves in place of another, or who serves until the proper person is named or available to take his place (e.g. dummy corporate directors; dummy owners of real estate).

Dummy corporation. Corporation formed for sham purposes and not for conduct of legitimate business; e.g. formed for sole reason of avoiding personal liability.

Dummy director. One to whom (usually) a single share of stock in a corporation is transferred for the purpose of qualifying him as a director of the corporation, in which he has no real or active interest. One who is a mere figurehead and in effect discharges no duties.

Dummy stockholder. One who holds shares of stock in his name for the benefit of the true owner whose name is generally concealed. See also Street name.

Dum non fuit compos mentis /dám nón fyúwst kómpas méntas/. In old English law, the name of a writ which the heirs of a person who was non compos mentis, and who aliened his lands, might have sued out to restore him to his rights. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 27.

Dump. To put or throw down with more or less of violence; to unload. To drop down; to deposit something in a heap or unshaped mass. To sell abroad at less than price sold at home. See Dumping Act.

Dumping. The act of selling in quantity at a very low price or practically regardless of the price; also, selling goods abroad at less than the market price at home. See Dumping Act.

The act of forcing a product such as cotton on the market during the short gathering season.

Dumping Act. Federal antidumping law which provides that the Secretary of Treasury is required to notify U.S. International Trade Commission (USITC) whenever he determines that foreign merchandise is being or is likely to be sold in U.S. or elsewhere at less than its fair value and the USITC shall determine the injury to U.S. industry. If such imports are determined to be injurious to domestic sales of like products, such imports may be ordered stopped. 19 U.S.C.A. § 1673.

Dum recens fuit maleficium /dám réyázn fyuwt málfisih(li)ym/. While the offense was fresh. A term employed in the old law of appeal of rape.

Dum sola /dám sówla/. While sole, or single. Dum sola fuerit, while she shall remain sole. Dum sola et casta vixerit, while she lives single and chaste. Words of limitation in old conveyances. Also applied generally to an unmarried woman in connection with something that was or might be done during that condition.

Dun. A demand for payment (e.g. dun letter) to a delinquent debtor.

Dungeon. Such an underground prison or cell as was formerly placed in the strongest part of a fortress. A dark or subterraneous prison.

Dunio. A double; a kind of base coin less than a farthing.

Dunnage. Pieces of wood placed against the sides and bottom of the hold of a vessel, to preserve the cargo from the effect of leakage, according to its nature and quality. There is considerable resemblance between dunnage and ballast. The latter is used for trimming the ship, and bringing it down to a draft of water proper and safe for sailing. Dunnage is placed under the cargo to keep it from being wetted by water getting into the hold, or between the different parcels to keep them from bruising and injuring each other. Padding in shipping container to prevent breakage.

Duodecemvirale judicium /d(y)uwówdesamvarélylíy juwdish(i)y/am/*. The trial by twelve men, or by jury. Applied to juries of mediate lingue.

Duodecima manus /d(y)uwówdesáma mámnas/. Twelve hands. The oaths of twelve men, including himself, by whom the defendant was allowed to make his law. 3 Bl.Commm. 343.

Duodena /d(y)uwówdínya/*. In old records, a jury of twelve men.

Duodena manu /d(y)uwówdínya máen(y)uw/*. A dozen hands, i.e., twelve witnesses to purge a criminal of an offense.

Duo non possunt in solido unam rem possidere /d(y)uwów nón pósant in sóladow yuwínam rém pósadíriy/*. Two cannot possess one thing in entirety.

Duopoly /d(y)uwópóliy/*. A condition in the market in which there are only two producers or sellers of a given product.

Duorum in solidum dominium vel possessio esse non potest /d(y)uwówram in sóldaw dámíníyam vél pozáshi(y)uw ésiy nón pótast/*. Ownership or possession in entirety cannot be in two persons of the same thing.

Duosony /d(y)uwósoníy/*. A condition of the market in which there are only two producers of a given product.

Duo sunt instrumenta ad omnes res aut confermandas aut impugnandas, ratio et authoritas /d(y)uwów sánt instrémánta ád ómínyí ryíy ót kónfírmándaos ót impagnándás, réyásh(i)yuw ét söékrátaés/*. There are two instruments for confirming or impugning all things,—reason and authority.

Dupla /d(y)uwóplá/*. In the civil law, double the price of a thing.

Duplex house. A dwelling which has accommodations for two families, without regard to whether such accommodations are identical or not. The units may be either adjacent to each other or on separate floors.

Duplex querela /d(y)uwópléks kwariyíy/*. A double complaint. An ecclesiastical proceeding, which is in the nature of an appeal. See Double complaint.
Duplex valor maritagii. In Old English law, double the value of the marriage. While an infant was in ward, the guardian had the power of tendering him or her a suitable match, without disparagement, which if the infants refused, they forfeited the value of the marriage to their guardian, that is, so much as a jury would assess or any one would give to the guardian for such an alliance; and, if the infants married themselves without the guardian's consent, they forfeited double the value of the marriage.

Duplicate. To double, repeat, copy, make, or add a thing exactly like a preceding one; reproduce exactly.

Duplicate, n. A "duplicate" is a counterpart produced by the same impression as the original, or from the same matrix, or by means of photography, including enlargements and miniatures, or by mechanical or electronic re-recording, or by chemical reproduction, or by other equivalent techniques which accurately reproduce the original. Fed.R.Evid. 1001.

That which exactly resembles or corresponds to something else; another, correspondent to the first; hence, a copy; transcript; counterpart; an original instrument repeated; a document the same as another in essential particulars. The term is also frequently used to signify a new original, made to take the place of an instrument that has been lost or destroyed, and to have the same force and effect. See also Copy.

In England, the ticket given by a pawnbroker to the pawner of a chattel.

Duplicate taxation. See Double taxation.

Duplicate will. A term used where a testator executes two copies of his will, one to keep himself, and the other to be deposited with another person. Upon application for probate of a duplicate will, both copies must be deposited in the registry of the court of probate. The execution of duplicate wills is undesirable because if the testator desires to revoke his will, he must be careful to comply with the laws of revocation as to both wills. See also Reciprocal wills.

Duplicatio. In the civil law, the defendant's answer to the plaintiff's replication; corresponding to the rejoinder of the common law.

Duplicationem possibilitatis lex non patitur. In old conveyances.

Dura mater. The tough, membranous, outer covering of the brain and spinal cord.

Durante. Lat. During. A word of limitation in old conveyances.

Durante absente. During absence. In some jurisdictions, administration of a decedent's estate is said to be granted during absence in cases where the absence of the proper proponents of the will, or of an executor, delays or imperils the settlement of the estate.

Durante bene placito. During good pleasure. The ancient tenure of English judges was durante bene placito. 1 Bl.Comm. 267, 342.

Durante minore. During minority. 2 Bl.Comm. 503. Words taken from the old form of letters of administration.

Durante vita. During life.
Duration. Extent, limit or time. The portion of time during which anything exists.

Interest. The period of time during which an interest in property lasts.

Trust. The period of time during which a trust exists before its termination.

Duress. Any unlawful threat or coercion used by a person to induce another to act (or to refrain from acting) in a manner he or she otherwise would not (or would). Subjecting person to improper pressure which overcomes his will and coerces him to comply with demand to which he would not yield if acting as free agent. Head v. Gadsden Civil Service Bd., Ala.Civ.App., 389 So.2d 516, 519. Application of such pressure or constraint as compels man to go against his will, and takes away his free agency, destroying power of refusing to comply with unjust demands of another. Haumont v. Security State Bank, 220 Neb. 809, 374 N.W.2d 2, 6.

A condition where one is induced by wrongful act or threat of another to make a contract or perform a tortious act under circumstances which deprive him of exercise of his free will. Hyde v. Lewis, 25 Ill.App.3d 495, 323 N.E.2d 533, 537. Includes any conduct which overpowers will and coerces or constrains performance of an act which otherwise would not have been performed. Williams v. Rentz Banking Co., 112 Ga.App. 384, 145 S.E.2d 256, 258.

Duress may be a defense to a criminal act, breach of contract, or tort because an act to be criminal or one which constitutes a breach of contract or a tort must be voluntary to create liability or responsibility.

A contract entered into under duress by physical compulsion is void. Also, if a party's manifestation of assent to a contract is induced by an improper threat by the other party that leaves the victim no reasonable alternative, the contract is voidable by the victim. Restatement, Second, Contracts §§ 174, 175.

As a defense to a civil action, it must be pleaded affirmatively. Fed.R.Civ.P. 8(c).

As an affirmative defense in criminal law, one who, under the pressure of an unlawful threat from another human being to harm him (or to harm a third person), commits what would otherwise be a crime may, under some circumstances, be justified in doing what he did and thus not be guilty of the crime in question. See Model Penal Code § 2.09.

See also Coercion; Economic duress; Extortion; Undue influence.

Duress of goods. Where the act consists of a tortious seizure or detention of property from the person entitled to it, and requires some act as a condition for its surrender, the act is "duress of goods". Sistrom v. Anderson, 51 Cal.App.2d 213, 124 P.2d 372, 376.

Duress of imprisonment. The wrongful imprisonment of a person, or the illegal restraint of his liberty, in order to compel him to do some act. 1 Bl.Comm. 130, 131, 136, 137. See also Duress.

Duressor. One who subjects another to duress; one who compels another to do a thing, as by menace.

Duress per minas. Duess by threats. The use of threats and menaces to compel a person, by the fear of death, or grievous bodily harm, as mayhem or loss of limb, to do some lawful act, or to commit a misdemeanor. 1 Bl.Comm. 130; 4 Bl.Comm. 30. See Metus.

Durham. A county palatine in England, the jurisdiction of which was vested in the Bishop of Durham until the statute 6 & 7 Wm. IV, c. 19 vested it as a separate franchise and royalty in the crown. The jurisdiction of the Durham Court of Pleas was transferred to the Supreme Court of Judicature by the Judicature Act of 1873.

Durham rule. The irresistible impulse test of criminal responsibility. The rule states that when there is some evidence that the accused suffered from a diseased or defective mental condition at the time the unlawful act was committed the accused is not criminally responsible if it is found beyond a reasonable doubt that the act was the product of such mental abnormality. Durham v. United States, C.A.D.C., 214 F.2d 862, 875. This test of criminal responsibility (as first adopted in 1954 by the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia in the cited case) was rejected by the same Court in 1972 when it adopted the ALI criterion of insanity of Model Penal Code § 4.01(1). U.S. v. Brawner, 471 F.2d 969. This same Model Penal Code test has also been adopted by a number of other courts. See Insanity.

During. Throughout the course of; throughout the continuance of; in the time of; after the commencement and before the expiration of. Continental Bank & Trust Co. of N. Y. v. Chemical Bank & Trust Co., 51 N.Y.S.2d 903, 909.

During the hours of service. Within workers' compensation law, means working-hours plus reasonable periods for ingress and egress. See also Course of employment.

During the trial. Period beginning with swearing of jury and ending with rendition of verdict. Period commencing with presentation of indictment by grand jury to court and terminating with final judgment.

Dutch auction. See Auction.

Dutch lottery. Also known as the "class lottery." As distinguished from the "Genoese lottery" (q.v.), it is a scheme in which the number and value of the prizes are regularly estimated, all the ticket holders are interested at once in the play, and chance determines whether a prize or a blank falls to a given number.
Duties. In its most usual signification this word is the synonym of imposts or customs; i.e. tax on imports; but it is sometimes used in a broader sense, as including all manner of taxes, charges, or governmental impositions. See also Customs; Most favored nation clause; Tariff; Toll; Tonnage-duty.

Duties on imports /d(y)úwtiyz önn important/. This term signifies not merely a duty on the act of importation, but a duty on the thing imported. It is not confined to a duty levied while the article is entering the country, but extends to a duty levied after it has entered the country. See Customs Duties.

A thing due; that which is due from a person; that which a person owes to another. An obligation to do a thing. A word of more extensive signification than "debt," although both are expressed by the same Latin word "debitum." Sometimes, however, the term is used synonymously with debt.

Those obligations of performance, care, or observance which rest upon a person in an official or fiduciary capacity; as the duty of an executor, trustee, manager, etc.

In negligence cases term may be defined as an obligation, to which law will give recognition and effect, to comport to a particular standard of conduct toward another, and the duty is invariably the same, one must conform to legal standard of reasonable conduct in light of apparent risk. Merluzzi v. Larson, 96 Nev. 409, 610 P.2d 739, 741. The word "duty" is used throughout the Restatement of Torts to denote the fact that the actor is required to conduct himself in a particular manner at the risk that if he does not so he becomes subject to liability to another to whom the duty is owed for any injury sustained by such other, of which that actor's conduct is a legal cause. Restatement, Second, Torts § 4. See Care; Due care.

In its use in jurisprudence, this word is the correlative of right. Thus, wherever there exists a right in any person, there also rests a corresponding duty upon some other person or upon all persons generally.

It also denotes a tax or impost due to the government upon the importation or exportation of goods. See 19 U.S.C.A. See also Customs; Customs duties; Tariff; Toll; Tonnage-duty.

Judicial duty. See Judicial.

Duty free. Products or merchandise of foreign origin that are not subject to import or export taxes. See Customs duties.

Duty of tonnage. A charge upon a vessel as an instrument of commerce for entering, lying in or leaving a port, and includes all taxes and duties, regardless of name or form. Marine Lighterage Corporation v. Luckenbach S. S. Co., 139 Misc. 612, 248 N.Y.S. 71, 72.

Duty of water. Such a quantity of water necessary when economically conducted and applied to land without unnecessary loss as will result in the successful growing of crops.

Duty to act. Obligation to take some action to prevent harm to another and for failure of which there may or may not be liability in tort depending upon the circumstances and the relationship of the parties to each other. See Emergency doctrine; Humanitarian doctrine.

Duumviri /d(y)úwsmviray/. (From duo, two, and viri, men.) A general appellation among the ancient Romans, given to any magistrates elected in pairs to fill any office, or perform any function.

Duumviri municipales were two annual magistrates in the towns and colonies, having judicial powers.

Duumviri navales were two annual magistrates in the towns and colonies, having judicial powers.

Dux /daks/. A military governor of a province. A military officer having charge of the borders or frontiers of the empire, called "dux limitis." At this period, the word began to be used as a title of honor or dignity.

In Roman law, a leader or military commander. The commander of an army.

In feudal and old European law, duke; a title of honor, or order of nobility. 1 Bl.Comm. 397.

Dwell. To have an abode; to reside; to inhabit; to live in a place. More than mere physical presence is sometimes required. It must be in conformity with law. Kaplan v. Tod, 267 U.S. 228, 45 S.Ct. 257, 69 L.Ed. 585. To abide as a permanent residence or for a time. Term is synonymous with inhabit, live, sojourn, reside, stay, rest. See also Domicile; Residence.

Dwelling. The house or other structure in which a person or persons live; a residence; abode; habitation; the apartment or building, or group of buildings, occupied by a family as a place of residence. Structure used as place of habitation.

In conveyancing, includes all buildings attached to or connected with the house. In criminal law (e.g. burglary), means a building or portion thereof, a tent, a mobile home, a vehicle or other enclosed space which is used or intended for use as a human habitation, home or residence.
Under statute prohibiting breaking and entering a "dwelling house" the test for determining if a building is such a house is whether it is used regularly as a place to sleep. Wallace v. State, 63 Md.App. 399, 492 A.2d 970, 973.

Dwelling defense. In most jurisdictions, a person in his dwelling is permitted to use even deadly force to protect himself, his household and the house itself from attack on the principle that a person's house is his castle. State v. Couch, 52 N.M. 127, 193 P.2d 405. Model Penal Code §§ 3.11, 3.06(3)(d).

D.W.I. In genealogical tables, a common abbreviation for "died without issue." Also, abbreviation for offense of "driving while intoxicated" (q.v.).

Dyer Act. National Motor Vehicle Theft Act (1919) which makes it a criminal offense to transport a stolen motor vehicle in interstate or foreign commerce knowing it to be stolen or to receive or conceal such a motor vehicle in interstate or foreign commerce knowing it to be stolen, though knowledge of its interstate transportation is not essential to guilt. Odom v. U. S., C.A.Fla., 377 F.2d 853. 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 2311-2313.

Dying declaration. See Declaration.

Dying without issue. Dying without a child either before or after the decedent's death. At common law this phrase imports an indefinite failure of issue, and not a dying without issue surviving at the time of the death of the first taker. But this rule has been changed in many decisions, with many states having held that the expression "dying without issue," and like expressions, have reference to the time of the death of the party, and not to an indefinite failure of issue. See also Failure of issue.

Dying without children imports not a failure of issue at any indefinite future period, but a leaving no children at the death of the legatee. The law favors vesting of estates, and limitation such as "dying without issue," refers to a definite period, fixed in will, rather than to an indefinite failure of issue. Where context is such as to show clearly that testator intended the phrase "die without issue" to mean that, if first taker die without issue during life of testator, the second taker shall stand in his place and prevent a lapse, the words "die without issue" are taken to mean death during life of testator. Martin v. Raff, 114 Ind.App. 507, 52 N.E.2d 839, 845.

Dynamite instruction. Further instruction given by the trial judge to jury when the jury have reported an inability to agree on a verdict in a criminal case. In the further instructions, the judge advises them of their obligation to consider the opinions of their fellow jurors and to yield their own views where possible. Allen v. United States, 164 U.S. 492, 17 S.Ct. 154, 41 L.Ed. 528. This type of jury instruction (also called "Allen charge") is prohibited in certain states; e.g. California, People v. Gainer, 19 Cal.3d 835, 566 P.2d 997, 139 Cal.Rptr. 861. See also Allen charge.

Dynasty /dá*nastí/*dínastí/. A succession of rules in the same line or family. Powerful and influential group or family which continues in existence for a considerable time.

Dysnomy /dís*nómi/*dís*nómy/. Bad legislation; the enactment of bad laws.

Dyspareunia /dis*pårwúni/*/ Incapacity of a woman to sustain the act of sexual intercourse except with great difficulty and pain; anaphrodisia.
E.

As an abbreviation, this letter may stand for "Exchequer," "English," "Edward," "Equity," "East," "Eastern," "Easter," or "Ecclesiastical." A Latin preposition, meaning from, out of, after, or according. It occurs in many Latin phrases; but (in this form) only before a consonant.

Ea. Sax. The water or river; also the mouth of a river on the shore between high and low water-mark.

Each. A distributive adjective pronoun, which denotes or refers to every one of the persons or things mentioned; every one of two or more persons or things, composing the whole, separately considered. The effect of this word, used in the covenants of a bond, is to create a several obligation. The word "any" is equivalent to "each." Conerty v. Richtsteig, 308 Ill. App. 321, 31 N.E.2d 351.

Eadem causa diversis rationibus coram judicibus ecclesiasticis et secularibus ventur

The same cause is argued upon different principles before ecclesiastical and secular judges.

Eadem est ratio, eadem est lex

The same reason, the same law.

Eadem mens presumitur regis que est juris et quae esse debet, presertim in dubibus /iyeydam mén(d)yz praz(y)uwmaðor riyjas kwîy ēst jūras ēt kwîy ësîy dēbōt, prazārdam in d(y)ūwbiyas/. The mind of the sovereign is presumed to be coincident with that of the law, and with that which it ought to be, especially in ambiguous matters.

Ea quae, commendandi causa, in venditionibus dicuntur, si palam appareat, venditorem non obligat /fya kwîy, kōmandānday kóza, in vendishiyównasbas dákántar, sāy pēlām spērijyant, vêndotòram nōn óbligant/. Those things which are said on sales, in the way of commendation, if [the qualities of the thing sold] appear openly, do not bind the seller.

Ea quae dari impossibilia sunt, vel que in rerum natura non sunt, pro non adjectis habentur /fya kwîy dərāy impôsabliya sınt, vel kwîy in rîrma natyura nōn sınt prōw nōn ajēktas hābēntar/. Those things which are impossible to be given, or which are not in the nature of things, are regarded as not added [as no part of an agreement].

Ea quae in curia nostra rite acta sunt debent executioni demandari debent /fya kwîy in kyûriya nōstra râdijy ēkta sınt dēbôdy ēkškûyûshiyównay dâmândèray dēbant/. Those things which are properly transacted in our court ought to be committed to a due execution.

Ea quae raro accidunt non temere in agendis negotiis computantur /fya kwîy rərow ëkšsdant nōn təmrîy in ajêndas nagôwshiyaws kömpytântar/. Those things which rarely happen are not to be taken into account in the transaction of business without sufficient reason.

Eagle. A title of nobility, formerly the highest in England, now the third, ranking between a marquis and a viscount, and corresponding with the French "comte" and the German "Graf." The title originated with the Saxons, and is the most ancient of the English peerage. William the Conqueror first made this title hereditary, giving it in fee to his nobles; and allotting them for the support of their state the third penny out of the sheriff's court, issuing out of all pleas of the shire, whence they had their ancient title "shiremen." At present the title is accompanied by no territory, private or judicial rights, but merely confers nobility and an hereditary seat in the house of lords.

Earldom. The dignity or jurisdiction of an earl. The dignity only remains now, as the jurisdiction has been given over to the sheriff. 1 Bl.Comm. 339.

Earles-penny, or earl's penny. Money given in part payment. See Earnest.

Earlier maturity rule. The rule under which bonds first maturing are entitled to priority when sale of security is not sufficient to satisfy all obligations. Scherk v. Newton, C.C.A.Colo., 152 F.2d 747, 749.

Earl Marshal of England. A great officer of state who had anciently several courts under his jurisdiction, as the court of chivalry and the court of honor. Under him is the herald's office, or college of arms. He was also a judge of the Marshalsea court, now abolished. This office is of great antiquity, and has been for several ages hereditary in the family of the Howards. 3 Bl.Comm. 68, 103.

Ear-mark. A mark put upon a thing to distinguish it from another. Originally and literally, a mark upon the ear; a mode of marking sheep and other animals.

Property is said to be ear-marked when it can be identified or distinguished from other property of the same nature.

To set apart from others.

Money has no ear-mark, but it is an ordinary term for a privy mark made by any one on a coin.

Ear-mark rule. Rule that through the process of commingling money or deposit with the funds of a bank it loses its identity, with the resultant effect of defeating the right of preference over general creditors.

Earn. To acquire by labor, service or performance. Hartford Electric Light Co. v. McLaughlin, 131 Conn. 1, 37 A.2d 361, 363. To merit or deserve.

Earned income. Income (e.g. wages, salaries, or fees) derived from labor, professional service, or entrepreneurship as opposed to income derived from invested capital (e.g. rents, dividends, interest). The distinction, however, for tax purposes has lost much of its original importance. See also Earnings; Income.

Earned income credit. A refundable tax credit on earned income up to a certain amount for low income workers who maintain a household for dependent children. The amount of credit is reduced on a dollar for dollar basis if earned income (or adjusted gross income) is greater than such amount.

Earned premium. In insurance, that portion of the premium properly allocable to policy period which has expired. An "earned premium" is difference between premium paid by insured and portion returnable to him by insurance company on cancellation of policy during its term. Price v. Guaranty Nat. Ins. Co., Okl., 456 P.2d 108, 111.

Earned surplus. That species of surplus which has been generated from profits as contrasted with paid-in surplus. Term relates to net accumulation of profits; it is a part of surplus that represents net earnings, gains or profits, after deduction of all losses, but has not been distributed as dividends, or transferred to stated capital or capital surplus, or applied to other purposes permitted by law. Conine v. Leikam, Okl., 570 P.2d 1156, 1160.

Earner. One whose personal efforts produce income (e.g. wage earner) or who owns property which produces it, or combination of both. Wells v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.Min., 63 F.2d 425, 430.

Earnest. The payment of a part of the price of goods sold, or the delivery of part of such goods, for the purpose of binding the contract. A token or pledge passing between the parties, by way of evidence, or ratification of the sale. See Earnest money.

Earnest money. A sum of money paid by a buyer at the time of entering a contract to indicate the intention and ability of the buyer to carry out the contract. Normally such earnest money is part of the purchase price. Often the contract provides for forfeiture of this sum if the buyer defaults. A deposit of part payment of purchase price on sale to be consummated in future. McGuire v. Andre, 259 Ala. 109, 65 So.2d 185, 190. Import of term "earnest money" in real estate contract is that when comparatively small sum is paid down, it is an assurance that party is in earnest and good faith and that if his being in earnest and good faith fails, it will be forfeited. Mortenson v. Financial Growth, Inc., 23 Utah 2d 54, 456 P.2d 181, 184.

Earning capacity. Term refers to capability of worker to sell his labor or services in any market reasonably accessible to him, taking into consideration his general physical functional impairment resulting from his accident, any previous disability, his occupation, age at time of injury, nature of injury and his wages prior to and after the injury. Sims v. Industrial Commission, 10 Ariz.App. 574, 460 P.2d 1003, 1006. Term does not necessarily mean the actual earnings that one who suffers an injury was making at the time the injuries were sustained, but refers to that which, by virtue of the training, the experience, and the business acumen possessed, an individual is capable of earning.

Fitness, readiness and willingness to work, considered in connection with opportunity to work.

Earning power. See Earning capacity.

Earnings. Income. That which is earned; i.e. money earned from performance of labor, services, sale of goods, etc. The price of services performed; the remuneration for labor or the price is received for personal services, whether in money or chattels. The fruit or reward of labor; the fruits of the proper skill, experience, and industry; the gains of a person derived from his services or labor without the aid of capital; money or property gained or merited by labor, service, or the performance of something. Term is broader in meaning than "wages." See also Commissions; Compensation; Dividend; Gross earnings; Income; Premium; Retained earnings; Salary; Wages.

Gross earnings. Total income before deducting expenditures. Receipts from employment of capital, without deduction for expenses incurred. See also Income.
Net earnings. Net earnings (income) are the excess of the gross earnings over the expenditures incurred in producing them. Such may be determined before or after deduction of income taxes. See also Income. Surplus earnings. See Surplus.

Earnings and profits. A tax concept peculiar to corporate taxpayers which measures economic capacity to make a distribution to shareholders that is not a return of capital. Such a distribution will result in dividend income to the shareholders to the extent of the corporation's current and accumulated earnings and profits.

Earnings per share. One common measure of the value of common stock. The figure is computed by dividing the net earnings (after interest and prior dividends) by the number of shares of common stock.

Earth. Soil of all kinds, including gravel, clay, loam, and the like, in distinction from the firm rock.

Ear-witness. In the law of evidence, one who attests or can attest anything as heard by himself. See also Voiceprint.

Ease. Comfort, consolation, contentment, enjoyment, happiness, pleasure, satisfaction.

Easement. A right of use over the property of another. Traditionally the permitted kinds of uses were limited, the most important being rights of way and rights concerning flowing waters. The easement was normally for the benefit of adjoining lands, no matter who the owner was (an easement appurtenant), rather than for the benefit of a specific individual (easement in gross). The land having the right of use as an appurtenance is known as the dominant tenement and the land which is subject to the easement is known as the servient tenement.

A right in the owner of one parcel of land, by reason of such ownership, to use the land of another for a special purpose not inconsistent with a general property in the owner.

An interest which one person has in the land of another. A primary characteristic of an easement is that its burden falls upon the possessor of the land from which it issued and that characteristic is expressed in the statement that the land constitutes a servient tenement and the easement a dominant tenement. Potter v. Northern Natural Gas Co., 201 Kan. 528, 441 P.2d 802, 805. An interest in land in and over which it is to be enjoyed, and is distinguishable from a "license" which merely confers personal privilege to do some act on the land. Logan v. McGee, Miss., 320 So.2d 792, 793.

See also Affirmative easement; Non-continuous easement; Prescriptive easement.

Access easement. See Access.

Affirmative easement. One where the servient estate must permit something to be done thereon, as to pass over it, or to discharge water on it.

Apparent easement. One the existence of which appears from the construction or condition of one of the tenements, so as to be capable of being seen or known on inspection.

Appendent easement. See Appurtenant easement, infra.

Appurtenant easement. An incorporeal right which is attached to a superior right and inheres in land to which it is attached and is in the nature of a covenant running with the land. Fort Dodge, D. M. & S. Ry. v. American Community Stores Corp., 256 Iowa 1344, 131 N.W.2d 515, 521. There must be a dominant estate and servient estate. An easement interest which attaches to the land and passes with it. First Nat. Bank of Amarillo v. Amarillo Nat. Bank, Tex.Civ. App., 531 S.W.2d 905, 907. An "incorporeal right" which is attached to and belongs with some greater and superior right or something annexed to another thing more worthy and which passes as incident to it and is incapable of existence separate and apart from the particular land to which it is annexed.

Discontinuing easement. Discontinuous, non-continuous, or non-apparent easements are those the enjoyment of which can be had only by the interference of man, as, a right of way or a right to draw water.

Easement by estoppel. Easement which is created when landlord voluntarily imposes apparent servitude on his property and another person, acting reasonably, believes that servitude is permanent and in reliance upon that belief does something that he would not have done otherwise or refrains from doing something that he would have done otherwise. U. S. v. Thompson, D.C.Ark., 272 F.Supp. 774, 784.

Easement by necessity. Such arises by operation of law when land conveyed is completely shut off from access to any road by land retained by grantor or by land of grantor and that of a stranger. Tarr v. Watkins, 180 Cal.App. 362, 4 Cal.Rptr. 293, 296.

Easement by prescription. A mode of acquiring title to property by immemorial or long-continued enjoyment, and refers to personal usage restricted to claimant and his ancestors or grantors.

Easement in gross. An easement in gross is not appurtenant to any estate in land or does not belong to any person by virtue of ownership of estate in other land but is mere personal interest in or right to use land of another; it is purely personal and usually ends with death of grantee. Shingleton v. State, 260 N.C. 451, 133 S.E.2d 183, 185.

Easement of access. Right of ingress and egress to and from the premises of a lot owner to a street appurtenant to the land of the lot owner.

Easement of convenience. One which increases the facility, comfort, or convenience of the enjoyment of the dominant estate, or of some right connected with it.

Easement of natural support. Easement which creates right of lateral support to land in its natural condition entitling the holder thereof to have his land held in place from the sides by neighboring land.

Easement of necessity. One in which the easement is indispensable to the enjoyment of the dominant estate.

Equitable easements. The special easements created by derivation of ownership of adjacent proprietors from a common source, with specific intentions as to buildings for certain purposes, or with implied privi-
EASEMENT

Easter. A feast of the Christian church held in memory of the Saviour’s resurrection. The Greeks and Latins call it “pascha” (passover), to which Jewish feast our Easter answers. This feast has been annually celebrated since the time of the apostles, and is one of the most important festivals in the Christian calendar, being that which regulates and determines the times of all the other movable feasts.

Eastering. A coin struck by Richard II which is supposed by some to have given rise to the name of “sterling,” as applied to English money.

Easterly. This word, when used alone, will be construed to mean “due east.” But that is a rule of necessity growing out of the indefiniteness of the term, and has no application where other words are used for the purpose of qualifying its meaning. Where such is the case, it means precisely what the qualifying word makes it mean. See also Easter.

Easter-offerings, or Easter-dues. In English law, small sums of money paid to the parochial clergy by the parishioners at Easter as a compensation for personal tithes, or the tithe for personal labor; recoverable under 7 & 8 Wm. III, c. 6, before justices of the peace.

Easter term. In English law, formerly one of the four movable terms of the courts, but afterwards a fixed term, beginning on the 15th of April and ending on the 8th of May in every year, though sometimes prolonged so late as the 13th of May, under St. 11 Geo. IV, and 1 Wm. IV, c. 70. From November 2, 1875, the division of the legal year into terms was abolished so far as concerns the administration of justice.

East Greenwich. The name of a royal manor in the county of Kent, England; mentioned in royal grants or patents, as descriptive of the tenure of free socage.

East India Company. Originally established for prosecuting the trade between England and India, which they acquired a right to carry on exclusively. The company’s political affairs became of more importance than their commerce. In 1858, by 21 & 22 Vict., c. 106, the government of the territories of the company was transferred to the crown. The company was finally dissolved in 1874.

Eastinus. An easterly coast or country.

Eastman formula. In determining fixed charges under railroad reorganization plan, the “Eastman Formula” is that such charges should not exceed 80 per cent. of the net available for interest in the three worst years of the last ten. In re Denver & R. G. W. R. Co., D.C.Colo., 38 F.Supp. 106, 110.

East inde sine die /iyad indiy sayniy day(iy)/. Words used on the acquittal of a defendant, or when a prisoner is to be discharged, that he may go thence without a day, i.e., be dismissed without any further continuance or adjournment.

Eaves-drip. The drip or dropping of water from the eaves of a house on the land of an adjacent owner; the easement of having the water so drip, or the servitude of submitting to such drip; the same as the stiplicidium of the Roman law. See Stiplicidium.

Eavesdropping. Eavesdropping is knowingly and without lawful authority: (a) Entering into a private place with intent to listen surreptitiously to private conversations or to observe the personal conduct of any other person or persons therein; or (b) Installing or using outside a private place any device for hearing, recording, amplifying, or broadcasting sounds originating in such place, which sounds would not ordinarily be audible or comprehensible outside, without the consent of the person or persons entitled to privacy therein; or (c) Installing or using any device or equipment for the interception of any telephone, telegraph or other wire communication without the consent of the person in possession or control of the facilities for such wire communication. Such activities are regulated by state and federal statutes, and commonly require a court order.

At common law, the offense of listening under walls or windows, or the eaves of a house, and thereupon to frame slanderous and mischievous tales. 4 Bl.Comm. 168. It was a misdemeanor at common law.

See also Pen register; Wiretapping.

Ebba. In old English law, ebb. Ebba et Fluctus; ebb and flow of tide; ebb and flood. The time occupied by one ebb and flood was anciently granted to persons essoined as being beyond sea, in addition to the period of forty days.

Ebb and flow. The coming in and going out of tide. An expression used formerly to denote the limits of admiralty jurisdiction.

Ebdomadarius /abh/ebdomadarius/. In ecclesiastical law, an officer in cathedral churches who supervised the regular performance of divine service, and prescribed the particular duties of each person in the choir.

Eberemorth, eberemors, eberemurder. See Aberemurder.

Ebriety /abryadiy/. Drunkenness; alcoholic intoxication.

Ecce modo mirum, quod femina fert breve regis, non n6n ndmanaendow veram, kanjagktam rowbariy llyjas/. The image.

Ebdomadarlus /abh/ebdomadarys/. In ecclesiastical law, an officer in cathedral churches who supervised the regular performance of divine service, and prescribed the particular duties of each person in the choir.

Ecclesia: magls favendum est akliyz(i)ya/. Lat. An assembly. A Christian place of religious worship.

Ecclesia non moritur /akliyz(i)ya nôın mórsdar/. The church does not die.

Ecclesiarch /akliyz(i)yark/. The ruler of a church.

Ecclesiastic /akliyz(i)yastak/. A clergyman; a priest; a man consecrated to the service of the church; as, a bishop, a priest, a deacon.

Ecclesiastical /akliyz(i)yastak/. Pertaining to anything belonging to or set apart for the church, as distinguished from "civil" or "secular," with regard to the world.

Ecclesiastical authorities. In England, the clergy, under the sovereign, as temporal head of the church, set apart from the rest of the people or laity, in order to superintend the public worship of God and the other ceremonies of religion, and to administer spiritual counsel and instruction. The several orders of the clergy are: (1) Archbishops and bishops; (2) deans and chapters; (3) archdeacons; (4) rural deans; (5) parsons (under whom are included appropriators) and vicars; (6) curates. Church-wardens or sidesmen, and parish clerks and sextons, inasmuch as their duties are connected with the church, may be considered to be a species of ecclesiastical authorities. See Ecclesiastical courts.

Ecclesiastical commissioners. In England, a body corporate, erected by St. 6 & 7 Wm. IV, c. 77, empowered to suggest measures conducive to the efficiency of the established church, to be ratified by orders in council. As a body, Ecclesiastical Commissioners have been dissolved and their functions, rights, property, etc. vested in Church Commissioners.

Ecclesiastical corporation. See Corporation.
ing of ministers, controversies between ministers and their churches, differences and divisions in churches, and the like.

Ecclesiastical courts (called, also, "Courts Christian"). A generic name for certain courts having cognizance mainly of spiritual matters. A system of courts in England, held by authority of the sovereign, and having jurisdiction over matters pertaining to the religion and ritual of the established church, and the rights, duties, and discipline of ecclesiastical persons as such. They are as follows: The Archdeacon’s Court (now practically obsolete), Consistory Court, Provincial Courts (i.e. Court of Archers of Canterbury and Chancery Court of York), Court of Faculties, and Court of Final Appeal (Judicial Committee of the Privy Council).

Ecclesiastical division of England. This is a division into provinces, dioceses, archdeaconries, rural deaneries, and parishes.

Ecclesiastical jurisdiction. Jurisdiction over ecclesiastical cases and controversies; such as appertains to the ecclesiastical courts.

Ecclesiastical law. The body of jurisprudence administered by the ecclesiastical courts of England; derived, in large measure, from the canon and civil law. As now restricted, it applies mainly to the affairs, and the doctrine, discipline, and worship, of the established church.

Ecclesiastical matter. One that concerns doctrine, creed, or form of worship of the church, or the adoption and enforcement within a religious association of needful laws and regulations for the government of the membership, and the power of excluding from such associations those deemed unworthy of membership. Olear v. Haniak, 235 Mo.App. 249, 131 S.W.2d 375, 380.

Ecclesiastical things. This term, as used in the canon law, includes church buildings, church property, cemeteries, and property given to the church for the support of the poor or for any other pious use.

Ecdicus /ekwikas/. The attorney, proctor, or advocate of a corporation.

Échantillon /eyshontiyown/. In French law, one of the two parts or two pieces of a wooden tally. That in possession of the debtor is properly called the "tally," the other "échantillon."

Echevin. In French law, a municipal officer corresponding with alderman or burgess, and having in some instances a civil jurisdiction in certain causes of trifling importance.

Echodall /ekowléliya/ "léléiyə/. The constant and senseless repetition of particular words or phrases, recognized as a sign or symptom of insanity or of aphasia.

Echouement /ëyshuwmón/. In French marine law, stranding.

Ecology. In general, the study or science of the relationships between organisms and their environments; study of the environment. See Ecosystems.

Economic discrimination. Any form of discrimination within the field of commerce such as a boycott of a particular product or price fixing. See Boycott; Price discrimination; Price-fixing.

Economic obsolescence. Loss of desirability and useful life of property due to economic developments (e.g. deterioration of neighborhood or zoning change) rather than deterioration (functional obsolescence). Term as used with respect to valuation of property for taxation is a loss of value brought about by conditions that envelop a structure such as a declining location or down-grading of a neighborhood resulting in reduced value. Plazza v. Town Assessor of Town of Porter, 16 A.D.2d 863, 228 N.Y.S.2d 397, 398. See also Obsolescence.

Economic strike. Refusal to work because of dispute over wages, hours or working conditions or other conditions of employment. N. L. R. B. v. Transport Co. of Tex., C.A.Tex., 438 F.2d 258. An economic strike is one neither prohibited by law nor by collective bargaining agreement nor caused by employer unfair labor practices, but is typically for purpose of enforcing employer compliance with union collective bargaining demands, and economic strikers possess more limited reinstatement rights than unfair labor practice strikers. N. L. R. B. v. Transport Co. of Tex., C.A.Tex., 438 F.2d 258, 262.

Economic waste. An overproduction or excessive drilling of oil or gas.

Economy. Frugality; prudent expenditure of money or use of resources. Not synonymous with "parsimony." Includes that which pertains to the satisfaction of man’s needs. D’Arcy v. Snell, 162 Or. 351, 91 P.2d 537, 540. Economic structure of country.

E contra /iy kontra/. From the opposite; on the contrary.

E converso /iy kanvársow/. Conversely. On the other hand; on the contrary. Equivalent to e contra.

Ecosystems. The totality of cycles and processes which constitute the ecology system.

Ecumenical /ékjeménakal/ iykyamenakal/. General; universal; as an ecumenical council.

Edderbreche /edarbriech/. In Saxon law, the offense corresponding with alderman or burgess, and having in some instances a civil jurisdiction in certain causes of trifling importance.

Edict. A formal decree, command, or proclamation. A positive law promulgated by the sovereign of a country, and having reference either to the whole land or some of its divisions, but usually relating to affairs of state. It differs from a “public proclamation,” in that it enacts a new statute, and carries with it the authority of the law, whereas the latter is, at most, a declaration of a law before enacted. In Roman law, sometimes, a citation to appear before a judge. A “special edict” was a judgment in a case; a “general edict” was in effect a statute. See Decree; Edictum; Mandate.

Edicts of Justinian /iydiktis ëv jastin(i)y3n/. Thirteen constitutions or laws of this prince, found in most editions of the Corpus Juris Civilis, after the Novels. Being confined to matters of police in the provinces of the empire, they have long since been of little use.

Edictum /adiktam/. In the Roman law, an edict; a mandate, or ordinance. An ordinance, or law, enacted by the emperor without the senate; belonging to the class of constitutiones principis. An edict was a mere voluntary constitution of the emperor: differing from a rescript, in not being returned in the way of answer; and from a decree, in not being given in judgment; and from both, in not being founded upon solicitation.

A general order published by the praetor, on entering upon his office, containing the system of rules by which he would administer justice during the year of his office.

Edictum annuum /adiktam ányuwan/. The annual edict or system of rules promulgated by a Roman praetor immediately upon assuming his office, setting forth the principles by which he would be guided in determining causes during his term of office.

Edictum perpetuum /adiktam parpechuwam/. The perpetual edict. A compilation or system of law in fifty books, digested by Julian, from the praetor’s edicts and other parts of the Jus Honorarium. All the remains of it which have come down to us are the extracts of it in the Digests.

Edictum provinciale /adiktam prvinshiyély/. An edict or system of rules for the administration of justice, similar to the edict of the praetor, put forth by the proconsuls and propraetors in the provinces of the Roman Empire.

Edictum Theodoric /adiktam @ydaráyasy/. This is the first collection of law that was made after the downfall of the Roman power in Italy. It was promulgated by Theodoric, king of the Ostrogoths, at Rome in A.D. 500. It consists of 154 chapters, in which we recognize parts taken from the Code and Novellae of Theodosius, from the Codices Gregorianus and Hermogenianus, and the Sententiae of Paulus. The edict was doubtless drawn up by Roman writers, but the original sources are more disfigured and altered than in any other compilation. This collection of law was intended to apply both to the Goths and the Romans, so far as its provisions went; but, when it made no alteration in the Gothic law, that law was still to be in force.

Edictum tralatitium /adiktam trélatish(i)yam/. Where a Roman praetor, upon assuming office, did not publish a wholly new edict, but retained the whole or a principal part of the edict of his predecessor (as was usually the case) only adding to it such rules as appeared to be necessary to adapt it to changing social conditions or juristic ideas, it was called “edictum tralatitium.”

Edition. The total number of copies of a publication printed from a single typesetting or at one specified time. May also refer to the form which a publication takes such as a hardbound or paperback edition. Also, the means of identifying the various versions of a given publication; e.g. first, second, etc. edition. One of the several issues of a newspaper for a single day.

Editor. One who directs or supervises the policies, content and contributions of a newspaper, magazine, book, work of reference, or the like. The term is held to include not only the person who writes, edits or selects the articles for publication, but he who publishes a paper and puts it in circulation. Penneyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 721, 24 L.Ed. 565.

Editus /édddas/. In old English law, put forth or promulgated, when speaking of the passage of a statute; and brought forth, or born, when speaking of the birth of a child.

Educate. To give proper moral, as well as intellectual and physical, instruction. To prepare and fit oneself for any calling or business, or for activity and usefulness in life.

Education. Comprehends not merely the instruction received at school or college, but the whole course of training: moral, religious, vocational, intellectual, and physical. Education may be particularly directed to either the mental, moral, or physical powers and faculties, but in its broadest and best sense it relates to them all. Acquisition of all knowledge tending to train and develop the individual. See also Board of education.

Educational expenses. Employees may deduct educational expenses if such items are incurred either (1) to maintain or improve existing job related skills or (2) to meet the express requirements of the employer or the requirements imposed by law to retain employment status. Such expenses are not deductible if the education is (1) required to meet the minimum educational requirements for the taxpayer’s job or (2) the education qualifies the individual for a new trade or business. Ronald F. Weiszmann v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 443 F.2d 29.

Educational institution. A school, seminary, college, university, or other educational establishment, not necessarily a chartered institution. As used in a zoning ordinance, the term may include not only buildings, but also all grounds necessary for the accomplishment of the full scope of educational instruction, including those things essential to mental, moral, and physical development. Commissioners of District of Columbia v. Shannon & Luchs Const. Co., 57 App.D.C. 67, 17 F.2d 219, 220.

Educational purposes. Term as used in constitutional and statutory provisions exempting property so used from taxation, includes systematic instruction in any and all branches of learning from which a substantial public benefit is derived, and is not limited to such school properties as would relieve some substantial educational burden from the state. McKee v. Evans, Alaska, 490 P.2d 1226, 1230.

Effect, v. To do; to produce; to make; to bring to pass; to execute; to enforce; to accomplish.

Effect, n. That which is produced by an agent or cause; result; outcome; consequence. State by Clark v. Wolkoff, 250 Minn. 504, 85 N.W.2d 401, 410. The result which an instrument between parties will produce in their relative rights, or which a statute will produce upon the existing law, as discovered from the language used, the forms employed, or other materials for construing it. The operation of a law, of an agreement, or an act. The phrases “take effect,” “be in force,” “go into operation,” etc., are used interchangeably.

With effect. With success; as, to prosecute an action with effect.

Effecting loan. To bring about a loan. To accomplish, fulfill, produce or make a loan. It means the result or consequence of bringing into operation a loan; while “renewal” is not a loan, but an extension of the time of payment.

Effective assistance of counsel. Conscientious, meaningful representation wherein accused is advised of his rights and honest, learned and able counsel is given a reasonable opportunity to perform task assigned to him. State v. Williams, Iowa, 207 N.W.2d 98, 104. See Counsel, right to.

Effective possession. See Constructive possession.

* Effective procuring cause. The “effective procuring cause” of sale of realty is ordinarily the broker who first secures the serious attention of the customer and is instrumental in bringing the parties together. See Cause; Efficient cause; Proximate cause.

Effects. Personal estate or property; though the term may include both real and personal property. See Personal effects.

Effectus sequitur causam /afékstas siykwardar közam/. The effect follows the cause.

Effet. In France an “effet” is a bill of exchange; “effets” means goods, movables, chattels. In re Steimes’ Estate, 150 Misc. 279, 270 N.Y.S. 339.

Effets mobiliers /aféts mówbálirz/. Funds or stocks. In re Steimes’ Estate, 150 Misc. 279, 270 N.Y.S. 339.

Efficient. Causing an effect; particularly the result or results contemplated. Adequate in performance or producing properly a desired effect. Spotts v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., C.C.A.Ind., 102 F.2d 160, 162.

Efficient cause. The working cause; that cause which produces effects or results. An intervening cause, which produces results which would not have come to pass except for its interposition, and for which, therefore, the person who set in motion the original chain of causes is not responsible. Southland-Greyhound Lines v. Cotten, Tex.Civ.App., 55 S.W.2d 1066, 1069. The cause which originates and sets in motion the dominating agency that necessarily proceeds through other causes as mere instruments or vehicles in a natural line of causation to the result. That cause of an injury to which legal liability attaches. The “proximate cause.” Hillis v. Home Owners’ Loan Corporation, 348 Mo. 601, 154 S.W.2d 761, 764. The phrase is practically synonymous with “procuring cause.” Buhrmester v. Independent Plumbing & Heating Supply Co., Mo.App., 151 S.W.2d 509, 513. The immediate agent in the production of an effect. Armijo v. World Ins. Co., 78 N.M. 204, 429 P.2d 904, 906.

The proximate cause of an injury is the efficient cause, the one that necessarily sets the other causes in operation, and, where a wrongful act puts other forces in operation which are natural and which the act would reasonably and probably put in action, the party who puts in force the first efficient cause will be responsible in damages for the injury proved, although immediately resulting from the other force so put in motion.

See also Proximate cause.

Efficient intervening cause. An intervening efficient cause is a new and independent force, which breaks the causal connection between the original wrong and the injury, and is the proximate cause of the injury. Thus, the original negligent actor is not liable for an injury that could not have been foreseen or reasonably anticipated as the probable consequence of his negligent act, and would not have resulted from it had not the intervening efficient cause interrupted the natural sequence of events, turned aside their course, and produced the injury. Coyle v. Stopak, 165 Neb. 594, 86 N.W.2d 758, 768; Knuth v. Singer, 174 Neb. 182, 116 N.W.2d 291, 295. See also Proximate cause.

Effigy /éfajiy/. The figure or corporeal representation of a person.

Efflux /eflaks/. The running, as of a prescribed period of time to its end; expiration by lapse of time. Particularly applied to the termination of a lease by the expiration of the term for which it was made.

Effluxion of time /afliksan av taym/. When this phrase is used in leases, conveyances, and other like deeds, or in agreements expressed in simple writing, it indicates the conclusion or expiration of a term of years specified in the deed or writing, such conclusion or expiration arising in the natural course of events, in contradistinction to the determination of the term by the acts of the parties or by some unexpected or unusual incident or other sudden event.

Efforcialter /afors(h)iy6yladar/. Forcibly; applied to military force.

Effort. An attempt; an endeavor; a struggle directed to the accomplishment of an object.

Effraction /afraekshan/. A breach made by the use of force.

Effractor /afnektar/. One who breaks through; one who commits a burglary.

Effusio sanguinis /afyuwz(h)(i)yow saqgwanas/. In old English law, the shedding of blood; the mulct, fine, or penalty imposed for the shedding of blood, which the king granted to many lords of manors. See Bloodwt.

Eg. An abbreviation of exempli gratia. For the sake of an example.

Ego /egow/. I; myself. This term is used in forming genealogical tables, to represent the person who is the object of inquiry.

The part of the conscious personality which has the task of balancing the demands of the real world and maintaining harmony between the id (instinctual drives) and the superego (morality of the conscience);... that portion of the total personality noticeable to others which maintains contact with the environment of the outer world.

See also Alter ego.

Ego, tails /iygəw, téləs/. I, such a one. Words used in describing the forms of old deeds.

Egregiensi et exeunt /agrɛdiɛ'n(d)z ëd ɛksi'yən(d)z/. In old pleading, going forth and issuing out of (land).

Egress /iɛgrəs/. The path by which a person goes out; exit. The means or act of going out. Often used interchangeably with the word “access.” C. Hacker
Co. v. City of Joliet, 196 Ill.App. 415, 423.

Egyptians. Derivative name in old England for “gypsies”; a wandering, nomadic people without permanent abode, living in tents or other shelters, pretending to tell fortunes of others.

Ela, or Ey. An island.

Eighteenth Amendment. The amendment to the U.S.
Constitution added in 1919 which prohibited the manufacture, sale, transportation and exportation of intoxicating liquors in all the States and Territories of the United States and which was repealed in 1933 by the Twenty-first Amendment.

Eighth Amendment. The amendment to the U.S. Constitution added in 1791 which prohibits excessive bail, excessive fines and cruel and unusual punishment.

Eight hour laws. Statutes (e.g. Adamson Act; Fair Labor Standards Act) which established eight hours as the length of a day’s work, prohibited work beyond this period, and required payment of overtime for work in excess of this period. See Wage and Hour Laws.

Eigene /iˈɛn/. L. Fr. Eldest; eldest-born. The term is of common occurrence in the old books. Thus, bastard eigene means an illegitimate son whose parents afterwards marry and have a second son for lawful issue, the latter being called mulier puisne (after-born). Eigene is probably a corrupt form of the French

Eigense /ˈɛnəsə/. See Esnecy.

El incumbit probatio, qui dicit, non qui negat; cum per rerum naturam factum negantis probatio nulla sit /ˈlɛiy nɪkəmbət prəbɛʃ(ɪ)ɔw kwɛɪ diˈsa,t nɒn kwɛɪ dʒeɪt, kæm pə rɪrəm næt(ɪ)ərəm fɛktəm nɛɡənts prəbɛʃ(ɪ)ɔw nʌs siːt/. The proof lies upon him who affirms, not upon him who denies; since, by the nature of things, he who denies a fact cannot produce any proof.

Elnecta /ˈɛnliːsə/. Eldership. See Esnecy.

Elnetius /ˈɛnliʃ(ɪ)əs/. In English law, the oldest; the first-born.

El nihil turpe, cui nihil satis /ˈlɪli nɪlɪ tʊrpt, ki(ˈyuː)ən nɪlɪ sɛt/. To him to whom nothing is enough, nothing is base.

Eire, or eyre /ˈɛr/. In old English law, a journey, route, or circuit. Justices in eire were judges who were sent by commission, every seven years, into various coun-tytes to hold the assizes and hear pleas of the crown.
3 Bl.Comm. 58.

Eirenaarcha /ˈɛrənərka/. A name formerly given to a justice of the peace. In the Digests, the word is written “irenarcha.”

Elisdem modis dissolvitur obligatio que nascitur ex contractu, vel quasi, quibus contrahitur /ˈlɪsɪdɛm moʊdɪz ˈdɪsˌɔlvɪtʊr ůəˌbɪliˈgətɪoʊ kɛt ˈnæzdɪtʊr ɛk kənˈtrækt(ʊ)tu, vɛl kwɛˈzi, ˈkwɪbəs kənˈtræktɪʃ(ʊ)tu/.
An obligation which arises from contract, or quasi contract, is dissolved in the same ways in which it is contracted.

Elsne /ˈɛn/. The senior; the oldest son. Spelled also,
“eigne,” “einsne,” “aisne,” “eign.”

Elsnetla, elnetla /ˈɛlnɪtələ/. The share of the oldest son. The portion acquired by primogeniture.

Either. Each of two; the one and the other; one or the other of two alternatives; one of two. Often used, however, with reference to more than two, in which case it may mean “each” or “any.”

Eject. To cast, or throw out; to oust, or dispossess; to put or turn out of possession. To expel or thrust forcibly, as disorderly patrons.

Ejecta /ˈɛjtə/. In old English law, a woman ravished or deflowered, or cast forth from the virtuous.

Election. A turning out of possession.

Electio custodiae /ˌɛlktʃiˈoʊkʊstɪˈdoʊɪə/. In old English law, ejectment of ward. This phrase, which is the Latin equivalent for the French “éjection de garde,” was the title of a writ which lay for a guardian when turned out of any land of his ward during the minority of the latter. It lay to recover the land or person of his ward, or both.

Electione firma /ˌɛlktʃiˈoʊfɜrmə/. Ejection, or ejectment of farm. The name of a writ or action of trespass, which lay at common law where lands or tenements were let for a term of years, and afterwards the lessor, reviserioner, remainder-man, or any stranger ejected or ousted the lessee of his term, firma, or farm (ipsum a firma eject). In this case the latter might have his writ of ejectio, by which he recovered at first damages for the trespass only, but it was afterwards made a remedy to recover back the term itself, or the remainder of it, with damages.
3 Bl.Comm. 199. It is the foundation of the modern action of ejectment.

Ejection. At common law, this was the name of a mixed action (springing from the earlier personal action of ejectione firmae) which lay for the recovery of the possession of land, and for damages for the unlawful detention of its possession. The action was highly fictitious, being in theory only for the recovery of a term for years, and brought by a purely fictitious person, as lessee in a supposed lease from the real party in interest. The latter’s title, however, had to be established in order to warrant a recovery, and the establishment of such title, though nominally a mere incident, was in reality the object of the action.
Hence this convenient form of suit came to be adopted as the usual method of trying titles to land. 3
Bl.Comm. 199; French v. Robb, 67 N.J.Law 260, 51
A. 509. In England, since the Judicature Act of 1852, ejection has given place to a new action for the recovery of land.
EJECTMENT

The common law action for ejectment has been materially modified by statute in most states and may come under the title of action to recover possession of land, action for summary process, action for eviction, or forcible entry and detainer action.

Ejectment is an action to restore possession of property to the person entitled to it. Not only must the plaintiff establish a right to possession in himself, but he must also show that the defendant is in wrongful possession. If the defendant has only trespassed on the land, the action is for trespass (i.e. damages).

See also Eviction; Forcible entry and detainer; Process (Summary process).

Ejectment bill. A bill in equity brought merely for the recovery of real property, together with an account of the rents and profits, without setting out any distinct ground of equity jurisdiction; hence demurrable.

Equitable ejectment. A proceeding brought to enforce specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, and for some other purposes, which is in form an action of ejectment, but is in reality a substitute for a bill in equity.

Justice ejectment. A statutory proceeding for the eviction of a tenant holding over after termination of the lease or breach of its conditions.

Ejector. One who ejects, puts out, or dispossesses another.

Casual ejector. The nominal defendant in an action of ejectment; so called because, by a fiction of law peculiar to that action, he is supposed to come casually or by accident upon the premises and to eject the lawful possessor. 3 Bl.Comm. 203.

Ejectum /ajektam/. That which is thrown up by the sea. Also jetsam, wreck, etc.

Ejectus /ajektas/. In old English law, a whore-monger.

Ejectoria /eyhersiytoriya/. In Spanish law, the name of the Roman law.

Ejectum /ajektam/. That which is thrown up by the sea. Also jetsam, wreck, etc.

Ejusdem /iyjasdam/. Of the same kind or class as those specifically mentioned. Used in the construction, where general words follow the enumeration of particular classes of things, the general words will be construed as applying only to things of the same general class as those enumerated. Campbell v. Board of Dental Examiners, 53 Cal.App.3d 283, 125 Cal.Rptr. 694, 696.

Ejus est interpretari cujus est condere /iyjas ést ininterpretaray kyúwjwjas ést kóndary/. It is his to interpret whose it is to enact.

Ejus est nolle, qui potest velle /iyjas ést nólly, kwy powdast vély/. He who can will (exercise volition), has a right to refuse to will (to withhold consent). This maxim is sometimes written, Ejus est non nolle qui potest velle, and is translated, "He may consent tacitly who may consent expressly."

Ejus est periculum cujus est dominium aut commodum /iyjas est perikyalam kyúwjwjas ést damnýjum ot köswdam/. He who has the dominion or advantage has the risk.

Ejus nulla culpa est, cui parere necessis sit /iyjas nálal kalpá ést, kyúwjay poréry neesíy sit/. No guilt attaches to him who is compelled to obey. Obedience to existing laws is a sufficient extenuation of guilt before a civil tribunal.

Elaborare /alábäréry/. In old European law, to gain, acquire, or purchase, as by labor and industry.

Elaboratus /alábäréydas/. Property which is the acquisition of labor.

Elder brethren. A distinguished body of men, elected as masters of Trinity House, an institution incorporated in the reign of Henry VIII, charged with numerous important duties relating to the marine, such as the superintendence of light-houses. The full title of the corporation is Elder Brethren of the Holy and Undivided Trinity.

Elder title. A title of earlier date, but coming simultaneously into operation with a title of younger origin, is called the "elder title," and prevails.

Eldest. Oldest; first born; one with greatest seniority.

Electa una via, non datur recursus ad alteram /alékta yuwma váya, non déyýdar rákýrasá šéd óltaram/. He who has chosen one way cannot have recourse to another.

Electoralia /ailatorialia/. Election is an internal, free, and spontaneous separation of one thing from another, without compulsion, consisting in intention and will.

Electio. The act of choosing or selecting one or more from a greater number of persons, things, courses, or rights. The choice of an alternative. The internal, free, and spontaneous separation of one thing from another, without compulsion, consisting in intention and will. The selection of one person from a specified class to discharge certain duties in a state, corporation, or society. With respect to the choice of persons to fill public office or the decision of a particular public question or public policy the term means in ordinary usage the expression by vote of the will of the people or of a somewhat numerous body of electors. "Election" ordinarily has reference to a choice or selection by electors. While "appointment" refers to a choice or selection by an individual.

The choice which is open to a debtor who is bound in an alternative obligation to select either one of the alternatives.

The choice, by the prosecution, upon which of several counts in an indictment (charging distinct offenses of the same degree, but not parts of a continuous series of acts) it will proceed.

See also Certificate of election; Equitable election; Free and clear.

Election at large. Election in which a public official is selected from a major election district rather than a minor subdivision within the larger unit.

Election of defenses. The selection of a particular defense on which to rest in contesting a claim or in defending a criminal charge.

Election of remedies. The liberty of choosing (or the act of choosing) one out of several means afforded by law for the redress of an injury, or one out of several available forms of action. An "election of remedies" arises when one having two coexistent but inconsistent remedies chooses to exercise one, in which event he loses the right to thereafter exercise the other. Doctrine provides that if two or more remedies exist which are repugnant and inconsistent with one another, a party will be bound if he has chosen one of them. Melby v. Hawkins Pontiac, Inc., 13 Wash.App. 745, 537 P.2d 807, 810. See also Equitable election.

General election. One for a definite purpose, regularly reoccurring at stated times fixed by law. An "election of remedies" arises when one having two coexistent but inconsistent remedies chooses to exercise one, in which event he loses the right to thereafter exercise the other.

Election conducted at a time other than the presidential election year.

Regular election. One recurring at stated times fixed by law. A general, usual, or stated election. When applied to elections, the terms "regular" and "general" are used interchangeably and synonymously. The word "regular" is used in reference to a general election occurring throughout the state. See also General election, supra.

Primary election. An election by the voters of a ward, precinct, or other small district, belonging to a particular party, of representatives or delegates to a convention which is to meet and nominate the candidates of their party to stand at an approaching municipal or general election. Also, an election to select candidates for office by a political organization, the voters being restricted to the members or supporters of such organization. An election, preliminary in nature, the purpose being to narrow in number the candidates that will appear on the final, official ballot.

Recall election. Election where voters have opportunity to remove public official from elected office.

Special election. An election for a particular emergency or need, conducted in the interval between regularly scheduled elections in order to fill a vacancy arising by death of the incumbent of the office, decide a question submitted on an initiative referendum, or recall petition, etc. In determining whether an election is special or general, regard must be had to the subject-matter as well as date of the election, and, if an election occurs throughout state uniformly by direct operation of law, it is a "general election," but, if it depends on employment of special preliminary proceeding peculiar to process which may or may not occur, and the election is applicable only to a restricted area less than whole state, it is a "special election."

Election board. A board of inspectors or commissioners appointed in each election precinct by government (e.g. county or city) authorities responsible for determining whether individual voters are qualified, supervising the polling, and often ascertaining and reporting the results. Local, city or town agency which is charged with the conduct of elections.

In statutes, the term may include a primary election.

See also Regular election, infra.

Law of wills. A widow's election is her choice of whether she will take under the will or under the statute; that is, whether she will accept the provision made for her in the will, and acquiesce in her husband's disposition of his property, or disregard it and claim what the law allows her. Logan v. Logan, Tex.Civ.App., 112 S.W.2d 515, 518. An "election under the will" means that a legatee or devisee under a will is put to the choice of accepting the beneficial interest offered by the donor in lieu of some estate which he is entitled to, but which is taken from him by the terms of the will. See also Election by spouse; Equitable election.

Off-year election. Election conducted at a time other than the presidential election year.

Presidential election. See U.S.Const. Amends. XII, XX, XXII-XXVI.

Primary election. An election by the voters of a ward, precinct, or other small district, belonging to a particular party, of representatives or delegates to a convention which is to meet and nominate the candidates of their party to stand at an approaching municipal or general election. Also, an election to select candidates for office by a political organization, the voters being restricted to the members or supporters of such organization. An election, preliminary in nature, the purpose being to narrow in number the candidates that will appear on the final, official ballot.

Recall election. Election where voters have opportunity to remove public official from elected office.

Regular election. One recurring at stated times fixed by law. A general, usual, or stated election. When applied to elections, the terms "regular" and "general" are used interchangeably and synonymously. The word "regular" is used in reference to a general election occurring throughout the state. See also General election, supra.

Special election. An election for a particular emergency or need, conducted in the interval between regularly scheduled elections in order to fill a vacancy arising by death of the incumbent of the office, decide a question submitted on an initiative referendum, or recall petition, etc. In determining whether an election is special or general, regard must be had to the subject-matter as well as date of the election, and, if an election occurs throughout state uniformly by direct operation of law, it is a "general election," but, if it depends on employment of special preliminary proceeding peculiar to process which may or may not occur, and the election is applicable only to a restricted area less than whole state, it is a "special election."

Election board. A board of inspectors or commissioners appointed in each election precinct by government (e.g. county or city) authorities responsible for determining whether individual voters are qualified, supervising the polling, and often ascertaining and reporting the results. Local, city or town agency which is charged with the conduct of elections.
Election by spouse. Statutory provision that a surviving spouse may choose as between taking that which is provided for her in her husband's will, claiming dower or taking her statutorily prescribed share. Such election may be presented if the will leaves the spouse less than she would otherwise receive by statute. This election may also be taken if the spouse seeks to set aside a will which contains a provision to the effect that an attempt to contest the will defeats the rights of one to take under the will. See also Election (Law of wills); Equitable election.

Election contest. A contest in behalf of one who has failed of success in election against right of one who has been declared or determined by proper authority to have been successful. Election contest involves matter of going behind election returns and inquiring into qualifications of electors, counting of ballots, and other matters affecting validity of ballots. Vance v. Johnson, 238 Ark. 1009, 386 S.W.2d 240, 242.

Election district. A subdivision of territory, whether of state, county, or city, the boundaries of which are fixed by law, for convenience in local or general elections.

Election, doctrine of. When a third person has contracted with an agent without knowing of the agency, and thereafter the third person discovers the agency and the identity of the principal, the third person may enforce the contract against the agent or against the principal at his election, but not against both. This is known as the doctrine of election.

Election dower. A name sometimes given to the provision which a law or statute makes for a widow in case she "elects" to reject the provision made for her in the will and take what the statute accords. Stanton v. Leonard, 344 Mo. 998, 130 S.W.2d 487, 489. See Election (Law of wills); Election by spouse.

Electiones fiant rite et libere sine interruptione aliqua /ælɛkʃiəˈwɔɪnɪz ˈfɛjənt rəˈɹɛdɪə ðə ˈlɪbəri ðeɪ ˈsænɪli ɪntrəˈpɛʃəˈwɔɪnɪ ˌælɛkswa/; Elections should be made in due form, and freely, without any interruption.

Election, estoppel by. An estoppel which arises by a choice between inconsistent remedies. See Election (Election of remedies).

An estoppel predicated on a voluntary and intelligent action or choice of one of several things which is inconsistent with another, the effect of the estoppel being to prevent the party so choosing from afterwards reversing his election or disputing the state of affairs or rights of others resulting from his original choice.

The doctrine of "estoppel by election" against beneficiary who has elected to take favorable provisions of will from objecting to other provisions of will applies only where will undertakes to bestow a gift and also deprive donee of a prior existing right, thus confronting devisee with alternative of accepting devise and renouncing prior right or of retaining latter and renouncing devise. Mason & Mason v. Brown, Tex.Civ.App., 182 S.W.2d 729, 733.

Election judges. In English law, judges of the high court selected in pursuance of Parliamentary Elections Act of 1868, and Judicature Act of 1925, for the trial of election petitions. See Election board.

Election of remedies. See Election.

Election petitions. In England, petitions for inquiry into the validity of elections of members of parliament when it is alleged that the return of a member is invalid for bribery or any other reason.

Election returns. The report made to the board of canvassers or election board of the number of votes cast for each candidate or proposition voted upon by those charged by law with the duty of counting or tallying the votes for or against the respective candidates or propositions.

Election returns. The report made to the board of canvassers or election board of the number of votes cast for each candidate or proposition voted upon by those charged by law with the duty of counting or tallying the votes for or against the respective candidates or propositions.

Electio semel facta, et placitum testatum non patitur regressum /ælɛkʃiəˈsɛml ˈfæktə ðə pləˈsitəm teʃtədəm nɒn ˈpækədər rɛɡˈrɛsəm/; Election once made, and plea witnessed (or intent shown), suffers not a recall.

Elective. Dependent upon choice; bestowed or passing by election. Also pertaining or relating to elections; conferring the right or power to vote at elections.

Elective franchise. The right of voting at public elections. The privilege of qualified voters to cast their ballots for the candidates they favor at elections authorized by law as guaranteed by Fifteenth and Nineteenth Amendments to Constitution, and by federal voting rights acts.

Elective office. One which is to be filled by popular election. One filled by the direct exercise of the voters' franchise in contrast to an appointive office.

Elective share. See Election (Law of wills); Election by spouse.

Elector. A duly qualified voter; one who has a vote in the choice of any officer; a constituent. One who elects or has the right of choice, or who has the right to vote for any functionary, or for the adoption of any measure. In a narrower sense, one who has the general right to vote, and the right to vote for public officers. One authorized to exercise the elective franchise.

One of the persons chosen to comprise the "electoral college" (q.v.).

Also, the title of certain German princes who had a voice in the election of the Holy Roman Emperors. The office of elector in some instances became hereditary and was connected with territorial possessions.

Sometimes, one who exercises the right of election in equity.

Registered qualified elector. One possessing the constitutional qualifications, and registered under the registration statute.

Electoral. Pertaining to electors or elections; composed or consisting of electors. See Electoral college.

Electoral college. The college or body of electors of a state chosen to elect the president and vice-president; also, the whole body of such electors, composed of the electoral colleges of the several states. See U.S. Const. Amend. XII.

Electoral process. Generic term for methods by which persons are elected to public office; voting.

Electronic surveillance. See Eavesdropping; Wiretapping.
Elegit /aliyjat/. (Lat. He has chosen.) This was the Eleemosyna regis, and eleemosyna aratri, or carucarum /élamósané hriyé/zétyray/kárrákéram/. A penny which King Ethelred ordered to be paid for every plow in England towards the support of the poor.

Eleemosynaria /élamósanénriyé/. The place in a religious house where the common alms were deposited, and thence by the almoner distributed to the poor.
In old English law, the aumerie, ambrey, or ambray; words still used in common speech in the north of England, to denote a pantry or cupboard. The office of almoner.

Eleemosynarius /élamósanénriyé/. In old English law, an almoner, or chief officer, who received the eleemosinary rents and gifts, and in due method distributed them to pious and charitable causes.
The name of an officer (lord almoner) of the Eng-ish kings, in former times, who distributed the royal arms or bounty.

Eleemosynary /élamósané(h)riyé/éliyamózáné(h)riyé/. Relating or devoted to charity; given in charity; having the nature of alms. United Community Services
v. Omaha Nat. Bank, 162 Nev. 786, 77 N.W.2d 578, 582. See Charity; Charitable.

Eleemosynary corporation. A private corporation created for charitable and benevolent purposes. Chartable corporation. See also Charitable organizations.

Eleemosynary defense. Term used to describe defense available in some jurisdictions for charitable corporations and institutions when they are sued in tort; though such tort immunity has been abrogated or greatly restricted in many states.

Elegant /élayya/. In the civil law, civil.

Elegant /élayya/. (Lat. He has chosen.) This was the name, in English practice, of a writ of execution first given by the statute of Westm. 2 (13 Edw. I, c. 18) either upon a judgment for a debt or damages or upon the forfeiture of a recognizance taken in the king's court. It was so called because it was in the choice or election of the plaintiff whether he would sue out this writ or a fi. fa. By it the defendant's goods and chattels were appraised and all of them (except oxen and beasts of the plow) were delivered to the plaintiff, at such reasonable appraisement and price, in part satisfaction of his debt. If the goods were not sufficient, then the moieties of his freehold lands, which he had at the time of the judgment given, were also to be delivered to the plaintiff, to hold till out of the rents and profits thereof the debt be levied, or till the defendant's interest be expired.
During this period the plaintiff was called “tenant by elegit,” and his estate, an “estate by elegit.” Such writ was abolished by Administration of Justice Act of 1956.

Element. Material; substance; ingredient; factor.
Also, one of the simple substances or principles of which, according to early natural philosophers, the physical universe is composed, the four elements pointed out by Empedocles being fire, air, water, et. See Elements.

Elements. The forces of nature. Violent or severe weather. The ultimate undecomposable parts which unite to form anything. Popularly, fire, air, earth, and water, anciently supposed to be the four simple bodies of which the world was composed. Often applied in a particular sense to wind and water, as “the fury of the elements.” Fire and water as elements included in the expression “damages by the elements” means the same thing as “damages by the act of God.”

Elements of crime. Those constituent parts of a crime which must be proved by the prosecution to sustain a conviction.

Eleventh Amendment. The Amendment to the U.S.
Constitution, added in 1798, which provides that the judicial power of the U.S. shall not extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by citizens of another state, or by citizens or subjects of any foreign state.

Eligible. Fit and proper to be chosen; qualified to be elected. Capable of serving, legally qualified to serve. Capable of being chosen, as a candidate for office. Also, qualified and capable of holding office.
See also Capacity.

Elimination. In old English law, the act of banishing or turning out of doors; rejection.

Elinguation /iylirjgweyshan/. The punishment of cuting out the tongue.

Elisors /alayzarz/. Electors or choosers. Persons appointed by the court to execute writs of venire, in cases where both the sheriff and coroner are disqualified from acting, and whose duty is to choose—that is, name and return—the jury. 3 Bl.Comm. 355.
Persons appointed to execute any writ, in default of the sheriff and coroner, are also called “elisors.” An elisor may be appointed to take charge of a jury retiring to deliberate upon a verdict, when both sheriff and coroner are disqualified or unable to act.

Elkins Act. Federal Act (1903) which strengthened the Interstate Commerce Act by prohibiting rebates and other forms of preferential treatment to large shippers.

Ell. A measure of length answering to the modern yard. 1 Bl.Comm. 275. See also Meter.

Ellenborough's Act /élénbrz skt/. An English statute (43 Geo. III, c. 58) punishing offenses against the person.

Ellipsis /alipsas/. Omission of words or clauses necessary to complete the construction, but not necessary to convey the meaning.

Elogium /alowjiyam/. In the civil law, a will or testamory.

Eloignment /aloynmant/. The getting a thing or person out of the way; or removing it to a distance, so as to be out of reach.
Emancipated minor. A person under 18 years of age.

Emanations. The act of coming or flowing forth from.

Exuviation /al(y)uwviyeyshan/. Movement of soil elsewhere. In another place; in any other place. The act of a wife who voluntarily deserts her husband to go away with and cohabit with another man. The departure of a married woman from her husband to go away with and cohabit with an adulterer. Also, the act of a woman who has voluntarily left her husband, to indulge in sexual intercourse with her.

In a more popular sense, the act of an unmarried woman in secretly leaving her home with a man, especially with a view to marriage without her parents' consent.

Elsewhere. In another place; in any other place. The term does not always mean literally any other place whatever, but may be more or less limited by the context.

In shipping articles, this term, following the designation of the port of destination, must be construed either as void for uncertainty or as subordinate to the principal voyage stated in the preceding words.

Eluviation /a(l)y)uwviyéyshan/. Movement of soil caused by excessive water in soil.

Emanations. The act of coming or flowing forth from something. That which flows or comes forth from something. An effluence.

Emancipated minor. A person under 18 years of age who is totally self-supporting.

Emancipation. The act by which one who was unfree, or under the power and control of another, is rendered free, or set at liberty and made his own master.

The term is principally used with reference to the emancipation of a minor child by its parents, which involves an entire surrender of the right to the care, custody, and earnings of such child as well as a renunciation of parental duties. Glover v. Glover, 44 Tenn.App. 712, 319 S.W.2d 238, 241. The emancipation may be express, as by voluntary agreement of parent and child, or implied from such acts and conduct as import consent, and it may be conditional or absolute, complete or partial. Complete emancipation is entire surrender of care, custody, and earnings of child, as well as renunciation of parental duties. And a "partial emancipation" frees a child for only a part of the period of minority, or from only a part of the parent's rights, or for some purposes, and not for others.

There is no fixed age when a child becomes emancipated (though it is usually upon reaching majority); it does not automatically occur on reaching majority. Turner v. McCune, Mass.App., 377 N.E.2d 942.

Emancipation proclamation. An executive proclamation, issued January 1, 1863, by Abraham Lincoln, declaring that all persons held in slavery in certain designated states and districts were and should remain free.

Embargo /ambdrgow/. A proclamation or order of government, usually issued in time of war or threatened hostilities, prohibiting the departure of ships or goods from some or all ports until further order. Government order prohibiting commercial trade with individuals or businesses of other nations. Legal prohibition on commerce.

The temporary or permanent sequestration of the property of individuals for the purposes of a government, e.g., to obtain vessels for the transport of troops, the owners being reimbursed for this forced service.

Embassador. See Ambassador.

Embassy /embsiy/ or Embassage /embasj/. Mission, function, business, or official residence of an ambassador. Body of diplomatic representatives headed by ambassador. See Ambassador.

Ember Days. In ecclesiastical law, those days which the ancient fathers called "quattuor tempora jejunii" are of great antiquity in the church. They are observed on Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday next after Quadragesima Sunday, or the first Sunday in Lent, after Whitsuntide, Holyrood Day, in September, and St. Lucy's Day, about the middle of December. Our almanacs call the weeks in which they fall the "Ember Weeks," and they are now chiefly noticed on account of the ordination of priests and deacons; because the canon appoints the Sundays next after the Ember weeks for the solemn times of ordination, though the bishops, if they please, may ordain on any Sunday or holiday.

Embezzlement. To "embezzle" means willfully to take, or convert to one's own use, another's money or property, of which the wrongdoer acquired possession lawfully, by reason of some office or employment or position of trust. The elements of "embezzlement" are that there must be relationship such as that of employment or agency between the owner of the money and the defendant, the money alleged to have been embezzled must have come into the possession of defendant by virtue of that relationship and there must be an intentional and fraudulent appropriation or conversion of the money. State v.
Thyfault, 121 N.J. Super. 487, 297 A.2d 873, 879. The fraudulent conversion of the property of another by one who has lawful possession of the property and whose fraudulent conversion has been made punishable by statute. See also Conversion.

Emblemata trionianl /emblemôa trabóñiýeniy/. In the Roman law, alterations, modifications, and additions to the writings of the older jurists, selected to make up the body of the Pandects, introduced by Tribonian and his associates who constituted the commission appointed for that purpose, with a view to harmonize contradictions, excising obsolete matter, and make the whole conform to the law as understood in Justinian's time, were called by this name.

Emblems /émplamants/. Crops annually produced by labor of tenant. Corn, wheat, rye, potatoes, garden vegetables, and other crops which are produced annually, not spontaneously, but by labor and industry. Finley v. McClure, 222 Kan. 637, 567 P.2d 851, 853. The doctrine of emblems denotes the right of a tenant to take and carry away, after his tenancy has ended, such annual products of the land as have resulted from his own care and labor. See Fructus industriales.

Emblers de gentz /émbrz da jênts/. L. Fr. A stealing from the people. The phrase occurs in the old English rolls of parliament: "Whereas divers murders, emblers de gentz, and robberies are committed," etc.

Embolism /émbolizam/. The mechanical obstruction of an artery or capillary by some body traveling in the blood current, as, a blood-clot (embolus), a globule of fat or an air bubble.

Embolus /émbulas/. In case of wounds is a product of coagulation of the blood or blood clot. A plug which floats along until it becomes lodged so as to obstruct the passage of the blood. It consists usually of a clot or fibrin, a shred from a morbid growth, a globule of fat, air bubbles, or a microorganism. An embolus or floating particle by attaching itself or becoming wedged may form a thrombosis or occlusion.

Embraceor /émbréyaor/. A person guilty of the offense of embracery (q.v.).

Embracery /émbreýarya/. The crime of attempting to influence a jury corruptly to one side or the other, by promises, persuasions, entreaties, entertainments, douceurs, and the like. The person guilty of it is called an "embraceor." This is both a state and federal (18 U.S.C.A. §§ 1503, 1504) crime.

Emenda /éménda/. Amends; something given in reparation for a trespass; or, in old Saxon times, in compensation for an injury or crime.

Emendare /éymandéry/. In Saxon law, to make amends or satisfaction for any crime or trespass committed; to pay a fine; to be fined. Emendare se, to redeem, or ransom one's life, by payment of a wredegil.

Emendatio /émandéshiyowy/. In old English law, amendment, or correction. The power of amending and correcting abuses, according to certain rules and measures.

In Saxon law, a pecuniary satisfaction for an injury; the same as emenda (q.v.).

Emendatio panis et cerevisie /émandéshiyow pénas et sárviiz(h)iyiy/. In old English law, the power of supervising and correcting the weights and measures of bread and ale (assisting bread and beer).

E mere gratia /i/mi gréshiyow/. Out of mere grace or favor.

Emerge /émérj/. To arise; to come to light.

Emergency. A sudden unexpected happening; an unforeseen occurrence or condition; perplexing contingency or complication of circumstances; a sudden or unexpected occasion for action; exigency; pressing necessity. Emergency is an unforeseen combination of circumstances that calls for immediate action. State v. Perry, 29 Ohio App.2d 33, 278 N.E.2d 50, 53. See also Emergency doctrine; Sudden emergency doctrine.

Emergency Court of Appeals. Court created during World War II to review orders of the Price Control Administrator. It was abolished in 1953. This court was established again in 1970 under Section 211 of the Economic Stabilization Act to handle primarily wage and price control matters.

Emergency doctrine. Under the doctrine variously referred to as the "emergency," "imminent peril," or "sudden peril" doctrine, when one is confronted with a sudden peril requiring instinctive action, he is not, in determining his course of action, held to the exercise of the same degree of care as when he has time for reflection, and in the event that a driver of a motor vehicle suddenly meets with an emergency which naturally would overpower the judgment of a reasonably prudent and careful driver, so that momentarily he is thereby rendered incapable of deliberate and intelligent action, and as a result injures a third person, he is not negligent, provided he has used due care to avoid meeting such an emergency and, after it arises, he exercises such care as a reasonably prudent and capable driver would use under the unusual circumstances. Sandberg v. Spoelstra, 46 Wash.2d 776, 285 P.2d 564, 568.

In an emergency situation when medical service is required for an adult who by virtue of his physical condition is incapable of giving consent, or with respect to a child, whose parent or other guardian is absent, and thus incapable of giving consent, the law implies the consent required to administer emergency medical services. This is a good defense to an action of tort for an alleged battery.

Emergency employment doctrine. A regularly employed servant possesses implied authority to engage an assistant to aid in performing a task, within scope of servant's duties in case of emergency rendering it absolutely necessary to obtain such assistance, and without which emergency conditions could not be overcome by servant or any of his coemployees in regular service of their common master. Hall v. O. C. Whitaker Co., 143 Tex. 397, 185 S.W.2d 720, 722, 723.

Emergent year. The epoch or date whence any people begin to compute their time.

Emigrant /émigrant/. One who leaves his country for any reason, with intention to not return, with design to reside elsewhere. See also Immigrant.

Emigrant agent. One engaged in the business of hiring laborers for work outside the country or state.
Emigration. The act of removing from one country to another, with intention to not return. It is to be distinguished from "expatriation" which means the abandonment of one's citizenship in it, while emigration denotes merely the removal of person and property to another country. The former is usually the consequence of the latter. Emigration is also sometimes used in reference to the removal from one section to another of the same country. See also Deportation; Immigration.

Emigré. Person forced to emigrate for political reasons. See also Deportation.

Eminence /éman(t)s/. An honorary title given to cardinals. They were called "illustriissimi" and "reverendissimi" until the pontificate of Urban VIII.

Eminent domain /émanant doméyn/. The power to take private property for public use by the state, municipalities, and private persons or corporations authorized to exercise functions of public character. Housing Authority of Cherokee National of Oklahoma v. Langley, Okl., 555 P.2d 1025, 1026. Fifth Amendment, U.S. Constitution.

In the United States, the power of eminent domain is founded in both the federal (Fifth Amend.) and state constitutions. However, the Constitution limits the power to taking for a public purpose and prohibits the exercise of the power of eminent domain without just compensation to the owners of the property which is taken. The process of exercising the power of eminent domain is commonly referred to as "condemnation", or "expropriation".

The right of eminent domain is the right of the state, through its regular organization, to reassert, either temporarily or permanently, its dominion over any portion of the soil of the state on account of public exigency and for the public good. Thus, in time of war or insurrection, the proper authorities may possess and hold any part of the territory of the state for the common safety; and in time of peace the legislature may authorize the appropriation of the same to public purposes, such as the opening of roads, construction of defenses, or providing channels for trade or travel. Eminent domain is the highest and most exact idea of property remaining in the government, or in the aggregate body of the people in their sovereign capacity. It gives a right to resume the possession of the property in the manner directed by the constitution and the laws of the state, whenever the public interest requires it.

See also Adequate compensation; Condemnation; Constructive taking; Damages; Expropriation; Fair market value; Just compensation; Larger parcel; Public use; Take.

Expropriation. The term "expropriation" (used e.g. in Louisiana) is practically synonymous with the term "eminent domain". Tennessee Gas Transmission Co. v. Violet Trapping Co., La.App., 200 So.2d 428, 433.

Partial taking. The taking of part of an owner's property under the laws of eminent domain. Compensation must be based on damages or benefits to the remaining property, as well as the part taken. See Condemnation.

Emissary /émaséri/. A person sent upon a mission as the agent of another; also a secret agent sent to ascertain the sentiments and designs of others, and to propagate opinions favorable to his employer. See Ambassador; Diplomatic agent.

Emission. The discharge, ejection or throwing out of; e.g. a pollutant from a factory or any secretion or other matter from the body.

Emit. To put forth or send out; to issue. "No state shall emit bills of credit." Art. 1, § 10, U.S. Const.

To give forth with authority; to give out or discharge; to put into circulation. See Bill (Bill of credit).

Emolument /émolüment/. The profit arising from office or employment; that which is received as a compensation for services, or which is annexed to the possession of office as salary, fees, and perquisites. See perquisite, advantage, profit, or gain arising from the possession of an office. McLean v. United States, 226 U.S. 374, 38 S.Ct. 122, 124, 57 L.Ed. 260; State ex rel. Todd v. Reeves, 196 Wash. 145, 82 P.2d 173, 175.

Emotion. A strong feeling of hate, love, sorrow and the like arising within a person and not as a result, necessarily, of conscious activity of the mind.

Emotional insanity. The species of mental aberration produced by a violent excitement of the emotions or passions, though the reasoning faculties may remain unimpaired. A passion, effecting for a space of time complete derangement of accused's intellect, or an impulse, which his mind is not able to resist, to do the act. Fannon v. Commonwealth, 285 Ky. 817, 175 S.W.2d 531, 533. See Insanity.

Empalement /ampdylmant/. In ancient law, a mode of inflicting punishment, by thrusting a sharp pole up the fundament.

Empannel. See Impanel.

Emparlane. See Imparlane.

Emparnours /empärnoars/. L. Fr. Undertakers of suits.

Emperor. The title of the sovereign ruler of an empire. This designation was adopted by the rulers of the Roman world after the decay of the republic, and was assumed by those who claimed to be their successors in the "Holy Roman Empire," as also by Napoleon. The sovereigns of Japan and Morocco are often, though with little propriety, called emperors. In western speech the former sovereigns of Turkey and China were called emperors.

The title "emperor" seems to denote a power and dignity superior to that of a "king." It appears to be the appropriate style of the executive head of a federal government, constructed on the monarchial principle, and comprising in its organization several distinct kingdoms or other quasi sovereign states; as was the case with the German empire from 1871 to 1918. The proper meaning of emperor is the chief of a confederation of states of which kings are members. In general, an emperor is the holder of a sovereignty extending over conquered or confederated peoples, a king is ruler of a single people.
Emphasizing facts. A jury instruction is said to emphasize facts which may contain sufficient facts to authorize a verdict, but nevertheless some fact or facts are selected from the evidence and mentioned in such a way as to indicate to the jury that they have especial importance when that is not justified. Robinson v. Ross, Mo., 47 S.W.2d 122, 125.

Employmen. To engage in one’s service; to hire; to use as an agent or substitute in transacting business; to commission and intrust with the performance of certain acts or functions or with the management of one’s affairs; and, when used in respect to a servant or hired laborer, the term is equivalent to hiring, which implies a request and a contract for a compensation.

Employee. A person who employs the services of others; one for whom employees work and who pays their wages or salaries. The correlative of “employee.”

Employer. One who employs the services of others; one for whom employees work and who pays their wages or salaries. The correlative of “employee.”

Employment agency. Business operated by a person, firm or corporation engaged in procuring, for a fee, employment for others and employees for employers. The fee may be paid by either the employer or the employee, depending upon the terms of the agreement. See also Finder.
Employment contract. An agreement or contract between employer and employee in which the terms and conditions of one’s employment are provided.

Emporium /emporiyam/. A place for wholesale trade in commodities carried by sea. The name is sometimes applied to a seaport town, but it properly signifies only a particular place in such a town.

Empresarios /empresaryows/. In Mexican law, undertakers or promoters of extensive enterprises, aided by concessions or monopolistic grants from government; particularly, persons receiving extensive land grants in consideration of their bringing emigrants into the country and settling them on the lands, with a view of increasing the population and developing the resources of the country. U. S. v. Maxwell Land-Grant Co., 121 U.S. 325, 7 S.Ct. 1015, 30 L.Ed. 949.

Emprestido /empreystifow/. In Spanish law, a loan. Something lent to the borrower at his request.

Emptio /empsh(i)yow/. In the Roman and civil law, the act of buying; a purchase.

Emptio bonorum /empsh(i)yow bandram/. A species of forced assignment for the benefit of creditors; being a public sale of an insolvent debtor’s estate whereby the purchaser succeeded to all his property, rights, and claims, and became responsible for his debts and liabilities to the extent of a quota fixed before the transfer.

Emptio et venditio /empsh(i)yow et vandish(i)yow/. Purchase and sale; sometimes translated “emption and vendition.” The name of the contract of sale in the Roman law. Sometimes made a compound word, emptio-venditio.

Emptio rei sperat*. /empsh(i)yow rfyay spar^ydiy/. A purchase in the hope of an uncertain future profit; of forced assignment for the benefit of creditors; the buyer.

Emptor /emp( )tar/. Lat. A buyer or purchaser. Used in the maxim “caveat emptor,” let the buyer beware; i.e., the buyer of an article must be on his guard and take the risks of his purchase. See Caveat emptor.

Emptor emit quam minimo potest, venditor vendit quam maximo potest. /emp( )tar emit kwём mímamow pówdst, vendìtor vendìt kwём maksmamow pówdst/. The buyer purchases for the lowest price he can; the seller sells for the highest price he can.

Emtio /empsh(i)yow/. In the civil law, purchase. This form of the word is used in the Digests and Code. See Emptio.

Emtior /emp( )tar/. In the civil law, a buyer or purchaser; the buyer.

Emtrix /ém( )traks/. In the civil law, a female purchaser; the purchaser.

Enable. To give power to do something; to make able. In the case of a person under disability as to dealing with another, “enable” has the primary meaning of removing that disability; not of conferring a compulsory power as against that other.

Enabling Act. See Enabling statute.

Enabling clause. That portion of a statute or constitution which gives to governmental officials the right to put it into effect and to enforce such. See Enforcement powers.

Enabling power. When the donor of a power, who is the owner of the estate, confers upon persons not seized of the use the right of creating interests to take effect out of it, which could not be done by the donee of the power unless by such authority, this is called an “enabling power.” See also Power of appointment.

Enabling statute. Term applied to any statute enabling persons or corporations to do what before they could not. It is applied to statutes which confer new powers. See also Enabling clause.

The English Act of 32 Henry VIII, c. 28, by which tenants in tail, husbands seised in right of their wives, and others were empowered to make leases for their lives or for twenty-one years, which they could not do before. 2 Bl.Comm. 319.

Enach. In Saxon law, the satisfaction for a crime; the recompense for a fault.

Enact. To establish by law; to perform or effect; to decree. The common introductory formula in making statutory laws is, “Be it enacted.” See Enacting clause.

Enacting clause. A clause at the beginning of a statute which states the authority by which it is made. That part of a statute which declares its enactment and serves to identify it as an act of legislation proceeding from the proper legislative authority. Various formulas are used for this clause, such as “Be it enacted by the people of the state of Illinois represented in general assembly,” “Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled,” “The general assembly do enact,” etc.

Enactment. The method or process by which a bill in the Legislature becomes a law.

Enajenackm /eynfeheynasydwn/. In Spanish and Mexican law, alienation; transfer of property. The act by which the property in a thing, by lucrative title, is transferred, as a donation; or by onerous title, as by sale or barter. In a more extended sense, the term comprises also the contracts of emphyteusis, pledge, and mortgage, and even the creation of a servitude upon an estate.

En arere /fen arir/, L. Fr. In time past.

En autre droit /an dwtra drdyt/dn dwtra dr(w)6/. In the case of a person under disability as to dealing with another, “enable” has the primary meaning of removing that disability; not of conferring a compulsory power as against that other.

En banc /an barjk/on boijk/. L. Fr. In the bench. Full bench. Refers to a session where the entire membership of the court will participate in the decision rather than the regular quorum. In other countries, it is common for a court to have more members than are usually necessary to hear an appeal. In the United States, the Circuit Courts of Appeal usually sit in panels of judges but for important cases may expand the bench to a larger number, when they are said to be sitting en banc. See Fed.R.App.P. 35. An appellate court in which all the judges who are necessary for a quorum are sitting as contrasted with a session of such a court presided over by a single justice or panel of justices.

En bloc /én blok/. As a unit; as a whole.

En brever /én brevây/. In French law, an acte is said to be en brevet when it has not been recorded by the notary who drew it.

Encheson /anchíyzan/. The occasion, cause, or reason for which anything is done.

Enclose. See Inclose.

Enclosure /aqowzhvar/. See Inclosure.

Encolenda /enkówmíyénda/. In Spanish law, a grant from the crown to a private person of a certain portion of territory in the Spanish colonies, together with the concession of a certain number of the native inhabitants, on the feudal principle of commendation. Also a royal grant of privileges to the military orders of Spain.

Encourage. In criminal law, to instigate; to incite to action; to give courage to; to inspire; to embolden; to raise confidence; to make confident; to help; to forward; to advise. See Aid and abet.

Encroach. To enter by gradual steps or stealth into the possessions or rights of another; to trespass or intrude. To gain or intrude unlawfully upon the lands, property, or authority of another.

Encroachment. An illegal intrusion in a highway or navigable river, with or without obstruction. Hartford Elec. Light Co. v. Water Resources Commission, 162 Conn. 89, 291 A.2d 721, 730. An encroachment upon a street or highway is a fixture, such as a wall or fence, which illegally intrudes into or invades the highway or incloses a portion of it, diminishing its width or area, but without closing it to public travel.

In the law of easements, where the owner of an easement alters the dominant tenement, so as to impose an additional restriction or burden on the servient tenement, he is said to commit an encroachment.

Encumbrance. Any right to, or interest in, land which may subsist in another to diminution of its value, but consistent with the passing of the fee. Knudson v. Weeks, D.C. Okl., 394 F.Supp. 963, 976. A claim, lien, charge, or liability attached to and binding real property; e.g. a mortgage; judgment lien; mechanics' lien; lease; security interest; easement or right of way; accrued and unpaid taxes.

Enact. Object; intent; result; goal; termination point. Things are construed according to the end.

Endeavor. To exert physical and intellectual strength toward the attainment of an object. A systematic or continuous effort. Thompson v. Corbin, Tex.Civ. App., 137 S.W.2d 157, 159.

En déclaration de simulation /én dêklarasyóówn da sim(y)alasýewn/. A form of action used in Louisiana. Its object is to have a contract declared judicially a simulation and a nullity, to remove a cloud from the title, and to bring back, for any legal purpose, the thing sold to the estate of the true owner.

En demeure /én damyir/. In default. Used in Louisiana of a debtor who fails to pay on demand according to the terms of his obligation.

Endenzie, or endenizen /andéenzan/. To make free; to enfranchise.

End. Object; intent; result; goal; termination point.
Enemy. Adversary; e.g. military adversary.

Enemy alien. An alien residing or traveling in a country which is at war with the country of which he is a national. Enemy aliens may be interned or restricted.

Enemy belligerent. Citizens who associate themselves with the military arm of an enemy government and enter the United States bent on hostile acts. Ex parte Quirin, App.D.C., 317 U.S. 1, 63 S.Ct. 2, 15, 87 L.Ed. 3.

Enemy's property. In international law, and particularly in the usage of prize courts, this term designates any property which is engaged or used in illegal intercourse with the public enemy, whether belonging to an ally or a citizen, as the illegal traffic stamps it with the hostile character and attaches to it all the penal consequences.

Public enemy. A nation at war with the United States; also every citizen or subject of such nation. Term however does not generally include robbers, thieves, private depredators, or riotous mobs. The term has acquired, in the vocabulary of journalism and civic indignation, a more extended meaning, denoting a particularly notorious offender against the criminal laws, especially one who seems more or less immune from successful prosecution, or a social, health or economic condition or problem affecting the public at large, which is difficult to abate or control.

Energy, Department of. The Department of Energy (DOE) provides the framework for a comprehensive and balanced national energy plan through the coordination and administration of the energy functions of the Federal Government. The Department is responsible for the research, development, and demonstration of energy technology; the marketing of Federal power; energy conservation; the nuclear weapons program; regulation of energy production and use; pricing and allocation; and a central energy data collection and analysis program.

En eschange il convient que les estates solent egales. In an exchange it is desirable that the estates be equal.

En fait /ón fé/. Fr. In fact; in deed; actually.

Enfeoff /fôfi/ /anfô/. To invest with an estate by feoffment. To make a gift of any corporeal hereditaments to another. See also Feoffment.

Enfeoffment /anfômant/. The act of investing with an estate by feoffment. To make a gift of any corporeal hereditaments to another. See also Feoffment.

Enforce. To put into execution; to cause to take effect; to make effective; as, to enforce a particular law, a writ, a judgment, or the collection of a debt or fine; Garnishment.

Enforcement. The act of putting something such as a law into effect; the execution of a law; the carrying out of a mandate or command. See also Enforcement powers.

Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act. One of the uniform laws adopted by several states which gives the holder of a foreign judgment essentially the same rights to levy and execution on his judgment as the holder of a domestic judgment. The Act defines a "foreign judgment" as any judgment, decree, or order of a court of the United States or of any other court which is entitled to full faith and credit in the state. See also Full faith and credit clause.

Enforcement powers. The 13th, 14th, 15th, 19th, 23rd, 24th, and 26th Amendments to U.S. Const. each contain clauses granting to Congress the power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of such Amendments.

Enfranchisement. The act of making free (as from slavery); giving a franchise or freedom to; investiture with privileges or capacities of freedom, or municipal or political liberty. Conferring the privilege of voting upon classes of persons who have not previously possessed such. See also Franchise.

Enfranchisement of copyholds. In English law, the conversion of copyhold into freehold tenure, by a conveyance of the fee-simple of the property from the lord of the manor to the copyholder, or by a release from the lord of all seigniorial rights, etc., which destroys the customary descent, and also all rights and privileges annexed to the copyholder's estate.

Engage. To employ or involve one's self; to take part in; to embark on.

Engaged in commerce. To be "engaged in commerce" for purposes of Fair Labor Standards Act and Federal Employers' Liability Act, an employee must be actually engaged in the movement of commerce or the services he performs must be so closely related thereto as to be for all practical purposes an essential part thereof, rather than an isolated local activity. McLeod v. Threlkeld, Tex., 319 U.S. 491, 63 S.Ct. 1248, 1251, 1252, 87 L.Ed. 1538; Boutilier v. Walling, C.C.A.Mich., 148 F.2d 329, 331. See also Commerce.

Engaged in employment. To be rendering service for employer under terms of employment, and is more than being merely hired to commence work. Walling v. Consumers Co., C.C.A.II., 149 F.2d 626, 629.

Engagement. A contract or agreement characterized by exchange of mutual promises; e.g. engagement to marry.

Engagement to marry. A promise or undertaking by a man to marry a woman, for breach of which, formerly, there was a cause of action in many jurisdictions. These actions today have lost favor and are not available in most states. Such actions were called heart balm suits. See Heart balm statutes.

Engender. To cause, to bring about, to excite, to occasion, to call forth.

Engineering. The art and science by which mechanical properties of matter are made useful to man in structures and machines. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. v. Accident & Casualty Ins. Co. of Winterthur, Switzerland, C.C.A.Ohio, 134 F.2d 566, 569.
En masse /on mses/. Fr. In a mass; in a lump; in bulk; at wholesale.

Engrossment. To copy in final draft. Drafting of resolution or bill just prior to final vote upon same in legislature. Buying up or securing enough of a commodity to obtain a monopoly, so as to resell at higher price; i.e. to corner market in such commodity. Preparing deed for execution.

Enhanced. Made greater; e.g. in value or attractiveness. This word, taken in an unqualified sense, is synonymous with “increased,” and comprehends any increase of value, however caused or arising.

Enheritance. L. Fr. Inheritance.

Enlarger Testate /anlar iar lasteyt/. A species of re¬

Enlarge. To make larger; to increase; to extend a time

Enjoinder. To require; command; positively direct. To require a person, by writ of injunction, to perform, or to abstain or desist from, some act. See Injunction; Restraining order.

Enjoy. To have, possess, and use with satisfaction; to occupy or have benefit of.

Enjoymen. The exercise of a right; the possession and fruition of a right, privilege or incorporeal hereditaments. Comfort, consolation, contentment, ease, happiness, pleasure and satisfaction.

Adverse enjoyment. The possession or exercise of an easement under a claim of right against the owner of the land out of which such easement is derived.

Quiet enjoyment. Covenant for. See Covenant.

Enjuicio /en huwiysis(y)ow/. Span. Judicially; in a court of law; in a suit at law.

Enlarge. To make larger; to increase; to extend a time limit; to grant further time. Also to set at liberty one who has been imprisoned or in custody.

Enlarger the estate /anlar iar lasteyt/. A species of release which inures by way of enlarging an estate, and consists of a conveyance of the ulterior interest to the particular tenant; as if there be tenant for life or years, remainder to another in fee, and he in remainder releases all his right to the particular tenant and his heirs, this gives him the estate in fee.

Enlarging. Extending, expanding, or making more comprehensive.

Enlistment. Voluntary entry into one of the armed services other than as a commissioned officer.

En mort mayne /an mórt méyn/. L. Fr. In a dead hand; in mortmain.

Enoc Arden doctrine. The legal principles involved when a person leaves his spouse under such circumstances and for such a period of time as to make the other spouse believe that he is dead with the result that the remaining spouse marries another only to discover later the return of her first husband. Generally, in most states, it is safer for the remaining spouse to secure a divorce before marrying again.

Enormia /anormiya/. In old practice and pleading, unlawful or wrongful acts; wrongs. Et alia enormia, and other wrongs. This phrase constantly occurs in the old writs and declarations of trespass.

Enormous. Aggravated; excessively large. Written “enormious,” in some of the old books. Enormous is where a thing is made without a rule or against law.

En owl main /an áwl méyn/. L. Fr. In equal hand. The word “owl” occurs also in the phrase “owelty of partition.”

Enpleet /anpliyt/. Ancient for implead.

Enquete; or enquest /agket/agkwest/. In canon law, an examination of witnesses, taken down in writing, by or before an authorized judge, for the purpose of gathering testimony to be used on a trial.

En recouvrement /on reykuwvramon/. Fr. In French law, an expression employed to denote that an indorsement made in favor of a person does not transfer to him the property in the bill of exchange, but merely constitutes an authority to such person to recover the amount of the bill.

Enrégistrement /onryzhistramón/. In French law, registration. A formality which consists in inscribing on a register, specially kept for the purpose by the government, a summary analysis of certain deeds and documents. At the same time that such analysis is inscribed upon the register, the clerk places upon the deed a memorandum indicating the date upon which it was registered, and at the side of such memorandum an impression is made with a stamp.

Enroll. To register; to record; to enter on the rolls of a court; to transcribe.

Enrolled. Registered; recorded. Generally speaking, terms “registered” and “enrolled” are used to distinguish certificates granted to two classes of vessels; registry is for purpose of declaring nationality of vessel engaged in foreign trade, and enrollment evidences national character of a vessel engaged in coasting trade or home traffic. R. C. Craig Ltd. v. Ships of the Sea Inc., D.C.Ga., 401 F.Supp. 1051, 1056.

Enrolled bill. The final copy of a bill or joint resolution which has passed both houses of a legislature and is ready for signature. In legislative practice, a bill which has been duly introduced, finally passed by both houses, signed by the proper officers of each, approved by the governor (or President) and filed by the secretary of state.

Enrolled bill rule. Under “enrolled bill rule” it is conclusively presumed that statute, as authenticated Enrollment of vessels. The recording and certification of vessels employed in coastwise or inland navigation; as distinguished from the “registration” of vessels employed in foreign commerce.

Enroute /on ruwt/. Fr. On the way; in the course of transportation.

Enschedule /anskéjal/. To insert in a list, account, or register.

Ensue /ans(y)uw/. To follow after; to follow in order or train of events.

Ensemble /ensíyl/. To seal. Ensealing is still used as a formal word in conveyancing.

Ensue /ans(y)ůw/. To follow after; to follow in order or train of events.

Entail, v. To settle or limit the succession to real property; to create an estate tail.

Entail, n. A fee abridged or limited to the issue, or certain classes of issue, instead of descending to all the heirs.

Break or bar an entail. To free an estate from the limitations imposed by an entail and permit its free disposition, or to prevent the same from succeeding to the heir of the body as special occupant during the life of the cestui que vie, in the same manner as an estate of inheritance would descend, if limited to the grantee and the heirs of his body.

Enrolled bill. A bill which has been formally recorded and has been deposited in Secretary of State’s office, is precisely as effective an instrument as if it had been passed with the ordinary rules pertaining to devolution by inheritance; a limitation and direction by which property is to descend different from the course which it would take if the creator of the entailment, grantor or testator, had intended that the estate should devolve in regular and general succession to heirs at law in the statutory order of precedence and sequence.

Ent[code]n/shen/. In old English law, the plaintiff’s count or declaration.

Entendment. The old form of intendment (q.v.) derived directly from the French, and used to denote the true meaning or signification of a word or sentence; that is, the understanding or construction of law.

Enter. To form a constituent part; to become a part or partaker; to impend; share or mix with, as, “enters” into the composition of pewter. Bedford v. Colorado Fuel & Iron Corporation, 102 Colo. 538, 81 P.2d 752, 755. To go or come into a place or condition; to make or effect an entrance; to cause to go into or be received into. Hancock v. State, Tex.Cr. App., 363 S.W.2d 273, 275.

In the law of real property, to go upon land for the purpose of taking possession of it. In strict usage, the entering is preliminary to the taking possession, but in common parlance the entry is now merged in the taking possession. See Entry.

To place anything before a court, or upon or among the records, in a formal and regular manner, and usually in writing; as to “enter an appearance,” to “enter a judgment.” In this sense the word is nearly equivalent to setting down formally in writing, in either a full or abridged form. See Appearance; Docket; Entering judgments; Entry.

Enteneur /entsyó(w)ra/. L. Fr. A party challenging (claiming) goods; he who has placed them in the hands of a third person.

Entering judgments. The formal entry of the judgment on the rolls or records (e.g. civil docket) of the court, which is necessary before bringing an appeal or an action on the judgment. The entering of judgment is a ministerial act performed by the clerk of court by means of which permanent evidence of judicial act in rendering judgment is made a record of the court. Knox v. Long, 152 Tex. 291, 257 S.W.2d 289, 291. Under some statutes or court rules, the entering consists merely in the filing of a judgment with the clerk, while under others the entry of a judgment consists in the recording of it in the judgment book or civil docket. Fed.R.Civ. P. 55, 58, 79.

Entry of judgment differs from rendition of judgment. “Rendition” of a judgment is the judicial act of the court in pronouncing the sentence of the law upon the facts in controversy. The “entry” is a ministerial act, which consists in entering upon the record a statement of the final conclusion reached by the court in the matter, thus furnishing external and incontestable evidence of the sentence given, and designed to stand as a perpetual memorial of its action.

Enterprise. A venture or undertaking especially one involving financial commitment. Sizemore v. Hall, 148 Kan. 233, 80 P.2d 1092, 1095. To find existence of “enterprise” within Fair Labor Standards Act, there must be related activities, unified operation or common control, and common business purpose. Brennan v. Arnheim & Neely, Inc., U.S.Pa., 410 U.S. 512, 93 S.Ct. 1138, 1142, 35 L.Ed.2d 463. See also Joint enterprise.

Entertainment expenses. Such expenses are deductible only if they are directly related or associated with business. Various restrictions and documentation requirements have been imposed by the Internal Revenue Code and Regulations upon the deductibility of entertainment expenses to prevent abuses.

Entice. To wrongfully solicit, persuade, procure, allure, attract, draw by blandishment, coax or seduce. To lure, induce, tempt, incite, or persuade a person to do a thing. Berger v. Levy, 5 Cal.App.2d 544, 43 P.2d 610, 611. Enticement of a child is inviting, persuading or attempting to persuade a child to enter any vehicle, building, room or secluded place with intent to commit an unlawful sexual act upon or with the person of said child.

Entire. Whole; without division, separation, or diminution; unmingled; complete in all its parts; not participated in by others.

Entire act. The words “entire act” as used in the rule of statutory construction that it is the duty of the court to examine the entire act means the caption, the body of the act, and the emergency clause. Anderson v. Penix, 138 Tex. 596, 161 S.W.2d 455, 459.

Entire balance of my estate. The residue.

Entire blood. Relations of the “entire blood” are those derived not only from the same ancestor, but from the same couple of ancestors. In re Skidmore’s Estate, 148 Misc. 569, 266 N.Y.S. 312.

Entire contract. See Contract.

Entire day. This phrase signifies an undivided day, not parts of two days. An entire day must have a legal, fixed, precise time to begin, and a fixed, precise time to end. A day, in contemplation of law, comprises all the twenty-four hours, beginning and ending at twelve o’clock at night; e.g., in a statute requiring the closing of all liquor establishments during “the entire day of any election,” etc., this phrase means the natural day of twenty-four hours, commencing and terminating at midnight. See also Day.

Entire interest. The whole interest or right, without diminution. See Fee simple.

Entire loss of sight. In respect of one eye, or both, means substantial blindness, not necessarily absolute. See Blindness.

Entirely without understanding. Inability to comprehend nature and effect of transaction involved, not necessarily absolute imbecility, idiocy or mental incapacity.

Entire output contract. Promise to deliver one’s entire output (i.e. production) to the other. If no other detriment can be located, it will be found in the promisor’s having surrendered his privilege of selling elsewhere. Such agreements are governed by U.C.C. § 2-306.

Entire tenancy. A sole possession by one person, called “severalty,” which is contrary to several tenancy, where a joint or common possession is in one or more.

Entirety. The whole, in contradistinction to a moiety or part only. When land is conveyed to husband and wife, they do not take by moieties, but both are seised of the entirety. Partners, on the other hand, have not an entirety of interest, but each is properly entitled to the whole of a distinct moiety. 2 Bl.Comm. 188. See Estate by the entirety.

The word is also used to designate that which the law considers as one whole, and not capable of being divided into parts. Thus, a judgment, it is held, is an entirety, and, if void as to one of the two defendants, cannot be valid as to the other. Also, if a contract is an entirety, no part of the consideration is due until the whole has been performed.

Entire use, benefit, etc. These words in the habendum of a trust-deed for the benefit of a married woman are equivalent to the words “sole use,” or “sole and separate use,” and consequently her husband takes nothing under such deed.

Entitle. In its usual sense, to entitle is to give a right or legal title to. Schmidt v. Gibbons, 101 Ariz. 222, 222 P.2d 378, 380. To qualify for; to furnish with proper grounds for seeking or claiming. In ecclesiastical law, to entitle is to give a title or ordination as a minister.

Entitlement. Right to benefits, income or property which may not be abridged without due process.

Entity. A real being; existence. An organization or being that possesses separate existence for tax purposes. Examples would be corporations, partnerships, estates and trusts. The accounting entity for which accounting statements are prepared may not be the same as the entity defined by law.

An existence apart, such as a corporation in relation to its stockholders.

Entity includes person, estate, trust, governmental unit. Bankruptcy Act, § 101(14).

See also Legal entity.

Entrap. To catch, to entrap, to ensnare; hence, to catch by artifice. To involve in difficulties or distresses; to catch or involve in contradictions.

Entrapment. The act of officers or agents of the government in inducing a person to commit a crime not contemplated by him, for the purpose of instituting a criminal prosecution against him. According to the generally accepted view, a law enforcement official, or an undercover agent acting in cooperation with such an official, perpetrates an entrapment when, for the purpose of obtaining evidence of a crime, he originates the idea of the crime and then induces another person to engage in conduct constituting such a crime when the other person is not otherwise disposed to do so. Sorrells v. U. S., 287 U.S. 435, 53 S.Ct. 210, 77 L.Ed. 413; Sherman v. U. S., 356 U.S. 369, 78 S.Ct. 819, 2 L.Ed.2d 848.
A public law enforcement official or a person acting in cooperation with such an official perpetrates an entrapment if for the purpose of obtaining evidence of the commission of an offense, he induces or encourages another person to engage in conduct constituting such offense by either: (a) making knowingly false representations designed to induce the belief that such conduct is not prohibited; or (b) employing methods of persuasion or inducement which create a substantial risk that such an offense will be committed by persons other than those who are ready to commit it. Model Penal Code, § 2.13.

Entrebat. L. Fr. An intruder or interloper.

Entrapa /entrépya/. Span. Delivery.

Entrepôt /ontrepót/ /ontrepow/. A warehouse or magazine for the deposit of goods. In France, a building or place where goods from abroad may be deposited, and from whence they may be withdrawn for exportation to another country, without paying a duty.

Entrepreneur /ontrepnér/ /*n(y)u(wa)/ /óntro/ *. One who, on his own, initiates and assumes the financial risks of a new enterprise and who undertakes its management.

Entrust. To give over to another something after a relation of confidence has been established. To deliver to another something in trust or to commit something to another with a certain confidence regarding his care, use or disposal of it. Humphries v. Going, D.C.N.C., 59 F.R.D. 583, 587.

Entrusting. The transfer of possession of goods to a merchant who deals in goods of that type and who may in turn transfer such goods and all rights therein to a purchaser in the ordinary course of business. U.C.C. § 2-403(2)(3).

Entry. The act of making or entering a record; a setting down in writing of particulars; or that which is entered; an item. Generally synonymous with "recording." In re Labb, D.C.N.Y., 42 F.Supp. 542, 544. See also Enroll.

Enter, in practice, means to place anything before court, or upon or among records, and is nearly equivalent to setting down formally in writing, either in full or abridged form but it may be used as meaning simply to file or duly deposit. Neiman v. City of Chicago, 37 Ill.App.2d 309, 185 N.E.2d 358, 365.

Passage leading into a house or other building or to a room; a vestibule.

The act of a merchant, trader, or other business- man in recording in his account-books the facts and circumstances of a sale, loan, or other transaction. The books in which such memoranda are first (or originally) inscribed are called "books of original entry," and are prima facie evidence for certain purposes.

In copyright law, depositing with the register of copyrights the printed title of a book, pamphlet, etc., for the purpose of securing copyright on the same. Copyright Act, § 408.

In criminal law, entry is the unlawful making one's way into a dwelling or other house, for the purpose of committing a crime therein. In cases of burglary, the least entry with the whole or any part of the body, hand, or foot, or with any instrument or weapon, introduced for the purpose of committing a felony, is sufficient to complete the offense. See also Breaking.

In customs law, the entry of imported goods at the custom house consists in submitting them to the inspection of the revenue officers, together with a statement or description of such goods, and the original invoices of the same, for the purpose of estimating the duties to be paid thereon.

See also False entry; Forcible entry; Illegal entry; Journal entry.

Entry of judgment. See Entering Judgments.

Open entry. An entry upon real estate, for the purpose of taking possession, which is not clandestine nor effected by secret artifice or stratagem, and (in some states by statute) one which is accomplished in the presence of two witnesses.

Re-entry. The resumption of the possession of leased premises by the landlord on the tenant's failure to pay the stipulated rent or otherwise to keep the conditions of the lease. See Ejectment.

Right of entry. See Right of entry.

Entry ad communem legem /éntri y ad kamuyñam liyjam/. Entry at common law. The name of a writ of entry which lay for a reversioner after the alienation and death of the particular tenant for life, against him who was in possession of the land.

Entry ad terminum qui præterit /éntri y ad tármamán kwáy práthriyat/. The writ of entry ad terminum qui præterit lies where a man leases land to another for a term of years, and the tenant holds over his term. And if lands be leased to a man for the term of another's life, and he for whose life the lands are leased dies, and the lessee holds over, then the lessor shall have this writ.

Entry for marriage in speech. A writ of entry causa matrimonia præloquui existed in old English law where lands or tenements were given to a man upon condition that he would take the donor to be his wife within a certain time, and he did not espouse her within the said term, or espoused another woman, or made himself priest.

Entry in casu consimili /éntri y in këyz(y)u w kansimilay/. In old English law, a writ of entry in casu consimili existed where a tenant for life or by the curtesy alienated in fee.

Entry in regular course of business. A record setting forth a fact or transaction made by one in the ordinary and usual course of one's business, employment, office or profession, which it was the duty of the enterer in such manner to make, or which was commonly and regularly made, or which it was convenient to make, in the conduct of the business to which such entry pertains.

Entry of cause for trial. In old English practice, the proceeding by a plaintiff in an action who had given notice of trial, depositing with the proper officer of the court the nisi prius record, with the panel of Entry, writ of. In old English practice, this was a writ to appear in open court and make their mutual statements viâ voci, instead of as at the present day delivering their mutual pleadings, until they arrived at the issue or precise point in dispute between them. During the progress of this oral statement, a minute of the various proceedings was made on parchment by an officer of the court appointed for that purpose. The parchment then became the record; in other words, the official history of the suit. Long after the practice of oral pleading had fallen into disuse, it continued necessary to enter the proceedings in like manner upon the parchment roll, and this was called "entry on the roll," or making up the "issue roll." But by a rule of H.T. 4 Wm. IV, the practice of making up the issue roll was abolished; and it was only necessary to make up the issue in the form prescribed for the purpose by a rule of H.T. 1853, and to deliver the same to the court and to the opposite party. The issue which was delivered to the court was called the "nisi prius record," and that was regarded as the official history of the suit, in like manner as the issue roll formerly was. Under later practice, the issue roll or nisi prius record consisted of the papers delivered to the court, to facilitate the trial of the action, these papers consisting of the pleadings simply, with the notice of trial.

Future a interest created in a transferor who conveys an estate on condition subsequent.

Entry, right of. See Right of entry.

Entry, writ of. In old English practice, this was a writ made use of in a form of real action brought to recover the possession of lands from one who wrongfully withheld the same from the demandant. Its object was to regain the possession of lands of which the demandant, or his ancestors, had been unjustly deprived by the tenant of the freehold, or those under whom he claimed, and hence it belonged to the possessory division of real actions. It decided nothing with respect to the right of property, but only restored the demandant to that situation in which he was (or by law ought to have been) before the dispossession committed. 3 Bl.Comm. 180. It was usual to specify in such writs the degree or degrees within which the writ was brought, and it was said to be "in the per" or "in the per and cui," according as there had been one or two descents or alienations from the original wrongdoer. If more than two such transfers had intervened, the writ was said to be "in the post." 3 Bl.Comm. 181. See Writ of entry.

Enumerated. This term is often used in law as equivalent to "mentioned specifically," "designated," or "expressly named or granted"; as in speaking of "enumerated" governmental powers, items of property, or articles in a tariff schedule.

Enumerated powers. The powers specifically delegated by the Constitution to some branch or authority of the national government, and which are not denied to that government or reserved to the States or to the people. The powers specifically given to Congress are enumerated in Article I of U.S. Constitution. See also Powers (Constitutional powers).

Environment. The totality of physical, economic, cultural, aesthetic, and social circumstances and factors which surround and affect the desirability and value of property and which also affect the quality of people's lives. The surrounding conditions, influences or forces which influence or modify. U.S. v. Amadio, 306 F.2d 605, 611.

Environmental impact statements. Documents which are required by federal and state laws to accompany proposals for major projects and programs that will likely have an impact on the surrounding environment. See 42 U.S.C.A. § 4332.

Environmental Protection Agency. The federal Environmental Protection Agency was created in 1970 to permit coordinated and effective governmental action on behalf of the environment. EPA endeavors to abate and control pollution systematically, by proper integration of a variety of research, monitoring, standard setting, and enforcement activities. As a complement to its other activities, EPA coordinates and supports research and antipollution activities by State and local governments, private and public groups, individuals, and educational institutions. EPA also reinforces efforts among other Federal agencies with respect to the impact of their operations on the environment, and it is specifically charged with making public its written comments on environmental impact statements and with publishing its determinations when those hold that a proposal is unsatisfactory from the standpoint of public health or welfare or environmental quality. See also National Environmental Policy Act.

Envoy. A diplomat of the rank of minister or ambassador sent by a country to the government of a foreign country to execute a special mission or to serve as a permanent diplomatic representative.
EO DIE

Eodem ligamine quo ligatum est dissolvitur /iyówdam lagéymaniy kwó wágéydam ést dzólvédar/. A bond is released by the same formalities with which it is contracted.

Eodem modo quo quid constituitur, dissolvitur /iyówdam mówdoward kwó kwíd kônstatóyédward, dzólvédar/. In the manner in which [by the same means by which] a thing is constituted, it is dissolved.

Eo die /iyów dátyiy/. Lat. On that day; on the same day.

Eo instanti /iyów instánti/. Lat. At that instant; at the very same instant; immediately. 1 Bl.Commm. 196, 249; 2 Bl.Commm. 168. Also written eo instante.

Eo intułtu /iyów int(y)áwaduw/. Lat. With or in that view; with that intent or object.

Eo loci /iyów 16wsay/. Lat. In the civil law, in that place.

E.O.M. End of month. Payment terms in sale contract.

Eo nomine /iyów nómaniy/. Lat. Under that name; by that appellation. Perinde ac si eo nomine tibi tradita fuisset, just as if it had been delivered to you by that name.

Eo. In Saxon law, an oath.

EPA. Environmental Protection Agency.

Epidemic. This term, in its ordinary and popular meaning, applies to any disease which is widely spread or generally prevailing at a given place and time. Bethlehem Steel Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 21 Cal.2d 742, 135 P.2d 153, 157; Martin v. Springfield City Water Co., Mo.App., 128 S.W.2d 674, 679.

Epilepsy /épiléspiy/. Epilepsy, a disruption of the normal rhythm of the brain, is an occasional, periodic, excessive and disorderly discharge of nerve cells in the brain. The discharge is chemical-electrical in nature. While the discharge itself is hidden, it manifests itself in various forms of visible activity, called seizures. The type of seizures will vary according to the location of the discharge in the brain, and the spread of the charge from cell to cell. In many cases, seizures are so mild (a brief twitch, a momentary attention loss) that they are not recognized. Even when they are, they have a minimal effect. A major convulsion which the public tends immediately to associate with epilepsy is only one of a number of seizure types.

Epimela /épímelya/. Expenses or gifts.

Ephany /épífaniy/. A Christian festival, otherwise called the "Manifestation of Christ to the Gentiles," observed on the 6th of January, in honor of the appearance of the star to the three magi, or wise men, who came to adore the Messiah, and bring him presents. It is commonly called "Twelfth Day."

Epiphanyseal separation /épífaysál seporéyshans/. Not a bone fracture in true sense, but a separation of the fibers and cartilaginous tissues which attach the epiphysis to the femur.

Epiphysitis /épífízýydás/. Inflammation of an epiphysis—a process of bone attached for a time to another bone by cartilage.

Epiphysis /épífíssas/. Part or process of a bone which ossifies separately and subsequently becomes ankylosed (to grow together into one) into the main part of the bone.

Epiqueya /épíykéyá/. In Spanish law, a term synonymous with "equity" in one of its senses, and defined as "the benign and prudent interpretation of the law according to the circumstances of the time, place, and person."

Episcopacy /épískapasiy/. The office of overlooking or overseeing; the office of a bishop, who is to overlook and oversee the concerns of the church. A form of church government by diocesan bishops.

Episcopalia /épískapéyl(i)ya/. In ecclesiastical law, synodals, pentecostals, and other customary payments from the clergy to their diocesan bishop, formerly collected by the rural deans.

Episcopallan /épískapéylyan/. Of or pertaining to episcopacy, or to the Episcopal Church.

Episcopate /épískapot/. A bishopric. The dignity or office of a bishop.

Episcoporum ecclius /épískópórum ékðakas/. Bishop's proctors; church lawyers.

Episcopus /épískapas/. In the civil law, an overseer; an inspector. A municipal officer who had the charge and oversight of the bread and other provisions which served the citizens for their daily food. Vicat. In medieval history, a bishop; a bishop of the Christian church.

Episcopus alterlus mandato quam regis non tenetur obtemperare /épískapas oltiriyas mandGydow kwam óbtemperáy/. A bishop need not obey any mandate save the king's.

Episcoporum puerorum /épískópórum pyúwaróram/. It was an old custom that upon certain feasts some lay person should plait his hair, and put on the garments of a bishop, and in them pretend to exercise episcopal jurisdiction, and do several ludicrous actions, for which reason he was called "bishop of the boys," and this custom obtained in England long after several constitutions were made to abolish it.

Episcopus teuten plactium, in curia christianitatis, de lus que mere sunt spiritualia /épískópas tényiyat pláctiám in kyührüýa kristýañestéydas, diy iyas kwiý miýríy sánt spirochuwéy(i)ýya/. A bishop may hold plea in a Court Christian of things merely spiritual.

Epistola /épístala/. A letter; a charter; an instrument in writing for conveyance of lands or assurance of contracts.

Epistle /épístalıy/. In the civil law, rescripts; opinions given by the emperors in cases submitted to them for decision. Answers of the emperors to petitions. The answers of counsellors (juris-consulti), as Ulpian and others, to questions of law proposed to them, were also called “epistole.”

Opinions written out. The term originally signified the same as literae.

E pluribus unum /ɪˈplɜːrɪbəs ənˈjuːm/. One out of many. The motto of the United States of America.

Epoch /ˈepək, ˈɛpək/. The time at which a new computation is begun; the time whence dates are numbered.

E.P.S. Earnings per share.

Equal. Alike; uniform; on the same plane or level with respect to efficiency, worth, value, amount, or rights. Word “equal” as used in law implies not identity but duality and the use of one thing as the measure of another. Poindexter v. Willis, 23 Ohio Misc. 199, 256 N.E.2d 254, 260.

Equal and uniform taxation. Taxes are said to be “equal and uniform” when no person or class of persons in the taxing district, whether it be a state, county, or city, is taxed at a different rate than are other persons in the same district upon the same value or the same thing, and where the objects of taxation are the same, by whomsoever owned or whatsoever they may be. Weatherly Independent School Dist. v. Hughes, Tex.Civ.App., 41 S.W.2d 445, 447.

Equal Credit Opportunity Act. Federal Act prohibiting a creditor from discriminating against any applicant on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin, age, sex or marital status with respect to any aspect of a credit transaction. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1691 et seq.

Equal degree. Persons are said to be related to a decedent “in equal degree” when they are all removed by an equal number of steps or degrees from the common ancestor.

Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) was created by Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 241; 42 U.S.C.A. § 2000a), and became operational July 2, 1965. The purposes of the Commission are to end discrimination based on race, color, religion, age, sex, or national origin in hiring, promotion, firing, wages, testing, training, apprenticeship, and all other conditions of employment; and to promote voluntary action programs by employers, unions, and community organizations to put equal employment opportunity into actual operation.

Equality. The condition of possessing substantially the same rights, privileges, and immunities, and being liable to substantially the same duties. “Equality” guaranteed under equal protection clause is equality under the same conditions and among persons similarly situated; classifications must not be arbitrary and must be based upon some difference in classes having substantial relation to legitimate objects to be accomplished. Boyne v. State ex rel. Dickerson, 80 Nev. 160, 390 P.2d 225, 227. See Equal protection clause; Equal protection of the law.

Equalization. The act or process of making equal or bringing about conformity to a common standard. The process of equalizing assessments or taxes, as performed by “boards of equalization” in various states, consists in comparing the assessments made by the local officers of the various counties or other taxing districts within the jurisdiction of the board and reducing them to a common and uniform basis, increasing or diminishing by such percentage as may be necessary, so as to bring about, within the entire territory affected, a uniform and equal ratio between the assessed value and the actual cash value of property. The term is also applied to a similar process of leveling or adjusting the assessments of individual taxpayers, so that the property of one shall not be assessed at a higher (or lower) percentage of its market value than the property of another. Adjusting the value of property assessed to conform to its real value. County of Sacramento v. Assessment Appeals Board Number 2 of Sacramento County, 32 Cal.App.3d 654, 108 Cal.Rptr. 434, 441. See also Equal protection of the law.

Equalization board. Local governmental agency whose function is to supervise the equalization of taxes as among various properties and as among various districts to bring about an equitable distribution of tax burdens.

Equalization of taxes. See Equalization.

Equalize. To make equal, to cause to correspond, or be like in amount or degree, as compared with something. Los Angeles County v. Ransohoff, 24 Cal.App.2d 238, 74 P.2d 828, 830; De Mille v. Los Angeles County, 25 Cal.App. 506, 77 P.2d 905, 906.

Equally divided. Provision in will that property shall be “equally divided,” or divided “share and share alike” means that the property shall be divided per capita and not per stirpes. However, these phrases may be so modified by other parts of the will as to require distribution per stirpes.

Equal Pay Act. Federal law which mandates same pay for all persons who do same work without regard to sex, age, etc.

Equal protection clause. That provision in 14th Amendment to U.S. Constitution which prohibits a State from denying to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. “Equal protection” clause of Federal Constitution requires that persons under like circumstances be given equal protection in the enjoyment of personal rights and the prevention and redress of wrongs. In re Adoption of Richardson, 251 C.A.2d 222, 59 Cal.Rptr. 323, 334. See also Equal protection of the law.

Equal protection of the law. The constitutional guarantee of “equal protection of the laws” means that no person or class of persons shall be denied the same protection of the laws which is enjoyed by other persons or other classes in like circumstances in their lives, liberty, property, and in their pursuit of happiness. People v. Jacobs, 27 Cal.App.3d 246, 103 Cal. Rptr. 536, 543; 14th Amend., U.S. Const.

The equal protection of the laws of a state is extended to persons within its jurisdiction, within the meaning of the constitutional requirement, when its courts are open to them on the same conditions as to others, with like rules of evidence and modes of procedure, for the security of their persons and property, the prevention and redress of wrongs, and the enforcement of contracts; when they are subjected to no restrictions in the acquisition of property, the enjoyment of personal liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, which do not generally affect others; when they are liable to no other or greater burdens and charges than such as are laid upon others; and when no different or greater punishment is enforced against them for a violation of the laws.

"Equal protection," with respect to classification for taxation purposes, does not require identity of treatment, but only (1) that classification rests on real and not feigned differences, (2) that the distinction have some relevance to purpose for which classification is made, and (3) that the different treatments be not so disparate, relative to difference in classification, as to be wholly arbitrary. Walters v. City of St. Louis, Mo., 347 U.S. 231, 74 S.Ct. 505, 509, 98 L.Ed. 660.

Equal Rights Amendment. Proposed amendment to U.S. Constitution which provides that: "Equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex."

Equal Time Act. If licensee of broadcasting facility permits a legally qualified candidate for public office to use facility for broadcasting, he shall afford equal opportunities to all other such candidates for that office. 47 U.S.C.A. § 315.

Eques /iykwiyz/. Lat. In Roman and old English law, a knight.

Equilocus /ekwalökws/. An equal.

Equinoxes /iykwánıkwaiz/ékw/. The two periods of the year (vernal equinox about March 21st, and autumnal equinox about September 22nd) when the time from the rising of the sun to its setting is equal to the time from its setting to its rising.

Equip. To furnish for service or against a need or exigency; to fit out; to supply with whatever is necessary to efficient action in any way. Synonymous with furnish.

Equipment. Furnishings, or outfit for the required purposes. Whatever is needed in equipping; the articles comprised in an outfit; equipage. Department of Treasury, Gross Income Tax Division v. Ranger-Cook, Inc., 114 Ind.App. 107, 49 N.E.2d 548, 550; Farm & Home Saving & Loan Ass'n of Missouri v. Empire Furniture Co., Tex.Civ.App., 87 S.W.2d 1111, 1112.

Under U.C.C., goods include "equipment" if they are used or bought for use primarily in business (including farming or a profession) or by a debtor who is a non-profit organization or a governmental subdivision or agency or if the goods are not included in the definitions of inventory, farm products or consumer goods. U.C.C. § 9-109(2).

Equipment trust. Financing device commonly used by railroads by which equipment is purchased from the manufacturer by a trustee who provides a substantial portion of the purchase price, the railroad providing the balance. The trustee then leases the equipment to the railroad which pays a rental fee consisting of interest, amortization for serial retirement and trustee's fee.

Equipment trust certificate. A type of security, generally issued by a railroad, to pay for new equipment. Title to the equipment, such as a locomotive, is held by a trustee until the notes are paid off. An equipment trust certificate is usually secured by a first claim on the equipment.

Equitable. Just; conformable to the principles of justice and right. Existing in equity; available or sustainable in equity, or upon the rules and principles of equity.

As to equitable Assets; Construction; Conversion; Easement; Ejectment; Estate; Garnishment; Levy; Mortgage; Title, and Waste, see those titles.

Equitable abstention doctrine. A court may refrain from exercising jurisdiction which it possesses in the interest of comity between courts and between states as in the case of actions involving the affairs of a foreign corporation or foreign land. Doctrine also applies to case of Federal court's refraining from interfering with decision of state administrative agency's decision on a local matter. Allegheny Airlines, Inc. v. Penn. Public Utility Comm., D.C.Pa., 319 F.Supp. 407.

Equitable action. One seeking an equitable remedy or relief; though in the federal and most state courts, with the procedural merger of law and equity, there is now procedurally only one type of action—a "civil action." Fed.R.Civ. P. 2.

Equitable adjustment theory. In settlement of federal contract disputes, contracting officer should make fair adjustment within a reasonable time before contractor is required to settle with his subcontractors, suppliers and other creditors. Roberts v. U. S., 174 Ct.Cl. 940, 357 F.2d 938.

Equitable adoption. "Equitable adoption" refers to situation involving oral contract to adopt child, fully performed except that there was no statutory adoption, and in which rule is applied for benefit of child in determination of heirship upon death of person contracting to adopt. Barlow v. Barlow, 170 Colo. 465, 463 P.2d 305, 308. In certain jurisdictions, a child has rights of inheritance from person who has contracted to adopt him but has not done so. Dunn v. Richardson, D.C.Ark., 336 F.Supp. 649, 654.

Equitable assignment. An assignment which, though invalid at law, will be recognized and enforced in equity; e.g., an assignment of a chose in action, or of future acquisitions of the assignor. Stewart v. Kane, Mo.App., 111 S.W.2d 971, 974. In order to work an "equitable assignment", there must be an absolute appropriation by the assignor of the debt or fund sought to be assigned. Sneesby v. Livingston, 182 Wash. 228, 46 P.2d 733, 735.

Equitable conversion. A doctrine commonly applied when death intervenes between the signing of an agreement to sell real estate and the date of transfer of title resulting in treating land as personality and personality as land under certain circumstances. It takes place when a contract for sale of realty be-Equitable estoppel. The doctrine by which a person is estopped such that it would be contrary to equity and good conscience for him to allege and prove the truth. Clark v. Armstrong & Murphy, 180 Okl. 514, 72 P.2d 362, 365, 366.

Equitable life estate. An interest in real or personal property which lasts for the life of the holder of the estate and which is equitable as contrasted with legal in its creation as in the case of a beneficiary of a trust who has a life estate under the trust.

Equitable mortgage. Any agreement to post certain security before the security agreement is formalized. If a person transfers property by deed absolute to his creditor as security for a debt with the mutual understanding that such property will be reconveyed by the creditor on the repayment of the debt, a court of equity will consider such a deed a mortgage, though an innocent purchaser for value from the creditor can cut off the equitable rights of the debtor. See also Mortgage.

Equitable ownership. The ownership interest of one who has equitable as contrasted with legal ownership of property as in the case of a trust beneficiary.
Ownership rights which are protected in equity. See also Equitable distribution.

Equitable recoupment. Rule of the law which diminishes the right of a party invoking legal process to recover a debt, to the extent that he holds money or property of his debtor, to which he has no moral right, and it is ordinarily a defensive remedy going only to mitigation of damages. Doctrine of "equitable recoupment" provides that, at least in some cases, a claim for a refund of taxes barred by a statute of limitations may nevertheless be recouped against a tax claim of the government. May Dept. Stores Co. v. City of Pittsburgh, Pa.Cmwlth., 376 A.2d 309, 313.

Equitable redemption. The act or process by which a mortgagor redeems his property after payment of the mortgage debt. The purchase of the equity of redemption after foreclosure has commenced. See Equity of redemption.

Equitable relief. That species of relief sought in a court with equity powers as, for example, in the case of one seeking an injunction or specific performance instead of money damages.

Equitable rescission. Rescission decreed by court of equity, as distinguished from "legal rescission" which is effected by restoration or offer to restore.

Equitable right. Right cognizable within court of equity as contrasted with legal right enforced in court of law; though under rules practice in most states and in the federal courts there has been a merger procedurally between actions at law and equity. Fed.R.Civ.P. 2.

Equitable servitudes. A restriction on the use of land enforceable in court of equity. It is broader than a covenant running with the land because it is an interest in land.

Equitable title. See Equitable ownership.

Equitable waste. Injury to the corpus of property inconsistent with good management or husbandry and recognized by a court of equity but not by a court of law.

Equitas sequitur legem /iykwatass sekwadar lyjam/. Equity follows the law.

Equity. Justice administered according to fairness as contrasted with the strictly formulated rules of common law. It is based on a system of rules and principles which originated in England as an alternative to the harsh rules of common law and which were based on what was fair in a particular situation. One sought relief under this system in courts of equity rather than in courts of law. The term "equity" denotes the spirit and habit of fairness, justness, and right dealing which would regulate the intercourse of men with men. Gilles v. Department of Human Resources Development, 11 Cal.3d 313, 113 Cal.Rptr. 374, 380, 520 P.2d 110. Equity is a body of jurisprudence, or field of jurisdiction, differing in its origin, theory, and methods from the common law; though procedurally, in the federal courts and most state courts, equitable and legal rights and remedies are administered in the same court.

A system of jurisprudence collateral to, and in some respects independent of, "law"; the object of which is to render the administration of justice more complete, by affording relief where the courts of law are incompetent to give it, or to give it with effect, or by exercising certain branches of jurisdiction independently of them.

See Equity, courts of.

Countervailing equity. A contrary and balancing equity; an equity or right opposed to that which is sought to be enforced or recognized, and which ought not to be sacrificed or subordinated to the latter, because it is of equal strength and justice, and equally deserving of consideration.

Latent or secret equity. An equitable claim or right, the knowledge of which has been confined to the parties for and against whom it exists, or which has been concealed from one or several persons interested in the subject-matter.

Natural equity. A term sometimes employed in works on jurisprudence, possessing no very precise meaning, but used as equivalent to justice, honesty, or morality in business relations, or man's innate sense of right dealing and fair play. Inasmuch as equity, as now administered, is a complex system of rules, doctrines, and precedents, and possesses, within the range of its own fixed principles, but little more plasticity than the law, the term "natural equity" may be understood to denote, in a general way, that which strikes the ordinary conscience and sense of justice as being fair, right, and equitable, in advance of the question whether the technical jurisprudence of the chancery courts would so regard it.

Perfect equity. An equitable title or right which lacks nothing to its completeness as a legal title or right except the formal conveyance or other instrument which would make it cognizable at law; particularly, the equity or interest of a purchaser of real estate who has paid the purchase price in full and fulfilled all conditions resting on him, but has not yet received a deed or patent.

Real estate. The remaining interest belonging to one who has pledged or mortgaged his property, or the surplus of value which may remain after the property has been disposed of for the satisfaction of liens. The amount or value of a property above the total liens or charges. The difference of the fair market value and debt in property; thus, an equity of $5,000 may come about by having fair market value property of $20,000 with debt of $15,000. The term came from the development in English courts of equity of the right of an owner of property to redeem his property even after a foreclosure, which right came to be known as the equity of redemption. The existence of the right was predicated on the property being of far greater value than the debt owed to the party that foreclosed.

Equity acts in personam. A basic principle of law of equity to the effect that equity grants relief in the form of personal decrees as contrasted with law which awards money damages. A necessary corollary of this principle is that equity requires personal jurisdiction to grant its relief.

Equity, bill in. The name given to the original pleading in an equity case. However, under current rules practice in most states, the “bill” has been replaced by a complaint with the procedural merger of law and equity. Fed.R. Civil P. 2.

Equity, courts of. Courts which administer justice according to the system of equity, and according to a peculiar course of procedure or practice. Frequently termed “courts of chancery.” With the procedural merger of law and equity in the federal and most state courts, equity courts have been abolished.

Equity financing. Raising of capital by corporation by issuing (selling) stock. This is contrasted with “debt financing” which is the raising of capital by issuing bonds or borrowing money.

Equity follows the law. Equity adopts and follows the rules of law in all cases to which those rules may, in terms, be applicable. Equity, in dealing with cases of an equitable nature, adopts and follows the analogies furnished by the rules of law. A leading maxim of equity jurisprudence, which, however, is not of universal application, but liable to many exceptions.

Equity jurisdiction. In a general sense, the jurisdiction belonging to a court of equity, but more particularly the aggregate of those cases, controversies, and occasions which form proper subjects for the exercise of the powers of a chancery court.

In the federal and most state courts there has been a merger procedurally between law and equity actions (i.e., the same court has jurisdiction over both legal and equitable matters) and, hence, a person seeking equitable relief brings the same complaint as in a law action and simply demands equitable relief instead of (or in addition to) money damages. Fed.R. Civil P. 2.

“Equity jurisdiction,” in its ordinary acceptance, as distinguished on the one side from the general power to decide matters at all, and on the other from the jurisdiction “at law” or “common-law jurisdiction,” is the power to hear certain kinds and classes of civil causes according to the principles of the method and procedure adopted by the court of chancery, and to decide them in accordance with the doctrines and rules of equity jurisprudence, which decision may involve either the determination of the equitable rights, estates, and interests of the parties to such causes, or the granting of equitable remedies. In order that a cause may come within the scope of the equity jurisdiction, one of two alternatives is essential; either the primary right, estate, or interest to be maintained, or the violation of which furnishes the cause of action, must be equitable rather than legal; or the remedy granted must be in its nature purely equitable, or if it be a remedy which may also be given by a court of law, it must be one which, under the facts and circumstances of the case, can only be made complete and adequate through the equitable modes of procedure. Norback v. Board of Directors of Church Extension Soc., 84 Utah 506, 37 P.2d 339.

Equity jurisprudence. That portion of remedial justice which is exclusively administered by courts of equity as distinguished from courts of common law. More generally speaking, the science which treats of the rules, principles, and maxims which govern the decisions of a court of equity, the cases and controversies which are considered proper subjects for its cognizance, and the nature and form of the remedies which it grants.

Equity looks upon that as done which ought to have been done. Equity will treat the subject-matter, as to collateral consequences and incidents, in the same manner as if the final acts contemplated by the parties had been executed exactly as they ought to have been; not as the parties might have executed them.

Equity of a statute. By this phrase is intended the rule of statutory construction which admits within the operation of a statute a class of cases which are neither expressly named nor excluded, but which, from their analogy to the cases that are named, are clearly and justly within the spirit and general meaning of the law; such cases are said to be “within the equity of the statute.”

Equity of partners. A term used to designate the right of each of them to have the firm’s property applied to the payment of the firm’s debts.

Equity of redemption. The right of the mortgagor of an estate to redeem the same after it has been forfeited, at law, by a breach of the condition of the mortgage, upon paying the amount of debt, interest and costs. Brown v. United States, C.C.A.Pa., 95 F.2d 487, 489.

A right a mortgagor is given to redeem his property from default; period from the time of default until foreclosure proceedings are begun.

Equity ratio. Stockholders’ equity divided by total assets.

Equity security. As defined in Bankruptcy Act, § 101(15), term includes: (A) share in a corporation, whether or not transferable or denominated “stock”; or similar security; (B) interest of a limited partner in a limited partnership; or (C) warrant or right, other than a right to convert, to purchase, sell, or subscribe to a share, security, or interest of a kind specified in subparagraph (A) or (B).

Equity shares. Shares of any class of stock, whether or not preferred as to dividends or assets, having unlimited dividend rights.

Equity suffers not a right without a remedy. Graselli Chemical Company v. Etna Explosives Co., 164 C.C.A. 380, 252 F. 456.

Equity term. An equity term of court is one devoted exclusively to equity business, that is, in which no criminal cases are tried nor any cases requiring the impaneling of a jury. See Equity, courts of.

Equity to a settlement. The equitable right of a wife, when her husband sues in equity for the reduction of her equitable estate to his own possession, to have the whole or a portion of such estate settled upon herself and her children. Also a similar right recognized by the equity courts as directly to be asserted against the husband. Also sometimes called the "wife's equity."

Equivalent, adj. Equal in value, force, measure, volume, power, and effect or having equal or corresponding import, meaning or significance; alike, identical. Salt Lake County v. Utah Copper Co., C.C.A.Utah, 93 F.2d 127, 132; Nahas v. Nahas, 59 Nev. 220, 90 P.2d 223, 224.

Equivalents doctrine. In patent law, doctrine of "equivalents" means that if two devices do the same work in substantially the same way and accomplish substantially the same result, they are the same, even though they differ in name, form or shape. Fife Mfg. Co. v. Stanford Engineering Co., D.C.I11., 193 F.Supp. 226, 232. Principle of law evolved to protect patentee from devices which differ merely in name, form or shape and thereby to prevent an unauthorized person from reaping benefits of another's inventive genius. Fraser v. Continental Realty Corp., D.C.W. Va., 356 F.Supp. 704, 705. Patentee may invoke doctrine of "equivalency" to proceed against producer of device, if it performs substantially same function in substantially the same way to the same result. Ceramic Tilers Supply, Inc. v. Tile Council of America, Inc., C.A.Cal., 378 F.2d 283, 286.

Equivoal. Having a double or several meanings or senses. Synonymous with "ambiguous". See Ambiguity.

Equuleus /akwuliyas/. A kind of rack for extorting confessions.

Erastian /ərststiyən(d)z/. The followers of Erastus. The sect obtained much influence in England, particularly among common lawyers in the time of Selden. They held that offenses against religion and morality should be punished by the civil power, and not by the censures of the church or by excommunication.

Erasure. The obliteration of words or marks from a written instrument by rubbing, scraping, or scratching them out. Also the place in a document where a word or words have been so removed. The term is sometimes used for the removal of parts of a writing by any means whatever, as by cancellation; but this is not an accurate use.

Erasure of record. Procedure by which a person's criminal record may be sealed or destroyed if certain conditions are met. This is commonly provided for by statute for juvenile records. Within statute providing that all police and court records shall be erased upon acquittal of the accused, word "erased" means at the very least nondisclosure. Lechner v. Holmberg, 165 Conn. 152, 328 A.2d 701, 707. See also Expungement of record.

Erection. Raising up; building; a completed building; to build; construct; set up. There is a distinction between "erection" and maintenance. Turpiano v. Bailey, 307 Mass. 159, 744, 746.

Ergo /ərgəʊ/. Lat. Therefore; hence; because.

Ergolabi /ərgowləbi/. In the civil law, undertakers of work; contractors.

Erine /ərmaɪn/. By metonymy, this term is used to describe the office or functions of a judge, whose state robe, lined with ermine, is emblematical of purity and honor without stain.

Erosion. To wear away by the action of water, wind, or other elements. The gradual eating away of the soil by the operation of currents or tides. Distinguished from submergence, which is the disappearance of the soil under the water and the formation of a navigable body over it.

Erotomania /ərətɔməniə(ʊ)ə/. See Insanity.

Errant. Wandering; itinerant; applied to justices on circuit, and bailiffs at large, etc.

Erratum /ərətəm/. Lat. Error. Used in the Latin formula for assigning errors, and in the reply thereto, "in nullo est erratum," i.e., there was no error, no error was committed.

Erroneous. Involving error; deviating from the law. This term is not generally used as designating a corrupt or evil act. See Error.

Erroneous assessment. Refers to an assessment that deviates from the law and is therefore invalid, and is a defect that is jurisdictional in its nature, and does not refer to the judgment of the assessing officer in fixing the amount of valuation of the property. In re Blatt, 41 N.M. 269, 67 P.2d 293, 301.

Erroneous judgment. One rendered according to course and practice of court, but contrary to law, upon mistaken view of law, or upon erroneous application of legal principles.

Erroneous or illegal tax. One levied without statutory authority, or upon property not subject to taxation, or by some officer having no authority to levy the tax, or one which in some other similar respect is illegal.
Error. A mistaken judgment or incorrect belief as to the existence or effect of matters of fact, or a false or mistaken conception or application of the law. Such a mistaken or false conception or application of the law to the facts of a cause as will furnish ground for a review of the proceedings upon a writ of error. A mistake of law, or false or irregular application of it, such as vitiates the proceedings and warrants the reversal of the judgment.

Error is also used as an elliptical expression for "error of error"; as in saying that error lies; that a judgment may be reversed on error. See Writ of error.

See also Ignorance; Mistake; Plain error rule.

Assignment of errors. A specification of the errors upon which the appellant will rely in seeking to have the judgment of the lower court reversed, vacated, modified, or a new trial ordered. See e.g. Fed.R.App. P. 28.

Clerical error. See Clerical error.

Error apparent of record. Plain, fundamental error that goes to the foundation of the action irrespective of the evidence; an obvious misapprehension of the applicable law. Parks v. Parks, 68 App.D.C. 383, 98 F.2d 235, 236.

Fundamental error. In appellate practice, error which goes to the merits of the plaintiff's cause of action, and which will be considered on review, whether assigned as error or not, where the justice of the case seems to require it. Error of such character as to render judgment void. Error in law apparent on the face of the record; e.g. court lacked jurisdiction. See Reversible error, infra. See also Plain error rule.

Harmful error. Error which more probably than improbably affected the verdict or judgment prejudicially to the party complaining. See Fundamental error; Reversible error, this topic. See also Plain error rule.

Harmless error. In appellate practice, an error committed in the progress of the trial below, but which was not prejudicial to the rights of the party assigning it, and for which, therefore, the court will not reverse the judgment, as, where the error was neutralized or corrected by subsequent proceedings in the case, or where, notwithstanding the error, the particular issue was found in that party's favor, or where, even if the error had not been committed, he could not have been legally entitled to prevail. Error which is not sufficient in nature or effect to warrant reversal, modification, or retrial. Fed.R.Crim.P. 52 provides: "Any error, defect, irregularity or variance which does not affect substantial rights shall be disregarded."

Invited error. In appellate practice, the principle of "invited error" is that if, during the progress of a cause, a party requests or moves the court to make a ruling which is actually erroneous, and the court does so, that party cannot take advantage of the error on appeal or review.

Reversible error. In appellate practice, such an error as warrants the appellate court in reversing the judgment before it; substantial error, that which reason-ably might have prejudiced the party complaining. See Fundamental error, supra. See also Plain error rule.

Error coram nobis /éhrar kórám nówbas/. Error committed in the proceedings "before us"; i.e., error assigned as a ground for reviewing, modifying, or vacating a judgment in the same court in which it was rendered. A writ to bring before the court that pronounced judgment errors in matters of fact which had not been put in issue or passed on and were material to validity and regularity of legal proceeding itself. Hiawassee Lumber Co. v. United States, C.C. A.N.C., 64 F.2d 417, 418. See Coram nobis.

Error coram vobis /éhrar kórám vówbas/. Error in the proceedings "before you"; words used in a writ of error directed by an appellate court to the court which tried the cause. See Coram vobis.

Errores ad sua principia referre, est refellere /arárdiy aéd s(y)ýwra pransip(ly)s ráfárí/. Ýét ráfárí/ly/. To refer errors to their sources is to refute them. To bring errors to their beginning is to see their last.

Errores scribentis nocere non debent /arárdiy skrubéntís nósd nón dábánt/. The mistakes of the writer ought not to harm.

Error spectus nuda veritate in multis, est probabilior; et sepnemeron rationibus vincit veritatem error /éhrar fýkéydas nyúvda vérhratéydíyíyín máltás ést próbabbílyíyíyíí yúwmárow réshíjoyñwásbínsí rígíá rígíáá yómííábí /éhrar/. Error artfully disguised [or colored] is, in many instances, more probable than naked truth; and frequently error overwhelms truth by [its show of] reasons.

Error in exercise of jurisdiction. Error in determination of questions of law or fact on which the court's jurisdiction in particular case depends. Burgess v. Nail, C.C.A.Okl., 103 F.2d 37, 43.

Error in fact. Error in fact occurs when, by reason of some fact which is unknown to the court and not apparent on the record (e.g., infancy, or death of one of the parties), it renders a judgment void or voidable. Such occurs when some fact which really exists is unknown, or some fact is supposed to exist which really does not. Schwartz v. Kominski, 25 Ill.App.3d 789, 324 N.E.2d 91, 93.

Error in law. An error of the court in applying the law to the case on trial, e.g., in ruling on the admission of evidence, or in charging the jury. See also Error.

Error in vacuo /éhrar návkuow/. Error in adverse ruling without adverse effect is "error in vacuo" which may subject the erring judge to criticism but not the case to re-trial. See Error (Harmless error).

Error juris nocet /éhrar júris nósát/. Error of law injures. A mistake of the law has an injurious effect; that is, the party committing it must suffer the consequences.

Error nominis /éhrar nómnáías/. Error of name. A mistake of detail in the name of a person; used in contradistinction to error de persona, a mistake as to identity.
ERROR

Error nominis nunquam nocet, si de identitate rei constat /éühr nómáns nákgwam nósat, sáy diy odéntátédýi ríyay kónstat/. A mistake in the name of a thing is never prejudicial, if it be clear as to the identity of the thing itself [where the thing intended is certainly known]. This maxim is applicable only where the means of correcting the mistake are apparent on the face of the instrument to be construed.

Error of fact. See Error In fact.

Error of law. See Error In law.

Error qui non resistitur approbatur /éhrar kway nón razístád zurówbédýar/. An error which is not resisted or opposed is approved.

Errors excepted /éhrarz ákséptad/. A phrase appended to an account stated, in order to excuse slight mistakes or oversights.

Error, writ of. See Writ of error.

Erthmlotum. In old English law, a meeting of the neighborhood to compromise differences among themselves; a court held on the boundary of two lands.

Erubescit lex fillos castigare parentes /árbsésát léks fílyows kástágériy pérántíyíz/. The law blushes when children correct their parents.

Escamblo /askámbiyow/. In old English law, a writ of exchange. A license in the shape of a writ, formerly granted to an English merchant to draw a bill of exchange on another in foreign parts.

Escambium /askámbiyam/. An old English law term, signifying exchange.

Escape. The departure or deliverance out of custody of a person who was lawfully imprisoned before he is entitled to his liberty by the process of law. The voluntarily or negligently allowing any person lawfully in confinement to leave. To flee from; to avoid; to get away, as to flee to avoid arrest. The voluntary departure from lawful custody by a prisoner with the intent to evade the due course of justice. People v. Rivera, Colo.App., 542 P.2d 90, 92. See 18 U.S.C.A. § 751 et seq.

Escape clause. Provision in a contract or other document permitting party or parties to avoid liability or performance under certain conditions. For example, international tariff containing clause that tariff will be changed if imports covered by such cause harm to domestic industries producing like goods. An “escape clause” is one that provides for avoidance of liability when there is other valid insurance. Chamberlin v. Smith, 72 C.A.3d 835, 140 Cal.Rptr. 493, 500.

Escape period. Term generally applied to provision in union contracts in connection with maintenance of membership clauses permitting workers to withdraw from the union during a certain period near the end of the contract period and before the start of the next contract period.

Escape warrant. In English practice, this was a warrant granted to retake a prisoner committed to the custody of the king’s prison who had escaped therefrom. It was obtained on affidavit from the judge of the court in which the action had been brought, and was directed to all the sheriffs throughout England, commanding them to retake the prisoner and commit him to gaol when and where taken, there to remain until the debt was satisfied.

Escapio quietus /asképiyow kwíywíydas/. In old English law, delivered from that punishment which by the laws of the forest lay upon those whose beasts were found upon forested land.

Escaplum /asképiyam/. That which comes by chance or accident.

Escheta derivatur a verbo gallico eschoir, quod est accidere, quia accidit domino ex eventu et ex inspere-te /aschiyda děhravéydar éy várów gályakow as(ñ)wáw, kwód ést aksídáríy kwáwa aksásad domáunów éks avént(y)uw éd éks inséparéydog/. Escheat is derived from the French word “eschoir,” which signifies to happen, because it falls to the lord from an event and from an unforeseen circumstance.

Escheata vulgo dicuntur que decidentibus ilis que de rege tenent, cum non existit ratione sangiinis barès, ac per delictum tenentis /aschfydiy valgow dákántár kwíy kwá abéséntabas áyas kwíy dí ryijiy téntán kám nón aksístat rásbihówinyi ságwánsa híryiy als fíksám rélébántar/. Those things are commonly called “eschates” which revert to the exchequer from a failure of issue in those who hold of the king, when there does not exist any heir by consanguinity.

Escheat /as(h)chýt/. A reversion of property to the state in consequence of a want of any individual competent to inherit.

Escheat at feudal law was the right of the lord of a fee to re-enter upon the same when it became vacant by the extinction of the blood of the tenant. This extinction might either be per defectum sanguinis or else per delictum tenentis, where the course of descent was broken by the corruption of the blood of the tenant. As a fee might be holden either of the crown or from some inferior lord, the escheat was not always to the crown. The word “escheat”, in this country, merely indicates the preferable right of the state to an estate left vacant, and without there being any one in existence able to make claim thereto.

Eschentor /as(h)chýdar/. In English law, the name of an officer who was appointed in every county to look after the escheats which fell due to the king in that particular county, and to certify the same into the eschequer. An escheator could continue in office for one year only, and was not re-eligible until three years. There does not appear to exist any such officer at the present day.

Escheat, writ of. A writ which ancienly lay for a lord, to recover possession of lands that had escheated to him.

Escheatum /æs(h)chɛkəm/. In old English law, a jury investigation begins to focus on a particular suspect, the suspect is in custody, the suspect requests and is denied counsel, and the police have not warned him of his right to remain silent, the accused has been denied assistance of counsel and no statement elicited during such interrogation may be used in a criminal trial. Escobedo v. State of Illinois, 378 U.S. 478, 490, 491, 84 S.Ct. 1758, 12 L.Ed.2d 977. See also Miranda Rule.

Escobedo Rule /æskəbɪdəʊ rʊwl/. Where police investigation begins to focus on a particular suspect, the suspect is in custody, the suspect requests and is denied counsel, and the police have not warned him of his right to remain silent, the accused has been denied assistance of counsel and no statement elicited during such interrogation may be used in a criminal trial. Escobedo v. State of Illinois, 378 U.S. 478, 490, 491, 84 S.Ct. 1758, 12 L.Ed.2d 977. See also Miranda Rule.

Escoto /æsˈkɒtə/. In England, a tax formerly paid in boroughs and corporations towards the support of the community, which is called “scot and lot.”

Escritura /esˈkrisʊtʊrə/. In Spanish law, a written instrument, Every deed that is made by the hand of a public escribano, or notary of a corporation or council (concejo), or sealed with the seal of the king or other authorized persons.

Escroquerie /eskrəˈkwɛri/. Fr. Fraud, swindling, cheating.

Escrow. A writing, deed, money, stock, or other property delivered by the grantor, promisor or obligor into the hands of a third person, to be held by the latter until the happening of a contingency or performance of a condition, and then by him delivered to the grantee, promisee or obligee. A system of document transfer in which a deed, bond, or funds is delivered to a third person to hold until all conditions in a contract are fulfilled; e.g. delivery of deed to escrow agent under installment land sale contract until full payment for land is made.

Escrow account. A bank account generally held in the name of the depositor and an escrow agent which is returnable to depositor or paid to third person on the fulfillment of escrow condition; e.g. funds for payment of real estate taxes are commonly paid into escrow account of bank-mortgagor by mortgagee.

Escrow deposit. See Escrow account.

Escrowl /esˈkroʊwl/. In old English law, an escrow; a scroll. “And deliver the deed to a stranger, as an escrowl.”

Escuage /eskəˈwɑːʒ/. In feudal law, service of the shield. One of the varieties of tenure in knight’s service, the duty imposed being that of accompanying the king to the wars for forty days, at the tenant’s own charge, or sending a substitute. In later times, this service was commuted for a certain payment in money, which was then called “escuage certain.” 2 Bl.Comm. 74, 75.

Esquette /esˈkɒtərɪz/. Robbers, or destroyers of other men’s lands and fortunes.

Eskipper, eskippare /esˈkəpər(ə)l/. To ship.

Eskippeson /esˈkipəs(ə)n/. Shippage, or passage by sea. Spelled also, “skipeson.”

Esllors /ælˈæzərəs/. See Ellors.

Esne /ezni/. In old English law, a hireling of servile condition.

Esney /ezˈnəsɪ/. Seniority; the condition or right of the eldest; the privilege of the eldest-born. Particularly used of the privilege of the eldest among co-partners to make a first choice of purparts upon a voluntary partition.

E.S.O.P. Employee Stock Ownership Plan.

Espedient /esˈpɛdiənt/. In Spanish law, a junction of parners to make a first choice of purparts upon a voluntary partition.

Espionage. Espionage, or spying, has reference to the crime of “gathering, transmitting or losing” information respecting the national defense with intent or reason to believe that the information is to be used to the injury of the United States, or to the advantage of any foreign nation. 18 U.S.C.A. § 793; Rosenberg v. United States, 346 U.S. 273, 73 S.Ct. 1152, 97 L.Ed. 1609. See Internal security acts.

Espionage Act. Federal law which punishes espionage, spying, and related crimes. 18 U.S.C.A. § 793 et seq.

Esplees /esˈplɛz/. An old term for the products which the ground or land yields; as the hay of the meadows, the herbage of the pasture, corn of arable fields, rent and services, etc. The word has been anciently applied to the land itself.

Espousals /esˈpəwaʊlz/. A mutual promise between a man and a woman to marry each other at some other time. It differs from a marriage, because when the contract is completed.

Espurio /esˈpʊriəw/. In Spanish law, a spurious child; one begotten on a woman who has promiscuous intercourse with many men.

Esq. Abbreviation for Esquire.

Esquire /esˈkwɑːr(ə)r/. In English law, a title of dignity next above gentleman, and below knight. Also a title of office given to sheriffs, serjeants, and barristers at law, justices of the peace, and others.

In United States, title commonly appended after name of attorney; e.g. John J. Jones, Esquire.
ESSENCE

Essence. That which is indispensable. The gist or substance of any act; the vital constituent of a thing; that without which a thing cannot be itself. Norman v. Department of Labor and Industries, 10 Wash.2d 180, 116 P.2d 360, 362.

Essence of the contract. Any condition or stipulation in a contract which is mutually understood and agreed by the parties to be of such vital importance that a sufficient performance of the contract cannot be had without exact compliance with it and is said to be "of the essence of the contract." See also Basis of bargain.

Essendi quletum de tolonio /asenday kwiyiydam diy talówniyow/. A writ to be quit of toll; it lies for citizens and burgesses of any city or town who, by charter or prescription, ought to be exempted from toll, where the same is exacted of them.

Essential. Indispensably necessary; important in the highest degree; requisite. That which is required for the continued existence of a thing.

Essoin, v. /asoyn/. In old English practice, to present or offer an excuse for not appearing in court on an appointed day in obedience to a summons; to cast an essoin. This was anciently done by a person whom the party sent for that purpose, called an "essoiner."

Essoin, n. /asoyn/. In old English law, an excuse for not appearing in court at the return of the process. Presentation of such excuse. Essoin was not now allowed at all in personal actions. 3 Bl.Comm. 278, note.

Essoin day /asoyn déy/. In England, formerly the first general return-day of the term, on which the courts sat to receive essoins, i.e., excuses for parties who did not appear in court, according to the summons of writs. 3 Bl.Comm. 278. By St. 11 Geo. IV, and 1 Wm. IV, c. 70, § 6, these days were done away with, as a part of the term.

Essoin de malo villa /asoyn di màlow willy/. When the defendant is in court the first day; but gone without pleading, and being afterwards surprised by sickness, etc., cannot attend, but sends two essoiners, who openly protest in court that he is detained by sickness in such a village, that he cannot come pro lucrari and pro perdere; and this will be admitted, for it falls on the plaintiff to prove whether the essoin is true or not.

Essoiniator /asoyniyéydar/. A person who made an essoin.

Essoin roll /asoyn ròwl/. In England, a roll upon which essoins were formerly entered, together with the day to which they were adjourned.

Establish. This word occurs frequently in the Constitution of the United States, and it is there used in different meanings: (1) To settle firmly, to fix unalterably; as to establish justice, which is the avowed object of the Constitution. (2) To make or form; as to establish uniform laws governing naturalization or bankruptcy. (3) To found, to create, to regulate; as: "Congress shall have power to establish post-offices." (4) To found, recognize, confirm, or admit; as: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion.” See Establishment clause. (5) To create, to ratify, or confirm, as: "We, the people . . . do ordain and establish this Constitution." Ware v. U. S., 71 U.S. 4 (Wall.) 617, 18 L.Ed. 389.

To settle, make or fix firmly; place on a permanent footing; found; create; put beyond doubt or dispute; prove; convince. Wells Lamont Corp. v. Bowles, Em.App., 149 F.2d 364, 366. To enact permanently. To bring about or into existence.

Establishment. Place of business. Public or private institution. State of being established.

Establishment clause. That provision of the First Amendment to U.S. Constitution which provides that “Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof . . .”. Such language prohibits a state or the federal government from setting up a church, or passing laws which aid one, or all, religions, or giving preference to one religion, or forcing belief or disbelief in any religion. Eversen v. Board of Education, 330 U.S. 1, 67 S.Ct. 504, 91 L.Ed. 711; McCollum v. Bd. of Education, 333 U.S. 203, 68 S.Ct. 461, 92 L.Ed. 649.

Estadal /éstädál/. In Spanish America, a measure of land of sixteen square varas, or yards.

Estadia (or Sobreestadia) /éstädía (sówbreéstädía)/. In Spanish law, delay in a voyage, or in the delivery of cargo, caused by the charterer or consignee, for which demurrage is payable. The time for which the party who has chartered a vessel, or is bound to receive the cargo, has to pay demurrage on account of his delay in the execution of the contract.

Est alliquid quod non oportet etiam si licet; quelsequid vero non licet eon oportet est álalkwid kwóid nón spordst eshiyam say lisat; kwikkwid vírow nón lisat sirdly nón spordst/. There is that which is not proper, even though permitted; but whatever is not permitted is certainly not proper.

Estandard /éstándard/. L. Fr. A standard (of weights and measures). So called because it stands constant and immovable, and hath all other measures coming towards it for their conformity.

Est ascavoir /éy asawvôwr/. It is to be understood or known; “it is to-wit.”

Estate. The degree, quantity, nature, and extent of interest which a person has in real and personal property. An estate in lands, tenements, and hereditaments signifies such interest as the tenant has therein. 2 Bl.Comm. 103. The condition or circumstance in which the owner stands with regard to his property. Boyd v. Sibold, 7 Wash.2d 279, 109 P.2d 535, 539.

In this sense, “estate” is commonly used in conveyances in connection with the words “right,” "title," and “interest,” and is, in a great degree, synonymous with all of them.
The total property of whatever kind that is owned by a decedent prior to the distribution of that property in accordance with the terms of a will, or, when there is no will, by the laws of inheritance in the state of domicile of the decedent. It means, ordinarily, the whole of the property owned by anyone, the realty as well as the personality. As used in connection with the administration of decedents' estates, term includes property of a decedent, trust or other person as such property exists from time to time during the administration, and hence may include probate assets as well as property passing by intestacy. Uniform Probate Code, § 1–201(11).

In its broadest sense, the social, civic, or political condition or standing of a person; or a class of persons considered as grouped for social, civic, or political purposes.

Common Law Classifications

Estates may be either absolute or conditional. An absolute estate is a full and complete estate, or an estate in lands not subject to be defeated upon a subsequent event. In this phrase the word "absolute" is not used legally to distinguish a fee from a life-estate, but a qualified or conditional fee from a fee simple. A conditional estate is one, the existence of which depends upon the happening or not happening of some uncertain event, whereby the estate may be either originally created, or enlarged, or finally defeated. Estates are also classed as executed or executory. The former is an estate whereby a present interest passes to and resides in the tenant, not dependent upon any subsequent circumstance or contingency. They are more commonly called "estates in possession." 2 Bl.Comm. 162. An estate where there is vested in the grantee a present and immediate right of present or future enjoyment. An executory estate is an estate or interest in lands, the vesting or enjoyment of which depends upon some future contingency. Such estate may be an executory devise, or an executory remainder, which is the same as a contingent remainder, because no present interest passes. A contingent estate is one which depends for its effect upon an event which may or may not happen, as, where an estate is limited to a person not yet born. Conventional estates are those freeholds not of inheritance or estates for life, which are created by the express acts of the parties, in contradistinction to those which are legal and arise from the operation of law. A dominant estate, in the law of easements, is the estate for the benefit of which the easement exists, or the tenement whose owner, as such, enjoys an easement over an adjoining estate. An expectant estate is one which is not yet in possession, but the enjoyment of which is to begin at a future time; a present or vested contingent right of future enjoyment. Examples are remainders and reversions. A future estate is an estate which is not now vested in the grantee, but is to commence in possession at some future time. It includes remainders, reversions, and estates limited to commence in futuro without a particular estate to support them, which last are not good at common law, except in the case of chattel interests. 2 Bl.Comm. 165. An estate limited to commence in possession at a future day, either without the intervention of a precedent estate, or on the determination by lapse of time, or otherwise, of a precedent estate created at the same time. A particular estate is a limited estate which is taken out of the fee, and which precedes a remainder; as an estate for years to A., remainder to B. for life; or an estate for life to A., remainder to B. in tail. This precedent estate is called the "particular estate," and the tenant of such estate is called the "particular tenant." 2 Bl.Comm. 165. A servient estate, in the law of easements, is the estate upon which the easement is imposed or against which it is enjoyed; an estate subjected to a burden or servitude for the benefit of another estate. A settled estate, in English law, is one created or limited under a settlement; that is, one in which the powers of alienation, devising, and transmission according to the ordinary rules of descent are restrained by the limitations of the settlement. An vested estate is one in which there is an immediate right of present enjoyment or a present fixed right of future enjoyment; an estate as to which there is a person in being who would have an immediate right to the possession upon the ceasing of some intermediate or precedent estate. An original estate is the first of several estates, bearing to each other the relation of a particular estate and a reversion. An original estate is contrasted with a derivative estate; and a derivative estate is a particular interest carved out of another estate of larger extent.

"Estate" and "heirs" are not equivalent terms, Martin v. Hale, 167 Tenn. 438, 71 S.W.2d 211, 214; Abraham v. Abraham, 245 App.Div. 302, 280 N.Y.S. 825. As to Homestead; Movables; Real; Residuary; Separate, and Trust (Trust estate), see those titles. See also Augmented estate; Beneficial estate; Gross estate; Joint estate; Life estate; Net estate; Residuary estate; Vested estate.

For the names and definitions of the various kinds of estates in land, see the different titles below.

Landed estate or property. See Landed estate or property.

Qualified estate. Interests in real property which are not absolute and unconditional including fee tail, estates on condition, estates on limitation, and estates on conditional limitation. Carpender v. City of New Brunswick, 135 N.J.Eq. 397, 39 A.2d 40, 43.

Small estate. In some jurisdictions, there is an informal procedure for administration of small estates of decedents less structured than ordinary probate and administration. Normally, the services of an attorney are not required. Uniform Probate Code, § 3–1201 et seq.

Estate ad remanentiam /astéyâd rémanésh(ly)am/. An estate in fee-simple.

Estate at sufferance. The interest of a tenant who has come rightfully into possession of lands by permission of the owner, and continues to occupy the same after the period for which he is entitled to hold by such permission. 2 Bl.Comm. 150. The estate arises where one comes into possession of lands by lawful title, but keeps it afterwards without any title at all, and the original entry need not have been under lease or as a tenant of the dispossessing landlord.

Estate at will. A species of estate less than freehold, where lands and tenements are let by one man to another, to have and to hold at the will of the lessor; and the tenant by force of this lease obtains possession. 2 Bl.Comm. 145. Or it is where lands are let without limiting any certain and determinate estate. The estate arises where lands or tenements are expressly demised by one person to another to be held during the joint wills of both parties, or it may arise by implication of law wherever one person is put in possession of another's land with the owner's consent, but under an agreement which does not suffice to create in the tenant an estate of freehold or for years.

Estate by elegit. See Elegit.

Estate by entirety. See Estate by the entirety.

Estate by purchase. One acquired in any other method than descent. See also Purchase.

Estate by statute merchant. In England, an estate whereby the creditor, under the custom of London, retained the possession of all his debtor's lands until his debts were paid. See Statute (Statute merchant).

Estate by statute staple. See Staple (Statute staple).

Estate by the curtesy. See Curtesy.

Estate by the entirety. Called also estate in entirety, or estate by the entireties. An estate in joint tenancy, plus the unity of the marital relation. A form of co-ownership of realty or personality held by husband and wife in which there is unity of estate, unity of possession and unity of control of entire property, and on death of one, survivor takes estate under original conveyance. In re Gallagher's Estate, 352 Pa. 476, 43 A.2d 132, 133. A common-law estate, based on the doctrine that husband and wife are one, and that a conveyance of real property to husband and wife creates but one estate. An estate held by husband and wife together so long as both live, and, after the death of either, by the survivor. It is an estate held by husband and wife by virtue of a title acquired by them jointly after marriage. A creature of the common law created by legal fiction based wholly on the common-law doctrine that husband and wife are one, and hence a conveyance to husband and wife created but one estate, and each was owner of the whole estate, and neither could dispose of it without the consent of the other, and on the death of one survivor was the owner in fee simple. Alexander v. Alexander, 154 Or. 317, 58 P.2d 1265, 1270, 1271. Type of joint estate which may be held only by two persons who are married to each other at the time that the estate is created and which does not admit of partition, though, on divorce, it automatically becomes an estate in common unless the parties provide otherwise.

An "estate by entireties" resembles a "joint tenancy" in that there is a right of survivorship in both, but such an estate is distinguishable from a joint tenancy in that the latter may be invested in any number of natural persons each of whom is seized of an undivided moiety of the whole, whereas a "tenancy by entirety" is vested in two persons only, who in law are regarded as only one, and each of whom becomes seized of the estate as a whole. Heffner v. White, 113 Ind.App. 296, 45 N.E.2d 342, 346.

See also Community property; Entirety; Tenancy (Joint tenancy).

Estate duty. A duty formerly imposed in England (act of 1894) upon the principal value of all property which passed on death. Such duty was replaced in 1975 by a capital transfer tax.

Estate for life. See Life estate.

Estate for years. A species of estate less than freehold, where a man has an interest in lands and tenements, and a possession thereof, by virtue of such interest, for some fixed and determinate period of time; as in the case where lands are leased for the term of a certain number of years, agreed upon between the lessor and the lessee. Blackstone calls this estate a "contract" for the possession of lands or tenements for some determinate period. 2 Bl.Comm. 140. Estates for years embrace all terms limited to endure for a definite and ascertained period, however short or long the period may be; they embrace terms for a fixed number of weeks or months or for a single year, as well as for any definite number of years, however great. Also called "tenancy for a term".

Estate from period to period. An estate continuing for successive periods of a year, or successive periods of a fraction of a year, unless it is terminated. Pitney-Bowes Postage Meter Co. v. United States, D.C. Conn., 57 F.Supp. 365, 366. Also called "tenancy from period to period"; or "periodic estate".

Estate from year to year. An example of an "estate for years" (q.v.). It exists in cases where the parties stipulate for it, and also where the parties by their conduct have placed themselves in the relation of landlord and tenant without adopting any other term. If a tenant has been allowed to hold over after the expiration of his term in such a way as to preclude the possibility of his becoming a tenant on sufferance, it is a tenancy from year to year. It was originally a development of a tenancy at will, by which the tenancy was terminable only at the time of the year at which it began, and on notice.

Estate in common. An estate in lands held by two or more persons, with interests accruing under different titles; or accruing under the same title, but at different periods; or conferred by words of limitation importing that the grantees are to take in distinct shares. See also Tenancy (Tenancy in common).

Estate in coparcenary /astéyd an kowpárs(ə)narɪ/. See Coparcenary.

Estate in dower. See Dower.

Estate in expectancy. One which is not yet in possession, but the enjoyment of which is to begin at a future time. An estate giving a present or vested contingent right of future enjoyment. One in which the right to permanence of the profits is postponed to some future period. Such are estates in remainder and reversion.

Estate in fee simple. See Fee simple.

Estate in fee-tail. See Tall, estate in.

Estate in joint tenancy. See Tenancy.

Estate in lands. Property one has in lands, tenements or hereditaments, or conditions or circumstances in which tenant stands as to his property. Tallman v.
The lords spiritual, the lords Estates of the realm.
Pur/ast6yt par owtra vay/. See Estate pur autre vie.
Estate planning. That branch of the law which, in Estate on condition.
Estate on conditional limitation. An estate conveyed to one person so that, upon occurrence or failure of occurrence of some contingent event, whether conditional or limitative, the estate shall depart from original grantee and pass to another. Carpender v. City of New Brunswick, 135 N.J.Eq. 397, 39 A.2d 40, 43.
Estate on limitation /astéyd on limitéyshän/. An estate originated by the use of words denoting duration of time, such as while, during, so long as, and the like and when designated limitative event happens, such estate ends naturally without any re-entry and property reverts to grantor. Carpender v. City of New Brunswick, 135 N.J.Eq. 397, 39 A.2d 40, 43. Sometimes referred to as "base fee", "de terminable fee", "fee simple defeasible". Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Chapman, 35 N.J. 177, 171 A.2d 653, 657.
Estate planning. That branch of the law which, in arranging a person’s property and estate, takes into account the laws of wills, taxes, insurance, property, and trusts so as to gain maximum benefit of all laws while carrying out the person’s own wishes for the disposition of his property upon his death.
Éstate pur autre vie /astéyt par ówtró váy/. See Pur autre vie.
Estates of the realm. The lords spiritual, the lords temporal, and the commons of Great Britain. 1 Bl. Comm. 153. Sometimes called the "three estates." Inasmuch as the lords spiritual had no separate assembly or negative in their political capacity, some authorities reduce the estates in Great Britain to two, the lords and commons. Generally in feudal Europe there were these three estates: the clergy, nobles, and commons. In England (until about the 14th century) the three estates of the realm were the clergy, barons, and knights. In legal practice the lords spiritual and lords temporal are usually collectively designated under the one name lords.
Estate subject to a conditional limitation. The distinction between an estate upon condition subsequent and an "estate subject to a conditional limitation" is that in former words creating condition do not originally limit term, but merely permit its termination upon happening of contingency, while in latter words creating it limit continuation of estate to time preceding happening of contingency. Johnson v. Lane, 199 Ark. 740, 135 S.W.2d 853, 866.
Estate tail. See Tail, estate in.
Estate tail, quasi. When a tenant for life grants his estate to a man and his heirs, as these words, though apt and proper to create an estate tail, cannot do so, because the grantor, being only tenant for life, cannot grant in perpetuum, therefore they are said to create an estate tail quasi, or improper.
Estate tax. A tax imposed on the right to transfer property by death. Thus, an estate tax is levied on the decedent’s estate and not on the heir receiving the property. A tax levied on right to transmit property, while "inheritance tax" is levied on right to receive property. Allen v. Flournoy, 26 Cal.App.3d 774, 103 Cal.Rptr. 275, 277. The tax is based on value of the whole estate less certain deductions. I.R.C. § 2001 et seq. See also Inheritance tax; Unified transfer tax.
Many states have adopted the "Uniform Interstate Compromise of Death Taxes Act" or the "Uniform Interstate Arbitration of Death Taxes Act."
Estate upon condition. An estate in lands, the existence of which depends upon the happening or not happening of some uncertain event, whereby the estate may be either originally created, or enlarged, or finally defeated. 2 Bl. Comm. 151. An estate having a qualification annexed to it, by which it may, upon the happening of a particular event, be created, or enlarged, or destroyed. United States v. 1,010.8 Acres, More or Less, Situate in Sussex County, Del., D.C.Del., 56 F.Supp. 120, 127.
Estate upon condition expressed. An estate granted, either in fee-simple or otherwise, with an express qualification annexed, whereby the estate granted shall either commence, be enlarged, or be defeated upon performance or breach of such qualification or condition. 2 Bl. Comm. 154. An estate which is so expressly defined and limited by the words of its creation that it cannot endure for any longer time than till the contingency happens upon which the estate is to fail.
Estate upon condition implied. An estate having a condition annexed to it inseparably from its essence and constitution, although no condition be expressed in words. 2 Bl. Comm. 152.
Est autem jus publicum et privatvm, quod ex naturalibus praeceptis aut gentium, aut civilibvs est collectum; et quod in jure scripto jus appellantur, id in lege angilis rectum esse dicitur /ést édam jás páblikam et prvéydam, kvód éks nátyáyélábs práspétás ét inénshtyam ét svatlábs ét kalékam; ét kvód in júrý skríptow jás épálydár, id in líjjíy ánglíyly rékten ést
Est autem vis legem simulans /est odam vis liyjam simulaln(d)z/. Violence may also put on the mask of law.

Estendard, estendart, or standard /a(st)ëstandard/. An ensign for horsemen in war.

Ester in judgment. L. Fr. To appear before a tribunal either as plaintiff or defendant.

Estimate. A valuing or rating by the mind, without actually measuring, weighing, or the like. A rough or approximate calculation only. United States v. Foster, C.C.A.Iowa, 131 F.2d 3, 7. Act of appraising or valuing. Determination of approximate cost or return.

This word is used to express the mind or judgment of the speaker or writer on the particular subject under consideration. It implies a calculation or computation, as to estimate the gain or loss of an enterprise.

Estimated tax. Tax computed in the first instance without fully accurate and complete information but which is filed only as a preliminary matter to be followed by a final tax return. Tax payments are made in instalments based on the estimate and then credited to taxpayer when he files his final return. Federal law dictates when declarations of estimated tax must be filed (e.g. quarterly). I.R.C. § 6015(a). Declarations and payment of estimated taxes are normally made by non-wage earners since, unlike wage earners, their taxes are not withheld from each paycheck by the employer. See also Declaration of estimated tax.

Estimated useful life. The period over which an asset will be used by a particular taxpayer. Although such period cannot be longer than the estimated physical life of an asset, it could be shorter if the taxpayer does not intend to keep the asset until it wears out. Assets such as goodwill do not have an estimated useful life. The estimated useful life of an asset is essential to measuring the annual tax deduction for depreciation and amortization and in determining the amount of any investment tax credit allowable.

Estín doctrine. The principle of law enunciated in Estín v. Estín, 334 U.S. 541, 68 S.Ct. 1213, 92 L.Ed. 1561 to the effect that a divorce decree is divisible and, while full faith and credit must be given to a decree as to the termination of the marriage, no full faith and credit is required as to that portion of the decree ordering support for the wife unless the court entering the order had personal jurisdiction of the husband.

Est ipsorum legislatorum tanquam viva vox /ëst ipsoram lejalsatorum tægæwam vawä vokä/. The voice of the legislators themselves is like the living voice; that is, the language of a statute is to be understood and interpreted like ordinary spoken language.

Estop. To stop, bar, or impede; to prevent; to preclude. See Embarго; Estoppel; Injunction.
For Acquiescence, estoppel by; Collateral attack; Contract, estoppel by; Deed, estoppel by; Election, estoppel by; Equitable estoppel; In pais, estoppel; Judgment, estoppel by; Judicial estoppel; Laches, estoppel by; Legal estoppel; Negligence, estoppel by; Promissory estoppel; Quasi estoppel; Record, estoppel by; Representation, estoppel by; Silence, estoppel by; and Verdict, estoppel by, see those titles.

Acts and declarations. An "estoppel by acts and declarations" is such as arises from the acts and declarations of a person by which he designedly induces another to alter his position injuriously to himself.

Estoppel by deed. A grantor in a warranty deed who does not have title at the time of the conveyance but who subsequently acquires title is estopped from denying that he had title at the time of the transfer and such after-acquired title inures to the benefit of the grantee or his successors. See also Deed, estoppel by.

Estoppel by judgment. Term means that when a fact has been agreed on, or decided in a court of record, a party who subsequently acquires title is estopped from denying that he had title at the time of the transfer and such after-acquired title inures to the benefit of the grantee or his successors. See also Deed, estoppel by.

Estoppel certificate. A signed statement by a party, such as a tenant or a mortgagee, certifying for the benefit of another party that a certain statement of facts is correct as of the date of the statement, such as that a lease exists, that there are no defaults and that rent is paid to a certain date. Delivery of the statement by the tenant prevents (estops) the tenant from later claiming a different state of facts.

Estoppel in pais. The doctrine by which a person may be prejudiced because he intended to be, while under "estoppel" he is bound because other party will be prejudiced unless the law treats him as legally bound. Carlile v. Harris, Tex.Civ.App., 38 S.W.2d 622. See Ratification.

Res judicata distinguished. A prior judgment between same parties, which is not strictly res judicata because based upon different cause of action, operates as an "estoppel" only as to matters actually in issue or points controverted. Estreat, Life Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn. v. Martin, C.C.A.Ark., 108 F.2d 824, 827; Cunningham v. Oklahoma City, 186 Okt. 466, 110 P.2d 1102, 1104. In a later action upon a different cause of action a judgment operates as an "estoppel" only as to such issues in second action as were actually determined in the first action. Lober v. Vista Irr. Dist., C.C.A.Cal., 127 F.2d 628, 634. The doctrine of "res judicata" is a branch of law of "estoppel". Krisher v. McAllister, 71 Ohio App. 58, 47 N.E.2d 817, 819. The plea of "res judicata" is in its nature an "estoppel" against the losing party from again litigating matters involved in previous action, but the plea does not have that effect as to matters transpiring subsequently. Fort Worth Stockyards Co. v. Brown, Tex.Civ.App., 161 S.W.2d 549, 555. See Res (Res judicata).

Waiver distinguished. Waiver is voluntary surrender or relinquishment of some known right, benefit or advantage; estoppel is the inhibition to assert it. In insurance law, however, the two terms are commonly used interchangeably. See Waiver.

Estover /astówvr/. The right or privilege which a tenant has to furnish himself with so much wood from the demised premises as may be sufficient or necessary for his fuel, fences, and other agricultural operations. See Waiver.

An allowance made to a person out of an estate or other thing for his or her support, as for food and raiment.

An allowance (more commonly called "alimony") granted to a woman divorced a mensa et thoro, for her support out of her husband's estate. 1 Bl.Comm. 441.

Estoveria sunt arandi, arandi, construendi et claudendi /estáviriya sant árända, sánda, konstruánda et kldónda/. Estovers are of fire-bote, plow-bote, house-bote, and hedge-bote.

Estoverlis habendis /estáviriyas hobendás/. A writ (now obsolete) for a wife judicially separated to recover her alimony or estovers.

Est qudddam perfectius in rebus lictis /ést kwddám perfectísh in ríbísh lisísas/. There is something more perfect in things allowed.

Estray /astréy/. An estray is an animal that has escaped from its owner, and wanders or strays about; usually defined, at common law, as a wandering animal whose owner is unknown. An animal cannot be an estray when on the range where it was raised, and permitted by its owner to run, and especially when the owner is known to the party who takes it up.

The term is also used of flotsam at sea.

Estrat, v. /astráyt/. To take out a forfeited recognition from the recordings of a court, and return it to the court to be prosecuted. See Estrat, n.
Estreat, n. (From Lat. extractum.) In English law, a copy or extract from the book of estreats, that is, the rolls of any court, in which the amercements or fines, recognizances, etc., imposed or taken by that court upon or from the accused, are set down, and which are to be levied by the bailiff or other officer of the court. A true copy or duplicate of some original writing or record, and especially of fines and amercements imposed by a court, extracted from the record, and certified to a proper officer or officers authorized and required to collect them.

Estreciatus /astrlys(h)iyýydas/. Straightened, as applied to roads.

Estrepe /astrfyp/. To strip; to despoil; to lay waste; to commit waste upon an estate, as by cutting down trees, removing buildings, etc. To injure the value of a reversioner interest by stripping or spoiling the estate.

Estrepeinent /astrfypmant/. A species of aggravated waste, by stripping or devastating the land, to the injury of the reversioner, and especially pending a suit for possession.

Estrepenment, writ of. A common-law writ of waste, which lay in particular for the reversioner against the tenant for life, in respect of damage or injury to the land committed by the latter. As it was only auxiliary to a real action for recovery of the land, and as equity afforded the same relief by injunction, the writ fell into disuse in England, and was abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 27.

Estuary /fet dly hok pdwnat siy/. That part of the mouth or lower course of a river flowing into the sea which is subject to tide; especially, an enlargement of a river channel toward its mouth in which the movement of the tide is very prominent.

Et. And. The introductory word of several Latin and French phrases formerly in common use.

Et adjournatur /fet adjournýydar/. And it is adjourned. A phrase used in the old reports, where the argument of a cause was adjourned to another day, or where a second argument was had.

Et al. /fet ál/. An abbreviation for et alii, “and others.” The singular is “et alius” (q.v.). It may also mean “and another” in the singular.

The abbreviation et al. (sometimes in the plural et als) is often affixed to the name of the person first mentioned, where there are several plaintiffs, grantors, persons addressed, etc.

Where the words “et al.” are used in a judgment against defendants, the quoted words include all defendants. Williams v. Williams, 25 Tenn.App. 290, 156 S.W.2d 363, 369.

Et alli è contra /fet élyiy ly kóntra/. And others on the other side. A phrase constantly used in the Year Books, in describing a joinder in issue.

Et allus /fet élyyys/. And another.

Et allocutur /fet álókýydar/. And it is allowed.

Et cetera (or etc.) /fet sédara/. And others; and other things; and others of like character; and others of the like kind; and the rest; and so on; and so forth. In its abbreviated form (etc.) this phrase is frequently affixed to one of a series of articles or names to show that others are intended to follow or understood to be included. So, after reciting the initiatory words of a set formula, or a clause already given in full, etc. is added, as an abbreviation, for the sake of convenience. And other things of like kind or purpose as compared with those immediately theretofore mentioned.

Et de cee so mettent en le pays. L. Fr. And of this they put themselves upon the country.

Et de hoc ponti se super patriam /fet diy hók pówmn siy sf(y)úwper pástriyam/. And of this he puts himself upon the country. The formal conclusion of a common-law plea in bar by way of traverse. 3 Bl.Comm. 313. The literal translation is retained in the modern form.

Et el legitur in hoc verba /fet fyay lýyðar an hýyk várba/. L. Lat. And it is read to him in these words. Words formerly used in entering the prayer of oyer on record.

Eternal security. The doctrine of “eternal security” means that once one becomes a Christian or has been “regenerated” his future conduct, no matter what it may be, will not jeopardize his salvation. Ashman v. Studebaker, 115 Ind.App. 73, 56 N.E.2d 674, 678.

Et habeas ibi tune hocr bre /fet hýbyiyas fbs tàng hók brývyiy/. And have you there this writ. The formal words directing the return of a writ. The literal translation was retained in the later form of a considerable number of writs.

Et habuit /fet hékbyuwst/. And he had it, a common phrase in the Year Books, expressive of the allowance of an application or demand by a party.

Ethics. Of or relating to moral action, conduct, motive or character; as, ethical emotion; also, treating of moral feelings, duties or conduct; containing precepts of morality; moral. Professionally right or befitting; conforming to professional standards of conduct. Kraushaar v. La Vin, 181 Misc. 508, 42 N.Y.S.2d 857, 859.

Legal ethics. See Canon (Canons of judicial ethics); Code of Professional Responsibility; Legal ethics.

Et hoc paratus est verificare /fet hók porýydas ést věrřfáskeřéris/. And this he is prepared to verify. The Latin form of concluding a plea in confession and avoidance; that is, where the defendant has confessed all that the plaintiff has set forth, and has pleaded new matter in avoidance. These words were used, when the pleadings were in Latin, at the conclusion of any pleading which contained new affirmative matter. They expressed the willingness or readiness of the party so pleading to establish by proof the matter alleged in his pleading. A pleading which concluded in that manner was technically said to “conclude with a verification,” in contradistinction to a pleading which simply denied matter alleged by the opposite party, and which for that reason was said to “conclude to the country,” because the party merely put himself upon the country, or left the matter to the jury.
Et hoc petit quod inquiratur per patriam /et hōk pēdāt kwōd ḳwykrwyddar pēr pēṭrīyaṁ/. And this he prays may be inquired of by the country. The conclusion of a plaintiff's pleading, tendering an issue to the country. Literally translated in the modern forms.

Et inde petit judicium /et īndī prēd(y)ūwst sēktam/. And thereupon he brings suit. The Latin conclusion of a declaration, except against attorneys and other officers of the court. 3 Bl.Comm. 295.

Et modō ad hunc diem /et mōdow ēd hāk dāyām/. Lat. And now at this day. This phrase was the formal beginning of an entry of appearance or of a continuance. The equivalent English words are still used in this connection.

Et non /ēt nōn/. Lat. And not. A technical phrase in pleading, which introduces the negative averments of a special traverse. It has the same force and effect as the words absque hoc, “without this,” and is occasionally used instead of the latter.

Et seq. /ēt sākwěntlyz/et sākwēnsh(ly)a/. An abbreviation for et sequentes (masculine and feminine plural) or et sequentia (neuter), “and the following.” Thus a reference to “p. 1, et seq.” means “page first and the following pages.” Also abbreviated “et sqq.,” which is preferred by some authorities for a reference to more than one following page.

Et sic /ēt sīk/. And so. In the Latin forms of pleading these were the introductory words of a special conclusion to a plea in bar, the object being to render it positive and not argumentative; as et sic nil debet.

Et sic ad judicium /ēt sīk ēd juwdishiyam/. And so to judgment.

Et sic ad patrim /ēt sīk ēd pāṭrīyaṁ/. And so to the country. A phrase used in the Year Books, to record an issue to the country.

Et sic fecit /ēt sīk fēysṭ/. And he did so.

Et sic pendet /ēt sīk pēndṭ/. And so it hangs. A term used in the old reports to signify that a point was left undetermined.

Et sic ulterius /ēt sīk iltīriyaś/. And so on; and so further; and so forth.

Et ux /ēd āks(ar)/. An abbreviation for et uxor,—“and wife.” Where a grantor’s wife joins him in the conveyance, it is sometimes expressed (in abstracts, etc.) to be by “A. B. et ux.”

Euclidian. Type of general zoning ordinance which excludes apartment houses, businesses, retail shops and the like from a residential zone; name is derived from case of Village of Euclid, Ohio et al. v. Ambler Realty Co., 272 U.S. 365, 47 S.Ct. 114, 71 L.Ed. 303.

Eum qui nocentem infamant, non est sēquum et bonum ob eaem rem condemnandi; delicta enim nocentum nota esse oporet et expedit /yām kwāy nāśentam ifēmēyat nōn ēst īkwyam ēt bōwmān ēb īyam rēm kōnđmenēray; dalīkta īyam nāśensh(ly)ām nōwdsēy spōrdēt ēd ēkspōdēt/. It is not just and proper that who he who speaks ill of a bad man should be condemned on that account; for it is fitting and expedient that the crimes of bad men should be known. 1 Bl.Comm. 125.

Eundo, morando, et redeundo /īyāndow, mārāndow, ēt rēdīyāndow/. Lat. Going, remaining, and returning. A person who is privileged from arrest (as a witness, legislator, etc.) is generally so privileged eundo, morando, et redeundo; that is, on his way to the place where his duties are to be performed, while he remains there, and on his return journey.

Eunony /yūronymiy/. Equal laws and a well-adjusted constitution of government.

Eunuch /yūwnsk/. A male of the human species who has been castrated.

Euphoria /yw9an6yzha/. The act or practice of painlessly putting to death persons suffering from incurable and distressing disease as an act of mercy.

Evasion. See Judicial acts.

Evasive. A term of eluding, dodging, or avoiding, or avoidance by artifice. City of Wink v. Griffith Amusement Co., 129 Tex. 40, 100 S.W.2d 695, 701. A subtle endeavoring to set aside truth or to escape the punishment of the law. Tax "evasion" is to be distinguished from tax "avoidance," the former meaning the illegal nonpayment of taxes due, the latter referring to the legal reduction or nonpayment of taxes through allowable deductions, exemptions, etc.

Evasive answer. One which consists in refusing either to admit or to deny a matter in a direct, straight-forward manner as to which the person is necessarily presumed to have knowledge. Under Fed.R.Civil P. 37, an evasive answer is considered and treated as a failure to answer, for which a party may on motion seek a court order compelling answers to discovery questions.

Eve. Evening. The period immediately preceding an important event.

Even. Nothing due or owing on either side; neither a profit nor loss; i.e. breaking even.

Evening. The closing part of the day and beginning of the night; in a strict sense, from sunset till dark. In common speech, the latter part of the day and the earlier part of the night, until bedtime. The period between sunset or the evening meal and ordinary bedtime. See also Nighttime.

Evenings. In old English law, the delivery at evening or night of a certain portion of grass, or corn, etc., to a customary tenant, who performs the service of cutting, mowing, or reaping for his lord, given him as a gratuity or encouragement.

Event. The consequence of anything; the issue or outcome of an action as finally determined; that in which an action, operation, or series of operations, terminates. Noteworthy happening or occurrence. Something that happens. Distinguished from an act in that an act is the product of the will whereas an event is an occurrence which takes place independent of the will such as an earthquake or flood.

See also Fortuitous event.

Eventus est quia ex causa sequitur; et dictur eventus quia ex causis eventit /avéntas èst kwá̂s kóza sékwardar, èt dísadar avéntas kwáya èks kózas évana/. An event is that which follows from the cause, and is called an “event” because it eventuates from causes.

Eventus varias res nova semper habet /avéntas véri-yoows ríyz nówva sémpar h'ébya/. A new matter always produces various events.

Evergreen contract. A contract which renews itself from year to year in lieu of notice by one of the parties to the contrary. Chemplex Co. v. Tauber Oil Co., D.C.Iowa, 309 F.Supp. 904, 908.

Every. Each one of all; all the separate individuals who constitute the whole, regarded one by one. The term is sometimes equivalent to “all”; and sometimes to “each”.

Every other thing. This phrase, as used in requiring employer to furnish safe place of employment and to do “every other thing” reasonably necessary to protect employees, relates to things of same kind that employer must necessarily do in making place safe.

Evesdroppers. See Eavesdropping.

Evict. In civil law, to recover anything from a person by virtue of the judgment of a court or judicial sentence. See Eviction.

Eviction. Dispossession by process of law; the act of depriving a person of the possession of land or rental property which he has held or leased. Act of turning a tenant out of possession, either by re-entry or legal proceedings, such as an action of ejectment. Deprivation of lessee of possession of premises or disturbance of lessee in beneficial enjoyment so as to cause tenant to abandon the premises (the latter being constructive eviction). Estes v. Gatliiff, 291 Ky. 93, 163 S.W.2d 273, 276.

See also Actual eviction; Constructive eviction; Ejectment; Forcible entry and detainer; Notice to quit; Partial eviction; Retaliatory eviction; Total eviction.

Evidence. Any species of proof, or probative matter, legally presented at the trial of an issue, by the act of the parties and through the medium of witnesses, records, documents, exhibits, concrete objects, etc., for the purpose of inducing belief in the minds of the court or jury as to their contention. Taylor v. Howard, 111 R.I. 527, 304 A.2d 891, 893.

Testimony, writings, material objects, or other things presented to the senses that are offered to prove the existence or nonexistence of a fact. Calif. Evid.Code.

All the means by which any alleged matter of fact, the truth of which is submitted to investigation, is established or disproved. Any matter of fact, the effect, tendency, or design of which is to produce in the mind a persuasion of the existence or nonexistence of some matter of fact. That which demonstrates, makes clear, or ascertains the truth of the very fact or point in issue, either for the one side or on the other. That which tends to produce conviction in the mind as to existence of a fact. The means sanctioned by law of ascertaining in a judicial proceeding the truth respecting a question of fact.

As a part of procedure “evidence” signifies those rules of law whereby it is determined what testimony should be admitted and what should be rejected in each case, and what is the weight to be given to the testimony admitted. See Evidence rules.

For Presumption as evidence, see Presumption; Proof and evidence distinguished, see Proof; Testimony as synonymous or distinguishable, see Testimony; View as evidence, see View.

See also Adminicular evidence; Alidade; Autopathic evidence; Best evidence; Beyond a reasonable doubt; Circumstantial evidence; Competent evidence; Conclusive evidence; Conflicting evidence; Corroborating evidence; Cumulative evidence; Demonstrative evidence; Derivative evidence; Direct evidence; Documentary evidence; Extrajudicial evidence; Extraneous evidence; Extrinsic evidence; Fabricated evidence; Fact; Fair preponderance of evidence; Hearsay; Illegally obtained evidence; Immaterial evidence; Incompetent evidence; Incriminating evidence; Inculpatory; Independent source rule; Indirect evidence; Indispensable evidence; Inference; Laying foundation; Legal evidence; Legally sufficient evidence; Limited admissibility; Material evidence; Mathematical evidence; Moral evidence; Narrative evidence; Notwithstanding discovered evidence; Offer of proof; Opinion evidence; Oral evidence; Original document rule; Parol evidence rule; Partial evidence; Past recollection recorded; Perpetuating testimony; Physical fact rule; Positive evidence; Preliminary evidence; Preponderance; Presumption; Presumptive evidence; Prima facie evidence; Primary evidence; Prior inconsistent statements; Privileged evidence; Probable evidence; Probative evidence; Probative facts; Proof; Proper

There are, generally speaking, two types of evidence from which a jury may properly find the truth as to the facts of a case. One is direct evidence such as the testimony of an eyewitness. The other is indirect or circumstantial evidence—the proof of a chain of circumstances pointing to the existence or non-existence of certain facts. As a general rule, the law makes no distinction between direct and circumstantial evidence, but simply requires that the jury find the facts in accordance with the preponderance of all the evidence in the case, both direct and circumstantial.

Autoptic evidence. Type of evidence presented in court which consists of the thing itself and not the testimony accompanying its presentation. Articles offered in evidence which the judge or jury can see and inspect. Real evidence as contrasted with testimonial evidence; e.g. in contract action, the document purporting to be the contract itself, or the gun in a murder trial.

Character evidence. Evidence of a person’s character or traits is admissible under certain conditions in a trial, though, as a general rule, evidence of character traits are not competent to prove that a person acted in conformity therewith on a particular occasion. Fed.Evid.R. 404.

Curative admissibility. See Curative.

Exculpatory evidence. A defendant in a criminal case is entitled to evidence in possession or control of the government if such evidence tends to indicate his innocence or tends to mitigate his criminality if he demands it and if the failure to disclose it results in a denial of a fair trial. U. S. v. Agurs, 427 U.S. 97, 96 S.Ct. 2392, 49 L.Ed.2d 342. Disclosure of evidence by the government is governed by Fed.R.Crim.P. 16.

Expert evidence. Testimony given in relation to some scientific, technical, or professional matter by experts, i.e., persons qualified to speak authoritative by reason of their special training, skill, or familiarity with the subject. See also Expert witness.

Identification evidence. See Exemplars.

Illegally obtained evidence. See Exclusionary rule; Miranda Rule; Mapp v. Ohio; McNabb-Mallory Rule; Motion to suppress; Poisonous tree doctrine.

Inculpatory evidence. Evidence tending to show a person’s involvement in a crime; incriminating evidence.

Irrelevant evidence. Evidence is irrelevant if it is not so related to the issues to be tried and if it has no logical tendency to prove the issues. See also Relevant evidence, infra.

Material evidence. See Relevant evidence, infra.

Oral evidence. See Testimony.

Original evidence. See Original; Original document rule.

Preponderance of the evidence. A standard of proof (used in many civil suits) which is met when a party’s evidence on a fact indicates that it is “more likely than not” that the fact is as the party alleges it to be. See Fair preponderance of evidence.

Proffered evidence. Evidence, the admissibility or inadmissibility of which is dependent upon the existence or nonexistence of a preliminary fact. Calif. Evid.Code.

Relevant evidence. Evidence having any tendency to make the existence of any fact that is of consequence to the determination of the action more probable or less probable than it would be without the evidence. Fed.Evid.R. 401. Evidence, including evidence relevant to the credibility of a witness or hearsay declarant, having any tendency in reason to prove or disprove any disputed fact that is of consequence to the determination of the action. Calif.Evid.Code. Evidence which bears a logical relationship to the issues in a trial or case.

Tangible evidence. Physical evidence; evidence that can be seen or touched, e.g., documents, weapons. Testimonial evidence is evidence which can be heard, e.g., the statements made by anyone sitting in the witness box. See Demonstrative evidence.

Evidence by inspection. Such evidence as is addressed directly to the senses without intervention of testimony. Tangible; physical evidence. See Demonstrative evidence.

Evidence codes. Statutory provisions governing admissibility of evidence and burden of proof at hearings and trials. See also Evidence rules, infra.

Evidence completed. Exists where both sides have offered testimony and rested, or where plaintiff has rested and defendant has made motion for finding on plaintiff’s case and stands on motion and declines to offer evidence. Merriam v. Sugrue, D.C.Mun.App., 41 A.2d 166, 167.

Evidence, law of. The aggregate of rules and principles regulating the burden of proof, admissibility, relevancy, and weight and sufficiency of evidence in legal proceedings. See Evidence codes; Evidence rules.

Evidence of debt. A term applied to written instruments or securities for the payment of money, importing on their face the existence of a debt. See Bonds.

Evidence of insurability satisfactory to company. Evidence which would satisfy a reasonable person experienced in the life insurance business that insured was in an insurable condition. Bowie v. Bankers Life Co., C.C.A.Colo., 105 F.2d 806, 808.

Evidence of title. A deed or other document establishing the title to property, especially real estate.

Evidence reasonably tending to support verdict. Means evidence that is competent, relevant, and material, and which to rational and impartial mind naturally leads, or involuntarily tends to lead, to conclusion for which there is valid, just, and substantial reason. Kelly v. Oliver Farm Equipment Sales Co., 169 Okl. 269, 36 P.2d 888, 891.
Means some legal evidence tending to prove every material fact in issue as to which the party in whose favor the verdict was rendered had the burden of proof. Nicolai-Neppach Co. v. Smith, 154 Or. 450, 58 P.2d 1016, 1024.

Evidence rules. Rules which govern the admissibility of evidence at hearings and trials, e.g. Federal Rules of Evidence; Uniform Rules of Evidence; Maine Rules of Evidence. In certain states evidence rules are codified (e.g. California Evidence Code) or otherwise set forth in statutes (e.g. state statutes commonly govern admissibility of confidential communications).

Evidence to support findings. Substantial evidence or such relevant evidence as a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion and enough to justify, if the trial were to a jury, a refusal to direct a verdict when the conclusion sought to be drawn from it is one of fact for jury. Jordan v. Craighead, 114 Mont. 337, 136 P.2d 526, 528.

Evident. Clear to the understanding and satisfactory to the judgment; manifest; plain; obvious; conclusive. Noticeable; apparent to observation.

Proof evident. See Proof.

Evidentia /èvadènsh(a)riy/. L. Evidence.

Evidentiary /èvadènsh(a)riy/ "charity/ lyèriy/. Having the quality of evidence; constituting evidence; evidencing. A term introduced by Bentham, and, from its convenience, adopted by other writers.

Evidentiary fact. Those facts which are necessary for determination of the ultimate facts; they are the premises upon which conclusions of ultimate facts are based. Womack v. Industrial Comm., 168 Colo. 364, 451 P.2d 761, 764. Facts which furnish evidence of existence of some other fact.

Evidentiary harpoon. Exists where prosecution through its witnesses successfully places before jury improper evidence, such as previous arrests and convictions of defendant, in situations where such evidence would not be admissible. Kramer v. State, 258 Ind. 257, 317 N.E.2d 203, 207.

Evidently. Means in an evident manner; perceptibly, clearly, obviously, plainly. It is employed to express the idea of full-proof conviction. Tennes v. Tennes, 320 Ill.App. 19, 50 N.E.2d 132, 139.

Evocation. In French law, the withdrawal of a cause from the cognizance of an inferior court, and bringing it before another court or judge. In some respects this process resembles the proceedings upon certiorari.

Evolution statute. Legislative enactment which forbids teaching of evolution in schools and which has been held unconstitutional as violative of the Establishment Clause of First Amend., U.S.Const. Epperson v. Arkansas, 393 U.S. 97, 89 S.Ct. 266, 21 L.Ed.2d 228.

Ewage /yúw(a)riy/. (L. Fr. Ewe, water.) In old English law, toll paid for water passage. The same as aquage or aquarium.

Ewage /yuw(a)riy/. Adultery; spouse-breath; marriage-breath.

Ewry /yúw(s)riy/. An office in the royal household where the table linen, etc., is taken care of.

Ex /éks/. A latin preposition meaning from, out of, by, on, on account of, or according to.

Prefix, denoting removal, cessation or former. Prefixed to the name of an office, relation, status, etc., it denotes that the person spoken of once occupied that office or relation, but does so no longer, or that he is now out of it. Thus, ex-mayor, ex-partner, ex-judge.

A prefix which is equivalent to "without," "reserving," or "excepting." In this use, probably an abbreviation of "except." Thus, ex-interest, ex-coupons, ex-dividend.

Also used as an abbreviation for "exhibit."

Ex abundantia /éks abùndàntay/. Out of abundance; abundantly; superfluously; more than sufficient.

Ex abundantia cautela /éks abùndàntay katúlya/. Lat. Out of abundant caution.

Exaction. The wrongful act of an officer or other person in compelling payment of a fee or reward for his services, under color of his official authority, where no payment is due. See also Extortion.

Exactor. In the civil law, a gatherer or receiver of money; a collector of taxes. In old English law, a collector of the public moneys; a tax gatherer. Thus, exactor regis was the name of the king's tax collector, who took up the taxes and other debts due the treasury.

Ex adverso /éks advérsow/. On the other side. Applied to opposing counsel.

Ex equitate /éks iykwatédyi/. According to equity; in equity.

Ex aquo et bono /éks iykwow et bównow/. A phrase derived from the civil law, meaning, in justice and fairness; according to what is just and good; according to equity and conscience. 3 Bl.Comm. 163.

Ex altera parte /éks óltaró párdiy/. Of the other part.

Examen /ségzéyma/. L. Lat. A trial. Examina computi, the balance of an account.

Examination. An investigation; search; inspection; interrogation.

Abstract of title. An investigation of the abstract of title made by or for a person who intends to purchase real estate, to ascertain the history and present condition of the title to such land, and its status with reference to liens, incumbrances, clouds, etc. to determine if marketable title exists.

Bankruptcy. Questioning of bankrupt during course of bankruptcy proceedings (first meeting of creditors) concerning extent of his debts and assets, conduct of his business, the cause of his bankruptcy, his dealings with his creditors and other persons, the amount, kind, and whereabouts of his property, and all matters which may affect the administration and settlement of his estate. Bankruptcy Act, § 343.
Criminal procedure. An investigation by a magistrate of a person who has been charged with crime and arrested, or of the facts and circumstances which are alleged to have attended the crime, in order to ascertain whether there is sufficient ground to hold him to bail for his trial by the proper court. The preliminary hearing to determine whether person charged with having committed a crime should be held for trial. See Court of Inquiry; Examining court; Examining trial; Preliminary hearing.

Discovery. See Deposition; Discovery; Interrogatories.

Invention. An inquiry made at the patent-office, upon application for a patent, into the novelty and utility of the alleged invention, and as to its interfering with any other patented invention. 35 U.S.C.A. § 36.

Witnesses. The examination of a witness consists of the series of questions put to him by a party to the action, or his counsel, for the purpose of bringing before the court and jury in legal form the knowledge which the witness has of the facts and matters in dispute, or of probing and siftiing his evidence previously given.

See also Cross-examination; Direct examination; Leading question; Preliminary hearing; Re-cross examination; Redirect examination; Reexamination; Separate examination. As regards examination of witnesses prior to trial, see Deposition; Interrogatories. As regards compulsory examination, see Subpoena.

Examined copy. A copy of a record, public book, or register, and which has been compared with the original.

Examiner. Officer or other person authorized to conduct an examination (e.g. bank examiner) or appointed by court to take testimony of witnesses.

An officer appointed by the court to take testimony in causes pending in that court; e.g. a master, auditor, referee.

An officer in the patent-office charged with the duty of examining the patentability of inventions for which patents are asked.

See also Auditor; Inspector; Master; Referee.

Examiners, bar. Persons appointed to test law graduates to ascertain their qualifications to practice law. Such test is called “bar examination.”

Examining board. Generally, a board composed of public or quasi public officials who are responsible for conducting tests and examinations for those applying for licenses.

Examining court. A lower court which conducts preliminary examinations to determine probable cause and set bail before a criminal defendant is bound over to the grand jury. See Court of Inquiry; Preliminary hearing.

Examining trial. A preliminary hearing to determine whether there exists probable cause for binding one over to the grand jury. See also Preliminary hearing.

Annual roll /ëksãenyuwal rów/. In old English practice, a roll into which (in the old way of exhibiting sheriffs’ accounts) the indelible fines and desperate debts were transcribed, and which was annually read to the sheriff upon his accounting, to see what might be gotten.

Ex antecedentibus et consequentibus fit optima interpretation /ëks àntasèdentobóas ët kontóskwéntobóas fit óptómas antèprétdésh(y)ow/. A passage in a statute is best interpreted by reference to the antecedents and what follows it. The best interpretation [of a part of an instrument] is made from the antecedents and the consequents [from the preceding and following parts]. The law will judge of a deed or other instrument, consisting of divers parts or clauses, by looking at the whole; and will give to each part its proper office, so as to ascertain and carry out the intention of the parties. The whole instrument is to be viewed and compared in all its parts, so that every part of it may be made consistent and effectual.

Ex arbitrario judiciis /ëks árbitriárow júdásas/. At, in, or upon the discretion of the judge. 4 Bl.Comm. 394. A term of the civil law.

Ex assensu curiae /ëks ãséns(y)uw kyúriyiy/. By or with the consent of the court.

Ex assensu patris /ëks ãséns(y)uw pétrás/. By or with the consent of the father. A species of dower ad ostium ecclesice, during the life of the father of the husband; the son, by the father’s consent expressly given, endowing his wife with parcel of his father’s lands. Abolished in England by 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 105, § 13.

Ex assensu suo /ëks ãséns(y)uw s(y)úwow/. With his assent. Formal words in judgments for damages by default.

Ex bonis /ëks bównas/. Of the goods or property. A term of the civil law, distinguished from in bonis, as being descriptive of or applicable to property not in actual possession.

Ex cambiator /ákskámbiáyéydar/. An exchanger of lands; a broker. Obsolete.

Ex cambium /ákskámbiyam/. An exchange; a place where merchants meet to transact their business; also an equivalent in recompense; a recompense in lieu of dower ad ostium ecclesice.

Ex cathedra /ëks káeddrá/’káeddrá/. From the chair. Originally applied to the decisions of the popes from their cathedra, or chair. Hence, authoritative; having the weight of authority.

Ex causa /ëks kóza/. L. Lat. By title.

Excellency. Title sometimes given to the chief executive of a state or of the nation; also to members of hierarchy of church.

Except. But for; only for; not including; other than; otherwise than; to leave out of account or consideration. See Exception.

Excepting. As used in a deed, the terms “reserving” and “excepting” are used interchangeably, and their technical meaning will give way to the manifest in-Exceptio /āksēpsh(ī)yow/. An exception, plea, or objection. In civil law, a plea by which the defendant admits the cause of action, but alleges new facts which, provided they be true, totally or partially answer the allegations put forward on the other side; thus distinguished from a mere traverse of the plaintiff's averments. In this use, the term corresponds to the common-law plea in confession and avoidance. Such answers to the "defense" or "plea" of the common law. An allegation and defense of a defendant by which the plaintiff's claim or complaint is defeated, either according to strict law or upon grounds of equity. In a stricter sense, the exclusion of an action that lay in strict law, on grounds of equity (actionis jure stricto competentis ob sequatatam exclusio). A kind of limitation of an action, by which it was shown that the action, though otherwise just, did not lie in the particular case. A species of defense allowed in cases where, though the action as brought by the plaintiff was in itself just, yet it was unjust as against the particular party sued.

Exceptio dilatoria /āksēpsh(ī)yow dilātōriyā/. A dilatory exception; called also "temporalis" (temporary); one which defeated the action for a time (que ad temporis nocument); and created delay (et temporis dialtionem tribuit); such as an agreement not to sue within a certain time, as five years.

Exceptio domini /āksēpsh(ī)yow dəmniyəy/. A claim of ownership set up in an action for the recovery of property not in the possession of the plaintiff.

Exceptio dotis caute non numerate /āksēpsh(ī)yow dōwdaš kōdiy n(y)yōumrəydiyəy/. A defense to an action for the restitution of a dowry that was never paid, though promised, available upon proof of the marriage within a limited time.

Exceptio ejus rei cujus petittor dissolutio nulla est /āksēpsh(ī)yow ĭyjəs rīyay kyūwjas pēdədər dis-l(y)yūwsh(ī)yow nās ĭstəy/. A plea of that matter the dissolution of which is sought [by the action] is null [or of no effect].

Exceptio falsi omnium ultima /āksēpsh(ī)yow fōlsəy əmniyəm ĭltəməy/. A plea denying a fact is the last of all.

Exceptio firmat regulam in casibus non exceptis /āksēpsh(ī)yow fērmət rēgyləm an kēysəbas nōn əskēpshtas/. An exception affirms the rule in cases not excepted.

Exceptio firmat regulam in contrarium /āksēpsh(ī)yow fērmət rēgyləm in kəntrəryəyəy/. An exception proves an opposite rule. See Exceptio probat regulam.

Exceptio in factum /āksēpsh(ī)yow in fēktəməy/. An exception on the fact. An exception or plea founded on the peculiar circumstances of the case.

Exceptio in personam /āksēpsh(ī)yow in parsōwnənəy/. A plea or defense of a personal nature, which may be alleged only by the person himself to whom it is granted by the law.

Exceptio in rem /āksēpsh(ī)yow in rēm/. A plea or defense not of a personal nature, but connected with the legal circumstances on which the suit is founded, and which may therefore be alleged by any party in interest, including the heirs and sureties of the proper or original debtor.

Exceptio jurisjurandi /āksēpsh(ī)yow jūryʃjərænəy/. An exception of oath; an exception or plea that the matter had been sworn to. This kind of exception was allowed where a debtor, at the instance of his creditor (creditor deferente), had sworn that nothing was due the latter, and had notwithstanding been sued by him.

Exceptio metus /āksēpsh(ī)yow mēdəs/. An exception or plea of fear or compulsion. Answering to the modern plea of duress.

Exception. Act of excepting or excluding from a number designated or from a description; that which is excepted or separated from others in a general rule or description; a person, thing, or case specified as distinct or not included; an act of excepting, omitting from mention or leaving out of consideration. Express exclusion of something from operation of contract or deed. An "exception" operates to take something out of thing granted which would otherwise pass or be included. Christman v. Emineth, N.D., 212 N.W.2d 543, 552.

Objection to order or ruling of trial court. A formal objection to the action of the court, during the trial of a cause, in refusing a request or overruling an objection; implying that the party excepting does not acquiesce in the decision of the court, but will seek to procure its reversal, and that he means to save the benefit of his request or objection in some future proceeding. Under rules practice in the federal and most state courts, the need for claiming an exception to evidence or to a ruling to preserve appellate rights has been eliminated in favor of an objection. Fed.R.Civ.P. 46.

See also Challenge; Dilatory exceptions; General objection; Peremptory exceptions; Special exception.

Bill of exceptions. See Bill.

Deed. An exception withdraws from operation of being granted which would otherwise pass to grantee.

Insurance policy. An exclusion of one or more risks. Kirkby v. Federal Life Ins. Co., C.C.A.Mich., 35 F.2d 126, 128. The object of an exception is to exclude that which otherwise would be included, to take special cases out of a general class, or to guard against misinterpretation.

"Reservation" and "proviso" compared. A "reservation" creates some new right in grantor while an "exception" withdraws from operation of contract or deed.

 Exceptio in personam /āksēpsh(ī)yow in parsōwnənəy/. A plea or defense of a personal nature, which may be alleged only by the person himself to whom it is granted by the law.

Exceptio in rem /āksēpsh(ī)yow in rēm/. A plea or defense not of a personal nature, but connected with the legal circumstances on which the suit is founded, and which may therefore be alleged by any party in interest, including the heirs and sureties of the proper or original debtor.

Exceptio jurisjurandi /āksēpsh(ī)yow jūryʃjərænəy/. An exception of oath; an exception or plea that the matter had been sworn to. This kind of exception was allowed where a debtor, at the instance of his creditor (creditor deferente), had sworn that nothing was due the latter, and had notwithstanding been sued by him.

Exceptio metus /āksēpsh(ī)yow mēdəs/. An exception or plea of fear or compulsion. Answering to the modern plea of duress.

Exception. Act of excepting or excluding from a number designated or from a description; that which is excepted or separated from others in a general rule or description; a person, thing, or case specified as distinct or not included; an act of excepting, omitting from mention or leaving out of consideration. Express exclusion of something from operation of contract or deed. An "exception" operates to take something out of thing granted which would otherwise pass or be included. Christman v. Emineth, N.D., 212 N.W.2d 543, 552.

Objection to order or ruling of trial court. A formal objection to the action of the court, during the trial of a cause, in refusing a request or overruling an objection; implying that the party excepting does not acquiesce in the decision of the court, but will seek to procure its reversal, and that he means to save the benefit of his request or objection in some future proceeding. Under rules practice in the federal and most state courts, the need for claiming an exception to evidence or to a ruling to preserve appellate rights has been eliminated in favor of an objection. Deed. An exception withdraws from operation of thing granted which would otherwise pass to grantee.

Insurance policy. An exclusion of one or more risks. Kirkby v. Federal Life Ins. Co., C.C.A.Mich., 35 F.2d 126, 128. The object of an exception is to exclude that which otherwise would be included, to take special cases out of a general class, or to guard against misinterpretation.

"Reservation" and "proviso" compared. A "reservation" creates some new right in grantor while an "exception" withdraws from operation of contract or deed. Clark v. Pauley, 291 Ky. 637, 165 S.W.2d 161, 162. A reservation does not affect the description of the property conveyed, but retains to the grantor some right upon the property, as an easement, whereas an exception operates upon the description and withdraws from the description the excepted property. Moore v. Davis, 273 Ky. 838, 117 S.W.2d 1033, 1035. A "reservation" is always of something taken back out of that which is clearly granted, while an "exception" is of some part of the estate not granted at all. Lewis v. Standard Oil Co. of California, C.C.A.Cal., 88 F.2d 512, 514. An exception exempt[s], absolutely, from the operation of an engagement or an enactment; a proviso, properly speaking, defeats their operation, conditionally. An exception takes out of an engagement or enactment something which would otherwise be part of the subject-matter of it; a proviso avoids them by way of defeasance or excuse. Reservation reserves to grantor some new interest out of thing granted, while exception excludes from operation of grant some existing part of estate. Petty v. Griffith, Mo., 165 S.W.2d 412, 414; U. S. v. 1,010.8 Acres, More or Less, Situated in Sussex County, Del., D.C. Del., 96 F.Supp. 120, 128.

It has also been held however that a "proviso" and an "exception" are substantially the same thing, and that the terms are frequently used interchangeably for synonymous terms. Victory Oil Co. v. Hancock Oil Co., 270 F.2d 604, 611.

Compare also Variance.

Statutory laws. An exception in a statute is a clause designed to reserve or exempt some individuals from the general class of persons or things to which the language of the act in general attaches. The office of an "exception" in a statute is to except something from the operative effect of a statute or to qualify or restrain the generality of the substantive enactment to which it is attached, and it is not necessarily limited to the section of the statute immediately following or preceding. Gatilff Coal Co. v. Cox, C.C.A. Ky., 142 F.2d 876, 882. Two statutes relating to same subject must be read together, and provisions of one having special application to particular subject will be deemed an "exception" to other statute generally in the subject. U. S. v. Murphy, 348 Mo. 949, 156 S.W.2d 683, 685. See Grandfather clause.

Exceptional circumstances. Conditions which are out of the ordinary course of events; unusual or extraordinary circumstances. Lack of original jurisdiction to hear and determine a case constitutes "exceptional circumstances" as a basis for raising question for the first time on habeas corpus. Wesley v. Schneckloth, 55 Wash.2d 90, 346 P.2d 658, 660.

Exceptio non adimpleri contractus /aksépsh(ý)ow nón ədəmpliːvdaɪ kontrəktaːs/. An exception in an action founded on a contract involving mutual duties or obligations, to the effect that the plaintiff is not entitled to sue because he has not performed his own part of the agreement.

Exceptio non solute pecunie /aksépsh(ý)ow nón səla(y)wədli pəkɔɪwʌniːjí/. A plea that the debt in suit was not discharged by payment (as alleged by the adverse party) notwithstanding an acquittance or receipt given by the person to whom the payment is stated to have been made.

Exceptio nulla est versus actionem quae exceptionem perimit /aksépsh(ý)ow nálə est vərəs əkʃəpiˈowənəm kwlə əkʃəpiˈowənəm prərəmit/. There is [can be] no plea against an action which destroys [the matter of] the plea.

Exceptio pacti conventi /aksépsh(ý)ow pæktəj konvəntiː/. An exception of compact; an exception or plea that the plaintiff had agreed not to sue.

Exceptio pecunie non numerate /aksépsh(ý)ow pəkɔɪwʌniːjí nón n(y)uːnəˈreɪtə/. An exception or plea of money not paid; a defense which might be set up by a party who was sued on a promise to repay money which he had never received.

Exceptio peremptoria /aksépsh(ý)ow pərɛmptɔrɪə/. A peremptory exception; called also "perpetua," "perpetual"; one which forever destroyed the subject-matter or ground of the action (que semper rem de qua agitur perimit); such as the exception dii mali, the exceptio metus, etc.

Exceptio plurium concubentium /aksépsh(ý)ow pləˈriːjəm kənˈkjuːbəntjʊm/. An exception or plea of the subject-matter or ground of the action had been determined in a previous action.

Exceptio rel judicata /aksépsh(ý)ow rɛl dʒʌˈdeɪkətə/. An exception or plea of matter adjudged; a plea that the subject-matter of the action had been determined in a previous action.

Exceptio rel vendita /aksépsh(ý)ow vəndɪtə/. An exception or plea of money not paid; a defense which might be set up by a party who was sued on a promise to repay money which he had never received.

Exceptio semper ultimo ponenda est /aksépsh(ý)ow sɛmpər əltəməʊ pənənə dəst/. An exception should always be put last.

Exceptio senatusconsulti macedoniani /aksépsh(ý)ow səˈnɒθəsˌkɔnsəlti mæsəˈdɒniəniː. A defense to an action for the recovery of money loaned, on the ground that the loan was made to a minor or person under the paternal power of another; so named from the decree of the senate which forbade the recovery of such loans.

Exceptio senatusconsulti vellelani /aksépsh(ý)ow səˈnɒθəsˌkɔnsəlti vəˈlɛləniː. A defense to an action on a contract of suretyship, on the ground that the surety was a woman and therefore incapable of becoming bound for another; so named from the decree of the senate forbidding it.
EXCEPTIO TEMPORIS

Exceptio temporis /aksépsh(y)ow témparas/. An exception or plea analogous to that of the statute of limitations in our law; viz., that the time prescribed by law for bringing such actions has expired.

Exceptis excipiendis /akséptas aksípiyéndas/. Lat. With all necessary exceptions.

Exceptor. In old English law, a party who entered an exception or plea.

Except right of way. Recitals "less the right of way" and "except right of way" in granting clause of deed have well-defined accepted certain and unambiguous meaning by which grantor conveys entire interest in servient estate and at same time expressly recognizes and acknowledges dominant estate. Jennings v. Amerada Petroleum Corporation, 179 Okl. 561, 66 P.2d 1069, 1071.

Excerpta /aksértas/ or excerpts /éksértas/. Extracts.

Ex certa scientia /éks sárda sayénsh(y)á/. Of certain or sure knowledge. These words were anciently used in patents, and imported full knowledge of the subject-matter on the part of the king.

Excess. Act or amount which goes beyond that which is usual, proper, or necessary. Degree or amount by which one thing or number exceeds another. See also Excessive.

Excess condemnation. Taking more property under condemnation than is actually needed. See Condemnation.

Excess insurance. That amount of insurance coverage which is beyond the dollar amount of coverage of one carrier but which is required to pay a particular loss as distinguished from “other insurance” which may be used to pay or contribute to the loss. See also Excess policy.

Excess jurisdiction. Such exists where a court, having jurisdiction of persons and subject matter of the case before it, exceeds its power in trial of such case by dealing with matters about which it is without power or authority to act; and error in court’s ruling is not synonymous with ruling in excess of jurisdiction. Robrock v. Robrock, 105 Ohio App. 25, 151 N.E.2d 234, 239.

Excessive. Greater than what is usual or proper. A general term for what goes beyond just measure or amount. Austin St. Ry. Co. v. Oldham, Tex.Civ.App., 169 S.W.2d 235, 237. Tending to or marked by excess, which is the quality or state of exceeding the proper or reasonable limit or measure.

Excessive bail. The 8th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution prohibits excessive bail. Bail in a sum more than will be reasonably sufficient to prevent evasion of the law by flight or concealment; bail which is per se unreasonably great and clearly disproportionate to the offense involved, or shown to be so by the special circumstances of the particular case. Blunt v. U. S., 322 A.2d 579. See also Bail Reform Act, 18 U.S.C.A. § 3146.

Excessive damages. See Damages.

Excessive drunkenness. Drunkenness is excessive where a party is so far deprived of his reason and understanding as to render him incapable of understanding character and consequences of his act. See Driving while Intoxicated.

Excessive fine or penalty. The 8th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution prohibits excessive fines. A state may not constitutionally imprison a person for inability to pay a fine if he would not have been imprisoned on a showing of ability to pay the fine and on payment of the fine. Tate v. Short, 401 U.S. 395, 91 S.Ct. 668, 28 L.Ed.2d 130. Any fine or penalty which seriously impairs the capacity of gaining a business livelihood. See Excessive punishment; Punishment.

Excessive force. That amount of force which is beyond the need and circumstances of the particular event or which is not justified in the light of all the circumstances as in the case of deadly force to protect property as contrasted with protecting life. See Self-defense.

Excessively. To excess.

Excessively intoxicated. Exists where one is so intoxicated as to be so far deprived of his reason and understanding as to render him incapable of knowing the character and consequences of his act. See Driving while intoxicated.

Excessive punishment. Any sentence or fine which does not commensurate with the gravity of the offense or the criminal record of the defendant. Excessive length of a sentence may be cruel and unusual punishment within the meaning of the prohibition in the 8th Amendment, U.S. Constitution. Weems v. U. S., 217 U.S. 348, 30 S.Ct. 544, 54 L.Ed. 793. See Corporal punishment; Excessive fine or penalty; Punishment.

Excessive speed. Automobile’s speed is “excessive” whenever it places car beyond driver’s control.

Excessive verdict. A verdict which is result of passion or prejudice. Babb v. Murray, 26 Cal.App.2d 153, 79 P.2d 159, 160. The test of whether a verdict is “excessive” is whether the amount thereof is such as to shock the conscience of the court. Scheidegger v. Thompson, Mo.App., 174 S.W.2d 216, 222. See Reversed.

Excessivum in jure repribatur. Excessus in re quilibet jure repribatur communil /ékséshasývim júryi rípribébyarı /ekséshas in ríy kwéylébst júrily rípribébyarı kamyúwhay/. Excess in law is reprebended. Excess in anything is reprehended at common law.
Exchange. To barter; to swap. To part with, give or transfer for an equivalent. Olson v. District Court of Salt Lake County, 93 Utah 145, 71 P.2d 529, 534. Acts which exceed defined power of court in any instance. Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal, Third Dist., 17 Cal.2d 280, 109 P.2d 942, 948. A departure by a court from those recognized and established requirements of law, however close apparent adherence to mere form in method of procedure, which has the effect of depriving one of a constitutional right, is an "exchange of jurisdiction." Wuest v. Wuest, 53 Cal.App.2d 339, 127 P.2d 934, 937.

Excess or surplus water. Water which is flowing in stream in addition to what may be termed adjudicated waters. Any water not needed for reasonable beneficial uses of those having prior rights is "excess or surplus water". City of Pasadena v. City of Alhambra, 33 Cal.2d 908, 207 P.2d 17, 28.

Excess policy. One that provides that the insurer is liable only for the excess above and beyond that which may be collected on other insurance. Brownsville Fabrics, Inc. v. Gulf Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 550 S.W.2d 332, 337.

Excess profits tax. Tax levied on profits which are beyond the normal profits of a business and generally imposed in times of national emergency such as war to discourage profiteering. The Internal Revenue Code also imposes a tax on corporations when they accumulate an unreasonable surplus of profits rather than paying such out as dividends. I.R.C. § 531 et seq. See Accumulated earnings tax.

Commerce or trade in goods, currency, or commercial paper.

Any organization, association, or group of persons, incorporated or not, which constitutes, maintains, or provides a market place or facilities for bringing together purchasers and sellers of securities, and includes the market place and facilities maintained by such an exchange. A major stock and bond exchange is the New York Stock Exchange. Similar exchanges exist for the trading of commodities, e.g. New York Commodities Exchange; Minneapolis Grain Exchange; Chicago Board of Trade. Trading in securities is controlled by the Securities and Exchange Commission; trading in commodities by the Commodity Futures Trading Commission.

For Arbitration of exchange; Dry exchange; First of exchange, and Owelty of exchange, see those titles. For "Bill of exchange," see Bill. See also Barter.

Commercial law. A negotiation by which one person transfers to another funds which he has in a certain place, either at a price agreed upon or which is fixed by commercial usage. The process of settling accounts or debts between parties residing at a distance from each other, without the intervention of money, by exchanging orders or drafts, called bills of exchange. The payment of debts in different places by an exchange or transfer of credits. The profit which arises from a maritime loan, when such profit is a percentage on the money lent, considering it in the light of money lent in one place to be returned in another, with a difference in amount in the sum borrowed and that paid, arising from the difference of time and place.

Conveyancing. A mutual grant of equal interests (in lands or tenements), the one in consideration of the other.

Like kind exchange. See Like-kind exchange.

Nontaxable exchange. Exists where property is transferred to a corporation in exchange for stock or securities in corporation and where transferors immediately after exchange are in control of corporation through ownership of 80 per cent of all other classes of stock of corporation. Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Cement Investors, C.C.A.Colo., 122 F.2d 380, 383.

Exchange broker. One who negotiates bills of exchange drawn on foreign countries or on other places in the same country. One who makes and concludes bargains for others in matters of money or merchandise.

Exchange offer. In a bilateral contract, such constitutes part of the consideration for the ultimate contract when such offer is accepted.
Exchange rate. The value of one country's money in terms of the value of another country's currency (e.g. dollar vs. pound). See also Foreign exchange rate; Rate (Rate of exchange).

Exchequer /ɛkˈʃeɪɡər/. That department of the English government which has charge of the collection of the national revenue; the treasury department. It is said to have been so named from the chequered cloth, resembling a chess-board, which anciently covered the table there, and on which, when certain of the king's accounts were made up, the sums were marked and scored with counters. 3 Bl. Comm. 44.

For “Court of Exchequer” and “Court of Exchequer Chamber,” see those titles.

Exchequer bills. Bills of credit issued in England by authority of parliament.

Instruments issued at the exchequer, under the authority, for the most part, of acts of parliament passed for the purpose, and containing an engagement on the part of the government for repayment of the principal sums advanced with interest.

Exchequer division. A division of the English high court of justice, to which the special business of the court of exchequer was specially assigned by section 34 of the judicature act of 1873. Merged in the queen's bench division from and after 1881, by order in council under section 31 of that act.

Excise. A tax imposed on the performance of an act, the engaging in an occupation, or the enjoyment of a privilege. Rapa v. Haines, Ohio Com.Pl., 101 N.E.2d 733, 735. Tax laid on manufacture, sale, or consumption of commodities or upon licenses to pursue certain occupations or upon corporate privileges. In current usage the term has been extended to include various license fees and practically every internal revenue tax except the income tax.

Excise tax. See Excise.

Excited utterance. In evidence, a statement relating to a startling event or condition made while the declarant was under the stress of excitement caused by the event or condition. It is an exception to the hearsay rule. Fed.Evid. Rule 803(2); State v. Emery, 4 Or. App. 527, 480 P.2d 445, 447. See also Fresh complaint rule; Spontaneous declarations.

Exclusa /əskskwɔː/. In old English law, a sluice to carry off water; the payment to the ford for the benefit of such a sluice.

Exclusion. Denial of entry or admittance.

Evidence. The action by the trial judge in which he excludes from consideration by the trier of fact whatever he rules is not admissible as evidence. See also Exclusionary Rule.

Gift tax. The amount which a donor may transfer by gift each year without tax consequences. I.R.C. § 2503(b).
servants, and accident is such as in ordinary course does not happen if those having management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence in absence of explanation that the accident arose from want of care. Mack v. Reading Co., 377 Pa. 135, 103 A.2d 749, 751.

Exclusive dealing arrangements. At common law, generally, agreements to deal exclusively with one seller or buyer were upheld, but under the Sherman Act as well as the Clayton and Federal Trade Commission Acts, such agreements are usually illegal.

Exclusive franchise. See Exclusive agency.

Exclusive jurisdiction. That power which a court or other tribunal exercises over an action or over a person to the exclusion of all other courts. That forum in which an action must be commenced because no other forum has the jurisdiction to hear and determine the action. For example, by statute, action brought under the Securities Exchange Act must be brought in federal district court.

Exclusive and concurrent jurisdiction. The federal courts have original and exclusive jurisdiction over certain actions (e.g. controversies between two or more states) and concurrent jurisdiction with that of state courts in others (e.g. actions between citizens of different states).

Exclusive license. Exclusive right granted by patent holder to licensee to use, manufacture, and sell patented article. Permission to do thing and contract not to give leave to any one else to do same thing. Overman Cushion Tire Co. v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 59 F.2d 998, 999. A license which binds licensor not to enlarge thereafter the scope of other licenses already granted, or increase the number of licenses, is an "exclusive license". Mechanical Ice Tray Corporation v. General Motors Corporation, C.C.A.N.Y., 144 F.2d 720, 725. See also Exclusive agency; License.

Exclusive listing. See Exclusive agency listing.

Exclusively. Apart from all others; only; solely; substantially all or for the greater part. To the exclusion of all others; without admission of others to participation; in a manner to exclude. Standard Oil Co. of Texas v. State, Tex.Civ.App., 142 S.W.2d 519, 521, 522, 523.

Exclusively used. The phrase in provision exempting from taxation properties exclusively used for religious worship, for schools or for purposes purely charitable, has reference to primary and inherent as over against a mere secondary and incidental use. Salvation Army v. Hoehn, Mo., 354 Mo. 107, 188 S.W.2d 826, 830.

Exclusive ownership. Ownership free from any kind of legal or equitable interest in any one else. See Fee simple.

Exclusive possession. Exclusive possession by adverse possessor means that adverse possessor must show an exclusive dominion over the land and an appropriation of it to his own use and benefit. Vernon's Ann.Civ.St. art. 5510. W. T. Carter & Bro. v. Holmes, 131 Tex. 365, 113 S.W.2d 1225, 1226. Possession may be "exclusive" so as to entitle possessor to title by adverse possession, notwithstanding that the land is subject to exercise of easement by private party. Young v. City of Lubbock, Tex.Civ.App., 130 S.W.2d 418, 420.

Exclusive right. An exclusive right is one which only the grantee thereof can exercise, and from which all others are prohibited or shut out.

Exclusive right to sell. An "exclusive right to sell" agreement listing real property for sale prohibits the owner from selling his property either by himself or through another broker without liability while the property is listed with the original broker. Foltz v. Begnoche, 222 Kan. 383, 365 P.2d 592, 595. See Exclusive agency listing.

Exclusive use. As used in law authorizing registration of trade-marks, means exclusive use not only of specific mark but also any other confusingly similar mark or term. McKesson & Robbins v. Charles H. Phillips Chemical Co., C.C.A.Conn., 53 F.2d 1011.

Exclusive use, as essential element of acquisition of easement by prescription, means that exercise of right shall not be dependent upon similar right in others, but use may be shared with owner of servient estate. White v. Wheatland Irr. Dist., Wyo., 413 P.2d 252, 260. Exclusive use, for purpose of establishing a right in easement by adverse user, does not mean use to exclusion of use by all others, but exclusive use under claim of right requires only that right claimed by adverse user be not dependent on right of any one else to use way and may be established by common use thereof with owner of servient land and without any subjective claim of right. Feldman v. Knapp, 196 Or. 453, 250 P.2d 92, 102.

Ex colore /ɛks kəˈlɒrɪ/. By color; under color of; under pretense, show, or protection of. Thus, ex colore officii, under color of office.

Ex comitate /ɛks kɒməˈteɪd/-. Out of comity or courtesy.

Excommencement /ɛkskəˈmɛn̩mɛnt/-. Excommunication (q.v.).

Ex commodato /ɛks koməˈdətəʊ/-. From or out of loan. A term applied in the old law of England to a right of action arising out of a loan (commodatum).

Excommunication. In old English law, a sentence of censure pronounced by one of the spiritual courts for offenses falling under ecclesiastical cognizance. It is described as two-fold: (1) The lesser excommunication, which is an ecclesiastical censure, excluding the party from the sacraments; (2) the greater, which excludes him from the company of all Christians. Formerly, too, an excommunicated man was under various civil disabilities. He could not serve upon juries, or be a witness in any court; neither could he bring an action to recover lands or money due to him. These penalties were abolished in England by St. 53 Geo. III. c. 127.
Excommunicato capiendo /ékskamyūwnakéydow képiyédow/. In ecclesiastical law, a writ issuing out of chancery, founded on a bishop's certificate that the defendant had been excommunicated, and requiring the sheriff to arrest and imprison him, returnable to the king's bench.

Excommunicato delibrando /ékskamyūwnakéydow dalibrándow/. In old English law, a writ to the sheriff for delivery of an excommunicated person out of prison, upon certificate from the ordinary of his conformity to the ecclesiastical jurisdiction.

Excommunicato interdicitur omnis actus legittimus, ita quod agere non potest, nec aliquem convenire, licet ipse ab aliis possit convenire /ékskamyūwnakéydow interdísadár ómnás áktas lajídama, áyda kwód ájári nón pówdast, nēk álkwémen kóñvánáryry, lísád ípiyá ák élylyás pósst kóñvánárayrá/. Every legal act is forbidden an excommunicated person, so that he cannot act, nor sue any person, but he may be sued by others.

Excommunicato recapiendo /ékskamyūwnakéydow ra-kápiýédow/. A writ commanding that persons excommunicated, who for their obstinacy had been committed to prison, but were unlawfully set free before they had given caution to obey the authority of the church, should be sought after, retaken, and imprisoned again.

Ex comparatione scriptorum /ékskomparéshiyóni skriptóram/. By a comparison of writings or handwritings. A term in the law of evidence.

Ex concessis /ék skanséssos/. From the premises granted. According to what has been already allowed.

Ex consulto /ékskansítów/. With consultation or deliberation.

Ex continent/ /ékskontiýénytáy/. Immediately; with¬ out any interval or delay; incontinently. A term of the civil law.

Ex contractu /ékskontrák(t)yúw/. From or out of a contract. In both the civil and the common law, rights and causes of action are divided into two classes,—those arising ex contractu (from a contract), and those arising ex delicto (from a delict or from breech of a promise set forth in contract, the action is “ex contractu”; but where it arises from a breech of duty growing out of contract, it is “ex delicto”. Eads v. Marks, 39 C.2d 807, 249 P.2d

257, 260. See also Ex delicto.

Exculpate /ékskyálpeyt/akskálpeyt/. Term is employed in sense of excuse of justification. State v. Langdon, 46 N.M. 277, 127 P.2d 875, 876.

Exculpator /ékskyálpat(o)riy/. Clearing or tending to clear from alleged fault or guilt; excusing. Baird v.

State, 246 S.W.2d 192, 195.

Exculpator clause. Such clause in favor of a trustee in will implies that trustee has power which he purports to execute, and it exculpates him where this power is exercised in good faith. In re Wacht's Estate, Sur.,

32 N.Y.S.2d 871, 897.

Exculpatory statement. A statement which tends to justify, excuse or clear the defendant from alleged fault or guilt. State v. Cobb, 2 Ariz.App. 71, 406 P.2d 421, 423.

Ex curia /ékskyúriya/. Out of court; away from the court.

Excusable. Admitting of excuse or palliation. As used in the law, this word implies that the act or omission spoken of is on its face unlawful, wrong, or liable to to entail loss or disadvantage on the person chargeable, but that the circumstances attending it were such as to constitute a legal “excuse” for it, that is, a legal reason for withholding or foregoing the punishment, liability, or disadvantage which otherwise would follow. See Justification; Legal excuse.

Excusable assault. One committed by accident or misfortune in doing any lawful act by lawful means, with ordinary caution and without any unlawful intent.

See e.g. Self defense.

Excusable homicide. See Homicide.

Excusable neglect. In practice, and particularly with reference to the setting aside of a judgment taken against a party through his “excusable neglect,” this means a failure to take the proper steps at the proper time, not in consequence of the party's own carelessness, inattention, or willful disregard of the process of the court, but in consequence of some unexpected or unavoidable hindrance or accident, or reliance on the care and vigilance of his counsel or on promises made by the adverse party. As used in rule 4 of F.R.Civ.

P. 6(b)) authorizing court to permit an act to be done after expiration of the time within which under the rules such act was required to be done, where failure to act was the result of “excusable neglect”, quoted phrase is ordinarily understood to be the act of a reasonably prudent person under the same circumstances. Conlan v. Conlan, Ky., 293 S.W.2d 710, 712.

Excusat aut extenuat delictum in capitalibus quad non operatur idem in civilibus /ékskyúwyzd ót skstenyuywat dálkítam in kópétélylabas kwód non ónpéyédyádm in savílabas/.. That may excuse or palliate a wrongful act in capital cases which would not have the same effect in civil injuries.

Excusatio /ékskyúzysh(y)ów/. In the civil law, an excuse or reason which exempts from some duty or obligation.

Excusator /ékskyúwyédør/. In English law, an excu-ser. In old German law, a defendant; he who utterly denies the plaintiff's claim.

Excusator quis quod clameum non opposuerit, ut si toto tempore ittigui fuit ultra mare quacunque occasione

/ékskyúwyédør kwi kwód klémyiýam nó̯n spóz(y)uwérat, át sé tówdow témprariy latítýyay fyúwad útra mársy kweykyálkiy ákézhíyóniýw/. He is excused who does not bring his claim, if, during the whole period in which it ought to have been brought, he has been beyond sea for any reason.

Excuse. A reason alleged for doing or not doing a thing. A matter alleged as a reason for relief or exemption from some duty or obligation. That which is offered as a reason for being excused, or a plea offered in extenuation of a fault or irregular deportment. It is that plea or statement made by the accused which arises out of the state of facts constituting and relied on as the cause. See also Defense.

Excess. To seize and detain by law.

Excessio /ɛks'ɛksioʊ/In civil law, a diligent prosecution of a remedy against a debtor. The exhausting of a remedy against a principal debtor before resorting to his sureties. Translated "discussion" (q.v.).

Ex debito justitiae /ɛks ˈdɛbɪtoʊ ˈdʒəstɪtiə/From or as a debt of justice; in accordance with the requirement of justice; of right; as a matter of right. The opposite of ex gratia (q.v.). 3 Bl.Comm. 48, 67.

Ex defectu sanguinis /ɛks ˈdɛfɪktju ˈsæŋgwɪnɪs/From failure of blood; for want of issue.

Ex deleto /ɛks ˈdɛlɛktuʊ/From a delict, tort, fault, crime, or malfeasance. In both the civil and the common law, obligations and causes of action are divided into two classes—those arising ex contractu (out of a contract), and those ex delicto. The latter are such as grow out of or are founded upon a wound or tort, e.g., trespass, trover, replevin. See also Ex contractu.

Where cause of action arises from breach of a promise set forth in contract, the action is “ex contractu”, but where it arises from a breach of duty growing out of contract, it is “ex delicto”. Eads v. Marks, 39 Cal.2d 807, 249 P.2d 257, 260.

Ex deleto non ex supplicio emergit infamia /ɛks ˈdɛlɛktuʊ nɒn ɛks ˈsʌplɪʃɪʊ ɪnˈfæmiə/Infamy arises from the crime, not from the punishment.

Ex deleto trusts. Trusts which are created for illegal purposes, the most common of which are trusts created to prevent creditors of the settlor from collecting their claims out of the property.

Ex demissione /ɛks ˈdɛmɪʃənəʊ/Exemption from punishment; ex delicto trusts.

Ex directo /ɛks ˈdɛrɪktuʊ/Directly; immediately.

Ex diuturnitate temporis, omnis praesumuntur solemniter esse acta /ɛks ˈdɪtʊrnmɪte ˈtɛmpɔrɪs əmˈnɪs prɛzəˈsʌmʊntʊr ˈsɔləmnɪtər ɛsɛ ˈæktə/From length of time [after lapse of time] all things are presumed to have been done in due form.

Ex dividendi. A synonym for “without dividend.” The buyer of a stock selling ex-dividend does not receive the recently declared dividend. Said of a stock at the time when the declared dividend becomes the property of the person who owned the stock on the record date. The payment date follows the ex-dividend date. When stock is sold ex-dividend, the seller, not the buyer, has the right to the next dividend which has been declared but not paid.

Ex dolo malo /ɛks ˈdɔlʊ ˈmælʊʊ/Out of fraud; out of deceitful or tortious conduct. A phrase applied to obligations and causes of action vitiated by fraud or deceit.

Ex dolo malo non oritur actio /ɛks ˈdɔlʊ ˈmælʊʊ nɒn ˈɔrɪtʊr ˈæktɪʊ/Out of fraud no action arises; fraud never gives a right of action. No court will lend its aid to a man who founds his cause of action upon an immoral or illegal act.

Ex donationibus autem foedae militaria vel magnum serjeantium non continentibus oritur nobis quodnam nominem generale, quod est socagium /ɛks ˈdɑknɪʃiˈuʊnʊz əʊdəm ˈʃjuːdəs ˈmæɡnəm səˈkæʒjʊm ˌəʊdəm ˈnɒn ˈkɒntɪnəntɪbəs ˈɔrɪdər ˈnɒbəs ˈkwəʊdəm ˈnɒwman ˈdʒɛnərəli, ˈkwəd ˈɛst ˈsəkəˈʃjʊ(ə)l/From grants not containing military fees or grand serjeantry, a kind of general name is used by us, which is "socage."

Exeat /ɛksɪˈeɪt/ A permission which a bishop grants to a priest to go out of his diocese; also leave to go out generally. For Ne Exeat, see that title.

Execute. To complete; to make; to sign; to perform; to do; to follow out; to carry out according to its terms; to fulfill the command or purpose of. To perform all necessary formalities, as to make and sign a contract, or sign and deliver a note. See also Execution.

Executed. Completed; carried into full effect; already done or performed; signed; taking effect immediately; now in existence or in possession; conveying an immediate right or possession. Act or course of conduct carried to completion. Term imports idea that nothing remains to be done. The opposite of executory. See also Execution.

Executed consideration. A consideration which is wholly performed. An act done or value given before the making of the agreement.

Executed contract. Contract which has been performed. If performed in part, it is partially executed (executory); if entirely performed, it is fully or wholly executed. See also Contract; Executed oral agreement; Executory contract.

Executed estate. Estate in property which is vested. See Estate.

Executed fine. The fine sur cognizance de droit, come cee que il ad de son done; or a fine upon acknowledgment of the right of the cognizee, as that which he has of the gift of the cognizer. Abolished in England by 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 74.

Executed gift. See Gift.

Executed note. Promissory note which has been signed and delivered.

Executed oral agreement. An oral agreement is not "executed" unless it has been fully performed by both parties. Walther v. Occidental Life Ins. Co., 40 Cal. App.2d 160, 104 P.2d 551, 554.

Executed remainder. See Remainder.

Executed sale. See Sale.

Executed trust. See Trust.

Executed use. See Use.
EXECUTIO

Executio /ëksakyųwšiyowy/. Lat. The doing or following up of a thing: the doing a thing completely or thoroughly; management or administration.

In old practice, execution; the final process in an action.

Executio bonorum /ëksakyųwšiyowy banoróm/. In old English law, management or administration of goods. Ad ecclesiam et ad amicos pertinedit executio bonorum, the execution of the goods shall belong to the church and to the friends of the deceased.

Executio est executio juris secundum judicium /ëksakyųwšiyowy juyrás skândam juwdfshiyoyam/. Execution is the execution of the law according to the judgment.

Executio est finis et fructus legis /ëksakyųwšiyowy juyrás fãnýas ét fráktras liýjas/. Execution is the end and fruit of the law.

Executio juris non habet Injuriam /ëksakyųwšiyowy juyrás nôn hýbad anjúriyam/. The execution of law does no injury.

Execution. Carrying out some act or course of conduct to its completion. Northwest Steel Rolling Mills v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.Wash., 110 F.2d 286, 290. Completion of an act. Putting into force. The completion, fulfillment, or perfecting of anything, or carrying it into operation and effect.

Execution of contract includes performance of all acts necessary to render it complete as an instrument and imports idea that nothing remains to be done to make complete and effective contract. Travelers Ins. Co. v. Chicago Bridge & Iron Co., Tex.Civ.App., 442 S.W.2d 888, 895.

Execution upon a money judgment is the legal process of enforcing the judgment, usually by seizing and selling property of the debtor. See Writ of execution, infra.

Execution is a process in action to carry into effect the directions in a decree or judgment. Foust v. Foust, 47 Cal.2d 121, 302 P.2d 11, 13.

Body execution. An order of court which commands the officer to take the body of the defendant or debtor; generally to bring him before court to pay debt. A capias.

Writ of execution. Formal process issued by court generally evidencing the debt of the defendant to the plaintiff and commanding the officer to take the property of the defendant in satisfaction of the debt. Unless the court directs otherwise, the process to enforce a money judgment shall be a writ of execution. Fed.R. Civ. P. 69. A writ of execution is a written demand to bailiff, directing him to execute the judgment of the court. Miami Motor Sales v. Singleton, Ohio Mun., 94 N.E.2d 819, 822. Process issuing from a court in a civil action authorizing the sheriff or other competent officer to carry out the court's decision in favor of the prevailing party.

For "Attachment execution," see Attachment. For "Testatum execution", see Testatum. See also Alias execution; Dormant execution; General execution; Judgment execution; Junior execution; Special execution.

Execution creditor. See Creditor.

Executione faciendá in withernamlum /ëksakyųwšiyowy wíðørémyym/. A writ that lay for taking cattle of one who has conveyed cattle out of the county, so that the sheriff cannot replevy them.

Executione judiciell /ëksakyųwšiyowyjuydšíhiyay/. A writ directed to the judge of an inferior court to do execution upon a judgment therein, or to return some reasonable cause wherefore he delays the execution.

Executioner. Person who executes (i.e. carries out) capital punishment.

Execution lien. An execution lien may be created by service of execution, levy upon real estate, and filing of a certificate of levy in the proper office of county in which real estate is located. Reconstruction Finance Corporation v. Maley, C.C.A.Ill., 125 F.2d 131, 135.

Execution of instrument. Completion of instrument, including signing and delivery. Execution includes performance of all acts necessary to render instrument complete and of every act required to give instrument validity or to carry it into effect. Northwest Steel Rolling Mills v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.Wash., 110 F.2d 286, 290. "Execution" of written contract includes signing, unconditional delivery by promisor, and acceptance by promisee. Coen v. American Surety Co. of New York, C.C.A.Mo., 120 F.2d 593, 597.

Execution of judgment or decree. See Execution.

Execution parée /ëksakyųwšiyowýpáré/. In French law, a right founded on an act passed before a notary, by which the creditor may immediately, without citation or summons, seize and cause to be sold the property of his debtor, out of the proceeds of which to receive his payment. It imports a confession of judgment, and is not unlike a warrant of attorney.

Execution sale. A sale by a sheriff or other ministerial officer under the authority of a writ of execution which he has levied on property of the debtor. See also Judicial sale.

Executive. As distinguished from the legislative and judicial departments (i.e. branches) of government, the executive department is that which is charged with the detail of carrying the laws into effect and securing their due observance. See also Executive department; Executive powers.

The word "executive" is also used as an impersonal designation of the chief executive officer of a state or nation. Term also refers to upper level management of business. See also Executive employees.

Executive administration, or ministry. A political term in England, applicable to the higher and responsible class of public officials by whom the chief departments of the government of, the kingdom are administered.

Executive agency. A department of the executive branch of government such as the Army and Air Force Exchange Service whose activities are subject to statutes and whose contracts are subject to judicial review. W. B. Fishburn Cleaners Inc. v. Army &
Executive order. An order or regulation issued by the President or some administrative authority under his direction for the purpose of interpreting, implementing, or giving administrative effect to a provision of the Constitution or of some law or treaty. To have the effect of law, such orders must be published in the Federal Register.

Executive order Indian reservation. Reservation created by order of President withdrawing land within its boundaries from settlement or making other disposition of it under public land laws of United States. Santa Rita Oil & Gas Co. v. Board of Equalization, 101 Mont. 268, 54 F.2d 117, 122.

Executive pardon. An executive act of grace exempting an individual from punishment for a crime he has committed. Such presidential power is authorized by Art. II, § 2, U.S.Const. Similar powers are afforded to governors by state constitutions. See also Executive clemency; Pardon.

Executive powers. Power to execute laws. The enumerated powers of the President are provided for in Article II of the U.S.Const. Executive powers of governors are provided for in state constitutions. The executive powers vested in governors by state constitutions include the power to execute the laws, that is, to carry them into effect, as distinguished from the power to make the laws and the power to judge them. Tucker v. State, 218 Ind. 614, 35 N.E.2d 270, 291. See also Executive order.

Executive privilege. Executive privilege, based on constitutional doctrine of separation of powers, exempts the executive from disclosure requirements applicable to the ordinary citizen or organization where such exemption is necessary to the discharge of highly important executive responsibilities involved in maintaining governmental operations, and extends not only to military and diplomatic secrets but also to documents integral to an appropriate exercise of the executive’s domestic decisional and policy making functions, that is, those documents reflecting the frank expression necessary in intra-governmental advisory and deliberative communications. Black v. Sheraton Corp. of America, D.C.D.C., 371 F.Supp. 97, 100. However, need for confidentiality of high level communications cannot, without more, sustain an absolute unqualified presidential privilege of immunity from judicial process under all circumstances. U. S. v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 94 S.Ct. 3090, 3106, 3107, 41 L.Ed.2d 1039. See also Privilege.

Executive session. Executive session of a board or governmental body is a session closed to the public.

Executive /'ezeklədər/. A person appointed by a testator to carry out the directions and requests in his will, and to dispose of the property according to his testamentary provisions after his decease. A person who either expressly or by implication is appointed by a testator to carry out testator’s directions concerning the dispositions he makes under his will. In re Silverman’s Estate, 6 Ill.App.3d 225, 285 N.E.2d 548, 550.

For Co-executor; General executor; Instituted executor; Joint executors; Limited executor; Special executor and Substituted executor, see those titles.

Civil Law

A ministerial officer who executed or carried into effect the judgment or sentence in a cause.
EXECUTOR

Ecclesiastical Law

Executor à lege constitutus. An executor appointed by law; the ordinary of the diocese.

Executor ab episco constitutus, or executor dativus. An executor appointed by the bishop; an administrator to an intestate.

Executor à testatore constitutus. An executor appointed by a testator. Otherwise termed "executor testamentarius;" a testamentary executor.

An executor to the tenor. One who, though not directly constituted executor by the will, is therein charged with duties in relation to the estate which can only be performed by the executor.

Executor by substitution. A successor executor appointed to succeed to administration of estate following resignation of first executor who had partially administered upon such estate. In re Stahl's Estate, 113 Ind.App. 29, 44 N.E.2d 529, 532.

Executor creditor. See Creditor.

Executor dative. See Dative.

Executor de son tort. See De son tort.

Executor lucratus /eksskyüwder l(y)uwkréydas/. An executor who has assets of his testator who in his life-time made himself liable by a wrongful interference with the property of another.

Executorship. Office held by an executor.

Executory /eksekjyatoriy/. That which is yet to be executed or performed; that which remains to be carried into operation or effect; incomplete; depending upon a future performance or event. The opposite of executed.

As to executory Bequests; Contracts; Devise; Estates; Remainder; Trust, and Use, see those titles.

Executory accord. An agreement for the future discharge of an existing claim by a substituted performance; it is the promised performance that is to discharge the existing claim, not the promise to render performance. Elliot v. Whitney, 215 Kan. 256, 524 P.2d 699, 703. Two principal categories of compromise agreements are "executory accord", providing for acceptance in future of stated performance in satisfaction of claim, and "substituted contract" which itself is accepted as substitution for and extinguishment of existing claim. Johnson v. Utile, 86 Nev. 593, 472 P.2d 335, 337.

Executory consideration. A consideration which is to be performed after the contract for which it is a consideration is made.

Executory devise. Devise of a future estate, and, if the executory devisee dies before the event happens, the estate goes to the heir at the time of the event, and not to the heir at the time of the death of the devisee. The happening of the contingency determines who is to take the estate, and until that time no one has an interest to transmit. By the earlier common law it was an established rule that a devisee of lands, without words of limitation, conferred upon the devisee an estate for life only. An exception was soon recognized in the case of a will, so that an estate in fee could be given without the use of the technical words required in a conveyance or deed. The gift in such case was known as an "executory devise."

Executory interests. A general term, comprising all future estates and interests in land or personality, other than reversions and remainders.

A contingent future interest which: (a) cannot qualify as a remainder; (b) is always in favor of a conveyee, and; (c) takes effect when the contingency happens as a springing use or shifting use under the Statute of Uses (1535), or Statute of Wills (1540).

Executory limitation. A limitation of a future interest by deed or will; if by will, it is also called an "executory devise."

Executory process. A civil law process which can be resorted to in the following cases, namely: (1) When the right of the creditor arises from an act importing confession of judgment, and which contains a privilege or mortgage in his favor; (2) when the creditor demands the execution of a judgment which has been rendered by a tribunal different from that within whose jurisdiction the execution is sought. An accelerated procedure, summary in nature, by which holder of a mortgage or privilege evidenced by an authentic act importing a confession of judgment seeks to effect an ex parte seizure and sale of the subject property, without previous citation, contradictory hearing or judgment. Cameron Brown South, Inc. v. East Glen Oaks, Inc., La.App., 341 So.2d 450, 457.

Executory sale. See Sale.

Executory trust. Under this type of trust a further conveyance of settlement is to be made by the trustee. The test as to whether a trust is an "executory trust" is to determine whether settlor has acted as his own conveyancer and defines precisely the settlement to be made, and, if he has, the word "heirs" is one of limitation, and if he has not, the trust is executory, and the word "heirs" is a word of purchase, and the persons coming within such definition have an interest in the property. Sutliff v. Aydelott, 373 Ill. 633, 27 N.E.2d 529, 532.

Executory unilateral accord. An offer to enter a contract.

Executory warranties. Such arise where insured undertakes to perform some executory stipulation, as that certain acts will be done, or that certain facts will continue to exist.

Executress /agzekyatras/. A female executor.

Executrix /agzekyatris/. Female executor. A woman who has been appointed by will to execute such will or testament.
Exemptions. Freedom from a general duty or service; to release, discharge, waive, relieve from liability. To relieve certain classes of property from liability to sale on execution, or from taxation, or from bankruptcy or attachment.

To relieve certain classes of property from liability to sale on execution, or from taxation, or from bankruptcy or attachment.

See also Exemption; Exemption laws.

Exemption. Freedom from a general duty or service; immunity from a general burden, tax, or charge. Immunity from certain legal obligations, as jury duty, military service, or the payment of taxes.

A privilege allowed by law to a judgment debtor, by which he may hold property to a certain amount or certain classes of property, free from all liability to levy and sale on execution or attachment.

Property exempt in bankruptcy proceedings is provided for under Bankruptcy Act § 522.

Term used for various amounts subtracted from gross income to determine taxable income; e.g. personal tax exemptions for self and dependents. I.R.C. § 151 et seq.

See also Immunity.

Exempt. To release, discharge, waive, relieve from liability. To relieve, excuse, or set free from a duty imposed upon the general class to which the individual exempted belongs; as to exempt from military service.

To relieve certain classes of property from liability to sale on execution, or from taxation, or from bankruptcy or attachment.

See also Exemption; Exemption laws.

Exemplified copy. Copy of document which has been authenticated. See Certified copy.

Exemplification. An official transcript of a document from public records, made in form to be used as evidence, and authenticated or certified as a true copy. See Certified copy.

Exemplificatione /agzemplafakéyshyówniy/. A writ granted for the exemplification or transcript of an original record.

Exempt transactions. Those dealings in securities which fall outside the scope of Securities Act of 1933 and Securities Exchange Act.

Exempts. Persons who are not bound by law, but excused from the performance of duties imposed upon others.

Exempt transactions. Those dealings in securities which fall outside the scope of Securities Act of 1933 and Securities Exchange Act.

Exemned /aksSniyam/. In old English law, a gift; a new year’s gift.

In French practice, this term is subscribed by judicial authority upon a transcript of a judgment from a foreign country, or from another part of France, and authorizes the execution of the judgment within the jurisdiction where it is so indorsed.

Exercise. To make use of. Thus, to exercise a right or power is to do something which it enables the holder to do; e.g. exercising option to purchase stock.

To put in action or practice, to carry on something, to transact. See Performance.

Exercise of judgment. Exercise of sound discretion, that is, discretion exercised, not arbitrarily or willfully, but with regard to what is right and equitable. United States v. Beckman, C.C.A.Pa., 104 F.2d 260, 262.

Exercitallis /agzársátøylas/. A soldier; a vassal.

Exercitor navis /agzársátoriav navis/. In the civil law, an action which lay against the employer of a vessel (exercitor navis) for the contracts made by the master.

Exercitorial power /agzársátøriyal páwar/. The trust given to a ship-master.

Exercitor navis /agzársátoriav navis/. In the civil law, an action which lay against the employer of a vessel (exercitor navis) for the contracts made by the master.

Exercitalis /agzársátøylas/. A soldier; a vassal.

Exercitual /égzarschuwal/. In Old English law, a heriot paid only in arms, horses, or military accouterments.

Exercitus /agzársádas/. In old European law, an army; an armed force. The term was absolutely indefinite as to number. It was applied, on various occasions, to a gathering of forty-two armed men, of thirty-five, or even of four.

Ex facie /éks féy(h)jey/. From the face; apparently; evidently. A term applied to what appears on the face of a writing.

Ex facto /éks favktow/. From or in consequence of a fact or action; actually. Usually applied to an unlawful or tortious act as the foundation of a title, etc. Sometimes used as equivalent to “de facto.”

Ex facto jus oritur /éks favktow jás ó′radar/. The law arises out of the fact. A rule of law continues in abstraction and theory, until an act is done on which it can attach and assume as it were a body and shape.

Exfestucare /éksfes′takery/. In old English law, to break the peace; to commit open violence.

Ex frequenti delito augetur poena /éks fikgrn′tji delikto au′gerter poyna/,. Punishment increases with increasing crime.

Ex gratia /éks gr6ysh(iy)a/. Out of grace; as a matter of right. An item of physical/tangible evidence which is to be or has been offered to the court for inspection. Exhibits may be included as a part of the appendix to appellate briefs. See Fed.R.App.P. 30(e).

Exhibit /éks′hywshon/ o′gzi°/. Disinherited; the removal from the earth of anything previously buried therein, particularly a human corpse.

Ex hypothesi /éks háp′pōsəsə/,. By the hypothesis; upon the supposition; upon the theory or facts assumed.

Exidos /′hywshon/,. See Ejidos.

Exigence /égzjən(t)s/ or exigency /égzjən′səy/′. Demand, want, imperativeness. Something arising suddenly out of the current of events; any event or occasional combination of circumstances, calling for immediate action or remedy; a pressing necessity; a sudden and unexpected happening or an unforeseen occurrence or condition. Los Angeles County v. Payne, 8 Cal.2d 563, 66 P.2d 658, 663. State of being urgent or exigent; pressing need or demand; also, case requiring immediate attention, assistance, or remedy; critical period or condition, pressing necessity. State v. Rubion, Tex.Civ.App., 292 S.W.2d 650, 657. See Exigent circumstances, infra.

Exigency of a bond. That which the bond demands or exacts, i.e., the act, performance, or event upon which it is conditioned.
Exigency of a writ. The command or imperativeness of a writ; the directing part of a writ; the act or performance which it commands.

Exigendary \( /\text{eksajendariy}/ \). In English law, an officer who makes out exigents. See Exigenter.

Exigent, \( /\text{eksajent}/ \) /exigi facias /\( /\text{eksajay feys(h)iya}/ \). L. Lat. In English practice, a judicial writ made use of in the process of outlawry, commanding the sheriff to demand the defendant (or cause him to be demanded, \( /\text{exigi faciat}/ \)), from county court to county court, until he be outlawed; or, if he appear, then to take and have him before the court on a day certain in term, to answer to the plaintiff’s action. 3 Bl.Comm. 283, 284. Outlawry has long been obsolete. See Allocatur exigent.

Exigent circumstances. The "exigent circumstances" test permits police to make warrantless entry to effect an arrest when exigencies of situation make that course imperative. Vance v. State of N. C., C.A.N.C., 432 F.2d 984, 990. Exception to rule requiring search warrant is presence of exigent or emergency-like circumstances as for example presence of weapons in a motor vehicle stopped on highway and such exigent circumstances permit warrantless search and seizure. Chambers v. Maroney, 399 U.S. 42, 90 S.Ct. 1975, 26 L.Ed.2d 419.

Exigenter \( /\text{eksajentar}/ \). An officer of the English court of common pleas, whose duty it was to make out the exigents and proclamations in the process of outlawry. Abolished by St. 7 Wm. IV, and 1 Vict., c. 30.

Exigent list. A phrase used to indicate a list of cases set down for hearing upon various incidental and ancillary motions and rules.

Exigent search. See Exigent circumstances.

Exigible \( /\text{eksajbal}/ \). Demandable; requirable.

Exigible debt \( /\text{eksajbal d£t}/ \). A liquidated and exigible claim.

Exigili facias \( /\text{eksjay feyshiyas}/ \). That you cause to be demanded. The emphatic words of the Latin form of the writ of exigent. They are sometimes used as the name of that writ.

Exile \( /\text{egzayl}/ \). Banishment; the person banished.

Exilium \( /\text{agtfliyam}/ \). Lat. In old English law: (1) Exile; banishment from one’s country. (2) Driving away; despoiling. The name of a species of waste, which consisted in driving away tenants or vassals from the estate; as by demolishing buildings, and so compelling the tenants to leave, or by enfranchising the bond-servants, and unlawfully turning them out of their tenements.

Exilium est patriae privatlo, natialis soli mutatio, legum nativarum amissio /\( /\text{agtfliyam est patriyiy prvevesh(i)yow}, \) natelyas sowlay myuwtesh(i)yow, llygam nyevdavaram amishy(i)yow/. Exile is a privation of country, a change of native soil, a loss of native laws.

Ex industria \( /\text{eks indiayriya}/ \). With contrivance or deliberation; designedly; on purpose.

Existing debt. To have an “existing debt” it is sufficient if there is an absolute debt owing though the period for its payment may not yet have arrived. A tax may be a “debt” within meaning of agreement to assume “existing debts”. Shepard v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.III., 101 F.2d 595, 598. Within provision of Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act which defines “insolvency”, an “existing debt” is an existing legal liability, whether matured or unmatured, liquidated or unliquidated, absolute, fixed or contingent. Baker v. Geist, 457 Pa. 73, 321 A.2d 634, 636.

Existing disease. A chronic or definite affliction such as would be embraced in the common understanding and meaning of the term “diseased” or “sick.” Browning v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States, 94 Utah 532, 72 P.2d 1060, 1074.

Existing person. A child conceived, but not born, is to be deemed an “existing person” so far as may be necessary for its interests in the event of its subsequent birth.

Exit \( /\text{egzat}/ \). Lat. It goes forth. This word is used in docket entries as a brief mention of the issue of the writ. Thus, “exit of a writ” is the fact of its issuance. The “exit of a writ” has been issued in the particular case.

Exitus \( /\text{ekslagaiz}/ \). Children; offspring. The rents, isles, and profits of lands and tenements. An export duty. The conclusion of the pleadings.

Ex justa causa \( /\text{eks jasta koza}/ \). From a just or lawful cause; by a just or legal title.

Exilega/ditas \( /\text{ekslagyleides}/ \). In old English law, outlawry.

Exilega/ditius \( /\text{ekslagyleidas}/ \). He who is prosecuted as such. Called a state or condition of unimpeached dignity or character \( /\text{dignitatis inlecssst status};/ \) the highest standing of a Roman citizen. Also the decision or award of an arbiter.

Ex lege \( /\text{eks leyji}/ \). By the law; by force of law; as a matter of law.
EX Legibus

Ex legibus /éks liyjabas/. According to the laws. A phrase of the civil law, which means according to the intent or spirit of the law, as well as according to the words or letter.

Ex lex /ékslièks/. In old English law, an outlaw; qui est extra legem, one who is out of the law’s protection.

To relieve from responsibility, duty, or obligation. To clear from guilt; i.e. dropping criminal charges against accused.

Ex licentia regis /éks lesëns(i)yòs riýjas/. By the king’s license. 1 Bl.Comm. 168, note.

Ex locato /éks lakéydòw/. From or out of lease or letting. A term of the civil law, applied to actions or rights of action arising out of the contract of locatum. Adopted at an early period in the law of England.

Ex maleficio /éks màlfish(i)yòw/. Defined variously as from or growing out of wrongdoing; tortious; growing out of, or founded on, misdoing or tort; on account of misconduct; by virtue of or out of an illegal act. Synonymous with “malefeasance.” Lucas v. Central Missouri Trust Co., 350 Mo. 593, 166 S.W.2d 1053, 1056. This term is frequently used in the civil law as the synonym of “ex delicto” (q.v.), and is thus contrasted with “ex contractu.” In this sense it is of more rare occurrence in the common law.

Ex maleficio non oritur contractus /éks màlfish(i)yòw nòn órdar kanîrsàksà/. A contract cannot arise out of an act radically vicious and illegal.

Ex mals moribus bone leges sunt /éks màlás màrôbès bównì liyjjìz nèdìy sànt/. Good laws arise from evil morals, i.e., are necessitated by the evil behavior of men.

Ex malitia /éks målish(i)yà/. From malice; maliciously.

In the law of libel and slander, this term imports a publication that is false and without legal excuse.

Ex mero motu /éks mìrów môwduw/. Of his own mere motion; of his own accord; voluntarily and without prompting or request. In England, royal letters patent which are granted at the crown’s own instance, and without request made, are said to be granted ex mero motu. When a court interferes, of its own motion, to object to an irregularity, or to do something which the parties are not strictly entitled to, but which will prevent injustice, it is said to act ex mero motu, or ex proprio motu, or sua sponte, all these terms being here equivalent.

Ex mora /éks móra/. A term of the civil law, meaning from or in consequence of delay. Interest is allowed upon ex mora; that is, where there has been delay in repaying a sum borrowed.

Ex more /éks móriy/. According to custom.

Ex multitudine signorum, colligitur identitas vera /éks màlitat(y)ùwdaniy signòrəm, kalìjjàr ñënttàstàs vírə/. From a great number of signs or marks, true identity is gathered or made up. A thing described by a great number of marks is easily identified, though, as to some, the description may not be strictly correct.

Ex mutuo /éks myùwchùwow/. From or out of loan. In the old law of England, a debt was said to arise ex mutuo when one lent another anything which consisted in number, weight, or measure.

Ex necessitate /éks nàsesàtìydi/. Of necessity.

Ex necessitate legis /éks nàsesàtìydi liyjàs/. From or by necessity of law. 4 Bl.Comm. 394.

Ex necessitate rel /éks nàsesàtìydi rìyày/. From the necessity or urgency of the thing or case.

Ex nihil nihil fit /éks này(h)ìslow này(h)àl fit/. From nothing nothing comes.

Ex nudo pacto non oritur [nascitur] actio /éks n(y)ùdòw pàktòw nòn órdar èksìshìyow *nàsë(h)òdar/. Out of a nude or naked pact [that is, a bare parol agreement without consideration] no action arises. Out of a promise neither attended with particular solemnity (such as belongs to a specialty) nor with any consideration no legal liability can arise. A parol agreement, without a valid consideration, cannot be the foundation of an action. A leading maxim both of the civil and common law.

Ex officio /éks afish(i)yòw/. From office; by virtue of the office; without any other warrant or appointment than that resulting from the holding of a particular office. Powers may be exercised by an officer which are not specifically conferred upon him, but are necessarily implied in his office; these are ex officio. Thus, a judge has ex officio the powers of a conservator of the peace.

Ex officio information /éks afish(i)yòw infàrmìshìyàn/. In English law, a criminal information filed by the attorney general ex officio on behalf of the crown, in the court of king’s bench, for offenses more immediately affecting the government, and to be distinguished from informations in which the crown is the nominal prosecutor.

Ex officio justices. Judges who serve in a particular capacity by reason of their office as a judge who serves on a commission or board because the law requires a particular judge to serve thereon and not because he is selected for such post. May also refer to one who exercises judicial functions by reason of his office.

Ex officio services /éks afish(i)yòw sàrvàssàs/. Services which the law annexes to a particular office and requires the incumbent to perform.

Exonere /àgsonàræyt/. To exculpate.

Exoneration /àgsonàræshìyàn/. The removal of a burden, charge, responsibility, or duty. Right to be reimbursed by reason of having paid that which another should be compelled to pay while “indemnity” generally is based upon contract, express or implied, and means compensation for loss already sustained. Upstagraft v. U. S., C.A.Va., 315 F.2d 200, 203.

Exoneratione secta /àgsonàræshìyówënlì séktìyà/. A writ that formerly lay for the crown’s ward, to be free...

Expedition. A sending forth or setting forth for the execution of some object of consequence. Speed or promptness in performance. An important journey or excursion for a specific purpose; as, a military or exploring expedition; also, the body of persons making such an excursion. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States v. Dyess, 194 Ark. 1023, 109 S.W.2d 1263, 1265. A journey, march, or voyage generally of several or many persons for definite purpose, such as a military or exploring expedition or a trading expedition to the African coast. The word carries an implication of a military exploit or of an exploration into remote regions or over new routes. Day v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S., C.C.A.C.A. N.Y., 73 F.2d 589, 591.

Expeditious /əksˈpɛdɪʃəs/. Possessed of, or characterized by, expedition or efficiency and rapidity in action; performed with, or acting with, expedition; quick; speedy.

Expedite reipublice ne sua re quis male utatur /əksˈpɛdət rɛɪˈpɛblɪs nɛ suə rɛ kwaɪs mɛlɪ uˈtætʊr/. It is for the interest of the state that a man should not enjoy his own property improperly (to the injury of others).

Expedite reipublice ut sit finis litium /əksˈpɛdət rɛɪˈpɛblɪs ut sɪt fɪnɪs lɪˈtjuːm/. It is for the advantage of the state that there be an end of suits; it is for the public good that actions be brought to a close. This maxim belongs to the law of all countries.

Expel. In regard to trespass and other torts, this term means to eject, to put out, to drive out, and generally with an implication of the use of force. See also Ejectment; Ejection.

Expend. To pay out, lay out, consume, use up; normally implying receiving something in return.

Expendable. That which is consumed in its use over a short period of time such as expenses for day to day operations which are charged as expenses to current income as contrasted with payments for long term or capital improvements. Not essential or critical to preserve.

Expendere /əksˈpɛndərəri/. The word “expense” had its origin in the Latin word “expendere”; “ex” meaning “out,” and “pendere” meaning “to weigh.”

Expenditors /əksˈpɛndətərz/. Paymasters. Those who expend or disburse certain taxes.

Expenditure. Spending or payment of money; the act of expending, disbursing, or laying out of money; payment. Compare Appropriation. See also Expense. As regards “Capital expenditure” see Capital.

Expense litis /əksˈpɛnse lɪˈtɪs/. Costs or expenses of the suit, which are generally allowed to the successful party.

Expense. That which is expended, laid out or consumed. An outlay; charge; cost; price. The expenditure of money, time, labor, resources, and thought. See also Costs; Fee.

Accrued expense. One which has been incurred in a given period but not yet paid.

Business expense. One which is directly related to one’s business as contrasted with personal expenses incurred for personal and family reasons. See Tax deduction, infra.

Current expense. Normal expense incurred, for example, in daily operations of a business. See Operating expenses, infra.

Operating expenses. The cost of operating an income producing property, such as rent, wages, utilities, and similar day to day expenses, as well as taxes, insurance, and a reserve for depreciation.

Ordinary expense. See Ordinary.

Out of pocket expenses. A direct expense which requires the immediate outlay of cash in contrast to an accrued expense.

Prepaid expense. Payment of rent, interest, insurance, or like expenses, prior to actual due date. Cash basis as well as accrual basis taxpayers are generally required to capitalize prepayments for rent, insurance, etc. that cover more than one year. Deductions are taken during the period the benefits are received.

Tax deduction. Certain expenses such as those directly related to production of income are deductions from gross income for tax purposes.

Expense in carrying on business. Usual or customary expenditure in course of conducting business during the year. Whitney v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.N.Y., 73 F.2d 589, 591.

Expense ratio. Proportion or ratio of expenses to income.

Expenses of family. Medical and funeral expenses are “expenses of the family” within meaning of statute making expenses of family chargeable upon property of both husband and wife. Hansen v. Hayes, 175 Or. 358, 154 P.2d 202, 205. Under such a statute the term includes not only merchandise used by family as a whole, but also expenses, such as medical aid, hospital services and burial attendance, incurred or supplied for one of the spouses. In re De Nilson’s Guardianship, 197 Wash. 265, 84 P.2d 1024, 1028.

Expenses of receivership. Includes allowances to receivers’ counsel, master’s fees, appraisers’ fees, auditors’ fees, and rent and other expenses incurred by receivers in conducting business.

Expenses of the state. Within constitutional provision for raising revenue there has reference to general operating expenses of state government for fiscal year.

Expensis militum non levandis /akspliyshan/ /akspiysh(i)yam non lavendas/. An ancient writ to prohibit the sheriff from levying any allowance for knights of the shire upon those who held lands in ancient demesne.

Experience. A state, extent, or duration of being engaged in a particular study or work; the real life as contrasted with the ideal or imaginary. A word implying skill, facility, or practical wisdom gained by personal knowledge, feeling, and action, and also the course or process by which one attains knowledge or wisdom.

Experience rating. In insurance, a method of determining rates by using the loss experience of the insured over a period of time.

Experientia per varios actus legem facti. Magistra rerum experientia /akspliysh(i)yam/ pár vérívós éçtas lýjam lýysat. Majistra ríram akspliysh(i)yam. Experience by various acts makes law. Experience is the mistress of things.

Experiment. A trial or special test or observation made to confirm or disprove something doubtful. The process of testing.

Expert testimony. Opinion evidence of some person who possesses special skill or knowledge in some science, profession or business which is not common to the average man and which is possessed by the expert by reason of his special study or experience. Board of Ed. of Claymont Special School Dist. v. 13 Acres of Land in Brandywine Hundred, Del.Super., 11 Terry 387, 131 A.2d 180, 184. Testimony given in relation to some scientific, technical, or professional matter by experts, i.e., persons qualified to speak authoritatively by reason of their special training, skill, or familiarity with the subject. Evidence of persons who are skilled in some art, science, profession, or business, which skill or knowledge is not common to their fellow men, and which has come to such experts by reason of special study and experience in such art, science, profession, or business.

If scientific, technology, or other specialized knowledge will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue, a witness qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education, may testify thereto in the form of an opinion or otherwise. Fed.Evid.R. 702, 703. See also Expert witness.

Expert witness. One who by reason of education or specialized experience possesses superior knowledge respecting a subject about which persons having no particular training are incapable of forming an accurate opinion or deducing correct conclusions. Kim Mfg., Inc. v. Superior Metal Treating, Inc., Mo.App., 537 S.W.2d 424, 428. A witness who has been qualified as an expert and who thereby will be allowed (through his/her answers to questions posted) to assist the jury in understanding complicated and technical subjects not within the understanding of the average lay person. One possessing, with reference to particular subject, knowledge not acquired by ordinary persons. One skilled in any particular art, trade, or profession, being possessed of peculiar knowledge concerning the same, and one who has given subject in question particular study, practice, or observation. One who by habits of life and business has peculiar skill in forming opinion on subject in dispute. See also Expert testimony; Hypothetical question.

Expilare /éksplalaryer/. In the civil law, to spoil; to rob or plunder. Applied to inheritances.

Expilatio /éksplalyesh(i)yow/. In the civil law, the offense of unlawfully appropriating goods belonging to a succession. It is not technically theft (furtum) because such property no longer belongs to the deceased, nor to the heir, since the latter has not yet taken possession. In the common law, the grant of letters testamentary, or letters of administration, relates back to the time of the death of the testator or intestate; so that the property of the estate is vested in the executor or administrator from that period.

Expilator /éksplalyadr/. In the civil law, a robber; a spoiler or plunderer.

Expiration. Cessation; termination from mere lapse of time, as the expiration of a lease, insurance policy, statute, and the like. Coming to close; termination or end.

The term "expiration," as in an insurance policy, refers to termination of the policy by lapse of time covering the policy period, while "cancellation" refers to termination of the policy by act of either or both parties prior to ending of the policy period.

Expire. See Expiration.

Explees /s(k)spliyzy/. See Esplees.

Expletia /akspliyda/, expletia /akspliysh(i)yam/, or explecla /akspliysh(h)iya/. The rents and profits of an estate.

Explicatio /éksplakyesh(i)yow/. In the civil law, the fourth pleading; equivalent to the surrejoinder of the common law.

Explicit. Not obscure or ambiguous, having no disguised meaning or reservation. Clear in understanding.

Exploitation /éksplotlyeshan/. Act or process of exploiting, making use of, or working up. Utilization by application of industry, argument, or other means of turning to account, as the exploitation of a mine or a forest. State Finance Co. v. Hamacher, 171 Wash. 15, 17 P.2d 610, 613. Taking unjust advantage of another for one’s own advantage or benefit.
Exploration. The examination and investigation of land supposed to contain valuable minerals, by drilling, boring, sinking shafts, driving tunnels, and other means, for the purpose of discovering the presence of ore and its extent.

Explanatory /eksplanatory/. A scout, huntsman, or chaser.

Export. v. To carry or to send abroad. Canton R. Co. v. Rogan, 340 U.S. 511, 71 S.Ct. 447, 449, 95 L.Ed. 488. To send, take, or carry an article of trade or commerce out of the country. To transport merchandise from one country to another in the course of trade. To carry out or convey goods by sea. Transportation of goods from United States to foreign country. West India Oil Co. v. Sancho, C.C.A.Puerto Rico, 108 F.2d 144, 147. See also Re-export.

Export, n. A thing or commodity exported. More commonly used in the plural.

Exportation. The act of sending or carrying goods and merchandise from one country to another. A severance of goods from mass of things belonging to United States with intention of uniting them to mass of things belonging to some foreign country. Matson Nav. Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization, 136 Cal. 2d 577, 289 P.2d 73, 77.

Export declaration. Document which contains details of export shipment and required by federal law.

Export-Import Bank. Independent agency of federal government whose function is to aid in financing exports and imports.

Export quotas. Amounts of specific goods which may be exported. Such quotas are set by the federal government for purposes of national defense, economic stability, price support, etc.

Exports clause. Provision in U.S.Const., Art. I, Sec. 10, Cl. 2, limiting power of states to impose duties or imposts on imports or exports.

Export tax. Tax levied upon merchandise and goods shipped out of a country. Tax levied upon right to export or upon goods because of fact that they are being exported or intended to be exported. Virgo Corp. v. Palewonsky, D.C.Virgin Islands, 251 F.Supp. 279, 283.

Expose, v. To show publicly; to display; to offer to the public view, as, to "expose" goods to sale, to "expose" a tariff or schedule of rates, to "expose" misconduct of public or quasi-public figures.

To place in a position where the object spoken of is open to danger, or where it is near or accessible to anything which may affect it detrimentally; as, to "expose" a child, or to expose oneself or another to a contagious disease or to danger or hazard of any kind.

For indecent exposure, see Indecent.

Exposé /eksposé/. Fr. A statement; account; recital; explanation. The term is used in diplomatic language as descriptive of a written explanation of the reasons for a certain act or course of conduct. Exposure of discreditable matter concerning a person, government, etc.
Exposure of person. In criminal law, such an intentional exposure, in a public place, of the naked body or the private parts as is calculated to shock the feelings of chastity or to corrupt the morals of the community. See also Indecent (Indecent exposure).

Express abrogation. Abrogation by express provision or enactment; the repeal of a law or provision by a subsequent one, referring directly to it. Express abrogation is that literally pronounced by the law either in general terms, as when a final clause abrogates or repeals all laws contrary to the provisions of the new one, or in particular terms, as when it abrogates certain preceding laws which are named.

Express authority. Authority delegated to agent by words which expressly authorize him to do a delegable act. Authority distinctly, plainly expressed, orally or in writing. Ulen v. Knecttle, 50 Wyo. 94, 58 P.2d 446, 449. Authority which is directly granted to or conferred upon agent in express terms. That which confers power to do a particular identical thing set forth and declared exactly, plainly, and directly with well-defined limits. An authority given in direct terms, definitely and explicitly, and not left to inference or implication, as distinguished from authority which is general, implied, or not directly stated or given.

Express color. In old English law, an evasive form of special pleading in a case where the defendant ought to plead the general issue. Abolished by the common-law procedure act, 1852, 15 & 16 Vict., c. 76, § 64.

Express common-law dedication. See Dedication.

Express company. A firm or corporation engaged in the business of transporting parcels or other movable property, in the capacity of common carriers, and especially undertaking the safe carriage and speedy delivery of small but valuable packages of goods and money.

Express conditions. See Condition.

Express contract. See Contract.

Express dissatisfaction. Where will declares that any one expressing dissatisfaction with its provisions should forfeit his interest, “dissatisfaction” is legally “expressed” when beneficiary contests or objects in legal proceeding to enforcement of any provision of will.

Expressed. Means stated or declared in direct terms; set forth in words; not left to inference or implication. Anderson v. Board of Ed. of School Dist. No. 91, 390 Ill. 412, 11 N.E.2d 562, 567. See Express.

Expressio eorum quae tacite insunt nihil operatur /aksprēsh(i)yow iyoram kwiy t&sadiy insant nāy(h)aal ḥōreýyar/. The expression or expression mention of those things which are tacitly implied avails nothing. A man’s own words are void, when the law speaks as much. Words used to express what the law will imply without them are mere words of abundance.

Expression, freedom of. One of the basic freedoms guaranteed by the First Amendment of U.S.Const. and by most state constitutions. Such is equivalent to freedom of speech, press, or assembly.

Expressio unius est exclusio alterius /aksprēsh(i)yow yanāyas ēst aksklūzw(h)i(y)ow oltīriyās/. A maxim of statutory interpretation meaning that the expression of one thing is the exclusion of another. Burgin v. Forbes, 293 Ky. 456, 169 S.W.2d 321, 325; Newblock v. Bowles, 170 Okl. 487, 490 P.2d 1097, 1100. Mention of one thing implies exclusion of another. When certain persons or things are specified in a law, contract, or will, an intention to exclude all others from its operation may be inferred. Under this maxim, if statute specifies one exception to a general rule or assumes to specify the effects of a certain provision, other exceptions or effects are excluded.

Expressio unius personae est exclusio alterius /aksprēsh(i)yow yanāyas persōnāy ēst aksklūzw(h)i(y)ow oltīriyās/. The mention of one person is the exclusion of another.
Expressly. In an express manner; in direct or unmistakable terms; explicitly; definitely; directly. Le Ballister v. Redwood Theatres, 1 Cal.App.2d 447, 36 P.2d 827; St. Louis Union Trust Co. v. Hill, 336 Mo. 17, 76 S.W.2d 685, 689. The opposite of impliedly. Bolles v. Toledo Trust Co., 144 Ohio St. 195, 58 N.E.2d 381, 386.

Express malice. Express malice for purposes of first degree murder includes malice, formed design or intention to kill or to do great bodily harm, and sedate and deliberate mind of which that intention is the product. State v. Gardner, 7 Storey 588, 203 A.2d 77, 80. As used with respect to libel, means publication of defamatory material in bad faith, without belief in the truth of the matter published, or with reckless disregard of the truth or falsity of the matter. Barlow v. International Harvester Co., 95 Idaho 881, 522 P.2d 1102, 1113. See also Malice.

Express permission. Within statute respecting automobile owner's liability, includes prior knowledge of intended use and affirmative and active consent thereto.

Express private trust. See Trust.

Express repeal. Abrogation or annulment of previously existing law by enactment of subsequent statute declaring that former law shall be revoked or abrogated.

Express republication. Occurs with respect to will when testator repeats ceremonies essential to valid execution, with avowed intention of republishing will.

Express request. That which occurs when one person commands or asks another to do or give something, or answers affirmatively when asked whether another shall do a certain thing.

Express terms. Within provision that qualified acceptance, in "express terms," varies effect of draft, "express terms" means clear, unambiguous, definite, certain, and unequivocal terms.

Express trust. See Trust.

Expressum facit cessare tacitum /aksprésam fêysat saériy têsdam/. That which is expressed makes that which is implied to cease [that is, supersedes it, or controls its effect]. Thus, an implied covenant in a deed is in all cases controlled by an express covenant. Where a law sets down plainly its whole meaning the court is prevented from making it mean what the court pleases. Munro v. City of Albuquerque, 48 N.M. 306, 150 P.2d 733, 743.

Expressum servitium regat vel declarat tacitum /aksprésam servish(y)am rîygat vêl dêklarârat têsdam/. Let service expressed rule or declare what is silent.

Express warranty. See Warranty.

Expropriation. A taking, as under eminent domain. This term is also used in the context of a foreign government taking an American industry located in the foreign country. In Louisiana, the word has the same general meaning as eminent domain.

A voluntary surrender of rights or claims; the act of divesting oneself of that which was previously claimed as one's own, or renouncing it. In this sense it is the opposite of "appropriation."

See also Condemnation; Eminent domain.

Ex proprio motu /êks prôwpriyow mówdwu/. Of his own accord. See Ex mero motu.

Ex proprio vigore /êks prôwpriyow vâgorý/. By their or its own force.

Ex provisione hominis /êks praviz(h)iôwniy jômânas/. By the provision of man. By the limitation of the party, as distinguished from the disposition of the law.

Ex provisione mariti /êks praviz(h)iyôwniy mérôday/. From the provision of the husband.

Expulsion. A putting or driving out. Ejectment; banishment; a cutting off from the privileges of an institution or society permanently. The act of depriving a member of a corporation, legislative body, assembly, society, commercial organization, etc., of his membership in the same, by a legal vote of the body itself, for breach of duty, improper conduct, or other sufficient cause. Also, in the law of torts and of landlord and tenant, an eviction or forcible putting out. See Deportation; Ejectment; Eviction; Expel; Forcible entry and detainer; Summary (Summary process).

Expunge /akspanj/. To destroy; blot out; obliterate; erase; efface designedly; strike out wholly. The act of physically destroying information—including criminal records—in files, computers, or other depositories.

Expungement of record. Process by which record of criminal conviction is destroyed or sealed after expiration of time. See also Erasure (Erasure of record).

Expurgation /êksparjeyshan/. The act of purging or cleansing, as where a book is published without its obscene passages.

Expurgator /êksparjeydâr/. One who corrects by expurgating.

Ex quasi contractu /êks kwéysây kantôrekchuw/. From quasi contract.

Ex rel. See Ex relatione.

Ex relatione /êks râleỳshiyôwni/. Upon relation or information.

Legal proceedings which are instituted by the attorney general (or other proper person) in the name and behalp of the state, but on the information and at the in stigation of an individual who has a private interest in the matter, are said to be taken "on the relation" (ex relatione) of such person, who is called the "rela-tor." Such a cause is usually entitled thus: "State ex
rel. Doe v. Roe."

In the books of reports, when a case is said to be reported ex relatione, it is meant that the reporter derives his account of it, not from personal knowledge, but from the relation or narrative of some person who was present at the argument.

Ex rights. Literally, without rights. Stock sold ex rights is sold without privileged subscription rights to a current new issue by a corporation.

Ex rigore juris (eks ragóri júrás). According to the rigor or strictness of law; in strictness of law.

Exrogare (eksragéríy). (From ex, from, and rogare, to pass a law.) In Roman law, to take something from an old law by a new law.

Ex scriptis olim visis (eks skriptas ovýlam váyzas).
From writings formerly seen. A term used as descriptive of that kind of proof of handwriting where the knowledge has been acquired by the witness having seen letters or other documents professing to be the handwriting of the party, and having afterwards communicated personally with the party upon the contents of those letters or documents, or having otherwise acted upon them by written answers, producing further correspondence or acquiescence by the party in some matter to which they relate, or by the witness transacting with the party some business to which they relate, or by any other mode of communication between the party and the witness which, in the ordinary course of the transactions of life, induces a reasonable presumption that the letters or documents were the handwriting of the party.

Ex ship. See Ship.

Ex statuto (eks stachúwdow). According to the statute.

Ex stipulatu actio (eks stipýaleydúw åksh(iy)ow). In the civil law, an action of stipulation. An action given to recover marriage portions.

Ex tempore (eks témporíy). From or in consequence of time; by lapse of time. Ex diuturno tempore, from length of time. Without preparation or premeditation.

Extend. Term lends itself to great variety of meanings, which must in each case be gathered from context.
It may mean to expand, enlarge, prolong, lengthen, widens, carry or draw out further than the original limit; e.g., to extend the time for filing an answer, to extend a lease, term of office, charter, railroad track, To stretch out to, or to draw out Crane Enamelware Co.
v. Smith, 168 Tenn. 203, 76 S.W.2d 644; Loeffler v.
Federal Supply Co., 187 Okl. 373, 102 P.2d 862, 864.
See also Extension; Renewal.

Extended. A lengthening out of time previously fixed and not the arbitrary setting of a new date. Stretched, spread, or drawn out.

Extended coverage clause. Provision in insurance policy which carries protection for hazards beyond those covered in the basic policy. See also Omnibus clause.

Extended insurance. An option to use dividend to procure extended insurance is one to procure extension of term of insurance from date to which premiums have been paid, without further payment. Williams
v. Union Central Life Ins. Co., Tex., 291 U.S. 170, 54
S.Ct. 348, 78 L.Ed. 711.

Extendi faselas (aksténday féys(h)(i)yas). Lat. You cause to be extended. In English practice, the name of a writ of execution (derived from its two emphatic words); more commonly called an "extent."

Extension. An increase in length of time (e.g. of expiration date of lease, or due date of note).

The word "extension" ordinarily implies the existence of something to be extended. State v. Graves, 331 Mo. 1102, 182 S.W.2d 46, 51.

A part constituting an addition or enlargement, as an annex to a building or an extension to a house.
Addition of existing facilities. Enlargement of main body; addition of something smaller than that to which it is attached; to cause to reach or continue as from point to point; to lengthen or prolong. That property of a body by which it occupies a portion of space. Newark Stove Co. v. Gray & Dudley Co.,

Bankruptcy. An extension proposal is an agreement on part of creditors that they will extend time within which their claims are probably to be paid, in full as to secured creditors, on terms proposed by debtor and approved by court. Heldstab v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States, C.C.A. Kan., 91 F.2d 655, 658.

Commercial law. An allowance of additional time for the payment of debts. An agreement between a debtor and his creditors, by which they allow him further time for the payment of his liabilities. A creditor's indulgence by giving a debtor further time to pay an existing debt.

Lease. The word "extension," when used in its proper and usual sense in connection with a lease, means a prolongation of the previous leasehold estate. The distinction between "extension" and "renewal" of lease is chiefly that, in the case of renewal, a new lease is requisite, while, in the case of extension, the same lease continues in force during additional period upon performance of stipulated act. An option for renewal implies giving of new lease on same terms as old lease, while an option for extension contemplates a continuance of old lease for a further period.

Patents. Extension of life of patent for an additional statutorily allowed period.

Time. Extensions of time in civil actions are governed by Fed.R.Civ.P. 6, in criminal actions by Extension agreements. Those agreements which provide for further time in which performance of the basic agreement may be performed.

Extension or renewal of note. Takes place when parties agree upon valuable consideration for maturity of EXTENSION OF NOTE

debt on day subsequent to that provided in original contract. Elk Horn Bank & Trust Co. v. Spragins, 182 Ark. 27, 30 S.W.2d 858, 859.

Extensive. Widely extended in space, time, or scope; great or wide or capable of being extended.

Extensores /eksənˈsoʊrɪz/. In old English law, extenders or appraisers. The name of certain officers appointed to appraise and divide or apportion lands. It was their duty to make a survey, schedule, or inventory of the lands, to lay them out under certain heads, and then to ascertain the value of each, as preparatory to the division or partition.

Extent. Amount; scope; range; magnitude.

In old English law, a writ of execution issuing from the exequor upon a debt due the crown, or upon a debt due a private person, if upon recognizance or statute merchant or staple, by which the sheriff was directed to appraise the debtor's lands, and, instead of selling them, to set them off to the creditor for a term during which the rental will satisfy the judgment. It was so called because the sheriff was to cause the lands to be appraised at their full extended value before he delivers them to the plaintiff.

The term was at one time used in the various states of the United States to denote writs which give the creditor possession of the debtor's lands for a limited time till the debt be paid.

Extenta manerii /ekˈstɛntə manərˈriːə/. (The extent or survey of a manor.) The title of English statute passed 4 Edw. I, St. 1; being a sort of direction for making a survey or terrier of a manor, and all its appendages.

Extents non habet terras /ekˈstɛntəs nɒn ˈhɛbət tɛrəs/. An alien holds no lands.

Ex testamento /eks ˈtɛstəməntoʊ/. From, by, or under a will. The opposite of ab intestato (q.v.).

Extirpation. That which renders a crime or tort less heinous than it would be without it. It is opposed to aggravation. See Extenuating circumstances.

External. Apparent, outward, visible from the outside, patent, exterior, capable of being perceived. Acting from without, as the external surface of a body; physical or corporeal, as distinguished from mental or moral. Provident Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Campbell, 18 Tenn.App. 452, 79 S.W.2d 292, 296. In double indemnity clause of life policy, the term "external" applies to the force or means and not to the injury. Hanna v. Rio Grande Nat. Life Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 181 S.W.2d 908, 911.

Exterritoriality. The privilege of those persons (such as foreign ministers) who, though temporarily resident within a country, are not subject to the operation of its laws. The exemption from the operation of the ordinary laws of the country accorded to foreign monarchs temporarily within the country and their retinue, to diplomatic agents and the members of their household, and to others of similar position and rank. See Capitulation; Extraterritoriality.

Exterus /ekˈstɜrəs/. Lat. A foreigner or alien; one born abroad. The opposite of civis.

Exterus non habet terras /ekˈstɜrəs nɒn ˈhɛbət tɛrəs/. An alien holds no lands.

Ex testamento /eks ˈtɛstəməntoʊ/. From, by, or under a will. The opposite of ab intestato (q.v.).

Extinct. Extinguished. No longer in existence or use. Lacking a claimant. A rent is said to be extinguished when it is destroyed and put out. See Extinction.

Extincto subjecto, tollitur adjunctum /ekstɪŋktəʊ ˈsʌbdʒɪktəʊ təˈlɪltər əˈdʒəŋktəm/. When the subject [or substance] is extinguished, the incident [or adjunct] ceases. Thus, when the business for which a partnership has been formed is completed, or brought to an end, the partnership itself ceases.

Extinguish. To bring or put an end to. Onondaga Water Service Corporation v. Crown Mills, Inc., 132 Misc. 848, 230 N.Y.S. 691, 698. To terminate or cancel. To put out, quench, stifle, as to extinguish a fire or flame. See also Cancellation; Termination.

Extinguishment. The destruction or cancellation of a right, power, contract, or estate. The annihilation of a collateral thing or subject in the subject itself out of which it is derived. See Cancellation.

“Extinguishment” is sometimes confounded with “merger,” though there is a clear distinction between them. “Merger” is only a mode of extinguishment, and applies to estates only under particular circumstances; but “extinguishment” is a term of general application to rights, as well as estates. “Extinguishment” connotes the end of a thing, precluding the existence of future life therein; in “mergers” there is a carrying on of the substance of the thing, except that it is merged into and becomes a part of a separate thing with a new identity. McRoberts v. McRoberts, 177 Okt. 156, 57 P.2d 1175, 1177.

Extinguishment of common. In English law, loss of the right to have common, which could happen from various causes.

Extinguishment of copyhold. In English law, a copyhold is said to be extinguished when the freehold and copyhold interests unite in the same person and in the same right, which may be either by the copyhold interest coming to the freehold or by the freehold interest coming to the copyhold.

Extinguishment of debts. This takes place by payment; by accord and satisfaction; by novation, or the substitution of a new debtor; by merger, when the creditor recovers a judgment or accepts a security of a higher nature than the original obligation; by a release; and where one of the parties, debtor or creditor, makes the other his executor. See also Bankruptcy.

Extinguishment of legacy. This occurs in case the identical thing bequeathed is not in existence, or has been disposed of so that it does not form part of the testator’s estate, at the time of his death. See Ademption.

Extinguishment of lien. Discharge by operation of law.

Extinguishment of rent. If a person has a yearly rent of lands, and afterwards purchase those lands, so that he has as good an estate in the land as in the rent, the rent is extinguished. Rent may also be extinguished by conjunction of estates, by confirmation, by grant, by release, and by surrender.

Extinguishment of ways. This is usually effected by unity of possession, as if a man had a way over the close of another, and he purchased that close, the way is extinguished.

Extriptation /ekstarpeyshan/. In English law, a species of destruction or waste, analogous to estreprent. See Estreprent.

Extriptatione /ekstarpeyshyownyiy/. A judicial writ, either before or after judgment, that lay against a person who, when a verdict was found against him for land, etc., maliciously overthrew any house or extirpated any trees upon it.

Extensively /asktozerozly/. A technical word used in indictments for extortion.

Extort. To compel or coerce, as a confession or information by any means serving to overcome one’s power of resistance, thus making the confession or admis-
See also Blackmall; Hobbs Act; Loanshark; Shake-down.

For the distinction between “extortion” and “exaction,” see Exaction.

Extra /ěkstra/. A Latin preposition, occurring in many legal phrases, and meaning beyond, except, without, out of, outside. Additional.

Extra allowance. In New York practice, a sum in addition to costs, which may, in the discretion of the court, be allowed to the successful party in cases of unusual difficulty. Hascall v. King, 54 App.Div. 441, 66 N.Y.S. 1112.

Extra commercia /ěkstra kamš(h)(i)ya/. Property once dedicated to public use is “extra commercia”.

Extract, v. To draw out or forth; to pull out from a fixed position.

Extract, n. A portion or segment of a writing.

Extracta curiae /ěkstrā kʃyurithi/. In old English law, the issues or profits of holding a court, arising from the customary fees, etc.

Extradition. The surrender by one state or country to another of an individual accused or convicted of an offense outside its own territory and within the territorial jurisdiction of the other, which, being competent to try and punish him, demands the surrender.
Most states have adopted the Uniform Criminal Extradition Act. See also Interstate rendition; Rendition.

Extra legem /ěkstra lʃym/. Out of the law; out of the law, though taken formally before a proper person.

Extra Jus /Skstra jas/. Beyond the law; more than the jurisdiction. See Extrajudicial.

Extra jus /ěkstra jás/. Beyond the law; more than the law requires.

Extralateral right. In mining law, the right of the owner of a mining claim duly located on the public domain to follow, and mine, any vein or lode the apex of which lies within the boundaries of his location on the surface, notwithstanding the course of the vein on its dip or downward direction may so far depart from the perpendicular as to extend beyond the planes which would be formed by the vertical extension downwards of the side lines of his location.

Extrajudicial confession /ěkstrajwúdíshal kanfésthan/.
See Confession.

Extrajudicial evidence. That which is used to satisfy private persons as to facts requiring proof.

Extrajudicial oath. One taken not in the course of judicial proceedings, or taken without any authority of law, though taken formally before a proper person.

Extrajudicial statement. Any utterance, written or oral, made outside of court. It is governed by the hearsay rule and its exceptions when offered in court as evidence.

Extra judicium /ěkstra jadish(ly)am/. Extrajudicial; out of the proper cause; out of court; beyond the jurisdiction. See Extrajudicial.

Extra legem /ěkstra lʃym/. Out of the law; out of the protection of the law.

Extra legem positus est civiliter mortuos /ěkstra lʃym pozadas est savlídár mórchuwas/. He who is placed out of the law is civilly dead. International Bank v.

Extramural /ěkstrámur/āl/. As applied to the powers of a municipal corporation, its “extramural” powers are those exercised outside the corporate limits, as distinguished from “intramural”.

Extranational. Beyond the territorial and governing limits of a country. See also Extraterritorial.

Extraneous evidence. With reference to a contract, deed, will, or any writing, extraneous evidence is such as is not furnished by the document itself, but is derived from outside sources; the same as evidence aliunde. See also Allunde; Parol evidence rule.

Extraneous offense. One that is extra, beyond, or for-foreign to the offense for which the party is on trial.
Ridinger v. State, 146 Tex.Cr.R. 286, 174 S.W.2d 319, 320.

Extraneous questions. Issues which are beyond or beside the point to be decided.

Extraneous /ěkstrény lys/. In old English law, one for-foreign born; a foreigner.

In Roman law, an heir not born in the family of the testator. Those of a foreign state. The same as alienus.

Extraneous est subditus qui extra terram, i.e., potestatem regis natus est /ěkstrény lys ęst szbodadas kwáy ěkstra térm, id ęst, pówdstéydam rjýys néydas ęst/.. A foreigner is a subject who is born out of the territory, i.e., government of the king.
Extraordinary. Out of the ordinary; exceeding the usual, average, or normal measure or degree; beyond or out of the common order or rule; not usual, regular, or of a customary kind; remarkable; uncommon; rare. Courtney v. Ocean Accident & Guaranty Corporation, 346 Mo. 703, 142 S.W.2d 858, 861. The word is both comprehensive and flexible in meaning. Beyond or out of the common order or method; exceeding the ordinary degree; not ordinary; unusual; employed for an exceptional purpose or on a special occasion. As a noun it is defined as something extraordinary, especially, an extraordinary expense or allowance. State v. Rogers, 142 Kan. 841, 52 P.2d 1185, 1195.

Extraordinary designates an accident, casualty, occurrence or risk of a class or kind other than those which ordinary experience or prudence would foresee, anticipate or provide for. Western & Atlantic Ry. Co. v. Hassler, 92 Ga.App. 278, 88 S.E.2d 559, 562.

Extraordinary average. A contribution by all the parties concerned in a commercial voyage, either as to the vessel or cargo, toward a loss sustained by some of the parties in interest for the benefit of all.

Extraordinary care. Synonymous with greatest care, utmost care, highest degree of care. See Care; Diligence; Negligence.

Extraordinary circumstances. Factors of time, place, etc., which are not usually associated with a particular thing or event; out of the ordinary factors. See also Extenuating circumstances.

Extraordinary danger. Danger or risk of employment, not ordinarily incident to the service. The "extraordinary circumstances" justifying federal equitable intervention in pending state criminal prosecutions must be extraordinary in the sense of creating an extraordinary pressing need for immediate federal equitable relief, not merely in the sense of presenting a highly unusual factual situation. Kugler v. Helfant, N.J., 421 U.S. 117, 95 S.Ct. 1524, 1531, 44 L.Ed.2d 15. See also Extraordinary hazard.

Extraordinary dividend. Dividend of corporation which is nonrepetitive and generally paid at irregular time because of some unusual corporate event (e.g. unusually high profits). An "extraordinary dividend" is distinguished from an "ordinary dividend" or "regular dividend" in that it is not declared from ordinary profits arising out of regular course of business of corporation and is generally declared by reasons of unusually large income or unexpected increment in capital assets due to fortuitous conditions or circumstances occurring outside of activities and control of corporation but advantageous to corporation either in stepping up its product and sales or in giving added value to its property. In re Bank of N. Y. & Fifth Ave. Bank, 105 N.Y.S.2d 211, 217, 222. See also Extra dividend.

Cash disbursements by "wasting asset" companies are apportioned as "extraordinary dividends" where they represent, in part at least, distribution of proceeds of capital assets.

Extraordinary expenses. This term in a constitutional provision that the state may incur indebtedness for extraordinary expenses, means other than ordinary expenses and such as are incurred by the state for the promotion of the general welfare, compelled by some unforeseen condition which is not regularly provided for by law, such as flood, famine, fire, earthquake, pestilence, war, or any other condition that will compel the state to put forward its highest endeavors to protect the people, their property, liberty, or lives.

Extraordinary flood. One of those unexplained occurrences whose coming is not foreshadowed by the usual course of nature, and whose magnitude and destructiveness could not have been anticipated or provided against by the exercise of ordinary foresight. Jensen v. Buffalo Drainage Dist. of Cloud County, 148 Kan. 712, 84 P.2d 961, 965. One of such unusual occurrence that it could not have been foreseen by men of ordinary experience and prudence.

Extraordinary grand jury. Such jury is limited in scope of its investigation which may not go beyond terms of executive proclamation, and examination of witness must be confined within those terms, and must not be used as a means of disclosing or intermeddling with extraneous matters.

Extraordinary hazard. One not commonly associated with a job or undertaking. If hazards are increased by what other employees do, and injured employee has no part in increasing them, they are "extraordinary". Stone v. Howe, 92 N.H. 425, 32 A.2d 484, 487. See also Extraordinary risk.

Extraordinary remedies. The writs of mandamus, quo warranto, habeas corpus, and some others are often classified or termed "extraordinary remedies," in contradistinction to the ordinary remedy by action.

Under Rules practice in most states, most extraordinary "writs" have been abolished. In any action seeking relief formerly obtainable under any such writ, the procedure shall follow that of a regular action.

Extraordinary repairs. Within the meaning of a lease, such as are made necessary by some unusual or unforeseen occurrence which does not destroy the building but merely renders it less suited to the use for which it was intended. Courtney v. Ocean Accident & Guaranty Corporation, 346 Mo. 703, 142 S.W.2d 858, 861. In lease provisions for "extraordinary" repairs, word "extraordinary" means beyond or out of common order of rule, not the usual, customary or regular kind, not ordinary. Atlanta & St. A. B. Ry. Co. v. Chilean Nitrate Sales Corp., D.C.Fla., 277 F.Supp. 242, 246.

Extraordinary risk. An "extraordinary risk" is one lying outside of the sphere of the normal, arising out of conditions not usual in the business. It is one which is not normally and necessarily incident to the employment. It is one which may be obviated by the exercise of reasonable care by the employer. See also Extraordinary hazard.

Extraordinary session. A legislative session, called usually by the governor, which meets in the interval between regular sessions. In most States such sessions are limited to the consideration of matters specified in the governor's call. See also Extra session, supra.
Extraordinary storm. One which is not necessarily an unprecedented one, but one that happens so rarely that it is unusual and not ordinarily to be expected. Oklahoma City v. Evans, 173 Okl. 586, 50 P.2d 234, 238. See also Extraordinary flood.

Extraordinary writs. See Extraordinary remedies.

Extra parochial /ékstrə prərəʊkəli/. In English law, out of a parish; not within the bounds or limits of any parish.

Extraparochiality. The process of estimating an unknown number outside the range of known numbers. Term sometimes used in cases when a court deduces a principle of law from another case.

Extra presentiam mariti /ékstrə prəsəntiəm mərətɪ/. Out of her husband’s presence.

Extra quattor maria /skstrə kwətər mərəjə/. Beyond the four seas, out of the kingdom of England.

Extra regnum /ékstrə rəgnum/. Out of the realm.

Extra session. After a Legislature has adjourned or prorogued, it may be recalled for an additional session by the Governor to deal with matters which could not be considered during the regular term. Also, a court may provide additional court sessions to eliminate or reduce a case backlog. See also Extraordinary session.

Extraterritorial. Beyond the physical and juridical boundaries of a particular state or country. See Extraterritoriality.

Extraterritoriality. The extraterritorial operation of laws; that is, their operation upon persons, rights, or jural relations, existing beyond the limits of the enacting state or nation, but still amenable to its laws. A term used, especially formerly, to express, in lieu of the word extritoritirality the exemption from the obligation of the laws of a state granted to foreign diplomatic agents, warships, etc. The term is used to indicate jurisdiction exercised by a nation in other countries by treaty, or by its own ministers or consuls in foreign lands. Crime is said to be extraterritorial when committed in a state or country other than that of the forum in which the party is tried.

Extraterritorial jurisdiction. Juridical power which extends beyond the physical limits of a particular state or country. See Long-arm statutes.

Extra territorium /ékstrə təhərətriəm/. Beyond or without the territory.

Extra territorium jus dicenti impune non paretur /ékstrə təhərətriəm jəs dəsəntəi ipədəntəi nən pərətərə/. One who exercises jurisdiction out of his territory is not obeyed with impunity. He who exercises judicial authority beyond his proper limits cannot be obeyed with safety.

Extravagantes /ékstrəvəgəntiəz/. In canon law, those decretal epistles which were published after the Clementines. They were so called because at first they were not digested or arranged with the other papal constitutions, but seemed to be, as it were, detached from the canon law. They continued to be called by the same name when they were afterwards inserted in the body of the canon law. The first extravagantes are those of Pope John XXII, successor of Clement V. The last collection was brought down to the year 1483, and was called the “Common Extravagantes,” notwithstanding that they were likewise incorporated with the rest of the canon law.

Extra viam /ékstrə vəəm/. Outside the way. In common law pleading, where the defendant in trespass pleaded a right of way in justification, and the replication alleged that the trespass was committed outside the limits of the way claimed, these were the technical words to be used.

Extra vires /ékstrə vəəriəz/. Beyond powers. See Ultra (Ultra vires).

Extra work. As used in connection with construction contract, means work done not required in performance of the contract, i.e., something done or furnished in addition to or in excess of the requirement of the contract. Work entirely outside and independent of contract—something not required or contemplated in its performance.

Extra work, for which a contractor is entitled to charge additional compensation, depends on construction of the original contract, and generally means only labor and materials not contemplated by or embraced in terms of the original contract. Trinity Builders, Inc. v. Schaff, N.D., 199 N.W.2d 914, 918. Such work is usually defined as being work not foreseen at time of entrance into contract. W. R. Ferguson, Inc. v. William A. Berbusse, Jr., Inc., Del.Super., 216 A.2d 876, 879. Materials and labor not contemplated by the contract, but which are required by changes in the plans and specifications made after the contract had been entered into, are “extra work”. Collins v. Hall, Tex.Civ.App., 161 S.W.2d 311, 314.

Extreme. At the utmost point, edge, or border; most remote. Last; conclusive. Greatest, highest, strongest, or the like. Immoderate; violent.

Extreme case. One in which the facts or the law or both reach the outer limits of probability; desperate.

Extreme cruelty. Extreme cruelty authorizing divorce may consist of personal injury or physical violence or it may be acts or omissions of such character as to destroy peace of mind or impair bodily or mental health of person upon whom inflicted or be such as to destroy the objects of matrimony. Schlueter v. Schlueter, 158 Neb. 233, 62 N.W.2d 871, 876.

Extreme low tide. Tides which are lower than lower low. State v. Edwards, 188 Wash. 467, 62 P.2d 1094, 1095.

Extremis /ɪnˈskstrɪmɪs/. When a person is sick, beyond the hope of recovery, and near death, he is said to be in extremis.

Extremis probatis, præsuntur media /skstrɪmɪs prəˈbiːdəs, prəˈziːˌməntər miˈliːdə/. Extremes being proved, intermediate things are presumed.

Extremity. The furthest point, section, or part. Limb of the body (hand or foot). Extreme danger or need. Desperate act or measure.
Extrinsic. Foreign; from outside sources; dehors. As to "Extrinsic fraud", see Fraud.

Grounds for quashing of indictment may be matters "intrinsc" to the pleading, as defects apparent upon its face. United States v. Frankfeld, D.C.D.C., 38 F.Supp. 1018, 1019.

Extrinsic ambiguity. In a written contract, such is an uncertainty which does not arise by the terms of the instrument itself, but is created by some collateral matter not appearing in the instrument. Pacific Indemnity Co. v. California Electric Works, 29 Cal. App.2d 260, 84 P.2d 313, 320.

Extrinsic evidence. External evidence, or that which is not contained in the body of an agreement, contract, and the like. Extrinsic evidence is also said to be evidence not legitimately before the tribunal in which the determination is made. See Parol evidence rule.

Ex turpi causa non oritur actio /eks tarpay koza non orydar eksh(y)ow/. Out of a base [illegal, or immoral] consideration, an action does [can] not arise.

Ex turpi contractu actio non oritur /eks tarpay kantraykchuw eksh(y)ow non orydar/. From an immoral or iniquitous contract an action does not arise. A contract founded upon an illegal or immoral consideration cannot be enforced by action.

Exuere patriam /agz(y)uwariy psetriyam/. To throw off or renounce one's country or native allegiance; to expatriate one's self.

Exulare /dgzaldriy/. In old English law, to exile or banish.

Nullus liber homo, exuletur, nisi, etc., no freeman shall be exiled, unless, etc.

Ex una parte /eks yuwna pardiy/. Of one part or side; on one side.

Ex uno discere omnes /eks yuwnow disiyz omniyz/. From one thing you can discern all.

Exuperare /egz(y)uwpardriy/. To overcome; to apprehend or take.

Ex utraque parte /eks yuwtraykwiy pardiy/. On both sides.

Ex utrique parentibus conjuncti /eks yuwtriskwiy parantbas kanjiktay/. Related on the side of both parents; of the whole blood.

Ex visceribus /eks vasehratos/. From the bowels. From the vital part, the very essence of the thing. Ex visceribus verborum, from the mere words and nothing else.

Ex visitatione Del /eks vizateyshiowynty diyay/. By the dispensation of God; by reason of physical incapacity. Anciently, when a prisoner, being arraigned, stood silent instead of pleading, a jury was impaneled to inquire whether he obstinately stood mute or was dumb ex visitatione Del.

Also by natural, as distinguished from violent, causes. When a coroner's inquest finds that the death was due to disease or other natural cause, it is frequently phrased "ex visitatione Del."

Ex vlsu scriptlonls /eks v&ysyuw skripshiydwnas/. From sight of the writing; from having seen a person write. A term employed to describe one of the modes of proof of handwriting.

Ex vi terminal /eks vay tarmay/. From or by the force of the term. From the very meaning of the expression used. 2 Bl.Comm. 109, 115.

Ex voluntate /eks volanteydiy/. Voluntarily; from free will or choice.

Ex warrants. A security is traded ex warrants when sold without warrants which have been retained by seller.

Eyde /eyd/. Aid; assistance; relief. A subsidy.

Eyewitness identification. Type of evidence by which one who has seen the event testifies as to the person or persons involved from his own memory of the event. See also Lineup.

Eygne /eyn/. The same as "eigne" (q.v.).

Eyre /er/. A journey; a court of itinerant justices.

Justice in eyre were judges commissioned in Anglo-Norman times in England to travel systematically through the kingdom, once in seven years, holding courts in specified places for the trial of certain descriptions of causes.

Eyrer /erar/. L. Fr. To travel or journey; to go about or itinerate.
F. Under the old English criminal law, this letter was branded upon felons upon their being admitted to clergy; as also upon those convicted of fights or frays, or falsity. Federal Reporter, First Series.

F.A.A. Federal Aviation Administration. In maritime insurance means: “Free of all average”, denoting that the insurance is against total loss only.

Fabrice /fæbrɪk/. In old English law, the making or coining of money.

Fabricare /fæbrɪkɛri/. Lat. To make. Used in old English law of a lawful coining, and also of an unlawful making or counterfeiting of coin. Used in an indictment for forging a bill of lading.

Fabricate. To invent; to devise falsely.

Fabricated evidence. Evidence manufactured or arranged after the fact, and either wholly false or else warped and discolored by artifice and contrivance with a deceitful intent. To fabricate evidence is to arrange or manufacture circumstances or indicia, after the fact committed, with the purpose of using them as evidence, and of deceitfully making them appear as if accidental or undesigned. To devise falsely or contrive by artifice with the intention to deceive. Such evidence may be wholly forged and artificial, or it may consist in so warping and distorting real facts as to create an erroneous impression in the minds of those who observe them and then presenting such impression as true and genuine. See also Fabricated fact.

Fabricated fact. In the law of evidence, a fact existing only in statement, without any foundation in truth. An actual or genuine fact to which a false appearance has been designedly given; a physical object placed in a false connection with another, or with a person on whom it is designed to cast suspicion. See also Decel; Fraud.

Fabric lands. In old English law, lands given towards the maintenance, rebuilding, or repairing of cathedral and other churches.

Fabula /fæbʊla/. In old European law, a contract or formal agreement; particularly used in the Lombardic and Visigothic laws to denote a marriage contract or a will.

Face. The surface of anything, especially the front, upper, or outer part or surface. That which particularly offers itself to the view of a spectator. The words of a written paper in their apparent or obvious meaning, as, the face of a note, bill, bond, check, draft, judgment record, or contract. The face of a judgment for which it was rendered exclusive of interest. Cunningham v. Great Southern Life Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 66 S.W.2d 765, 773.

Face amount. The face amount of an instrument is that shown by the mere language employed, and excludes any accrued interest. See Face of instrument; Face value.

Face amount insured by the policy. Within statute relating to extended life insurance, means the amount which is, in all events, payable under the policy as straight life insurance without regard to additional features such as accident or disability insurance. Wilkins v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 350 Mo. 185, 185 S.W.2d 856, 861, 862; Wilkins v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 236 Mo.App. 586, 159 S.W.2d 354, 356. See also Face of policy; Face value.

Face of instrument. That which is shown by the language employed, without any explanation, modification, or addition from extrinsic facts or evidence. Investors’ Syndicate v. Willcuts, D.C.Minn., 45 F.2d 900, 902. Thus, if the express terms of the paper disclose a fatal legal defect, it is said to be “void on its face.” Regarded as an evidence of debt, the face of an instrument is the principal sum which it expresses to be due or payable, without any additions in the way of interest or costs.

Face of judgment. The sum for which it was rendered, exclusive of interest.

Face of policy. A phrase which, as used in a statute forbidding life insurance policies to contain provision for any mode of settlement at maturity of less value than the amount insured on the “face of the policy,” does not mean merely the first page, but denotes the entire insurance contract contained in the policy, including a rider attached and referred to on the first page. See also Face value.

Face of record. The entire record in a case, not merely what the judgment recites. Every part of trial proceedings reserved in courts of record under direction of court for purpose of its records. Permian Oil Co. v. Smith, 129 Tex. 413, 107 S.W.2d 564, 566. The “face of the record” means, in a criminal case, the indictment and the verdict. See also Record.
F. Under the old English criminal law, this letter was branded upon felons upon their being admitted to clergy; as also upon those convicted of fights or frays, or falsity.

F.A.A. See Federal Aviation Administration. In maritime insurance means: "Free of all average", denoting that the insurance is against total loss only.

Fabrica /fæbraka/. In old English law, the making or coining of money.

Fabricare /fæbrakəri/. Lat. To make. Used in old English law of a lawful coining, and also of an unlawful making or counterfeiting of coin. Used in an indictment for forging a bill of lading.

Fabricate. To invent; to devise falsely. See also Counterfeit; Forgery.

Fabricated evidence. Evidence manufactured or arranged after the fact, and either wholly false or else warped and discolored by artifice and contrivance with a deceitful intent. To fabricate evidence is to arrange or manufacture circumstances or indicia, after the fact committed, with the purpose of using them as evidence, and of deceitfully making them appear as if accidental or undesigned. To devise falsely or contrive by artifice with the intention to deceive. Such evidence may be wholly forged and artificial, or it may consist in so warping and distorting real facts as to create an erroneous impression in the minds of those who observe them and then presenting such impression as true and genuine. See also Fabricated fact; Perjury.

Fabricated fact. In the law of evidence, a fact existing only in statement, without any foundation in truth. An actual or genuine fact to which a false appearance has been designedly given; a physical object placed in a false connection with another, or with a person on whom it is designed to cast suspicion. See also Deceit; False fact; Fraud; Perjury.

Fabric land. In old English law, lands given towards the maintenance, rebuilding, or repairing of cathedral and other churches.

Fabula /fæbula/. In old European law, a contract or formal agreement; particularly used in the Lombardic and Visigothic laws to denote a marriage contract or a will.

Face. The surface of anything, especially the front, upper, or outer part or surface. That which particularly offers itself to the view of a spectator. The words of a written paper in their apparent or obvious meaning, as, the face of a note, bill, bond, check, draft, judgment record, or contract. The face of a judgment for which it was rendered exclusive of interest. Cunningham v. Great Southern Life Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 66 S.W.2d 765, 773.

Face amount. The face amount of an instrument is that shown by the mere language employed, and excludes any accrued interest. See Face of instrument; Face value.

Face amount insured by the policy. Within statute relating to extended life insurance, means the amount which is, in all events, payable under the policy as straight life insurance without regard to additional features such as accident or disability insurance. Wilkins v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 350 Mo. 185, 165 S.W.2d 858, 861, 862. See also Face of policy; Face value.

Face of instrument. That which is shown by the language employed, without any explanation, modification, or addition from extrinsic facts or evidence. Investors' Syndicate v. Willcuts, D.C.Minn., 45 F.2d 900, 902. Thus, if the express terms of the paper disclose a fatal legal defect, it is said to be "void on its face." Regarded as an evidence of debt, the face of an instrument is the principal sum which it expresses to be due or payable, without any additions in the way of interest or costs. See also Face value.

Face of judgment. The sum for which it was rendered, exclusive of interest.

Face of policy. A phrase which, as used in a statute forbidding life insurance policies to contain provision for any mode of settlement at maturity of less value than the amount insured on the "face of the policy," does not mean merely the first page, but denotes the entire insurance contract contained in the policy, including a rider attached and referred to on the first page. See also Face value.

Face of record. The entire record in a case, not merely what the judgment recites. Every part of trial proceedings reserved in courts of record under direction of court for purpose of its records. Permian Oil Co. v. Smith, 129 Tex. 413, 107 S.W.2d 564, 566. The "face of the record" means, in a criminal case, the indictment and the verdict. See also Record.
Face value. The value of an insurance policy, bond, note, mortgage, or other security, as given on the certificate or instrument, payable upon maturity of the instrument. The face value is also the amount on which interest or coupon payments are calculated. Thus, a 10% bond with face value of $1000 pays bondholders $100 per year. Face value is also often referred to as the par value or nominal value of the instrument. The value which can be ascertained from the language of the instrument without aid from extrinsic facts or evidence. Investors' Syndicate v. Willeuts, D.C.Min., 45 F.2d 900, 902. See also Face amount. Compare Market value.

Facial disfigurement. That which impairs or injures the beauty, symmetry, or appearance of a person. That which renders unsightly, misshapen or imperfect or deforms in some manner. Ferguson v. State Highway Department, 197 S.C. 520, 15 S.E.2d 775, 778.

Facias /fēys(h)i(y)as/. That you cause.

Occurring in the phrases “scire facias” (that you cause to know), “fieri facias” (that you cause to be made), etc. Used also in the phrases Do ut facias (I give that you may do), Facio ut facias (I do that you may do), two of the four divisions of considerations made by Blackstone, 2 Comm. 444. See Facio ut des; Facio ut facias.

Face. See Facies.

Faciendo /fēys(h)i(y)endow/. In doing or paying; in some activity.

Facies /fēys(h)i(y)i/. Lat. The face or countenance; the exterior appearance or view; hence, contemplation or study of a thing on its external or apparent side. Thus, prima facie means at the first inspection, on a preliminary or exterior scrutiny. When we speak of a "prima facie case," we mean one which, on its own showing, on a first examination, or without investigating any alleged defenses, is apparently good and maintainable.

Facilitate. To free from difficulty or impediment. Pon Wing Quong v. United States, C.C.A.Cal., 111 F.2d 751, 756. Within statute prohibiting use of facilities of interstate commerce with intent to promote, manage, facilitate, or carry on unlawful activity means to make easy or less difficult. U.S. v. Judkins, C.A.Tenn., 428 F.2d 333, 335. See also Facilitation; Facilities.

Facilitation. In criminal law, the act of making it easier for another to commit crime; e.g., changing of cars to evade police officer who has suspect under surveillance and thus to enable a clandestine transfer of contraband to take place would constitute "facilitation" within forfeiture statute. U. S. v. One (1) Chevrolet Corvette Auto. Serial No. 194371S121113, C.A.Fla., 496 F.2d 210, 212. See also Accomplice; Aid and abet.

Facilities. That which promotes the ease of any action, operation, transaction, or course of conduct. The term normally denotes inanimate means rather than human agencies, though it may also include animate beings such as persons, people and groups thereof. Cheney v. Tolliver, 234 Ark. 973, 356 S.W.2d 636, 638.

A name formerly given to certain notes of some of the banks in the state of Connecticut, which were made payable in two years after the close of the war of 1812. Springfield Bank v. Merrick, 14 Mass. 322.

Facility. Something that is built or installed to perform some particular function, but it also means something that promotes the ease of any action or course of conduct. Raynor v. American Heritage Life Ins. Co., 123 Ga.App. 247, 180 S.E.2d 248, 250. See also Facilities.

Facinus quos inquinat aequat /fāsenas kwēws īŋkwat/. Guilt makes equal those whom it stains.

Facio ut des /fēys(h)i(y)ow ē diyz/. Lat. I do that you may give. A species of contract in the civil law (being one of the innominate contracts) which occurs when a man agrees to perform anything for a price either specifically mentioned or left to the determination of the law to set a value on it; as when a servant hires himself to his master for certain wages or an agreed sum of money. 2 Bl.Comm. 445. Also, the consideration of that species of contract.

Facio ut facias /fēys(h)i(y)ow ē fēys(h)i(y)as/. Lat. I do that you may do. The consideration of that species of contract in the civil law, or the contract itself (being one of the innominate contracts), which occurs when I agree with a man to do his work for him if he will do mine for me; or if two persons agree to marry together, or to do any other positive acts on both sides; or it may be to forbear on one side in consideration of something done on the other. 2 Bl.Comm. 444.

Facsimile /fāksimil/. An exact copy, preserving all the marks of the original.

Facsimile signature. One which has been prepared and reproduced by some mechanical or photographic process. Many states have adopted the Uniform Facsimile Signatures of Public Officials Act.

Fact. A thing done; an action performed or an incident transpiring; an event or circumstance; an actual occurrence; an actual happening in time or space or an event mental or physical; that which has taken place. City of South Euclid v. Clapacs, 6 Ohio Misc. 101, 213 N.E.2d 828, 832. A fact is either a state of things, that is, an existence, or a motion, that is, an event. The quality of being actual; actual existence or occurrence.
Evidence. A circumstance, event or occurrence as it actually takes or took place; a physical object or appearance, as it usually exists or existed. An actual and absolute reality, as distinguished from mere supposition or opinion. A truth, as distinguished from fiction or error. "Fact" means reality of events or things the actual occurrence or existence of which is to be determined by evidence. Peoples v. Peoples, 10 N.C.App. 402, 179 S.E.2d 138, 141. Under Rule of Civil Procedure 41(b), providing for motion for dismissal at close of plaintiff's evidence in nonjury case on ground that upon the facts and the law plaintiff has shown no right to relief, the "facts" referred to are the prima facie facts shown by plaintiff's evidence viewed in light most favorable to him. Schad v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, C.C.A.Pa., 136 F.2d 991, 993.

Fact and law distinguished. "Fact" is very frequently used in opposition or contrast to "law". Thus, questions of fact are for the jury; questions of law for the court. E.g. fraud in fact consists in an actual intention to defraud, carried into effect; while fraud imputed by law arises from the person's conduct in its necessary relations and consequences. A "fact", as distinguished from the "law", may be taken as that out of which all the point of law arises, that which is asserted to be or not to be, and is to be presumed or proved to be or not to be for the purpose of applying or refusing to apply a rule of law. Hinckley v. Town of Barnstable, 311 Mass. 600, 42 N.E.2d 581, 584. Law is a principle; fact is an event. Law is conceived; fact is actual. Law is a rule of duty; fact is that which has been according to or in contravention of the rule. See E.g. Fact question.

See also Adjudicative facts; Collateral facts; Dispositive facts; Evidentiary facts; Fabricated fact; Fact question; Finding (Finding of fact); Material fact; Principal (Principal fact); Ultimate facts.

Facta /fækta/. In old English law, deeds. Facta armorum, deeds or feats of arms; that is, jousts or tournaments.

Facta sunt potentiora verbis /fækta sānt potenʃiərə vərˈbiːs/. Deeds [or facts] are more powerful than words.

Facta tenent multa quae fieri probihentur /fækta tənənt muːltə kwə ˈfɪərɪ ˈprɒbɪhəntʊɾə/. Deeds contain many things which are prohibited to be done.

Fact finder. Person or persons appointed by business, government, or by court to investigate, hear testimony from witnesses, or otherwise determine and report facts concerning a particular event, situation, or dispute (e.g., jury; administrative hearing officer). See also Trier of fact.

Fact finding board. A group or committee appointed by business, labor organization, government, or similar body to investigate and report facts concerning some event or situation.

Factio testamenti /fækʃiʊ(ʊ)ə tésˈtemənti/. In the civil law, the right, power, or capacity of making a will; called "factio activa."

The right or capacity of taking by will; called "factio passiva."

Fact material to risk. See Material fact.

Facto /fæktoʊ/. In fact; by an act; by the act or fact. Ipso facto, by the act itself; by the mere effect of a fact, without anything superadded, or any proceeding upon it to give it effect.

Facto et animo /fæktoʊ et ænˈməʊʊ/. In fact and intent.

Factor. At common law, a commercial agent, employed by a principal to sell merchandise consigned to him for that purpose, for and in behalf of the principal, but usually in his own name, being entrusted with the possession and control of the goods, and being remunerated by a commission, commonly called "factorage." A commercial agent to whom the possession of personality is entrusted by or for the owner, to be sold, for a compensation, in pursuance of the agent's usual trade or business, with title to goods remaining in principal and the "factor" being merely a bailee for the purposes of the agency. Neild v. District of Columbia, 71 App.D.C. 306, 110 F.2d 246, 259.

A firm (typically a finance company) that purchases a firm's receivables at a discount and is responsible for processing and collecting the balances of these accounts. Financier who generally lends money and takes in return an assignment of accounts receivable or some other security. In re Freeman, C.A.N.J., 294 F.2d 126, 129, 131. See Factoring.

See also Commission merchant; Jobber.

Any circumstance or influence which brings about or contributes to a result such as a factor of production.

Broker and factor distinguished. A factor differs from a "broker" in that he is entrusted with the possession, management, and control of the goods (which gives him a special property in them); while a broker acts as a mere intermediary without control or possession of the property. A factor may buy and sell in his own name, as well as in that of the principal, while a broker, as such, cannot ordinarily buy or sell in his own name.

Factorage /fækərɪdʒ/ The wages, allowance, or commission paid to a factor for his services. The business of a factor.

Factoring. Sale of accounts receivable of a firm to a factor at a discounted price. The purchase of accounts receivable from a business by a factor who thereby assumes the risk of loss in return for some agreed discount. Manhattan Factoring Corp. v. Orsburn, 238 Ark. 947, 385 S.W.2d 785, 790. See Factor.

Factorizing process. A process by which the effects of a debtor are attached in the hands of a third person. More commonly termed "trustee process", "garnishment", and process by "foreign attachment".

Factors' acts. The name given to several English statutes (6 Geo. IV, c. 94; 5 & 6 Vict., c. 39; 40 & 41 Vict., c. 39) by which a factor was enabled to make a valid pledge of the goods, or of any part thereof, to one who believed him to be the bona fide owner of the goods. Similar legislation is not uncommon in the United States.

Factor's lien. The right (usually provided by statute) of a factor to keep possession of his principal's merchandise until the latter has settled his account with him.

Factory acts. Laws enacted for the purpose of regulating the hours of work, and the health and safety conditions. See e.g. Fair Labor Standards Act; Occupational Safety and Health Act; Wage and hour laws.

Factory prices. The prices at which goods may be bought at the factories, as distinguished from the prices of goods bought in the market after they have passed into the hands of wholesalers or retailers.

Fact question. Those issues in a trial or hearing which concern facts or events and whether such occurred and how they occurred as contrasted with issues and questions of law. Fact questions are for the jury, unless the issues are presented at a bench trial, while law questions are decided by the judge. Fact questions and their findings are generally not appealable though rulings of law are subject to appeal.

Facts. See Fact.

Facts incomplete. A certificate of trial judge to bill of exceptions not certifying to correctness of any recital therein and only certifying that the bill is “facts incomplete”, that is, not finished, not perfect, defective, verifies nothing and brings nothing before the Court of Appeals for review. Loving v. Kamm, Ohio App., 34 N.E.2d 691.

Facts in issue. Those matters of fact on which the plaintiff proceeds by his action, and which the defendant controverts in his defense. Under civil rule practice in the federal courts, and in most state courts, the facts alleged in the initial complaint are usually quite brief, with the development of additional facts being left to discovery and pretrial conference.

Civil law. Fact; a fact; a matter of fact, as distinguished from a matter of law.

French law. A memoir which contains concisely set down the fact on which a contest has happened, the means on which a party founds his pretensions, with the refutation of the means of the adverse party.

Old English law. A deed; a person's act and deed. A culpable or criminal act; an act not founded in law. Anything stated or made certain; a deed of conveyance; a written instrument under seal: called, also, charta. 2 Bl.Comm. 295. A fact; a circumstance; particularly a fact in evidence. Factum probandum (the fact to be proved).

Old European law. A portion or allotment of land; otherwise called a hide, bovata, etc.

Testamentary law. The execution or due execution of a will. The factum of an instrument means not merely the signing of it, and the formal publication or delivery, but proof that the party well knew and understood the contents thereof, and did give, will, dispose, and do, in all things, as in the said will is contained. Weatherhead's Lessee v. Baskerville, 52 U.S. (11 How.) 329, 13 L.Ed. 717.

Factum a judice quod ad ejus officium non spectat non ratum est /fék̂tam ʿey jiyawdiy, kwōd ʿed iyjas ʿifsh(i)yam nōn špēktet, nōn réŷtam ēšt/. An action of a judge which relates not to his office is of no force.

Factum cuique suum non adversario, nocere debet /fék̂tam ʿiyuwaʃ(y)iwiy s(y)lwam nōn advəršəriyow, nəsəriy débət/. A party’s own act should prejudice himself, not his adversary.

Factum infectum fieri nequitt /fék̂tam ʿəʃfék̂tam fəyoray nēkwat/. A thing done cannot be undone.

Factum juridicum /fék̂tam jərɪdakəm/. A juridical fact. Denotes one of the factors or elements constituting an obligation.

Factum negantis nulla probatio sit /fék̂tam ənɡəʃtəs nəʃələ prəbaʃ(i)yow sít/. There is no proof incumbent upon him who denies a fact.

"Factum" non dicitur quod non perseverat /fék̂tam nōn diʃtər kwōd nōn pərəʃvrət/. That is not called a “deed” which does not continue operative. That is not said to be done which does not last.

Factum probandum /fék̂tam prəbəndəm/. Lat. In the law of evidence, the fact to be proved; a fact which is in issue, and to which evidence is to be directed.

Factum probans /fék̂tam prəbənˈzən/. A probative or evidentiary fact; a subsidiary or connected fact tending to prove the principal fact in issue; a piece of circumstantial evidence.

Factum unius alteri noceri non debet /fék̂tam yanəsəri nən débət/. The deed of one should not hurt another.

Facultas probationum non est angustanda /fəkəltəs probəʃiəwənəm nōn əst əŋəstəndə/. The power of proofs [right of offering or giving testimony] is not to be narrowed.

Facultative compensation /fəkəltəˈtētəv komponˈsəɣəʃən/. That which operates by the will of the parties, when one of them removes an obstacle preventing compensation, resulting from the dispositions of the law.

Facultative reinsurance /fəkəltəˈtētəv rɪəˈʃənərsən/. Under type designated "facultative", the reinsurer has the option of accepting the tendered part of the original insurer’s risk. Lincoln Nat. Life Ins. Co. v. State Tax Commission, 196 Miss. 82, 16 So.2d 369.

Faculties /fəkəltəˈtiz/. Abilities; powers; capabilities. In the law of divorce, the capability of the husband to render a support to the wife in the form of alimony, whether temporary or permanent, including not only his tangible property, but also his income and his ability to earn money. See Allegation of faculties.

Faculties, Court of. In English ecclesiastical law, a jurisdiction or tribunal belonging to the archbishop. It Fault, negligence, or refusal. Fail short; be unsuccessful. In Saxon law, malice; open and deadly hostility; deadly feud. The word designated the enmity bet. between the family of a murdered man and that of his murderer, which was recognized, among the Teutonic peoples, as justification for vengeance taken by any one of the former upon any one of the latter.

Failing circumstances. Insolvency, that is, the lack of sufficient assets to pay one’s debts as they become due. A person (or a corporation or institution) is said to be in failing circumstances when he is about to fail, that is, when he is actually insolvent and is acting in contemplation of giving up his business because he is unable to carry it on.

A bank is in "failing circumstances" when, from any cause, it is unable to pay its debts in the ordinary or usual course of business, Sanders v. Owens, Mo.App., 47 S.W.2d 132, 134; when it is in a state of uncertainty as to whether it will be able to sustain itself, depending on favorable or unfavorable contingencies, over which its officers have no control. Graf v. Allen, 230 Mo.App. 721, 74 S.W.2d 61, 66. See also Bankruptcy; Failure to meet obligations.

Failing company. Doctrine which makes the Clayton Act section on the acquisition of a competitor's assets inapplicable to the acquisition of a competitor which is in such financial straits that termination of the enterprise seems inevitable. Erie Sand & Gravel Co. v. F.T.C., C.A., 291 F.2d 279, 280. In order for this doctrine to be applicable, to permit a corporate merger or acquisition otherwise proscribed under the Clayton Act, it must be demonstrated that the failing company was bankrupt or on the brink of bankruptcy. U.S. v. Reed Roller Bit Co., D.C.Okl., 274 F.Supp. 573, 584.

Faiolie /fayoly/ In French law, bankruptcy; failure; the situation of a debtor who finds himself unable to fulfill his engagements.

Failure. Abandonment or defeat. Failure of duty or obligation. Lapse. Deficiency, want, or lack; ineffectualness; inefficiency as measured by some legal standard; an unsuccessful attempt. See also Fail; Lapse.

Failure of consideration. As applied to notes, contracts, conveyances, etc., this term does not necessarily mean a want of consideration, but implies that a consideration, originally existing and good, has since become worthless or has ceased to exist or been extinguished, partially or entirely. It means that sufficient consideration was contemplated by the parties at time contract was entered into, but either on account of some innate defect in the thing to be given or nonperformance in whole or in part of that which the promisee agreed to do or forbear nothing of value can be or is received by the promisee. Holcomb v. Long Beach Inv. Co., 129 Cal. App. 285, 19 P.2d 31, 36. Such consists of neglect, refusal, or failure of one of the parties to perform or furnish agreed-upon consideration: Royal Typewriter Co., a Div. of Litton Business Systems, Inc. v. Xerographic Supplies Corp., C.A.Fla., 719 F.2d 1092, 1107.

Failure of evidence. See Failure of proof.

Failure of good behavior. As enumerated in statute as ground for removal of a civil service employee, means behavior contrary to recognized standards of propriety and morality, misconduct or wrong conduct. State ex rel. Ashbaugh v. Bahr, 68 Ohio App. 308, 40 N.E.2d 677, 680, 682.
Failure of issue. Dying without children. The failure at a fixed time, or the total extinction, of issue to take an estate limited over by an executory devise. A definite failure of issue is when a precise time is fixed by the will for the failure of issue, as in the case where there is a devise to one, but if he dies without issue or lawful issue living at the time of his death, etc. An indefinite failure of issue is the period when the issue or descendants of the first taker shall become extinct, and when there is no longer any issue of the issue of the grantee, without reference to any particular time or any particular event. See also Dying without issue.

Failure of justice. The defeat of a particular right, or the failure of reparation for a particular wrong, from the lack or inadequacy of a legal remedy for the enforcement of the one or the redress of the other. The term is also colloquially applied to the miscarriage of justice which occurs when the result of a trial is so palpably wrong as to shock the moral sense. See also Miscarriage of justice.

Failure of proof. Inability or failure to prove the cause of action or defense in its entire scope and meaning. Breslin-Griffitt Carpet Co. v. Asadorian, Mo.App., 145 S.W.2d 494, 496. Where evidence is such as would support either of two contradictory inferences, or presumptions, respecting the ultimate facts, there is a "failure of proof". Muesenfechter v. St. Louis Car Co., Mo.App., 139 S.W.2d 1102, 1106. See Directed verdict; Failure to state cause of action; Non obstante veredicto; Summary judgment.

Failure of record. Failure of the defendant to produce a record which he has alleged and relied on in his plea.

Failure of title. The inability or failure of a vendor to make good title to the whole or a part of the property which he has contracted to sell. See also Cloud on title; Curing title; Marketable title.

Failure of trust. The lapsing or nonefficiency of a proposed trust, by reason of the defect or insufficiency of the deed or instrument creating it, or on account of illegality, indefiniteness, or other legal impediment.

Failure otherwise than upon merits. Phrase imports some action by court by which plaintiff is defeated without a trial upon the merits; e.g. judgment on pleadings, summary judgment.

Failure to bargain collectively. An employer's refusal to discuss with union, as employees' bargaining agency, questions involving conditions of employment and interpretation of contract constitutes "failure to bargain collectively" with union. Rapid Roller Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, C.C.A.7, 126 F.2d 452, 459.

Failure to make delivery. Miscarry or nondelivery. This phrase is fully adequate to cover all cases where delivery has not been made as required. Georgia, F. & A. Ry. Co. v. Blish Milling Co., 241 U.S. 190, 36 S.Ct. 541, 543, 60 L.Ed. 948.

Failure to meet obligations. Inability or failure to pay debts as due. For example, bank's failure to pay depositors on demand constitutes "failure to meet obligations" in most cases. Where bank closed its doors and ceased to transact business or make transfers of capital stock, and thereafter ordinary deposits could not be drawn out and checks in process of collection were dishonored, returned unpaid, was "failure to meet obligations". State of Ohio ex rel. Squire v. Union Trust Co. of Pittsburgh, 137 Pa.Super. 75, 8 A.2d 476, 480. See also Bankruptcy; Failing circumstances; Insolvency.

Failure to perform. As regards reciprocal promises, allegation of defendant's "failure to perform" when demanded is equivalent to allegation of "refusal to perform," unless performance by plaintiff is condition precedent to cause of action. Brooks v. Scoville, 81 Utah 163, 17 P.2d 218, 220.

Failure to state cause of action. Failure of the plaintiff to allege sufficient facts in the complaint to maintain action. In other words, even if the plaintiff proved all the facts alleged in the complaint, the facts would not establish a cause of action entitling the plaintiff to recover against the defendant. The motion to dismiss for failure to state a cause of action is sometimes referred to as (a) a demurrer (e.g. California) or (b) a failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b). See also Directed verdict; Summary judgment.

Failure to testify. In a criminal trial, defendant is not required to testify and such failure may not be commented on by judge or prosecution because of protection of Fifth Amendment, U.S.Const. Griffin v. California, 380 U.S. 609, 85 S.Ct. 1229, 14 L.Ed.2d 106. See also Self-incrimination.

Faint (or feigned) action. In old English practice, an action was so called where the party bringing it had no title to recover, although the words of the writ were true. See also Feigned action.

Faint pleader. A fraudulent, false, or collusive manner of pleading to the deception of a third person.

Fair. Having the qualities of impartiality and honesty; free from prejudice, favoritism, and self-interest; just; equitable; even-handed; equal, as between conflicting interests. See also Equitable; Reasonable.

A gathering of buyers and sellers for purposes of exhibiting and sale of goods; usually accompanied by amusements, contests, entertainment, and the like.

In England, a greater species of market; a privileged market. It is an incorporeal hereditament, granted by royal patent, or established by prescription presupposing a grant from the crown. A public mart or place of buying or selling. 1 Bl.Comm. 274. In the earlier English law, the franchise to hold a fair conferred certain important privileges; and fairs, as legally recognized institutions, possessed distinctive legal characteristics. Most of these privileges and characteristics, however, are now obsolete. In America, fairs, in the ancient technical sense, are unknown, and, in the modern and popular sense, they are entirely voluntary and nonlegal, and transactions arising in or in connection with them are subject to the ordinary rules governing sales, etc.
Fair and impartial jury. Jury chosen to hear evidence and render verdict without any fixed opinion concerning the guilt, innocence or liability of defendant. Means that every member of the jury must be a fair and impartial juror. City of San Antonio v. McKenzie Const. Co., 136 Tex. 915, 150 S.W.2d 989, 993. Denotes jurors who are not only fair and impartial, but also qualified. See also Fair and impartial trial; impartial jury.

Fair and impartial trial. A hearing by an impartial and disinterested tribunal; a proceeding which hears before it condemns, which proceeds upon inquiry, and renders judgment only after trial consideration of evidence and facts as a whole. A basic constitutional guarantee contained implicitly in the Due Process Clause of Fourteenth Amendment, U.S. Constitution.

One where accused’s legal rights are safeguarded and respected. Raney v. Commonwealth, 287 Ky. 492, 153 S.W.2d 935, 937, 938. A fair and impartial trial by a jury of one’s peers contemplates counsel to look after one’s defense, compulsory attendance of witnesses, if need be, and a reasonable time in the light of all prevailing circumstances to investigate, properly prepare, and present the defense. One wherein defendant is permitted to be represented by counsel and neither witnesses nor counsel are intimidated. One wherein no undue advantage is taken by the district attorney or any one else. People v. Nationwide News Service, 172 Misc. 752, 16 N.Y.S.2d 277, 279. One wherein witnesses of litigants are permitted to testify under rules of court within proper bounds of judicial discretion, and under law governing testimony of witnesses with right in parties to testify, if qualified, and of counsel to be heard. It requires that the jury chosen to sit in judgment shall have no fixed opinion concerning the guilt or innocence of one on trial. Lane v. Warden, Md. Penitentiary, C.A.Md., 320 F.2d 179, 185. There must not only be fair and impartial jury, and learned and upright judge, but there should be atmosphere of calm in which witnesses can deliver their testimony without fear and intimidation, in which attorneys can assert accused’s rights freely and fully, and in which the truth may be received and given credence without fear of violence. Raney v. Commonwealth, 287 Ky. 492, 153 S.W.2d 935, 937, 938. See also Impartial jury.

Fair and proper legal assessment. Such as places the value of property on a fair, equal, and uniform basis with other property of like character and value throughout the county and state. See also Equalization.

Fair and reasonable value. See Fair market value; Fair value; Just compensation.

Fair and valuable consideration. One which is a substantial compensation for the property conveyed, or which is reasonable, in view of the surrounding circumstances and conditions and market value of comparable properties in same vicinity, in contradistinction to an inadequate consideration. Lucas v. Coker, 189 Okl. 95, 113 P.2d 589, 590. See also Adequate Consideration; Fair consideration; Fair market value; Fair value; Just compensation.

Fair cash market value. Terms "cash market value", "fair market value", "reasonable market value" or "fair cash market value" are substantially synonymous. Fort Worth & D. N. Ry. Co. v. Sugg, Tex.Civ.App., 68 S.W.2d 570, 572.

Fair cash value. The phrase is practically synonymous with "reasonable value," "fair market value," and "actual cash value," meaning the fair or reasonable cash price for which the property can be sold on the market. Fair cash value for property tax purposes is interpreted as meaning "fair market value" or price that property would bring at a sale where both parties are willing, ready and able to do business and under no duress to do so. Consolidation Coal Co. v. Property Tax Appeal Bd. of Dept. of Local Government Affairs, 29 Ill.App.3d 465, 331 N.E.2d 122, 126. The price which someone will pay for it in open market. See also Fair market value; Fair value; Just compensation.

Fair comment. A form of qualified privilege applied to news media publications relating to discussion of matters which are of legitimate concern to the community as a whole because they materially affect the interests of all the community. Phoenix Newspapers, Inc. v. Church, 103 Ariz. 582, 447 P.2d 840, 853. A term used in the defense of libel actions, applying to statements made by a writer (e.g., news media) in an honest belief of their truth, relating to official acts, even though the statements are not true in fact.

Defense of "fair comment" is not destroyed by circumstance that jury may believe that the comment is logically unsound, but it suffices that a reasonable person may honestly entertain such opinion, on facts found. Cohalan v. New York Tribune, 172 Misc. 20, 15 N.Y.S.2d 58, 60, 61. Fair comment must be based on facts truly stated, must not contain imputations of corrupt or dishonorable motives except as warranted by the facts, and must be honest expression of writer’s real opinion. Hall v. Binghamton Press Co., 263 App.Div. 403, 33 N.Y.S.2d 840, 848. See also Fairness or equal time doctrine.

Fair competition. Open, equitable, just competition, which is fair as between competitors and as between any of them and his customers. See Antitrust acts; Clayton Act; Price-fixing; Sherman Antitrust Act.

Fair consideration. A fair equivalent. One which, under all the circumstances, is honest, reasonable, and free from suspicion. Full and adequate consideration. Good-faith satisfaction of an antecedent debt. One which fairly represents the value of the property transferred. One which is not disproportionate to the value of the property conveyed. A term of fraudulent conveyance law describing whatever is given in exchange for a conveyance of debtor’s property whenever the exchange involves property or other things having substantially equivalent values. See also Adequate consideration; Fair cash value; Fair market value; Fair value; Just compensation.

Fair Credit Reporting Acts. Federal Act. This law represents the first Federal regulation of the vast consumer reporting industry, covering all credit bureaus, investigative reporting companies, detective and collection agencies, lenders’ exchanges, and computerized information reporting companies. The purpose of this Act is to insure that consumer reporting activities are conducted in a manner that is fair and equitable to the affected consumer, upholding his right to privacy as against the informational demands of others. The consumer is given several important rights, including the right to notice of reporting activities, the right to access to information contained in consumer reports, and the right to correction of erroneous information that may have been the basis for a denial of credit, insurance, or employment. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1681 et seq. See also Consumer reporting agency.

State Acts. Typical state acts cover consumer’s rights against credit investigatory agencies; prohibit reporting of obsolete information; require that person giving credit disclose to consumer that report is being obtained, and require reporting agency to make copy available to consumer.

Fair Debt Collection Practices Act. Federal act, the purpose of which is to eliminate abusive debt collection practices by debt collectors, to insure that those debt collectors who refrain from using abusive debt collection practices are not competitively disadvantaged, and to promote consistent state action to protect consumers against debt collection abuses. This act also applies to debt collection practices of attorneys. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1692(e). Most states also have statutes regulating debt collection practices.

Fair equivalent. As used in statute providing that fair consideration is given for property exchanged at fair equivalent means value at time of conveyance. “Equivalent” means equal in worth or value; “fair” means equitable as a basis for exchange; reasonable; a fair value.

Fair hearing. One in which authority is fairly exercised; that is, consistently with the fundamental principles of justice embraced within the conception of due process of law. Contemplated in a fair hearing is the right to present evidence, to cross examine, and to have findings supported by evidence. See e.g. APA, 5 U.S.C.A. § 556.

Statutes and regulations establish procedures to assure fair hearings for various types of administrative proceedings. For example, fair hearing of an alien’s right to enter the United States means a hearing before the immigration officers in accordance with the fundamental principles that inhere in due process of law, and implies that alien shall not only have a fair opportunity to present evidence in his favor, but shall be apprised of the evidence against him, so that at the conclusion of the hearing he may be in a position to know all of the evidence on which the matter is to be decided; it being not enough that the immigration officials meant to be fair.

See also Fair and impartial trial.

Fair knowledge or skill. A reasonable degree of knowledge or measure of skill.

Fair Labor Standards Act. Federal Act (1938) which set a minimum standard wage (periodically increased by later statutes) and a maximum work week of 40 hours in industries engaged in interstate commerce. Such Act also regulates hours of work, and type of work, that can be performed by teen-agers. The Act created the Wage and Hour Division in the Department of Labor. 29 U.S.C.A. § 201 et seq. See also Child labor laws; Minimum wage; Wage and hour laws.

Fair market price. See Fair market value.

Fair market value. The amount at which property would change hands between a willing buyer and a willing seller, neither being under any compulsion to buy or sell and both having reasonable knowledge of the relevant facts. By fair market value is meant the price in cash, or its equivalent, that the property would have brought at the time of taking, considering its highest and most profitable use, if then offered for sale in the open market, in competition with other similar properties at or near the location of the property taken, with a reasonable time allowed to find a purchaser. State, by Commissioner of Transp. v. Cooper Alloy Corp., 136 N.J.Super. 560, 347 A.2d 365, 368. Fair market value is the price that the asset would bring by bona fide bargaining between well-informed buyers and sellers at the date of acquisition. Usually the fair market price will be the price at which bona fide sales have been consummated for assets of like type, quality, and quantity in a particular market at the time of acquisition. The amount of money which purchaser who is willing but not obligated to buy would pay owner who is willing but not obligated to sell, taking into consideration all uses to which the land is adapted and might in reason be applied. Arkansas State Highway Commission v. DeLaughter, 250 Ark. 990, 468 S.W.2d 242, 247.

Synonymous or identical terms are: Actual cash value, Stiles v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A. Fla., 69 F.2d 951, 952; actual value, Appeals of Matson, 152 Pa.Super. 424, 33 A.2d 464, 465; cash market value, West Texas Hotel Co. v. City of El Paso, Tex.Civ.App., 83 S.W.2d 772, 775; fair cash market value, Housing Authority of Birmingham Dist. v. Title Guarantee Loan & Trust Co., 243 Ala. 157, 8 So.2d 835, 837; fair cash

See also Fair value.

Fairness or equal time doctrine. This doctrine imposes affirmative responsibilities on the broadcaster to provide coverage of issues of public importance which is adequate and which fairly reflects differing viewpoints. In fulfilling its “Fairness Doctrine” obligations, broadcaster must provide free time for the presentation of opposing views if a paid sponsor is unavailable and must initiate programming on public issues if no one else seeks to do so. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc. v. Democratic National Committee, Dist.Col., 412 U.S. 94, 93 S.Ct. 2080, 2089, 36 L.Ed.2d 772. Refers to section of Federal Communications Act which provides that major advocates of both sides of political and public issues should be given fair or equal opportunity to broadcast their viewpoints. 47 U.S.C.A. § 315. See also Equal Time Act.

Fair on its face. A tax deed “fair on its face,” is one which cannot be shown to be illegal without extraneous evidence. Denny v. Stevens, 52 Wyo. 253, 73 P.2d 308, 310. A process fair on its face does not mean that it proceeds from a court, magistrate, or body having authority of law to issue process of that nature and which is legal in form and on its face contains nothing to notify or fairly apprise the officer that it is issued without authority.

Fair persuasion. Argument, exhortation, or entreaty addressed to a person without threat of physical harm or economic loss, or persistent molestation or harassment or material and fraudulent misrepresentations. City of Reno v. Second Judicial District Court in and for Washoe County, 59 Nev. 416, 96 P.2d 994, 998.

Fair play. Equity, justice and decency in dealings with another. See Equity.

Fair pleader. See Beaulpleader.

Fair preponderance of evidence. Evidence sufficient to create in the minds of the triers of fact the conviction that the party upon whom is the burden has established its case. The greater and weightier evidence; the more convincing evidence. Belmont Hotel v. New Jersey Title Guaranty & Trust Co., 22 N.J.Misc. 261, 37 A.2d 681, 682. Such a superiority of evidence on one side that the fact of its outweighing the evidence on the other side can be perceived if the whole evidence is fairly considered. Such evidence as when weighed with that which is offered to oppose it, has more convincing power in the minds of the jury. The term conveys the idea of something more than a preponderance. The term is not a technical term, but simply means that evidence which outweighs that which is offered to oppose it, and does not necessarily mean the greater number of witnesses. See also Preponderance of evidence.

Fair rate of return. Amount of profits that a public utility is permitted to earn as determined by public utility commissions. Such is based on the need of the utility to maintain service to customers, finance expenditures for improvements and expansion, pay dividends to shareholders, etc. See also Fair return on investment.

Fair representation. Refers to the duty of a union to represent fairly all its members, both in the conduct of collective bargaining and in the enforcement of the resulting agreement, and to serve the interests of all members without hostility or discrimination toward any and to exercise its discretion with complete good faith and honesty and to avoid arbitrary conduct. Buzzard v. Local Lodge 1040 International Ass’n of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, C.A.Wash., 480 F.2d 35, 40.

Fair return on investment. A “fair return” is to be largely measured by usual returns in like investments in the same vicinity over the same period of time. Natural Gas Pipeline Co. of America v. Federal Power Commission, C.C.A.I11., 120 F.2d 625, 633, 634. Reasonable profit on sale or holding of investment assets. A fair return on value of property used and useful in carrying on the enterprise, performing the service or supplying the thing for which the rates are paid. Lubin v. Finkelstein, 82 N.Y.S.2d 329, 335. Term is generally used in reference to setting of rates for public utilities. See also Fair rate of return.

Fair sale. In foreclosure and other judicial proceedings, this means a sale conducted with fairness and impartiality as respects the rights and interests of the parties affected. A sale at a price sufficient to warrant confirmation or approval when it is required.

Fair trade laws. State statutes which permit manufacturers or distributors of namebrand goods to fix minimum retail prices. Following a series of court decisions striking down such statutes, Congress in 1976 repealed such statutes.

Fair trial. See Fair and impartial trial.

Fair use doctrine. A privilege in others than the owner of a copyright to use the copyrighted material in a reasonable manner without the owner’s consent, notwithstanding the monopoly granted to the owner. To determine whether fair use has been made of copyrighted material, the nature and objects of the selections made, the quantity and value of material used and extent to which the use may diminish the value of the original work must be considered. Rosemont Enterprises, Inc. v. Random House, Inc., D.C.N.Y., 256 F.Supp. 55, 65, 66.

Fair use involves a balancing process by which a complex of variables determine whether other interests should override the rights of creators. The Copyright Act explicitly identifies four interests: (1) the purpose and character of the use, including its commercial nature; (2) the nature of the copyrighted work; (3) the proportion that was "taken"; and (4) the economic impact of the "taking." 17 U.S.C.A. § 107.

Fair value. Present market value; such sum as the property will sell for to a purchaser desiring to buy, the owner wishing to sell; such a price as a capable and diligent business man could presently obtain from the property after conferring with those accustomed to buy such property; the amount the property would bring at a sale on execution shown to have been in all respects fair and reasonable; the fair market value of the property as between one who wants to purchase and one who wants to sell the property. Where no definite market value can be established and expert testimony must be relied on, fair valuation is the amount which the property ought to give to a going concern as a fair return, if sold to some one who is willing to purchase under ordinary selling conditions. In determining "fair valuation" of property, court should consider all elements entering into the intrinsic value, as well as the selling value, and also the earning power of the property. In re Gibson Hotels, D.C.W.Va., 24 F.Supp. 859, 863. In determining depreciation, "fair value" implies consideration of all factors material in negotiating sale and purchase of property, such as wear, decay, deterioration, obsolescence, inadequacy, and redundancy. Idaho Power Co. v. Thompson, D.C.Idaho, 19 F.2d 547, 566. Price which a seller, willing but not compelled to sell, would take, and a purchaser, willing but not compelled to buy, would pay. Price which buyers of the class which would be interested in buying property would be justified in paying for it. In re Crane's Estate, 344 Pa. 141, 23 A.2d 851, 855.

Within provision of business corporation act for determination of fair value of dissenting stockholder's shares, "fair value" means intrinsic value. Santee Oil Co., Inc. v. Cox, 265 S.C. 270, 217 S.E.2d 789, 793. Among elements to be considered in arriving at "fair value" or "fair cash value" of stock of a stockholder who disents from a sale of corporate assets are its market value, net asset value, investment value, and earning capacity. Lucas v. Pembroke Water Co., 205 Va. 84, 135 S.E.2d 147, 150.

"Actual value," "market value," "fair value," and the like, are commonly used as convertible terms. See also Fair market value.

Fait accompli. Fact or deed accomplished, presumably irreversible.

Fait enrolle /féyt onról/. A deed enrolled, as a bargain and sale of freeholds.

Faith. Confidence; credit; reliance. Thus, an act may be said to be done "on the faith" of certain representations.

Belief; credence; trust. Thus, the Constitution provides that "full faith and credit" shall be given to the judgments of each state in the courts of the others. See also Full faith and credit.

Faithfully. Conscientious diligence or faithfulness in meeting obligations, or just regard of adherence to duty, or due observance of undertaking of contract. Commonwealth v. Polk, 256 Ky. 100, 75 S.W.2d 761, 765. Diligently, and without unnecessary delay. Truthfully, sincerely, accurately.

As used in bonds of public and private officers, this term imports not only honesty, but also a punctilious discharge of all the duties of the office, requiring competence, diligence, and attention, without any malfeasance or nonfeasance, aside from mere mistakes.

Fait juridique /fé zhyridiyik/. In French law, a juridical fact. One of the factors or elements constitutive of an obligation.

Faitours /féytɔrs/. Idle persons; idle livers; vagabonds.

Fake. To make or construct falsely. A "faked alibi" is a made, manufactured, or false alibi. Something that is not what it purports to be; counterfeit. An imposter. See Counterfeit; Forgery.

Faker. A swindler; an imposter.

Fakir /féykur/ /féykar/. A term applied among the Mohammedans to a kind of religious ascetic or beggar, whose claim is that he "is in need of mercy, and poor in the sight of God, rather than in need of worldly assistance."

Sometimes spelled faqueer or fakeer. It is commonly used to designate a person engaged in some useless or dishonest business. Fake is also so used and also to designate the quality of such business. A street peddler who disposes of worthless wares, or of any goods above their value, by means of any false representation, trick, device, lottery, or game of chance.

Falcarious. See Falsarius (or falcarious).

Falcidio /fɔl'sidiyo/fæl"/. In Spanish law, the Faldician portion; the portion of an inheritance which could not be legally bequeathed away from the heir, viz., one-fourth.

Falcidian law /fɔl'sidiyan lo/fæl"/. In Roman law, a law on the subject of testamentary disposition. It was enacted by the people during the reign of Augustus, in the year of Rome 714, on the proposition of the tribune Falcidius. By this law, the testator's right to burden his estate with legacies was subjected to an important restriction. It prescribed that no one could bequeath more than three-fourths of his property in legacies, and that the heir should have at least one-fourth of the estate, and that, should the testator violate this prescript, the heir may have the right to make a proportional deduction from each legatee, so far as necessary.

A similar principle exists in Louisiana. See Legitima. In some of the states the statutes authorizing bequests and devises to charitable corporations limit the amount which a testator may give, to a certain fraction of his estate.

Falcidian portion /fōlˈsidēən pōrˈshən/ˈfāl/. That portion of a testator's estate which, by the Falcidian law, was required to be left to the heir, amounting to at least one-fourth. See also Legitima.

Faldworth. In Saxon law, a person reckoned old enough to become a member of the decennary, and so subject to the law of frank-pledge.

Falkland. See Folc-land.

Fall. One of the four seasons of the year, embracing, in the Northern Hemisphere, the three months commencing with the 21st of September and terminating with the 20th of December. Autumn.

To come within limits, scope, or jurisdiction of something. To decrease in value. To recede, as a depression or recession in the economy.

Fallo /fāˈloʊ/. In Spanish law, the final decree or judgment given in a controversy at law.

Fallow-land. Land plowed, but not sown, and left uncultivated for a time after successive crops. Land tilled, but left unsowed during the growing season.

Fallum. In old English law, an unexplained term for some particular kind of land.

Falsa demonstration /fōlsə deˌmənstrəˈeʃən/ˈfāl/. In the civil law, false designation; erroneous description of a person or thing in a written instrument.

Falsa demonstratione legatum non perimi /fōlsə deˌmənstrəˈmeɪn ˌlēgəˈtəm nōn pərˈrēməˈmeɪn/. A bequest is not rendered void by an erroneous description.

Falsa demonstratione non nocet, cum de corpore (persona) constat /fōlsə deˌmənstrəˈmeɪn nōn nōkˈseɪt kəm də kɔrˈpərə (pərˈsoʊnə) kənˈstət/. False description does not injure or vitiate, provided the thing or person in question has once been sufficiently described. Mere false description does not make an instrument inoperative.

Falsa grammatica non vitiat concessionem /fōlsə ɡramˈəˌtəkə nōn vishˈəyət kənˈsesʃənəm/ˈfāl/. False or bad grammar does not vitiate a grant. Neither false Latin nor false English will make a deed void when the intent of the parties doth plainly appear.

Falsa moneta /fōlsə ˈmənətə/ˈfāl/. In the civil law, false or counterfeit money.

Falsa orthographia non vitiat chartam, concessionem /fōlsə orˈθəˌɡrəfəˈsiə nōn vishˈəyət kərtəm, kənˈsesʃənəm/ˈfāl/. False spelling does not vitiate a deed.

Falsare /fōlˈsərɪ/ˈfāl. In old English law, to counterfeit. Quia falsavit sigillum, because he counterfeited the seal.

Falsarius or falso (or falcarious) /fōlˈsəriˌəs/ˈfāl. A counterfeiter.

The word "false" has two distinct and well-recognized meanings: (1) intentionally or knowingly or negligently untrue; (2) untrue by mistake or accident, or honestly after the exercise of reasonable care. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Adams, D.C.Mun.App., 37 A.2d 117, 135. A thing is called "false" when it is done, or made, with knowledge, actual or constructive, that it is untrue or illegal, or is said to be done falsely when the meaning is that the party is in fault for its error. A statement (including a statement in a claim or document), is "false" if it was untrue by the person making it, or causing it to be made.

See also Alteration; Bogus; Counterfeit; Falsely; False representation; Falsify; Forgery; Fraud; Misrepresentation; Perjury.

False action. See Feigned action.

False and fraudulent. To amount to actionable "false and fraudulent representations", they must have been as to existing fact or known by one making them, from his superior knowledge, to have been untrue or false when made. Burlison v. Weis, Mo.App., 152 S.W.2d 201, 203. See False representation; Fraud.

False answer. In pleading, a sham answer; one which is false in the sense of being a mere pretense set up in bad faith and without color of fact. Such answer may be ordered stricken on motion. Fed.R. Civil P. 12(f).

False arrest. A species of false imprisonment, consisting of the detention of a person without his or her consent and without lawful authority. Reams v. City of Tucson, App., 145 Ariz. 340, 701 P.2d 598, 601. Such arrest consists in unlawful restraint of an individual's personal liberty or freedom of locomotion. Johnson v. Jackson, 43 Ill.App.2d 251, 193 N.E.2d 485, 489. An arrest without proper legal authority is a false arrest and because an arrest restrains the liberty of a person it is also false imprisonment. The gist of the tort is protection of the personal interest in freedom from restraint of movement. Neither ill will nor malice are elements of the tort, but if these elements are shown, punitive damages may be awarded in addition to compensatory or nominal damages. See also imprisonment (false imprisonment); Malicious prosecution.

False character. In England, the offense of personating the master or mistress of a servant, or any representative of such master or mistress, and giving a false character to the servant.

False checks. Offense of obtaining money by means and use of a check upon a bank, in which the drawer at the time had no funds or credit with which to meet the same, and which he had no reason to believe would honor such check upon presentation at said bank for payment. See also kiting.

False claim. A statement or a claim which is not true.

False Claims Act. Federal act providing for civil and criminal penalties against individuals who knowingly present or cause to be presented to the government a false claim or bill, or deliver less property to the government than what is billed for, or make or use a false record to decrease an obligation to the government. The statute provides for enforcement of its provisions either by the U.S. Attorney General or in "qui tam" actions by private persons. 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 3929-3733. See also Qui tam action.

Falsedad /falsayshad/. In Spanish law, falsity; an alteration of the truth; deception; fraud.

False decretals. A collection of canon law, dated about the middle of the 9th century, probably by a Frankish ecclesiastic who called himself Isadon. It continued to be the chief repertory of the canon law till the 15th century when its untrustworthy nature was demonstrated.

False demonstration. An erroneous description of a person or thing in a written instrument. Where description of person or thing in will is partly true and partly false, if part which is true describes subject or object of gift with sufficient certainty, untrue part may be rejected and gift sustained, under doctrine of "false demonstration." In re Heins' Estate, 132 Cal.App. 131, 123 P.2d 824.

False entry. An untrue statement of items of account by written words, figures, or marks. One making an original false entry makes a false entry in every book which is made up in regular course from the entry or entries from the original book of entry.

An entry in books of a bank or trust company which is intentionally made to represent what is not true or does not exist, with intent either to deceive its officers or a bank examiner or to defraud the bank or trust company. Agnew v. U. S., 165 U.S. 36, 17 S.Ct. 235, 41 L.Ed. 624.

False fact. In the law of evidence, a feigned, simulated, or fabricated fact; a fact not founded in truth, but existing only in assertion; the deceitful semblance of a fact. See Fabricated fact; Perjury.

Falsehood. A statement or assertion known to be untrue, and intended to deceive. A willful act or declaration contrary to the truth. It is committed either by the willful act of the party, or by dissimulation, or by words. A fabrication. Werner v. Southern Cal. Associated Newspapers, Cal.App., 206 P.2d 952, 961. See perjury.

False impersonation. The criminal offense of falsely representing some other person and acting in the character thus unlawfully assumed, in order to deceive others, and thereby gain some profit or advantage, or enjoy some right or privilege belonging to the one so personated, or subject him to some expense, charge, or liability. To impersonate another falsely, and in such assumed character to do any act whereby any benefit might accrue to the offender or to another person. People v. Horkans, 109 Colo. 177, 123 P.2d 824. See also impersonation; Personate.

False implication libel. Type of libel action by public figure against news media alleging that news article created a false impression or implication even though each statement, taken separately, was true. Price v. Viking Penguin, 881 F.2d 1426, 1432.

False imprisonment. See False arrest; Imprisonment; Probable cause.

False instrument. A counterfeit; one made in the similitude of a genuine instrument and purporting on its face to be such. See also Counterfeit; False making; Forgery.

False judgment. In old English law, a writ which lay when a false judgment had been pronounced in a court not of record, as a county court, court baron, etc.

In old French law, the defeated party in a suit had the privilege of accusing the judges of pronouncing a false or corrupt judgment, whereupon the issue was determined by his challenging them to the combat or duellum. This was called the "appeal of false judgment."

False Latin. When law proceedings were written in Latin, if a word were significant though not good Latin, then an indictment, declaration, or fine should not be made void by it; but if the word were not Latin, nor allowed by the law, and it were in a material point, it made the whole void.

False light privacy. Where a privacy action is brought against the media because a report has been published that is false, the privacy plaintiff will be required to show, if the report was newsworthy, that the publication was made with actual malice. Time, Inc. v. Hill, 385 U.S. 374, 87 S.Ct. 534, 17 L.Ed.2d 456.

False lights and signals. Lights and signals falsely and maliciously displayed for the purpose of bringing a vessel into danger.

The word "falsely", particularly in a criminal statute, suggests something more than a mere untruth and includes perfidiously or treacherously or with intent to defraud. United States v. Achtner, C.C.A.N.Y., 144 F.2d 49, 52. Commonly used in the sense of designedly untrue and deceitful, and as implying an intention to perpetrate some treachery or fraud. As applied to making or altering a writing in order to make it forgery, implies that the paper or writing is not genuine; that in itself it is false or counterfeit.

See also Counterfeit; False; Forgery.

False making. An essential element of forgery, where material alteration is not involved. Term has reference to manner in which writing is made or executed rather than to its substance or effect. A falsely made instrument is one that is fictitious, not genuine, or in some material particular something other than it purports to be and without regard to truth or falsity of facts stated therein. Wright v. U. S., C.A.Ariz., 172 F.2d 310, 311. See also Counterfeit; Forgery.

False misrepresentation. See False representation.

False news. Spreading false news, whereby discord may grow between the queen of England and her people, or the great men of the realm, or which may produce other mischiefs, seems to have been a misdemeanor, under St. 3 Edw. I, c. 34.

False oath. To defeat discharge in bankruptcy "false oath" must contain all the elements involved in "perjury" at common law, namely, an intentional untruth in matter material to a material issue. It must have been knowingly and fraudulently made. In re Stone, D.C. N.H., 52 F.2d 639, 641. See also False swearing; Perjury.

False personation. See False impersonation.

False plea. See Sham pleading.

False pretenses. Illegally obtaining money, goods, or merchandise from another by fraud or misrepresentation. As a statutory crime, although defined in slightly different ways in the various jurisdictions, consists generally of these elements: (1) an intent to defraud; (2) the use of false pretenses or representations regarding any existing facts; and (3) the accomplishment of the intended fraud by means of such false pretenses. People v. Johnson, 28 Mich.App. 10, 183 N.W.2d 813, 815, 816. Such representation may be implied from conduct or may consist of concealment or non-disclosure where there is duty to speak, and may consist of any acts, work, symbol or token calculated and intended to deceive. Bright v. Sheriff, Wasco County, 90 Nev. 168, 521 P.2d 371, 373.

Other definitions of "false pretenses" include: false representation of existing fact or condition by which a party obtains property of another; false representation of existing fact, whether by oral or written words or conduct, calculated to deceive, intended to deceive, and does in fact deceive, whereby one person obtains value from another without compensation; false representation of existing or past fact calculated to induce confidence on part of one to whom representation is made, and accompanied by or blended with a promise to do something in future, State v. Parkinson, 181 Wash. 69, 41 P.2d 1095, 1097; false representation of existing fact, made with knowledge of falsity, with intent that party to whom it is made should act upon it, and acted upon by such party to his detriment; false representation of past or existing fact, made with knowledge of falsity, with intent to deceive and defraud, and which is adapted to deceive person to whom made.

Under Model Penal Code § 223.3, a person is guilty of "theft by deception" if he purposely obtains property of another by deception.

Larceny distinguished. In crime of larceny owner has no intention to part with his property, although he may intend to part with possession, while in false pretenses the owner does intend to part with the property but it is obtained from him by fraud. The intention of owner of property not to part with title when relinquishing possession of property is vital point to be determined in distinguishing between "larceny by fraud" and obtaining property by "false pretenses". Dobson v. State, 74 Okl.Cr. 341, 126 P.2d 95, 101.

False representation. For purposes of the common-law tort of fraudulent misrepresentation, such may be either an affirmative misrepresentation or a failure to disclose a material fact when a duty to disclose that fact has arisen. Rothenberg v. Aero Mayflower Transit Co., Inc., D.C.D.C., 495 F.Supp. 399, 406. To maintain an action for damages for "false representation," the plaintiff, in substance, must allege and must prove by a preponderance of the evidence the following elements: (1) that representation was made; (2) that it was false; (3) that the defendant knew it was false, or else made it without knowledge as a positive statement of known fact; (4) that the plaintiff believed the representation to be true; (5) that the plaintiff relied on and acted upon the representation; (6) that the plaintiff was thereby injured; and (7) the amount of the damages. See also Deceit; False statement; Fraud; Material fact; Reliance.

False return. See Return.

False statement. Statement knowingly false, or made recklessly without honest belief in its truth, and with purpose to mislead or deceive. Third Nat. Bank v. Schatten, C.C.A.Tenn., 81 F.2d 538, 540. An incorrect statement made or acquiesced in with knowledge of incorrectness or with reckless indifference to actual facts and with no reasonable ground to believe it correct. International Shoe Co. v. Lewine, C.C.A.Miss., 65 F.2d 517, 518. Such are more than erroneous or untrue and import intention to deceive. Schapiro v. Tweedie Footwear Corporation, C.C.A.Pa., 131 F.2d 876, 878.

Under statutory provision making it unlawful for officer or director of corporation to make any false statement in regard to corporation's financial condition, the phrase means something more than merely untrue or erroneous, but implies that statement is designedly untrue and deceitful, and made with intention to deceive person to whom false statement is made or exhibited.
The federal criminal statute governing false statements applies to three distinct offenses: falsifying, concealing, or covering up a material fact by any trick, scheme or device; making false, fictitious, or fraudulent statements or representations; and making or using any false documents or writings. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1001.

See also Deceit; False representation; Fraud; Material fact; Perjury; Reliance.

False swearing. A person who makes a false statement under oath or equivalent affirmation, or swears or affirms the truth of such a statement previously made, when he does not believe the statement to be true, is guilty of a misdemeanor if: (a) the falsification occurs in an official proceeding; or (b) the falsification is intended to mislead a public servant in performing his official function. Model Penal Code, § 241.2.

The essential elements of “false swearing” consist in willfully, knowingly, absolutely and falsely swearing under oath or affirmation on a matter concerning which a party could legally be sworn and on oath administered by one legally authorized to administer it. Smith v. State, 66 Ga.App. 668, 19 S.E.2d 168, 169. It must appear that matter sworn to was judicially pending or was being investigated by grand jury, or was a subject on which accused could legally have been sworn, or on which he was required to be sworn. Capps v. Commonwealth, 294 Ky. 743, 172 S.W.2d 610, 611. See also False oath; Perjury.

False token. In criminal law, a false document or sign of the existence of a fact, in general, used for the purpose of fraud. Device used to obtain money by false pretenses. See Counterfeit; False weights.

False verdict. See Verdict.

False weights. False weights and measures are such as do not comply with the standard prescribed by the state or government, or with the custom prevailing in the place and business in which they are used.

Falsi crimen /folsay krayman/. Fraudulent subornation or concealment, with design to darken or hide the truth, and make things appear otherwise than they are. It is committed (1) by words, as when a witness swears falsely; (2) by writing, as when a person antedates a contract; (3) by deed, as selling by false weights and measures. See Crimen falsi.

Falsification. See Falsify.

Falsify. To counterfeit or forge; to make something false; to give a false appearance to anything. To make false by mutilation, alteration, or addition; to tamper with, as to falsify a record or document. The word “falsify” may be used to convey two distinct meanings—either that of being intentionally or knowingly untrue, made with intent to defraud, or mistakenly and accidentally untrue. Washer v. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n, 21 Cal.2d 822, 136 P.2d 297, 301. See also Alteration; Counterfeit; False; Forgery.

To disprove; to prove to be false or erroneous; to avoid or defeat. Spoken of verdicts, appeals, etc.

Falsifying a record. It is a crime, under state and federal statutes, for a person, knowing that he has no privilege to do so, to falsify or otherwise tamper with public records with purpose to deceive or injure anyone or to conceal any wrongdoing. See, e.g., Model Penal Code, § 224.4; 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 1506, 2071, 2073.

Falsity. Term implies more than erroneous or untrue; it indicates knowledge of untruth.

Falso retomo brevium /folsow rstornow briyviysm/. In old English law, a writ which formerly lay against the sheriff who had execution of process for false returning of writs.

The doctrine means that if testimony of a witness on a material issue is willfully false and given with an intention to deceive, jury may disregard all the witness' testimony. Hargrave v. Stockloss, 127 N.J.L. 262, 21 A.2d 820, 823. The maxim deals only with weight of evidence. It does not relieve jury from passing on credibility of the whole testimony of a false swearing witness or excuse jury from weighing the whole testimony. State v. Willard, 346 Mo. 773, 142 S.W.2d 1046, 1052. It is a mere rule of evidence affirming a rebuttable presumption of fact, under which the jury must consider all the evidence of the witness, other than that which is found to be false, and it is their duty to give effect to so much of it, if any, as is relieved from the presumption against it and found to be true. It is not a rule of the law of evidence, but is merely an aid in weighing and sifting of evidence. Dawson v. Bertolini, 70 R.I. 325, 38 A.2d 765, 768. It is particularly applied to the testimony of a witness who, if he is shown to have sworn falsely in one detail, may be considered unworthy of belief as to all the rest of his evidence.

Fama /féyma/. Lat. Fame; character, reputation; report of common opinion.

Famacie /féymasayd/. A killer of reputation; a slanderer.

Fama, fides et oculus non patiuntur ludum /féyma, féids ets óbýlos nôn pátyântôr lyúdum/. Fame, faith, and eyesight do not suffer a cheat.
Fama que suspicacionem inductit, oriri debet apud bons et graves, non quidem malevolos et maledicos, sed providas et fide dignas personas, non semel sed sepius, quia clamor minuit et defamatio manifestat.

Familiarity. Close or reasonable acquaintance with or knowledge of.

Family. The meaning of word “family” necessarily depends on field of law in which word is used, purpose intended to be accomplished by its use, and facts and circumstances of each case. LeRoux v. Edmunds, 276 Minn. 120, 148 N.W.2d 812, 814. Most commonly refers to group of persons consisting of parents and children; father, mother and their children; immediate kindred, constituting fundamental social unit in civilized society. People v. Hasse, 57 Misc.2d 59, 291 N.Y.S.2d 53, 55. A collective body of persons who live in one house and under one head or management. A group of blood-relatives; all the relations who descend from a common ancestor, or who spring from a common root. A group of kindred persons. Hartley v. Bohrer, 52 Idaho 72, 11 P.2d 616, 618. Husband and wife and their children, wherever they may reside, and whether they dwell together or not. Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Shadid, Tex. Com.App., 68 S.W.2d 1030, 1032.

When used in constitution of benefit society, declaring its purpose among others as that of aiding the families of members, the word means such persons as habitually reside under one roof and form one domestic circle, or such persons as are dependent on each other for support or among whom there is legal or equitable obligation to furnish support and in its widest scope it would include all descendants of a common progenitor. Logan v. St. Louis Police Relief Ass’n, Mo.App., 133 S.W.2d 1048, 1049, 1050.

As used in context of uninsured motorist insurance coverage, “family” is not confined to those who stand in a legal or blood relationship, but rather should include those who live within the domestic circle of, and are economically dependent on, the named insured (e.g. foster child or ward). Brokensha v. N. J. Manufacturers Ins. Co. et al., 158 N.J.Sup. 424, 386 A.2d 433.

Descent and descendants. The word “family” may mean all descendants of a common progenitor, Logan v. St. Louis Police Relief Ass’n, Mo.App., 133 S.W.2d 1048, 1049, 1050; In re Lund’s Estate, 26 Cal.2d 472, 159 P.2d 643, 645; or, those who are of the same lineage, or descend from one common progenitor.

Homestead and exemption laws. To constitute family there must be one whom law designates or recognizes as head of family who by natural ties or by legal or moral obligation is under duty to support others of the household. Owens v. Atlantic & Co., 263 Ky. 727, 93 S.W.2d 844, 846. To constitute persons living with another in same house a “family”, it must appear that they are being supported by that other in whole or in part, and are dependent on him therefor, and that he is under a natural or moral obligation to render such support.

Household. Those who live in same household subject to general management and control of the head thereof. Family and household are substantially synonymous terms for certain purposes.

Support. A “family” is a collection of persons living together under one head, under such circumstances or conditions that the head is under a legal or moral obligation to support the other members, and the other members are dependent upon him or her for support. Hurt v. Perryman, 173 Tenn. 646, 122 S.W.2d 426, 427. Those entitled by law to look to person for support and protection. In re Fulton’s Estate, 15 Cal.App.2d 202, 59 P.2d 508, 510. See also Dependant.

Wills. As respects construction of will, the word “family” denotes a group of persons related to each other by marriage or blood living together under a single roof and comprising a household whose head is usually the father or husband, but the word is not one of inflexible meaning and its significance to a large extent depends upon the context and the purpose for which it is employed. For example, the word "family" has been held to include those who have left father's home and have married and established their own homes when context and purpose indicate such significance should be attributed to the word. Magill v. Magill, 317 Mass. 89, 56 N.E.2d 892, 894, 896.

When the word "family" is used to designate those entitled to receive a legacy, the intended meaning of the word depends upon the context of the will and upon a showing as to whom were the objects of the testator's bounty by reason of kinship or friendship.

Family allowance. Consists of certain amount of deceased's property allocated for the support of the widow and children during the period of estate administration.

Family arrangement. A term denoting an agreement between a father and his children, or between the heirs of a deceased father, to dispose of property, or to partition it in a different manner than that which would result if the law alone directed it, or to divide up property without administration. In these cases, frequently, the mere relation of the parties will give effect to bargains otherwise without adequate consideration. See also Family settlement.

Family automobile doctrine. In a number of jurisdictions, when an automobile is maintained by the owner thereof for the general use and convenience of his or her family, such owner is liable for the negligence of a member of the family, having general authority to drive the car, while it is being used as such family car; that is, for the pleasure or convenience of the family or a member of it. This doctrine has been rejected, superseded, or limited in its application, in most states.

The doctrine rests upon the basis that the automobile is furnished by the husband in his individual capacity and as common-law head of the family for the use of the family, and not as the agent of the community. Under the doctrine, a father furnishing automobile for pleasure and convenience of family makes the use of automobile by family his business and any member of family driving automobile with father's express or implied consent is the father's agent and the father is liable for the member's negligence. Donn v. Kunz, 52 Ariz. 219, 79 P.2d 965, 966, 967.

See also Family group; Family purpose doctrine, which are synonymous terms.

Family Bible. A Bible containing a record of the births, marriages, and deaths of the members of a family.

Family car doctrine. See Family automobile doctrine.

Family council. See Family arrangement; Family meeting; Conseil de famille.

Family court. Such courts exist in several states. While the jurisdiction of such courts will differ somewhat from state to state, typically this court will have jurisdiction over: (1) child abuse and neglect proceedings, (2) support proceedings, (3) proceedings to determine mine paternity and for support of children born out of wedlock, (4) proceedings permanently to terminate custody by reason of permanent neglect, (5) proceedings concerning juvenile delinquency and whether a person is in need of supervision, and (6) family offenses proceedings. The family court may be a division or department of a court of general jurisdiction.

Family disturbance. Generic term used to describe any crime, tort or disorder within or touching the family.

Family expense statutes. State statutes which permit charge against property of husband or wife for debts connected with family support and maintenance such as rent, food, clothing, and tuition.

As used in tax law, expenses incurred for personal, living or family purposes for which no deduction may be claimed. I.R.C. § 262.

Family group. Within purview of the family automobile doctrine, is not confined to persons related to the owner, but includes members of the collective body of persons living in his household for whose convenience the car is maintained and who have authority to use it. See also Family automobile doctrine; Family purpose doctrine, which are synonymous terms.

Family law. Branch or specialty of law, also denominated "domestic relations" law, concerned with such subjects as adoption, amendment, divorce, separation, paternity, custody, support and child care. See also Family court.

Family meeting. In Louisiana, an advisory jury called to aid court in determining matters or affairs in which members of family are concerned. An institution of the laws of Louisiana, being a council of the relatives (or, if there are no relatives, of the friends) of a minor, for the purpose of advising as to his affairs and the administration of his property. It corresponds to the "conseil de famille" of French law.

Family partnership. In tax law, partnership consisting of members of family and such members shall include only a spouse, ancestors, lineal descendants, and any trusts for the benefit of such persons. I.R.C. § 704(e).

Family physician. A physician who regularly attends and is consulted by the members of the family as their medical adviser; but he need not attend in all cases or be consulted by all the members of the family.

Family purpose doctrine. Under this doctrine where one purchases and maintains automobile for comfort, convenience, pleasure, entertainment and recreation of one's family, any member thereof operating automobile will be regarded as agent or servant of the owner and owner will be held liable for injuries sustained by third person by reason of negligent operation of vehicle by member of family. Freeland v. Freeland, 152 W.Va. 332, 162 S.E.2d 922, 925. This doctrine has been rejected, or limited in its application, in many states. See also Family automobile doctrine and Family group, which are synonymous terms.

Family service rule. See Family automobile doctrine.

Family settlement. An agreement between members of a family settling the distribution of family property among them. Fitzgerald v. Nelson, 159 Or. 264, 79 P.2d 254, 255. An arrangement or an agreement, between heirs of a deceased person, by which they agree on distribution or management of estate without administration by court having jurisdiction of such administration proceedings. Wright v. Saltmarsh, 174 Okl. 226, 50 P.2d 694, 703. A term of practically the same signification as "family arrangement" (q.v.).

Famousus /famówssas/. In the civil and old English law, relating to or affecting injuriously the character or reputation; defamatory; slanderous; scandalous.

Famousus libellus /famówssas labélás/. A libelous writing. A term of the civil law denoting that species of injuria which corresponds nearly to libel or slander.

Fanatic. A religious or political enthusiast; a person entertaining extravagant notions, or affected by excessive zeal or enthusiasm, especially upon religious or political subjects.

Fanciful terms. In trademark law, those terms that are "coined," having no independent meaning; they may be registered as trademarks even if they have not acquired secondary meaning. Abraham Zion Corp. v. Lebow, C.A.N.Y., 761 F.2d 93, 104.

Fanega /fanéyga/. In Spanish law, a measure of land varying in different provinces, but in the Spanish settlements in America consisting of 6,400 square varas or yards.

Faqueer /fastr/. See Fakir.

FAR. See Federal Acquisition Regulations.

Fardel of land /färddal av lànd/. In old English law, the fourth part of a yard-land.

Farding-deal. The fourth part of an acre of land.

Fare. A voyage, journey, or passage. The transportation charge paid by passenger. A paying passenger.

As used in connection with interstate transportation means a rate of charge for the carriage of passengers, as approved by the proper governmental agency. Krause v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. of California, 141 Neb. 844, 5 N.W.2d 229, 232.

Farleu (or Farley) /färlyůw/färliy/. Money paid by tenant in lieu of a heriot. It was often applied to the best chattel, as distinguished from heriot, the best beast.

Farlingarii /färliygaríyay/. Whoremongers; adulterers.

Farm, n. A tract of land devoted to agriculture, pasture, stock raising, or some allied industry. Includes dairy, stock, and poultry farms.

The original meaning of the word was rent; a term; a lease of lands; a leasehold interest, and by a natural transition it came to mean the land out of which the rent or lease issued.

A letting out of the collection of taxes and revenues for a fixed sum.

See also Farmer.

Farm, v. To lease or let; to demise or grant for a limited term and at a stated rental. To carry on business or occupation of farming.

Farm Credit Administration. An independent federal agency, responsible for supervising and coordinating activities of the cooperative Farm Credit System. The System is comprised of Federal land banks and Federal land bank associations, Federal intermediate credit banks and production credit associations, and banks for cooperatives. Initially capitalized by the United States, the entire system is now owned by its users. See also Farmers Home Administration; Federal farm credit system.

Farm crossing. A roadway over or under a railroad track for the purpose of reaching land cut off by the track.

Farmer. A cultivator; a husbandman; an agriculturist; one engaged in agricultural pursuits as a livelihood or business, Skinner v. Dingwell, C.C.A.Iowa, 134 F.2d 391, 393; one engaged in dairy farming and in production of poultry or livestock, Leonard v. Bennett, C.C.A.Or., 116 F.2d 128, 131, 132, 134; one engaged in the business of cultivating land or employing it for the purpose of husbandry, Kaslovitz v. Reid, C.C.A.Utah, 128 F.2d 1017, 1018; one living on his farm from revenue thereof and personally operating it on large scale as his primary activity; one personally engaged in farming, Shyvers v. Security-First Nat. Bank of Los Angeles, C.C.A.Cal., 108 F.2d 611, 612, 613; one primarily engaged in agricultural pursuits; one who cultivates a considerable tract of land in some one of the usual recognized ways of farming; one who cultivates a farm either as owner or lessee, Kaslovitz v. Reid, C.C.A.Utah, 128 F.2d 1017, 1018; one who cultivates a farm, whether the land be his own or another's; one who directs the business of a farm and works at farm labor, Stoner v. New York Life Ins. Co., Mo.App., 90 S.W.2d 784, 795; one who expends his energies and production efforts in tilling the soil, raising crops and marketing them, thereby promoting his financial interest and advancement; one who is primarily, personally, and bona fide engaged in farming although he does not spend all of his time therein, work farm without assistance, or refrain from engaging in secondary activities, In re Lindsay, D.C.Tex., 41 F.Supp. 948, 950. See also Husbandman.

As defined in Bankruptcy Code, is person who received more than 80 percent of his gross income during the taxable year immediately preceding commencement of bankruptcy proceeding from a farming operation owned or operated by such person. Bankruptcy Code § 101. See also Bankruptcy proceedings (Family farmer bankruptcy).
Farmer bankruptcy. See Bankruptcy proceedings (Family farmer bankruptcy).

Farmers Home Administration (FmHA). A division of the Department of Agriculture engaged in making direct mortgage loans to farmers and also home mortgage insurance and guarantee programs in rural areas and small towns. See also Farm Credit Administration; Federal farm credit system.

Farming operation. As defined in Bankruptcy Code, term includes farming, tillage of the soil, dairy farming, ranching, production or raising of crops, poultry, or livestock, and production of poultry or livestock products in an unmanufactured state. Bankruptcy Code § 101.

Farming products. All things are considered as "farming products" or "agricultural products" which have a situs of their production upon the farm and which are brought into condition for uses of society by labor of those engaged in agricultural pursuits as contradistinguished from manufacturing or other industrial pursuits.

Crops or livestock or supplies used or produced in farming operations or products of crops or livestock in their unmanufactured states, if they are in the possession of a debtor engaged in farming operations. U.C.C. § 9-109(3).

Farming purposes. These words are not limited in meaning to mere cultivation of soil and maintenance of improvements thereon for such purposes, but include raising of livestock, as well as production of farm crops directly from soil. State v. Superior Court for Walla Walla County, 168 Wash. 142, 10 P.2d 986, 987. See Farming operation.

Farming labor or laborer. Agricultural employment and farm labor are used as practically synonymous and include all farm work and work incidental thereto. Smythe v. Phoenix, 63 Idaho 585, 123 P.2d 1010, 1012.

One employed as a laborer on a farm, especially one who does all kinds of farm work; one employed in or about business of farming. One employed on a farm in customary types of farm work or employed and paid directly by a farmer in transporting his raw produce. Cedarburg Fox Farms v. Industrial Commission, 241 Wis. 604, 6 N.W.2d 887, 689, 690. One who devotes his time to ordinary farm labor as gainful occupation with some reasonable degree of regularity and continuity. One who labors on a farm in raising crops or livestock, or in doing general farm work. See also Agricultural labor; Farmer.

Farm out. To let for a term at a stated rental. To turn over for performance or care. To exhaust farm land by continuous raising of single crop.

Among the Romans the collection of revenue was farmed out, and the same system existed in France before the revolution of 1789; in England the excise taxes were farmed out, and thereby their evils were greatly aggravated. The farming of the excise was abolished in Scotland by the union, having been before that time abandoned in England. In all these cases the custom gave rise to great abuse and oppression of the people, and in France most of the farmers-general, as they were called, perished on the scaffold.

Farmout agreement. An agreement by which one who owns an oil and gas lease agrees to assign to another an interest in the lease in return for drilling and testing operations on the lease. Under standard "farmout agreement" farmout operator drills at his own expense and upon completion of commercial well becomes owner of working interest and usually operates well or arranges for its operation, the assignor retaining a royalty. Northern Natural Gas Co. v. Grounds, D.C.Kan., 292 F.Supp. 619, 628.

Farm products. See Farming products.

Farrier /färiər/. Occupation of shoeing horses.

Farthing /färˈtiŋ/. The fourth part of an English penny.

Farthing of gold. An ancient English coin, containing in value the fourth part of a noble.

Farthing of land. A great quantity of land, differing much from farding-deal (q.v.).

Farvand. Standing by itself, this word signifies "passage by sea or water". In charter-parties, it means voyage or passage by water.

Fas /fäːs/. Lat. Right; justice; the divine law. In primitive times it was the will of the gods, embodied in rules regulating not only ceremonials but the conduct of all men.

F.A.S. "Free alongside ship." Delivery term under which the seller is obligated to deliver goods to a specified loading dock and bears expense and risk of loss up to that point. Term used in sales price quotations, indicating that the price includes all costs of transportation and delivery of the goods alongside the ship. See U.C.C. § 2-319(2).

FASB. See Financial Accounting Standards Board.

Fast-day. A day of fasting and penitence, or of mortification by religious abstinance.

Fastermans, fastermannes, or fastingmen /fæstərˈmænz/ˈfæstɪŋmən/. Men in repute and substance; pledges, sureties, or bondsmen, who, according to the Saxon polity, were fast bound to answer for each other's peaceable behavior.

Fast estate. See Estate.

Fasti /ˈfæsti/. In Roman law, lawful. Dies fasti, lawful days; days on which justice could lawfully be administered by the prator.

Fatal errors. As grounds for new trial, mean harmful errors; reversible errors. Such only as may reasonably be held to have worked substantial injury or prejudice to complaining party. Such errors generally afford party right to new trial, as contrasted with "harmless" errors which do not. See Error; Plain error rule.

Fatal injury. A term embracing injuries resulting in death, which, as used in accident and disability insurance policies is distinguished from "disability," which embraces injuries preventing the insured from performing the work in which he is usually employed, but not resulting in death.

Fatal variance. A variance in indictment tending to mislead defendant in making defense or one preventing plea of former jeopardy. A "variance" occurs when facts proved at trial are different from those alleged in the indictment; however, variance constitutes grounds for reversing a conviction only when it affects defendant's "substantial rights," that is, when the variance deprives a defendant of sufficiently specific information for preparing a defense and to be protected against surprise at trial, and prevents him from asserting his constitutional protection against double jeopardy. U.S. v. George, C.A.Mass., 752 F.2d 749, 753. It must be misleading or serve so as to substantially and materially mislead the adverse party. Lorenz v. Santa Monica City High School Dist., 51 Cal.App.2d 393, 124 P.2d 846, 851. See also Variance.

Fatetur facinus qui judicium fugit /fétyuwtar fásanos kway jadish(iy)am fyúwjet/. He who flees judgment confesses his guilt.

Father. A male parent. He by whom a child is begotten. Natural father; procreator of a child. For putative father, see that title.

As used in law, this term may (according to the context and the nature of the instrument) include a putative as well as a legal father, also a stepfather, an adoptive father, or a grandfather, but is not as wide as the word "parent," and cannot be so construed as to include a female.

A priest of the clergy.

Father-in-law. The father of one's wife or husband.

Fathom. A nautical measure of six feet in length. Occasionally used as a superficial measure of land and in mining, and in that case it means a square fathom or thirty-six square feet.

Fatuus mulier /fétyuwa myúwl(i)yar/. A whore; prostitute.

Fatuitas /fétyúwestês/. In old English law, fatuity; idiocy.

Fatum /feytum/. Lat. Fate; a superhuman power; an event or cause of loss, beyond human foresight or means of prevention.

Fatuum judicium /fétyuwom jadish(iy)am/. A foolish judgment or verdict. As applied to the latter it is one rather false by reason of folly than criminally so, or as amounting to perjury.

Fatuus /fétyuwas/. An idiot or fool. Foolish; silly; absurd; indiscreet; or ill considered. See Fatuum judicium.

Fatuus, apud jurisconsultos nostros, accipitur pro non composs mentis; et fatuus dicitur, qui omnino despit /fétyuwas, èpap jyrukasýntówos nóþtrows, aksýptor prów nól kómpas méntas; et fétyuwas dístax kway omnáynax désspat/. Fatuous, among our jurisconsults, is understood for a man not of right mind; and he is called "fatuous" who is altogether foolish.

Fatueus presumitur qui in proprio nomine errat /fétyuwas prázyúimatopor kway prówpriyow nómanly éhrat/. A man is presumed to be simple who makes a mistake in his own name.

Faubourg /fowbur/gowbur/. In French law, and in Louisiana, a district or part of a town adjoining the principal city; a suburb.

Fauces terre /fósíyz tehriy/. (Jaws of the land.) Narrow headlands and promontories, inclosing a portion or arm of the sea within them.

Fault. Negligence; an error or defect of judgment or of conduct; any deviation from prudence, duty, or rectitude; any shortcoming, or neglect of care or performance resulting from inattention, incapacity, or perversity; a wrong tendency, course, or act; bad faith or mismanagement; neglect of duty. Continental Ins. Co. v. Sabine Towing Co., C.C.A.Tex., 117 F.2d 694, 697. Under general liability principles, "fault" is a breach of a duty imposed by law or contract. Angelo Pavone Enterprises, Inc., v. South Cent. Bell Telephone Co., La.App. 4 Cir., 459 So.2d 1223, 1226. The term connotes an act to which blame, censure, impropriety, shortcoming or culpability attaches. Kersey Mfg. Co. v. Rozic, 207 Pa.Super. 182, 215 A.2d 323, 325.

Wrongful act, omission or breach. U.C.C. § 1-201(16).

See also Negligence; No fault; Pari delicto; Tort.

Fauntleroy doctrine. In Fauntleroy v. Lum, 210 U.S. 230, 28 S.Ct. 641, 52 L.Ed. 1039, the U.S. Supreme Court held that a state must give full faith and credit to a judgment of a sister state if such state had jurisdiction to render it even though the judgment is based on an original cause of action which is illegal in the state in which enforcement is sought.

Fautor /fotar/. Old English law. A favorer or supporter of others; an abettor. A partisan. One who encouraged resistance to the execution of process.

Spanish law. Accomplice; the person who aids or assists another in the commission of a crime.

Faux /fow/. Civil law. The fraudulent alteration of the truth. The same with the Latin falsum or crimen falsi. French law. A falsification or fraudulent alteration or suppression of a thing by words, by writings, or by acts without either. Faux may be understood in three ways. In its most extended sense it is the alteration of truth, with or without intention; it is nearly synonymous with "lying." In a less extended sense, it is the alteration of truth, accompanied with fraud, mutatio veritatis cum dolo facta. And lastly, in a narrow, or rather the legal, sense of the word, when it is a question to know if the faux be a crime, it is the fraudulent alteration of the Favor, n. An act of kindness or generosity, as distinguished from one that is inspired by regard for justice, duty, or right. Friendly regard shown towards another. Bias; partiality; lenity; prejudice. See Challenge.

Favor, v. To regard with favor; to aid or to have the disposition to aid; to show partiality or unfair bias towards; practically synonymous with "support."

Favorabilia in lege sunt fiscus, dotis, vita, libertas. Things favorably considered in law are the treasury, giver, life, liberty.

Favorabiliiores sunt executiones alii processibus quibusque. Executions are favored, rather than that of the plaintiff.

Favoritism. Invidious preference and selection based on friendship and factors other than merit. See Nepotism; Patronage.

Favored beneficiary. Within rule that confidential relations and activity by favored beneficiary in the execution of the will raises a prima facie presumption of undue influence, is one who in the circumstances has been favored over others having equal claims to testator’s bounty. Mindler v. Crocker, 245 Ala. 578, 18 So.2d 278, 281.

Favored nation. See Most favored nation clause.

Favores ampliandi sunt; odia restringenda. Things unfavorable to be enlarged; things hateful restrained.

Favoritism. Invidious preference and selection based on friendship and factors other than merit. See Nepotism; Patronage.

Favor negotii. In conflicts of law, principle invoked to uphold a marriage.

Favor paternitatis. Legal principle which is invoked to uphold paternity of child.

Favor solutionis. In conflicts, a rule of interpretation of a contract in terms of the applicable law governing performance.
Feasts. Certain established festivals or holidays in the ecclesiastical calendar. These days were anciently used as the dates of legal instruments, and in England the quarter-days, for paying rent, are four feast-days. The terms of the courts, in England, before 1875, were fixed to begin on certain days determined with reference to the occurrence of four of the chief feasts.

Featherbedding. The name given to employee practices which create or spread employment by unnecessarily maintaining or increasing the number of employees used, or the amount of time consumed, to work on a particular job. Most of these practices stem from a desire on the part of employees for job security in the face of technological improvements.

F.E.C.A. See Federal Employees' Compensation Act.

Fecciales /fiyshiyeyliyz/. Among the ancient Romans, that order of priests who discharged the duties of ambassadors. Subsequently their duties appear to have related more particularly to the declaring of war and peace.

Fecial law /fiyshal 16/. The nearest approach to a system of international law known to the ancient world. It was a branch of Roman jurisprudence, concerned with embassies, declarations of war, and treaties of peace. It received this name from the feciales (q.v.), who were charged with its administration.

Federal. Belonging to the general government or union of the states. Founded on or organized under the Constitution of the United States. Pertaining to the national government of the United States. Of or constituting a government in which power is distributed between a central authority (i.e. federal government) and a number of constituent territorial units (i.e. states). See also Federal government.

A league or compact between two or more states, to become united under one central government. See Federation.

Federal Acquisition Regulations. Federal regulations governing government contracting methods, requirements, and procedures. 48 CFR (Ch. 1).

Federal agency. Any executive department, military department, government corporation, government-controlled corporation or other establishment in the executive branch of government including the Executive Office of the President or any independent regulatory agency. 5 U.S.C.A. § 552(f).

Federal Aviation Administration. The Federal Aviation Administration (FAA), formerly the Federal Aviation Agency, became a part of the Department of Transportation in 1967 as a result of the Department of Transportation Act (80 Stat. 932). The Federal Aviation Administration is charged with regulating air commerce to foster aviation safety; promoting civil aviation and a national system of airports; achieving efficient use of navigable airspace; developing and operating a common system of air traffic control and air navigation for both civilian and military aircraft; and developing and implementing programs and regulations to control aircraft noise, sonic boom, and other environmental effects of civil aviation.

Federal Bureau of Investigation. The FBI (established in 1908) is charged with investigating all violations of Federal laws with the exception of those which have been assigned by legislative enactment or otherwise to some other Federal agency. The FBI's jurisdiction includes a wide range of responsibilities in the criminal, civil, and security fields. Among these are espionage, sabotage, and other subversive activities; kidnapping; extortion; bank robbery; interstate transportation of stolen property; civil rights matters; interstate gambling violations; fraud against the Government; and assassination of the President or a Federal officer. Cooperative services of the FBI for other duly authorized law enforcement agencies include fingerprint identification, laboratory services, police training, and the National Crime Information Center.

Federal census. A census of each state or territory or of a certain state or of any subdivision or portion of any state, provided it is taken by and under the direction and supervision of the Census Bureau of the United States, and approved and certified by it as the census of that state or subdivision. See Census.

Federal citizenship. Rights and obligations accruing by reason of being a citizen of the United States. State or status of being a citizen of the United States.

A person born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof is a citizen of the United States and of the State wherein he resides. Fourteenth Amend., U.S. Const.

See also Citizenship; Naturalization.

Federal common law. A body of decisional law developed by the federal courts. The application of this body of common law is limited by the Erie doctrine and by the Rules of Decision Act, which provides that except for cases governed by the Constitution, the treaties of the United States, or acts of Congress, federal courts are to apply state law. Areas in which federal common law have been developed include federal "proprietary" interests, admiralty and foreign relations. Erie R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 58 S.Ct. 817, 82 L.Ed. 1188. See also Erie v. Tompkins; Rules of Decision Act; Swift v. Tyson Case.

Federal Communications Commission. The Federal Communications Commission was created by the Communications Act of 1934 to regulate interstate and foreign communications by wire and radio in the public interest. It was assigned additional regulatory jurisdiction under the provisions of the Communications Satellite Act of 1962. The scope of its regulatory powers includes radio and television broadcasting (telephone, telegraph, and cable television operation; two-way radio and radio operators; and satellite communication.

Federal courts. The courts of the United States (as distinguished from state, county, or city courts) as created either by Art. III of U.S. Const., or by Congress. See specific courts; e.g., Courts of Appeals, U.S.; Claims Court, U.S.; District (District courts); Supreme court; Three-judge courts.

Federal crimes. Those acts which have been made criminal by federal law. There are no federal common law crimes though many federal statutes have incorporated the elements of common law crimes. Most federal crimes are codified in Title 18 of the United States Code; though other Code Titles also include specific crimes. Such crimes (e.g., RICO offenses, tax evasion, interstate kidnapping) are prosecuted in federal courts.

Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. The FDIC is an independent agency within the executive branch of the Government. It insures, up to the statutory limitation, deposits in qualified banks and savings associations. 12 U.S.C.A. § 1811.

Federal Employees' Compensation Act. Type of workers' compensation plan for federal employees by which payments are made for death or disability sustained in performance of duties of employment. 5 U.S.C.A. § 8101 et seq.

Federal farm credit system. Consists of the Federal land banks, the Federal land bank associations, the Federal Intermediate credit banks, the production credit associations, the banks for cooperatives, and such other institutions as may be made part of the system. The farm credit system as a whole is regulated by the Farm Credit Administration, an independent executive agency which sets policy and exercises supervisory authority. 12 U.S.C.A. §§ 2001–2260. See also Farm Credit Administration.

Federal government. The system of government administered in a nation formed by the union or confederation of several independent states.

In strict usage, there is a distinction between a confederation and a federal government. The former term denotes a league or permanent alliance between several states, each of which is fully sovereign and independent, and each of which retains its full dignity, organization, and sovereignty, though yielding to the central authority a controlling power for a few limited purposes, such as external and diplomatic relations. In this case, the component states are the units, with respect to the confederation, and the central government acts upon them, not upon the individual citizens. In a federal government, on the other hand, the allied states form a union (e.g. United States)—not, indeed, to such an extent as to destroy their separate organization or deprive them of quasi sovereignty with respect to the administration of their purely local concerns, but so that the central power is erected into a true national government, possessing sovereignty both external and internal,—while the administration of national affairs is directed, and its effects felt, not by the separate states deliberating as units, but by the people of all, in their collective capacity, as citizens of the nation. The distinction is expressed, by the German writers, by the use of the two words "Staatenbund" and "Bundesstaat;" the former denoting a league or confederation of states, and the latter a federal government, or state formed by means of a league or confederation.

Federal grand jury. See Jury.

Federal Home Loan Bank Board. The federal agency formerly charged with regulating federal savings and loan associations and the Federal Home Loan Bank system. Abolished in 1989, its functions are now performed by the Office of Thrift Supervision and the Federal Housing Finance Board. See also Federal Housing Finance Board; Office of Thrift Supervision.

Federal Home Loan Banks. Banks created under the Federal Home Loan Bank Act of 1932, for the purpose of keeping a permanent supply of money available for home financing. The banks are controlled by the Federal Housing Finance Board. Savings and loans, insurance companies, and other similar companies making long term mortgage loans may become members of the Federal Home Loan Bank System, and thus may borrow from one of twelve regional banks throughout the country.

Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation. A federal agency which purchases first mortgages (both conventional and federally insured) from members of the Federal Reserve System, and the Federal Home Loan Bank System. Commonly called "Freddie Mac."

Federal Housing Administration. This federal agency, established by Congress in 1934, insures mortgage loans made by FHA-approved lenders on homes that meet FHA standards in order to make mortgages more desirable investments for lenders.

Federal Housing Finance Board. An independent agency in the executive branch charged with supervising the system of Federal Home Loan Banks. See also Federal Home Loan Banks.

matches the tax paid by the employee. These taxes fund the social security and medicare programs.

Federalism. Term which includes interrelationships among the states and relationship between the states and the federal government.

Federalist Papers. A series of 85 essays by Alexander Hamilton, James Madison and John Jay, expounding and advocating the adoption of the Constitution of the United States. All but six of the essays were first published in the "Independent Journal" of New York City from October, 1787, to April, 1788.

Federal Judicial Code. This Code, comprising Title 28 of the United States Code, is concerned with the organization, jurisdiction, venue, and procedures of the federal court system. Also covered by this Code is the Department of Justice as well as court officers and personnel.

Federal Land Banks. Regional banks established by Congress, and regulated by U.S. Farm Credit Administration, to provide mortgage loans to farmers. See Federal farm credit system; Federal Home Loan Banks.

Federal Maritime Commission. The Federal Maritime Commission regulates the waterborne foreign and domestic offshore commerce of the United States, assures that United States international trade is open to all nations on fair and equitable terms, and guards against unauthorized monopoly in the waterborne commerce of the United States. This is accomplished through maintaining surveillance over steamship conferences and common carriers by water; assuring that adequate levels of financial responsibility are maintained for indemnification of passengers or oil spill cleanup.

Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service. The Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service helps prevent disruptions in the flow of interstate commerce caused by labor-management disputes by providing mediators to assist disputing parties in the resolution of their differences. The Service can intervene on its own motion or by invitation of either side in a dispute. Mediators have no law enforcement authority and rely wholly on persuasive techniques. The Service also helps provide qualified third party neutrals as factfinders or arbitrators.

Federal National Mortgage Association. Organized in 1938 to provide a secondary mortgage market for purchase and sale of mortgages guaranteed by Veterans Administration and those insured under Federal Housing Administration. The short name for this association is "Fannie Mae".

Federal Power Commission. The Federal Power Commission was terminated in 1977, with its functions of regulating the interstate energy industry taken over by the Department of Energy, and, within the DOE, by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

Federal pre-emption. The U.S. Constitution and acts of Congress have given to the federal government exclusive power over certain matters such as interstate commerce and sedition to the exclusion of state jurisdiction. Occurs where federal law so occupies the field that state courts are prevented from asserting jurisdiction. See also Preemption.

Federal Register. The Federal Register, published daily, is the medium for making available to the public Federal agency regulations and other legal documents of the executive branch. These documents cover a wide range of Government activities. An important function of the Federal Register is that it includes proposed changes (rules, regulations, standards, etc.) of governmental agencies. Each proposed change published carries an invitation for any citizen or group to participate in the consideration of the proposed regulation through the submission of written data, views, or arguments, and sometimes by oral presentations. Such regulations and rules as finally approved appear thereafter in the Code of Federal Regulations.

Federal Reporter. The Federal Reporter (consisting of a First and Second series) publishes opinions of the below listed federal courts:

1880-1932
Circuit Court of Appeals
District Courts
U.S. Court of Customs and Patent Appeals
Court of Claims of the U.S.
Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia

Federal Reserve Act. Law which created Federal Reserve banks which act as agents in maintaining money reserves, issuing money in the form of bank notes, lending money to banks, and supervising banks. Administered by Federal Reserve Board (q.v.).

Federal Reserve Board of Governors. See Federal Reserve Act; Federal Reserve Banks.

Federal Reserve Banks. See Federal Reserve Act; Federal Reserve Board of Governors; Federal Reserve System.

Federal Reserve Board of Governors. The seven-member Board of Governors, appointed by the President and confirmed by the Congress, sets reserve requirements for member banks, reviews and approves the discount-rate actions of regional Federal Reserve Banks, sets ceilings on the rates of interest that banks can pay on time and savings deposits, and issues regulations. Members also sit on the Federal Open Market Committee—the principal instrument for implementing the Board's national monetary policy.

Federal reserve notes. Form of currency issued by Federal Reserve Banks in the likeness of noninterest bearing promissory note payable to bearer on demand. The federal reserve note (e.g., one, five, ten, etc. dollar bill) is the most widely used paper currency. Such notes were replaced by Federal Reserve Banking which construe or apply the Federal Rules of Civil, Criminal and Appellate Procedure, as well as Federal Rules of Evidence. Also included are articles relating to federal court practice and procedure.

Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure. These rules govern procedure in appeals to United States courts of appeals from the United States district courts and the Tax Court of the United States; in proceedings in the courts of appeals for review or enforcement of orders of administrative agencies, boards, commissions and officers of the United States; and in applications for writs or other relief which a court of appeals or a judge thereof is competent to give. Certain states have adopted rules patterned on such federal rules to govern practice in their appellate courts.

Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Body of procedural rules which govern all civil actions in U.S. District Courts and after which most states have modeled their own rules of civil procedure. These rules were promulgated by the U.S. Supreme Court in 1938 under power granted by Congress, and have since been frequently amended. Such rules also govern adversary proceedings in the bankruptcy courts; and, Supplemental Rules, in addition to main body of rules, govern admiralty and maritime actions. See 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 2071–2074.

Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. Procedural rules which govern all criminal proceedings in the U.S. District Courts, and, where specified, before U.S. Magistrates. Such rules were promulgated by the U.S. Supreme Court in 1945 under power granted by Congress, and have since been frequently amended. Several states have adopted criminal procedural rules patterned on the federal criminal rules. See 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 2071–2074.

Federal Tort Claims Act. The government of the United States may not be sued in tort without its consent. That consent was given in the Federal Tort Claims Act (1946), which largely abrogated the federal government's immunity from tort liability and established the conditions for suits and claims against the federal government. The Act (28 U.S.C.A. §§ 1346(b), 2674) preserves governmental immunity with respect to the traditional categories of intentional torts, and with respect to acts or omissions which fall within the "discretionary function or duty" of any federal agency or employee. See also Sovereign immunity.

Federal Trade Commission. Agency of the federal government created in 1914. The Commission's principal functions are to promote fair and free competition in interstate commerce through prevention of general trade restraints such as price-fixing agreements, false advertising, boycotts, illegal combinations of competitors and other unfair methods of competition. See also Clayton Act; Robinson-Patman Act; Sherman Antitrust Act.

Federation. A joining together of states or nations in a league or association; the league itself. See also Compact; Federal; Federal government; United States.

An unincorporated association of persons for a common purpose.

Fee. A charge fixed by law for services of public officers or for use of a privilege under control of government. Fort Smith Gas Co. v. Wiseman, 189 Ark. 675, 74 S.W.2d 789, 790. A recompense for an official or professional service or a charge or emolument or compensation for a particular act or service. A fixed charge or perquisite charged as recompense for labor; reward, compensation, or wage given to a person for performance of services or something done or to be done.

See also Base (Base fee); Commitment fee; License fee or tax; Foundage fees; Retainer.

Attorney fees. Charge to client for services performed (e.g. hourly fee, flat fee, contingency fee). Such fees must be "reasonable" (see e.g. Model Rules of Professional Conduct, Rule 1.5(a)). Numerous federal statutes provide for the award of attorney fees to the prevailing party; e.g., 25% of award in social security disability claim actions. See Contingent fees, below; also, American rule; Equal Access to Justice Act; Fee splitting; Minimum fee schedules; Retainer; Suit (Suit money).

Contingent fees. Arrangement between attorney and client whereby attorney agrees to represent client with compensation to be a percentage of the amount recovered; e.g., 25% if the case is settled, 30% if case goes to trial. Frequently used in personal injury actions. Such fee arrangements are often regulated by court rule or statute depending on the type of action and amount of recovery; and are not permitted in criminal cases (see, e.g., ABA, Model Rules of Professional Conduct, Rule 1.5(c), (d)).

Court fees. Those amounts paid to court or one of its officers for particular charges that typically are delineated by statute, such as docket fees, marshal's charges and witness fees. Dickerson v. Pritchard, D.C.Ark., 551 F.Supp. 306, 311. See e.g. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1911 et seq. See also Costs; Docket (Docket fee).

Docket fees. See Court fees above; also Docket.

FEDERAL TORT CLAIMS ACT

An interest in land which (a) is or may become possessory; and (b) is ownership measured in terms of duration. Restatement of Property § 9. See also Fee simple.

Ordinarily, word "fee" or "fee simple" is applied to an estate in land, but term is applicable to any kind of hereditament, corporeal or incorporeal, and is all the property in thing referred to or largest estate therein which person may have. In re Forsstrom, 44 Ariz. 472, 38 P.2d 878, 888.

A freehold estate in lands, held of a superior lord, as a reward for services, and on condition of rendering some service in return for it. The true meaning of the word "fee" is the same as that of "feud" or "fief," and in its original sense it is taken in contradistinction to "alodion," which latter is defined as a man's own land, which he possesses merely in his own right, without owing any rent or service to any superior. 2 BLComm. 105.

In modern English tenures, "fee" signifies an estate of inheritance, being the highest and most extensive interest which a man can have in a feud; and when the term is used simply, without any adjunct, or in the form "fee-simple," it imports an absolute inheritance clear of any condition, limitation, or restriction to particular heirs, but descendible to the heirs general, male or female, lineal or collateral. 2 BLComm. 106.

Base fee. A determinable or qualified fee; an estate having the nature of a fee, but not a fee simple absolute.

Conditional fee. An estate restrained to some particular heirs, exclusive of others, Blume v. Pearcy, 204 S.C. 409, 29 S.E.2d 673, 674, as to the heirs of a man's body, by which only his lineal descendants were admitted, in exclusion of collateral; or to the heirs male of his body, in exclusion of heirs female, whether lineal or collateral. It was called a "conditional fee," by reason of the condition expressed or implied in the donation of it that, if the donee died without such particular heirs, the land should revert to the donor. The term includes a fee that is either to commence or determine on some condition; and is sometimes used interchangeably with "base fee," that is, one to determine or be defeated on the happening of some contingent event or act.

Determinable fee. Also called a "base" or "qualified" fee. One which has a qualification subjoined to it, and which must be determined whenever the qualification annexed to it is at an end. An estate in fee which is liable to be determined by some act or event expressed on its limitation to circumscribe its continuance, or inferred by law as bounding its extent. An estate which may last forever is a "fee," but if it may end on the happening of a merely possible event, it is a "determinable," or "qualified fee."

Determinable fee or fee simple. Estate created with special limitation which delimits duration of estate in land.

Fee damages. See Damages.
Fee expectant. A name sometimes applied to an estate created where lands are given to a man and his wife and the heirs of their bodies. See also Frank-marriage.

Fee simple. See Fee simple.

Fee simple defeasible. Title created in trustees where legal title in fee simple to active trust estate is by will placed in trustees who are required to distribute property in fee simple upon happening of event. Also called a "determinable fee", "base fee", or "qualified fee". Kanawah Val. Bank v. Hornbeck, 151 W.Va. 308, 151 S.E.2d 694, 700.

Great fee. In feudal law, the designation of a fee held directly from the crown.

Knight's fee. See Knights fee.

Limited fee. An estate of inheritance in lands, which is clogged or confined with some sort of condition or qualification. Such estates are based on qualified fees, conditional fees, and fees-tail. The term is opposed to "fee-simple."

Piowman's fee. In old English law, was a species of tenure peculiar to peasants or small farmers, somewhat like gavelkind, by which the lands descended in equal shares to all the sons of the tenant.

Qualified fee. In English law, a fee having a qualification subjoined thereto, and which must be determined whenever the qualification annexed to it is at an end; otherwise termed a "base fee." An interest which may continue forever, but is liable to be determined, without the aid of a conveyance, by some act or event, circumscribing its continuance or extent. An interest given to a man and certain of his heirs at the time of its limitation.

Quasi fee. An estate gained by wrong.

Feed. To lend additional support; to strengthen ex post facto. Similarly, a subsequent title acquired by the mortgagor is said "to feed the mortgage."

Feeder organization. An entity that carries on a trade or business for the benefit of an exempt organization. However, such a relationship does not result in the feeder organization itself being tax-exempt. IRC § 502.

Fee-farm. A species of tenure, where land is held of some author. It might be one-fourth or one-third the value of the land. Fee-farm is where lands are given to a man and his wife and assigns forever without limitation or condition. An absolute or fee-simple estate is one in which the owner is entitled to the entire property, with unconditional power of disposition during one's life, and descending to one's heirs and legal representatives upon one's death intestate. Such estate is unlimited as to duration, disposition, and descendibility. Slayden v. Hardin, 257 Ky. 685, 79 S.W.2d 11, 12.

The estate which a man has where lands are given to him and to his heirs absolutely without any end or limit to his estate. 2 Bl.Comm. 106. The word "fee," used alone, is a sufficient designation of this species of estate, and hence "simple" is not a necessary part of the title, but it is added as a means of clearly distinguishing this estate from a fee-tail or from any variety of conditional estates. Fee-simple signifies a pure fee; an absolute estate of inheritance clear of any condition or restriction to particular heirs, being descendible to the heirs general, whether male or female, lineal or collateral. It is the largest estate and most extensive interest that can be enjoyed in land.

Conditional. Type of transfer in which grantor conveys fee simple on condition that something be done or not done. A defeasible fee which leaves grantor with right of entry for condition broken, which right may be exercised by some action on part of grantor when condition is breached.

At common law an estate in fee simple conditional was a fee limited or restrained to some particular heirs, exclusive of others. But the statute "De donis" converted all such estates into estates tail. 2 Bl.Comm. 110.

Defeasible. Type of fee grant which may be defeated on the happening of an event. An estate which may last forever, but which may end upon the occurrence or nonoccurrence of a specified event, is a "fee simple defeasible". Newbern v. Barnes, 3 N.C.App. 521, 165 S.E.2d 526, 530.

Determinable. A "fee simple determinable" is created by conveyance which contains words effective to create a fee simple and, in addition, a provision for automatic Fee simple title. See Fee simple.

Fee splitting. Division of legal fees between attorney who handles matters and attorney who referred such to him or her. Referrals commonly occur when referring attorney lacks expertise, or experience to effectively handle the particular matter.

Fee tail. A freehold estate in which there is a fixed line of inheritable succession limited to the issue of the body of the grantee or devisee, and in which the regular and general succession of heirs at law is cut off. Coleman v. Shoemaker, 147 Kan. 689, 78 P.2d 905, 907.

An estate tail; an estate of inheritance given to a man and the heirs of his body, or limited to certain classes of particular heirs. It corresponds to the feodum talliatum of the feudal law, and the idea is believed to have been borrowed from the Roman law, where, by way of fidei commissa, lands might be entailed upon children and freedmen and their descendants, with restrictions as to alienation. For the varieties and special characteristics of this kind of estate, see Tail, Estate in.

Fegangi /fagænjay/. In old English law, a thief caught while escaping with the stolen goods in his possession.

Fehmgerichte /féymgorikta/. The name given to certain secret tribunals which flourished in Germany from the end of the twelfth century to the middle of the sixteenth, usurping many of the functions of the governments which were too weak to maintain law and order, and inspiring dread in all who came within their jurisdiction. Such a court existed in Westphalia (though with greatly diminished powers) until finally suppressed by Jerome Bonaparte in 1811.

Feigned /féynd/. Fictitious; pretended; supposititious; simulated.

Feigned accomplice. One who pretends to consult and act with others in the planning or commission of a crime, but only for the purpose of discovering their plans and confederates and securing evidence against them. See Informer.

Feigned action. An action, now obsolete, brought on a pretended right, when the plaintiff has no true cause of action, for some illegal purpose. In a feigned action the words of the writ are true. It differs from false action, in which case the words of the writ are false. See also Feigned issue.

Feigned diseases. Simulated or pretended illness. Diseases are generally feigned from one of three causes,—fear, shame, or the hope of gain.

Feigned issue. A proceeding, now obsolete, whereby parties, by consent, could have matter determined by jury without actually bringing action. See also Feigned action.

FELA. See Federal Employer’s Liability Act.

Felagus /féléygus/. In Saxon law, one bound for another by oath; a sworn brother. A friend bound in the decenary for the good behavior of another. One who took the place of the deceased. Thus, if a person was murdered, the recompense due from the murderer went to the felagus of the slain, in default of parents or lord.

Feld. A field; in composition, wild.

Fele, feal. L. Fr. Faithful. See Feal.

Fellatio, n. A sexual act in which the mouth or lips come into contact with the penis. See Sodomy.

Fellow. A co-worker; a partaker or sharer of; a companion; one with whom we consort; one joined with another in some legal status or relation; a member of a college or corporate body.

Fellow-heir. A co-heir; partner of the same inheritance.

Fellow servant. One who works for and is controlled by the same employer; a co-worker. Walsh v. Eubanks, 183 Ark. 34, 34 S.W.2d 762, 764. Those engaged in the same type of work, under the control of a common employer. Employees who derive authority and compensation from the same common employer, and are engaged in the same general business. Cactus Drilling Co. v. Williams, Tex.Civ.App., 525 S.W.2d 902, 910. When persons are employed and paid by the same employer, and their duties are such as to bring them into such relation that negligence of one in doing his work may injure other in performance of his, then they are engaged in the same common businesses, and are "fellow servants." See also Employee; Fellow servant rule.

Fellow servant rule. A common law doctrine, now generally abrogated by workers' compensation acts and Federal Employers' Liability Act, that in an action for damages brought against an employer by an injured employee the employer may allege that the negligence of another fellow employee was partly or wholly responsible for the accident resulting in the injury and, thus reducing or extinguishing his own liability.

Felo de se /féló de sī/. Killing of self; suicide.

Felon /félōn/. Person who commits or has committed a felony (q.v.).

Felonia /falóniə/. Felony. The act or offense by which a vassal forfeited his fee. Per felonia, with a criminal intention.

Felonia, e x vi termini, significat quodlibet capitale crimen felleo animo perpetratum /falówniə, eks vá tówrmanoy, sagnifykátw kwódłasbat käpstačliy krayman féliyow ánów marporparpréyton/. Felony, by force of the term, signifies any capital crime perpetrated with a malignant mind.

Felonia implicatur in qualibet proditione /falówniə implakjytar in kwéjytabą pradishįwóniə/. Felony is implied in every treason.

Felonice /falównieə/. Feloniously.
Felonious homicide. Killing of human being without felonious entry. Type of statutory burglary.

Felonious assault. Such an assault upon the person as, if consummated, would subject the party making it, upon conviction, to the punishment of a felony, that is, to imprisonment. Aggravated assault as contrasted with simple assault. See also Assault.

Felonious entry. Type of statutory burglary. See Burglary.

Felonious homicide. Killing of human being without justification or excuse. See Homicide; Manslaughter; Murder; Premeditation.

Felonious intent. An act of the will in which one forms a desire to commit a felony. As applied to crime of larceny, the intent which exists where a person knowingly takes and carries away the personal property of another without any claim or pretense of right with the intent wholly and permanently to deprive the owner of his property. State v. Perry, 21 N.C.App. 478, 204 S.E.2d 889, 891.

Feloniously. Of, pertaining to, or having, the quality of felony. Proceeding from an evil heart or purpose; wickedly and against the admonition of the law; unlawfully. See also Felony. Feloniously.

Feloniously taking. As used in the crimes of larceny and robbery, it is the taking with intent to steal.

Felony. A crime of a graver or more serious nature than those designated as misdemeanors; e.g., aggravated assault (felony) as contrasted with simple assault (misdemeanor). Under many state statutes, any offense punishable by death or imprisonment for a term exceeding one year. See, e.g., Model Penal Code § 1.04(2); 18 U.S.C.A. § 1. The federal and many state criminal codes define felony status crimes, and in turn also have various classes of felonies (e.g., Class A, B, C, etc.) or degrees (e.g., first, second, third) with varying sentences for each class. See, e.g., 18 U.S.C.A. § 3559; Model Penal Code § 6.01.

At common law, an offense occasioning total forfeiture of either land or goods to which capital or other punishment might be superadded according to degree of guilt. At early common law the term was applied to describe the more serious offenses cognizable in the royal courts, conviction for which entailed forfeiture of life, limb and chattels and escheat of lands to the felon’s lord after a year and a day in the king’s hands. Subsequently, however, the classification was so greatly enlarged that many offenses not involving moral turpitude were included therein. In re Donegan, 282 N.Y. 285, 26 N.E. 260, 261. This term meant originally the state of having forfeited lands and goods to the crown upon conviction for certain offenses, and then, by transition, any offense upon conviction for which such forfeiture followed, in addition to capital or any other punishment prescribed by law; as distinguished from a “misdemeanor,” upon conviction for which no forfeiture followed. In feudal law, the term meant an act or offense on the part of the vassal, which cost him his fee, or in consequence of which his fee fell into the hands of his lord; that is, became forfeited. (See Felonia.) Perfidy, ingratitude, or disloyalty to a lord.

Felony, compounding of. See Compounding Crime.

Forcible felony. Forcible felony includes any treason, murder, voluntary manslaughter, rape, robbery, burglary, arson, kidnapping, aggravated battery, aggravated sodomy and any other felony which involves the use or threat of physical force or violence against any person.

Misprision of felony. See Misprision.

Reducible felony. A felony upon conviction of which the offender may be punished as for a misdemeanor, upon recommendation of the jury.

Felony murder doctrine. At common law, one whose conduct brought about an unintended death in the commission or attempted commission of a felony was guilty of murder (e.g. a homicide committed during an armed robbery). While some states still follow the common law rule, today the law of felony murder varies substantially throughout the country, largely as a result of efforts to limit the scope of the rule. Jurisdictions have limited the rule in one or more of the following ways: (1) by permitting its use only as to certain types of felonies; (2) by more strict interpretation of the requirement of proximate or legal cause; (3) by a narrower construction of the time period during which the felony is in the process of commission; (4) by requiring that the underlying felony be independent of the homicide. See e.g. Model Penal Code § 210.2.

Female. The sex which conceives and gives birth to young. Also a member of such sex. The term is generic, but may have the specific meaning of “woman,” if so indicated by the context.

Feme, femme /fém/. L. Fr. A woman. Also, a wife, as in the phrase “baron et femme”.

Feme covert /fém kävart/. A married woman. Generally used in reference to the former legal disabilities of a married woman, as compared with the condition of a feme sole.

Feme sole /fém sówl/. A single woman, including those who have been married, but whose marriage has been dissolved by death or divorce, and, for most purposes, those women who are judicially separated from their husbands.

Feme sole trader /fém sówl trýdør/. In old English law, a married woman, who, by the custom of London, trades on her own account, independently of her husband; so called because, with respect to her trading, she is the same as a feme sole. The term is applied also to women deserted by their husbands, who do business as femes sole.

Femicide /fémásáyd/. The killing of a woman. One who kills a woman.

Feminine /fémənən/. Of or belonging to females.

Femme couleur libre /fám kúwɔʁ lǐbra/. Up to the time of Civil War, term applied to all persons not of the white race, including Indians.

Fence, n. A hedge, structure, or partition, erected for the purpose of inclosing a piece of land, or to divide a piece of land into distinct portions, or to separate two contiguous estates. An enclosure about a field or other space, or about any object; especially an enclosing structure of wood, iron or other materials, intended to prevent intrusion from without or straying from within.

A colloquial characterization of a receiver of stolen property; one who receives and sells stolen goods. See Receiving stolen goods or property.

Fence county. A county where the stock law has not been adopted. McKenzie v. Powell, 68 Ga.App. 285, 22 S.E.2d 735, 736.

Fence-month, or defense-month. In old English law, a period of time, occurring in the middle of summer, during which it was unlawful to hunt deer in the forest, that being their fawning season. Probably so called because the deer were then defended from pursuit or hunting.

Fencing patents. Patents procured in an effort to broaden the scope of the invention beyond the article or process which is actually intended to be manufactured or licensed. Special Equipment Co. v. Coe, 79 U.S.App. D.C. 133, 144 F.2d 497, 499.

Feneration /fénərɛʃən/. Usury; the gain of interest; the practice of increasing money by lending. Sometimes applied to interest on money lent. See Interest.

Fengeld /fɛŋɡəld/. In Saxon law, a tax or imposition, exalted for the repelling of enemies.

Fenian /fɛŋɡən/. A champion, hero, giant. This word, in the plural, is generally used to signify invaders or foreign spoilers. A member of an organization of persons of Irish birth, resident in the United States, Canada, and elsewhere, having for its aim the overthrow of English rule in Ireland.

Feodal /fɛˈdʊəl/. More commonly used by the old writers than feoda, and elsewhere, having as its equivalent, "feudum" (q.v.), is the one most commonly used by the older English law-writers.

Feodary, or feudatory /fɛˈdʊərəri/. In feudal law, the grantee of a feod, feud, or fee; the vassal or tenant who held his estate by feudal service. Blackstone uses "feodatory." 2 Bl.Comm. 46.

Feodi firma /fɛˈdʊədərəm ˈfɜːrmərɪəs/. The lessee of a fee-farm.

Feodi firmarius /fɛˈdʊədərəm ˈfɜːrməriəs/. The lessee of a fee-farm.

Feodum /fɛˈdʊəm/. This word (meaning a feud or fee) is the one most commonly used by the older English law-writers, though its equivalent, "feudum" (q.v.), is used generally by the more modern writers and by the feudal law-writers. There were various classes of feoda, among which may be enumerated the following: Feodum laicum, a lay fee. Feodum militare, a knight's fee. Feodum imprroprium, an improper or derivative fee. Feodum proprium, a proper and original fee, regulated by the strict rules of feudal succession and tenure. Feodum simplex, a simple or pure fee; fee-simple. Feodum talliatum, a fee-tail.

In old English law, a seigniory or jurisdiction. A fee, a perquisite or compensation for a service.

Feodum antiquum /fɛˈdʊəm əntəˈkiːəm/. A feud which devolved upon a vassal from his intestate ancestor.

Feodum est quod quis tenet ex quacunque causa sive sit tenementum sive redditus /fɛˈdʊəm ɛst kwɔːd kwɔːd tɛnɛntɛm sɛv sɛv rɛdɪtus/. A fee is that which any one holds from whatever cause, whether tenement or rent.

Feodum nobile /fɛˈdʊəm nɔˈbɔli/. A fief which the tenant did guard and owed homage.

Feodum novum /fɛˈdʊəm nɔˈvʌm/. A feu d acquired by a vassal himself.

Feodum simplex qua feodum idem est quod hereditas, et simplex idem est quod legiminitum vel purum; et sic feodum simplex idem est quod hereditas legitima vel hereditas pura /fɛˈdʊəm sɪmpliks ˈkwɔːd ˈfɪˈdʊəm idem ˈɛst kwɔːd herɛˈdɪtəs ət ˈsɪk ˈfɪˈdʊəm sɪmpliks ˈɛst kwɔːd herɛˈdɪtəs ˈlɪdɪtɪmə ˈvɛl herɛˈdɪtəs ˈpɜːrə/. A fee-simple, so called because fee is the same as inheritance, and simple is the same as lawful or pure; and thus fee-simple is the same as a lawful inheritance, or pure inheritance.
Feodum talliatum, i.e., hæreditas in quandam certitudinem limitata /fywdam tællyæydæm, id ëst, harfydatæs in kwondam sàrtatwolfdanæm limstætys/. Fee-tail, i.e., an inheritance limited in a definite descent.

Feoffamentum /fyflæmæntøm/. A feoffment.

Feoffare /fyf(a)feriy/. To enfeoff; to bestow a fee. The feoffare i.e., haereditas in quandam certitudinem limitaextytys.

Feoffamentum /fyflæmænt/. The gift of any corporeal person to yuwsazfyfly. He to whom a fee is conveyed.

Feoffee to uses /fyflyfyfly/. A person to whom land was conveyed for the use of a third party. (The latter was called "cestui que use.") One holding the same position with reference to a use that a trustee does to a trust. He answers to the hæres fiduciarius (The latter was called "domita nature."

Feoffor /feôr/. This Saxon word meant originally cattle, and thence property or money, and, by a second transition, wages, reward, or fee. It was probably the original form from which the words "feod," "feudum," "fief," "feu," and "fee" (all meaning a feudal grant of land) have been derived.

Feorme /fàrm/. A certain portion of the produce of the land due by the grantee to the lord according to the terms of the charter.

Fere bestiae /friy bëstiyi/. Wild beasts.

Fere naturæ /friy natyuriy/. Lat. Of a wild nature or disposition. Animals which are by nature wild are so designated, by way of distinction from such as are naturally tame, the latter being called "domita nature."

FERC. See Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

Ferdella terræ /fardela tehriy/. A fardel-land; ten acres; or perhaps a yard-land.

Ferdfare. Sax. A summons to serve in the army. An acquittance from going into the army.

Ferdingus. A term denoting, apparently, a freeman of the lowest class, being named after the cotseti.

Ferdwite. In Saxon law, an acquittance of manslaughter committed in the army; also a fine imposed on persons for not going forth on a military expedition.

Feria /friyiy/. In old English law, a weekday; a holiday; feriae days. Originally and properly, days or seasons during which free-born Romans suspended their political transactions and their lawsuits, and during which slaves enjoyed a cessation from labor.
Fermentation. A decomposition produced in an organic substance by the physiological action of a living organism, or by certain unorganized agents.

Fermented liquors. Beverages produced by, or which have undergone, a process of alcoholic fermentation, to which they owe their intoxicating properties, including beer, wine, hard cider, and the like, but not spirituous or distilled liquors.

Fermor /færmar/. A lessee; a farmer. One who holds a term, whether of lands or an incorporeal right, such as customs or revenue.

Fermor /farmariy, farmariy/. In old records, a place in Femigo. In old English law, a waste ground, or place where fern grows.

Fermory /farmar, farmar/. A lessee; a farmer. Where fern grows.

Fermosina. In old English law, the winter season for killing deer.

Fermory /färmar, färmarly/. In old records, a place in monasteries, where they received the poor (hospicio exceptibant), and gave them provisions (ferm, firma). Hence the modern infirmary, used in the sense of a hospital.

Fernigo. In old English law, a waste ground, or place where fern grows.

Ferrator. A farrier (q.v.).

Ferry /féhry/. In the civil law, to be borne; that is on or about the person. This was distinguished from portari (to be carried), which signified to be carried on an animal.

Ferriage /féhriya/. The toll or fare paid for the transportation of persons and property across a ferry. Literally speaking, it is the price or fare fixed by law for the transportation of the traveling public, with such goods and chattels as they may have with them, across a river, bay, or lake.

Ferry. Commercial transportation of people, vehicles, goods, etc. across body of water. Also, boat or vessel used in such transportation. In law it is treated as a franchise, and defined as the exclusive right to carry passengers and freight across a river, lake or arm of the sea, or to connect a continuous line of road leading from one side of the water to the other. Canadian Pac. Ry. Co. v. U. S., C.C.A.Wash., 73 F.2d 831, 832.

A continuation of the highway from one side of the water over which it passes to the other, for transportation of passengers or of travelers with their vehicles and such other property as they may carry or have with them. U. S. v. Puget Sound Nav. Co., D.C.Wash., 24 F.Supp. 431, 432.

A liberty to have a boat on a stream, river, arm of the sea, lake, or other body of water for the transportation of passengers and vehicles with their contents, for a reasonable toll. Sometimes limited to the landing place. State Highway Commission v. Smith, 250 Ky. 269, 62 S.W.2d 1044.

Whether a boat is a "ferry" and comprises a continuous part of the road or highway depends on length of run, type of ship, whether it was operated under state franchise or federal certificate of convenience, whether it was equipped to carry cargo, extent to which service to passengers is emphasized and extent to which its use is necessitated by lack of land transportation. Alaska S. S. Co. v. Federal Maritime Commission, C.A.Wash., 399 F.2d 623, 628.

A public ferry is one to which all the public have the right to resort, for which a regular fare is established, and the ferryman is a common carrier, bound to take over all who apply, and bound to keep his ferry in operation and good repair.

A private ferry is one mainly for the use of the owner, and though he may take pay for ferriage, he does not follow it as a business. His ferry is not open to the public at its demand, and he may or may not keep it in operation.

Ferry franchise. The public grant of a right to maintain a ferry at a particular place; a right conferred to land at a particular point and secure toll for the transportation of persons and property from that point across the stream. A grant to a named person empowering him to continue an interrupted land highway over the interrupting waters. U. S. v. Puget Sound Nav. Co., D.C.Wash., 24 F.Supp. 431, 432.

Ferryman. One employed in taking persons across a lake, river or stream, in boats or other vessels, at a ferry.

Festa in cappis /fésta in kágás/. In old English law, grand holidays, on which choirs wore caps.

Festinatio justitiae est noverca infortunii /fes-tanéshiy(i)yow jastishiyiy est navarka infortyuwiyay/. Hasty justice is the stepmother of misfortune.

Festing-man. In old English law, a bondsman; a surety; a frank-pledge, or one who was surety for the good behavior of another. Monasteries enjoyed the privilege of being "free from festing-men," which means that they were "not bound for any man's forthcoming who should transgress the law." See Frank-pledge.

Festing-penny. Earnest given to servants when hired or retained.

Festinum remedium /festam remiyidiyom/. Lat. A speedy remedy. A term applied to those cases where the remedy for the redress of an injury is given without any unnecessary delay. The action of dower is festinum remedium. The writ of assise was also thus characterized (in comparison with the less expeditious remedies previously available) by the statute of Westminster 2 (13 Edw. I, c. 24.)

Festuca /féshúwka/. In Frankish law, a rod or staff or (as described by other writers) a stick, on which impracticable runs were cut, which was used as a gage or pledge of good faith by a party to a contract, or for symbolic delivery in the conveyance or quit-claim of land, before a court of law, anterior to the introduction of written documents by the Romans.

Festum /féstam/. A feast, holiday, or festival. Festum stallorum /féstam stélórom/, the feast of fools.

Fetal death. The death of a child not yet born. Death in utero of a fetus weighing 500 grams or more. This weight corresponds roughly to a fetus of twenty weeks or more (gestational age), i.e. a viable fetus.

Death is defined in the following context: after expulsion, the fetus does not breathe or show any other evidence of life, such as the beating of the heart, pulsation of the umbilical cord, or definite movement of voluntary muscles.

Feticide /fiytasáyd/. Destruction of the fetus; the act by which criminal abortion is produced. The killing of an unborn child. State v. Horne, 282 S.C. 444, 319 S.E.2d 703, 704. See also Abortion; Prolicide.

Fettering. The act of shackling or placing manacles on another.

Fetters /féters/. Chains or shackles for the feet; irons used to secure the legs of convicts, unruly prisoners, etc. Similar chains securing the wrists are called "handcuffs".

Fetus /fiytos/. An unborn child. The unborn offspring of any viviparous animal; specifically the unborn offspring in the post embryonic period after major structures have been outlined (in man from seven or eight weeks after fertilization until birth).

Feud. Feudal law. An estate in land held of a superior on condition of rendering him services. 2 Bl.Comm. 105. An inheritable right to the use and occupation of lands, held on condition of rendering services to the lord or proprietor, who himself retains the property in the lands.

In this sense the word is the same as "feod", "feodum", "feudum", "feef", or "fee".

Saxon and old German law. An enmity, or species of private war, existing between the family of his slayer. In Scotland and the north of England, a combination of all the kin to revenge the death of any of the blood upon the slayer and all his race. See Faida.

Feuda /fyúwa/. Feuds or fees.

Feudal /fyúwdal/. Pertaining to feuds or fees; relating to or growing out of the feudal system or feudal law; having the quality of a feud, as distinguished from "allodial."

Feudal actions. An ancient name for real actions, or such as concern real property only. 3 Bl.Comm. 117.

Feudal courts. In the 12th century a lord qua lord had the right to hold a court for his tenants. In the 19th century, they became of less importance for three reasons: The feudal principle would have led to a series of courts one above the other, and the dominions of the large landowners were usually scattered, so that great feudal courts became impossible. The growth of the jurisdiction of the king's court removed the necessity for feudal courts. All the incidents of the feudal system came to be regarded in a commercial spirit—as property. Its jurisdiction became merely appendant to landowning.

Feudalism. The feudal system; the aggregate of feudal principles and usages. The social, political, and econom-
FEUDAL TENURES

Feudal tenures. The tenures of real estate under the feudal system, such as knight-service, socage, vilainage, etc.

Feudary /fyúwdariy/. A tenant who holds by feudal tenure (also spelled “feodatory” and “feudatory”). Held by feudal service. Relating to feuds or feudal tenures.

Feudbote /fyúwbót/. A recompense for engaging in a feud, and the damages consequent, it having been the custom in ancient times for all the kindred to engage in their kinsman’s quarrel.

Feude /fyúwd/. An occasional early form of “feud” in the sense of private war or vengeance. See Feud.

Feudist /fyúwdist/. A writer on feuds, as Cujacius.

Feudo /fyúwd/. An occasional early form of “feud” in In Spanish law, feud or fee.

Feudist /fyúwdist/. A writer on feuds, as Cujacius.

Feudorum liber /fyúwdórom láybar/. The Books of Feuds. A compilation of feudal law, prepared by order of the emperor Frederick I, and published at Milan in 1170. It comprised five books, of which only the first two are now extant with fragmentary portions of the others, printed at the end of modern editions of the Corpus Juris Civilis.

Feudorum libri /fyúwdórom láybray/. The Books of Feuds published during the reign of Henry III, about the year 1152. The particular customs of Lombardy as to feuds began about the year 1152 to be the standard of authority to other nations by reason of the greater refinement with which that branch of learning had been there cultivated. This compilation was probably known in England, but does not appear to have had any other effect than to influence English lawyers to the more critical study of their own tenures, and to induce them to extend the learning of real property so as to embrace more curious matter of similar kind.

Feudum /fyúwdam/. L. Lat. A feud, fief, or fee. A right of using and enjoying forever the lands of another, which the lord grants on condition that the tenant shall render fealty, military duty, and other services. It is not properly the land, but a right in the land.

This form of the word is used by the feudal writers. The earlier English writers generally prefer the form fæodum. There was an older word fæum. Its use by the Normans is exceedingly obscure. “Feudal” was not in their vocabulary. Usually it denoted a stretch of land, rarely a tenure or mass of rights. It came to be applied to every person who had heritable rights in land.

Feudum antiquum /fyúwdam köntakwam/. An ancient feud or fief; a fief descended to the vassal from his ancestors. 2 Bl.Comm. 212, 221. A fief which ancestors had possessed for more than four generations.

Feudum apertum /fyúwdam spørtam/. An open feud or fief; a fief resulting back to the lord, where the blood of the person last seised was utterly extinct and gone or where the tenant committed a crime, or gave other legal cause.

Feudum francum /fyúwdam fráŋkam/. A free feud. One which was noble and free from taille and other subsidies to which the plebeia feuda (vulgar feuds) were subject.

Feudum hauberticum /fyúwdam hobörtakam/. A fee held on the military service of appearing fully armed at the ban and arriere ban.

Feudum improprium /fyúwdam imprówpriyam/. An improper or derivative feud or fief.

Feudum individuum /fyúwdam īndaidykwam/. An indivisible or inheritable feud or fief; descendible to the eldest son alone.

Feudum laicam /fyúwdam léyakam/. A lay fee.

Feudum ligium /fyúwdam lijyam/. A liege feud or fief; a fief held immediately of the sovereign; one for which the vassal owed fealty to his lord against all persons. 1 Bl.Comm. 367.

Feudum maternum /fyúwdam matarnam/. A maternal fief; a fief descended to the feudatory from his mother. 2 Bl.Comm. 212.

Feudum militare /fyúwdam milístiriy/. A knight’s fee, held by knight service and esteemed the most honorable species of tenure. 2 Bl.Comm. 62.

Feudum nobile /fyúwdam nówbalíy/. A fee for which the tenant did guard and owed fealty and homage.

Feudum novum /fyúwdam nówvam/. A new feud or fief; a fief which began in the person of the feudatory, and did not come to him by succession. 2 Bl.Comm. 212.

Feudum novum ut antiquum /fyúwdam nówvam ţt antákkwam/. A new fee held with the qualities and incidents of an ancient one. 2 Bl.Comm. 212.

Feudum paternum /fyúwdam pátárnam/. A fee which the paternal ancestors had held for four generations. One descendible to heirs on the paternal side only. 2 Bl.Comm. 223. One which might be held by males only.

Feudum proprium /fyúwdam prówpriyam/. A proper, genuine, and original feud or fief; being of a purely military character, and held by military service. 2 Bl.Comm. 57, 58.

Feudum talliatum /fyúwdam taliyiytam/. A restricted fee. One limited to descend to certain classes of heirs. 2 Bl.Comm. 112, note.

Feu et lieu /fyúw éy lyúw/. Fr. In old French and Canadian law, hearth and home. A term importing actual settlement upon land by a tenant.

Feu holding /fyúw höwldíy/. A holding by tenure of rendering grain or money in place of military service.

Feum /fiyam/. An older form of feudum.

Few. Not many; of small number. U. S. v. Margolis, C.C.A.N.J., 138 F.2d 1002, 1003. An indefinite expression for a small or limited number. Indicating a small number of units or individuals which constitute a whole. A relative term of great elasticity of meaning.

Ff. A Latin abbreviation for “Fragmenta,” designating the Digest or Pandects in the Corpus Juris Civilis of Justinian; so called because that work is made up of fragments or extracts from the writings of numerous jurists.

F.G.A. In marine insurance means: “Free from general average”; also, sometimes, “foreign general average.” The precise meaning of this abbreviation must be gathered from the context. See Average; General average contribution.

FHA. See Federal Housing Administration.

FHLB. See Federal Home Loan Banks.

FHLMC. See Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation.

Fiancer. L. Fr. To pledge one’s faith.

Fianza /fiyansa/. Sp. In Spanish law, trust, confidence, and correlatively a legal duty or obligation arising therefrom. The term is sufficiently broad in meaning to include both a general obligation and a restricted liability under a single instrument. But in a special sense, it designates a surety or guarantor, or the contract or engagement of suretyship; the contract by which one person engages to pay the debt or fulfill the obligations of another if the latter should fail to do so.

Fiat /fayst/. (Lat. “Let it be done.”) In old English practice, a short order or warrant of a judge or magistrate directing some act to be done; an authority issuing from some competent source for the doing of some legal act.

One of the proceedings in the English bankruptcy practice, being a power, signed by the lord chancellor, addressed to the court of bankruptcy, authorizing the petitioning creditor to prosecute his complaint before it. By the statute 12 & 13 Vict., c. 116, fiats were abolished.

Arbitrary or authoritative order or decision.

Joint fiat. In old English law, a fiat in bankruptcy, issued against two or more trading partners.

Fiat justitia /fayst jyesty(i)yə/. Let justice be done. On a petition to the king for his warrant to bring a writ of error in parliament, he writes on the top of the petition, “Fiat justitia,” and then the writ of error is made out, etc.

Fiat justitia, ruat calum /fayst jyesty(i)yə, ruwat sjyləm/. Let right be done, though the heavens should fall.

Fiat money. Paper currency not backed by gold or silver.

Fiat prout fieri consuevit (nil temere novandum) /fayst prəwott fayɔray kɑnswɨvɨt, nil ˈteməri novəndəm/. Let it be done as it hath used to be done (nothing must be rashly innovated).

Fiat ut petitor /fayɔyd ət pətətor/. Let it be done as it is asked. A form of granting a petition.

Fiaunt /fəyənt/. An order; command. See Fiat.

FICA. Federal Insurance Contributions Act (q.v.). The law that sets “Social Security” taxes and benefits.

Fictio /fiksh(i)yəw/. In Roman law, a fiction; an assumption or supposition of the law. Such was properly a term of pleading, and signified a false averment on the part of the plaintiff which the defendant was not allowed to traverse; as that the plaintiff was a Roman citizen, when in truth he was a foreigner. The object of the fiction was to give the court jurisdiction.

Fictio cedit veritati. Fictio juris non est ubi veritas /fiksh(i)yəw siydət vəhrətətətə. fiksh(i)yəw jyərəs nən əst yəwəw vəhrətəsə/. Fiction yields to truth. Where there is truth, fiction of law exists not.

Fictio est contra veritatem, sed pro veritate habetur /fiksh(i)yəw əst kəntrə vəhrətətəm, səd prəw vəhrətətətly həbəydar/. Fiction is against the truth, but it is to be esteemed true.

Fictio juris non est ubi veritas /fiksh(i)yəw jyərəs nən əst yəwəw vəhrətəsə/. Where truth is, fiction of law does not exist.

Fictio legis inique operatur aliqui damnun vel injuriam /fiksh(i)yəw liyəs ˈɪnəkwiəp ˈɒpərətər ələkiˈyuəw ˈdæmən vəl ˈɪŋdʒəriəm/. A legal fiction does not properly work loss or injury. Fiction of law is wrongful if it works loss or injury to anyone.

Fictio legis neminem lactit /fiksh(i)yəw liyəs ˈnɛmiənəm liːdət/. A fiction of law injures no one. 3 Bl.Comm. 43.

Fiction of law. An assumption or supposition of law that something which is or may be false is true, or that a state of facts exists which has never really taken place. An assumption, for purposes of justice, of a fact that does not or may not exist. A rule of law which assumes as true, and will not allow to be disproved, something which is false, but not impossible. Ryan v. Motor Credit Co., 30 N.J.Eq. 531, 23 A.2d 607, 621.

These assumptions are of an innocent or even beneficial character, and are made for the advancement of the ends of justice. They secure this end chiefly by the extension of procedure from cases to which it is applicable to other cases to which it is not strictly applicable, the ground of inapplicability being some difference of an immaterial character.

See also Legal fiction.

Estoppel distinguished. Fictions are to be distinguished from estoppels; an estoppel being the rule by which a person is precluded from asserting a fact by previous conduct inconsistent therewith on his own part or the part of those under whom he claims, or by an adjudication upon his rights which he cannot be allowed to question.

Presumptions distinguished. Fictions are to be distinguished from presumptions of law. By the former, something known to be false or unreal is assumed as true; by the latter, an inference is set up, which may be and probably is true, but which, at any rate, the law will not permit to be controverted. It may also be said that a presumption is a rule of law prescribed for the purpose of getting at a certain conclusion, though arbitrary, where the subject is intrinsically liable to doubt from the remoteness, discrepancy, or actual defect of proofs.
Fictitious. Founded on a fiction; having the character of a fiction; pretended; counterfeit. Feigned, imaginary, not real, false, not genuine, nonexistent. Arbitrarily invented and set up, to accomplish an ulterior object.

Fictitious action. An action brought for the sole purpose of obtaining the opinion of the court on a point of law, not for the settlement of any actual controversy between the parties. See Declaratory judgment; Feigned action; Feigned issue.

Fictitious name. A counterfeit, alias, feigned, or pretended name taken by a person, differing in some essential particular from his true name (consisting of Christian name and patronymic), with the implication that it is meant to deceive or mislead. See also Alias.

Fictitious payee. Negotiable instrument is drawn to fictitious payee whenever payee named in it has no right to it, and its maker does not intend that such payee shall take anything by it; whether name of payee used by maker is that of person living or dead or one who never existed is immaterial. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. v. Wells Fargo Bank & Union Trust Co., 1 Cal.App.2d 694, 37 P.2d 483. The test is not whether the named payee is "fictitious" but whether the signer intends that he shall have no interest in the instrument. U.C.C. § 3-405.

Fictitious plaintiff. A person appearing in the writ, complaint, or record as the plaintiff in a suit, but who in reality does not exist, or who is ignorant of the suit and of the use of his name in it. It is a contempt of court to sue in the name of a fictitious party.

Fictitious promise. See Promise.

Fidei-commissarius /fādiyay kōmāsēriyəs/. In the civil law, this term corresponds nearly to our "cestui que trust." It designates a person who has the real or beneficial interest in an estate or fund, the title or administration of which is temporarily confided to another.

Fidei-commissum /fādiyay kāmīsəm/. In the civil law, a species of trust; being a gift of property (usually by will) to a person, accompanied by a request or direction of the donor that the recipient will transfer the property to another, the latter being a person not capable of taking directly under the will or gift. Elements of "fidei commissum" are that donee or legatee is invested with title and charged or directed to convey it to another or to make particular disposition of it. Succession of Abraham, La.App., 136 So.2d 471, 478.

Fide-jubere /fādiy jābērīy/ fādiy jūbiyət? fādiy jūbiyəw/. In the civil law, to order a thing upon one's faith; to pledge one's self; to become surety for another.

Fide-jussio /fādiy jāsš(i)yəw/. An act by which any one binds himself as an additional security for another. This giving security does not destroy the liability of the principal, but adds to the security of the surety.

Fide-jussor /fādiy jāsər/. In Roman law, a guarantor; one who becomes responsible for the payment of another's debt, by a stipulation which binds him to discharge it if the principal debtor fails to do so. 3 Bl.Comm. 108. He differs from a co-obligor in this, that the latter is equally bound to a debtor, with his principal, while the former is not liable till the principal has failed to fulfill his engagement. The obligation of the fide-jussor was an accessory contract; for, if the principal obligation was not previously contracted, his engagement then took the name of mandate. The sureties taken on the arrest of a defendant, in the court of admiralty, were formerly denominated "fide jussors." 3 Bl.Comm. 108.

Fidelitas /fādiyātətsə/. Fealty; fidelity. See Fealty.

Fidelitas. De nullo tenemento, quod tenetur ad terminum, fit homagii; fit tamen inde fidelitatis sacramentum /fēdēlīstəs. Dīy nālōw tēnəmnətwō, kwōd tənəytərd ād tārmənəm, fit həməjījvaya; fit tāmən fēdēlətəytəs səkrəməntəm/. Fealty. For no tenement which is held for a term is there the oath of homage, but there is the oath of fealty.

Fidelity and guaranty insurance. A contract of fidelity or guaranty insurance is one whereby the insurer, for a valuable consideration, agrees, subject to certain conditions, to indemnify the insured against loss consequent upon the dishonesty or default of a designated person. Guaranty insurance, used in its broad sense, also includes credit insurance, and title insurance, as well as the numerous forms of surety bonds.

The contract partakes of the nature both of insurance and of suretyship. Hence, even in the absence of terms so providing, the contract is avoided by the failure of the insured to disclose to the insurer, at the time of making the contract, any known previous acts of dishonesty on the part of the employee, or any dishonest practices that may occur during the currency of the policy. But the insured is not required to give notice of mere irregularities not involving moral turpitude; nor, in the absence of agreement to that effect, does the insured owe to the insurer any duty of watching the conduct and accounts of the employee concerned.

Fidelity insurance. See Fidelity and guaranty insurance; Insurance.

Fidem mentiri /fáydotom méntáyray/. Lat. To betray faith or fealty. A term used in feudal and old English law of a feudatory or feudal tenant who does not keep that fealty which he has sworn to the lord.

Fide-promissor /fáydiyz prámisar/. See Fide-jussor.

Fides /fáydiyz/. Lat. Faith; honesty; confidence; trust; veracity; honor. Occurring in the phrases "bona fides" (good faith), "mala fides" (bad faith), and "uberrima fides" (the utmost or most abundant good faith).

Fides est obligatio conscientiae alicujus ad intentionem alterius /fáydiyz est oblagéysh(i)ow kónshiyénshiy-yi schíshuyuywjas ëd intënshiyównom òltáraysa/. A trust is an obligation of conscience of one to the will of another.

Fides servanda est /fáydiyz sárvénda est/. Faith must be observed. An agent must not violate the confidence reposed in him.

Fides servanda est; simplicitas juris gentium pravaleat /fáydiyz sárvénda est; simpísítas júras jënsk(i)ýam praváléyat/. Faith must be kept; the simplicity of the law of nations must prevail. A rule applied to bills of exchange as a sort of sacred instruments.

Fiducia /fásh(i)yá/As. In Roman law, an early form of mortgage or pledge, in which both the title and possession of the property were passed to the creditor by a formal act of sale (properly with the solemnities of the transaction known as mancipatio), there being at the same time an express or implied agreement on the part of the creditor to reconvey the property by a similar act of sale provided the debt was duly paid; but on default of payment, the property became absolutely vested in the creditor without foreclosure and without any right of redemption.

Fiducial. An adjective having the same meaning as "fiduciary;" as, in the phrase "public or fiducial office."

Fiduciarius hares /fásh(i)yáshirýyayi/. See Fiduciary heir.

Fiduciarius tutor /fásh(i)yáshirýyayi t(y)úwtor/. In Roman law, the elder brother of an emancipated pupillus, whose father had died leaving him under fourteen years of age.

Fiduciary /fásh(i)yáshary/. The term is derived from the Roman law, and means (as a noun) a person holding the character of a trustee, or a character analogous to that of a trustee, in respect to the trust and confidence involved in it and the scrupulous good faith and candor which it requires. A person having duty, created by his undertaking, to act primarily for another's benefit in matters connected with such undertaking. As an adjective it means of the nature of a trust; having the characteristics of a trust; analogous to a trust; relating to or founded upon a trust or confidence.

A term to refer to a person having duties involving good faith, trust, special confidence, and candor towards another. A fiduciary "includes such relationships as executor, administrator, trustee, and guardian." ABA Code of Judicial Conduct, Canon 3C(3)(b). A lawyer is also in a fiduciary relationship with the client.

A person or institution who manages money or property for another and who must exercise a standard of care in such management activity imposed by law or contract; e.g. executor of estate; receiver in bankruptcy; trustee. A trustee, for example, possesses a fiduciary responsibility to the beneficiaries of the trust to follow the terms of the trust and the requirements of applicable state law. A breach of fiduciary responsibility would make the trustee liable to the beneficiaries for any damage caused by such breach.

The status of being a fiduciary gives rise to certain legal incidents and obligations, including the prohibition against investing the money or property in investments which are speculative or otherwise imprudent.

Many states have adopted the Uniform Fiduciaries Act, and the Uniform Management of Institutional Funds Act.

See also Fiduciary capacity; Fiduciary or confidential relation.

Foreign fiduciary. A trustee, executor, administrator, guardian or conservator appointed by a jurisdiction other than the one in which he is acting.

Fiduciary bond. Type of surety bond required by court to be filed by trustees, administrators, executors, guardians, and conservators to insure proper performance of their duties.

Fiduciary capacity. One is said to act in a "fiduciary capacity" or to receive money or contract a debt in a "fiduciary capacity," when the business which he transacts, or the money or property which he handles, is not his own or for his own benefit, but for the benefit of another person, as to whom he stands in a relation implying and necessitating great confidence and trust on the one part and a high degree of good faith on the other part. The term is not restricted to technical or express trusts, but includes also such offices or relations as those of an attorney at law, a guardian, executor, or broker, a director of a corporation, and a public officer.

Fiduciary contract. An agreement by which a person delivers a thing to another on the condition that he will restore it to him.

Fiduciary debt. A debt founded on or arising from some confidence or trust as distinguished from a "debt" founded simply on contract. Montgomery v. Phillips Petroleum Co., Tex.Civ.App., 49 S.W.2d 967, 973.

Fiduciary duty. A duty to act for someone else's benefit, while subordinating one's personal interests to that of the other person. It is the highest standard of duty implied by law (e.g., trustee, guardian).
Fiduciary heir. The Roman laws called a fiduciary heir the person who was instituted heir, and who was charged to deliver the succession to a person designated by the testament.

Fiduciary or confidential relation. A very broad term embracing both technical fiduciary relations and those informal relations which exist wherever one person trusts in or relies upon another. One founded on trust or confidence reposed by one person in the integrity and fidelity of another. Such relationship arises whenever confidence is reposed on one side, and domination and influence result on the other; the relation can be legal, social, domestic, or merely personal. Heilman's Estate, Matter of, 37 Ill.App.3d 390, 345 N.E.2d 536, 540.

A relation subsisting between two persons in regard to a business, contract, or piece of property, or in regard to the general business or estate of one of them, of such a character that each must repose trust and confidence in the other and must exercise a corresponding degree of fairness and good faith. Out of such a relation, the law raises the rule that neither party may exert influence or pressure upon the other, take selfish advantage of his trust, or deal with the subject-matter of the trust in such a way as to benefit himself or prejudice the other except in the exercise of the utmost good faith and with the full knowledge and consent of that other, business shrewdness, hard bargaining, and astuteness to take advantage of the forgetfulness or negligence of another being totally prohibited as between persons standing in such a relation to each other. Examples of fiduciary relations are those existing between attorney and client, guardian and ward, principal and agent, executor and heir, trustee and cestui que trust, landlord and tenant, etc.

Fiduciary shield doctrine. Equitable doctrine which holds that actions taken by individual defendants solely in their capacity as corporate officers could not provide the basis for the exercise of jurisdiction over their persons, absent circumstances making such exercise appropriate. This doctrine confers jurisdictional immunity upon corporate officials, even though their conduct be tortious as long as the actions taken were in the interest of the corporation and not purely personal and the corporation is not merely a shell for the individual and does not lack sufficient assets to respond. Totalplan Corp. of America v. Lure Camera Ltd., D.C.N.Y., 613 F.Supp. 451, 457.

Fief /fiːf/. A fee, feeod, or feud.

Fief d'haubert (or d'hauberk) /fiəf dɔ̃bɛrk/. Fr. In Norman feudal law, a fief or fee held by the tenure of knight-service: a knight's fee. 2 Bl.Comm. 62. A fee held on the military tenantry of appearing fully armed on the ban and arrière-ban.

Fief-tenant /fiəf ˈtɛntən/. In old English law, the holder of a fief or fee; a feeholder or freeholder.

Fiel /fiɛ̃/. In Spanish law, a sequestrator; a person in whose hands a thing in dispute is judicially deposited; a receiver.
of a third person, acting as a warehouseman on the pledgor's premises. Field warehousing is often employed as a security device in inventory financing where the financier or secured party desires to maintain close control over the borrower's inventory and have the advantages of being a pledgee of the property. The device is employed in financing manufacturers or wholesalers in seasonal industries and is also useful where the manufactured products must be aged or cured or where they are accumulated over a period of time and then disposed of all at once.

Field work. Work in the field, specifically the task of gathering data from the field. Includes the sphere of practical operation, as of an organization or enterprise; also, the place or territory where direct contacts as with any scene of operations or opportunity for activity.

Field warehousing is often impractical operation, as of an organization or enterprise; gathering data from the field. Includes the sphere of manufactured products must be aged or cured or where disposed of all at once.

Fielding courts /firdig körta/. Ancient Gothic courts of /fayaray/. Lat. To be made; to be done. Fieri /fayi/ See In Fieri facias de bonis ecclesiasticis /faysray feys(h)iyses/. The writ issued on an ordinary plaintiff may sue out a fi. fa. de bonis ecclesiasticis, nulla bona, and the value of its fifteenth part (then about £29,000) was recorded in the exchequer, whence the tax, levied on that valuation, continued to be called a "fifteenth," although as the wealth of the kingdom increased, the name ceased to be an accurate designation of the proportion of the tax to the value taxed. 1 Bl.Comm. 309.

Fifth Amendment. Amendment to U.S. Constitution providing that no person shall be required to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous offense unless on indictment or presentment of a grand jury except in military cases; that no person will suffer double jeopardy; that no person will be compelled to be a witness against himself; that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law and that private property will not be taken for public use without just compensation.

Fighting words doctrine. The First Amendment doctrine that holds that certain utterances are not constitutionally protected as free speech if they are inherently likely to provoke a violent response from the audience. N.A.A.C.P. v. Clairborne Hardware Co., Miss., 458 U.S. 886, 102 S.Ct. 3409, 73 L.Ed.2d 1215 (1982). Words which by their very utterance inflict injury or tend to incite an immediate breach of the peace, having direct tendency to cause acts of violence by the persons to whom, individually, remark is addressed. The test is what persons of common intelligence would understand to be words likely to cause an average addressee to fight. City of Seattle v. Camby, 104 Wash.2d 49, 701 P.2d 499, 500.

The "freedom of speech" protected by the Constitution is not absolute at all times and under all circumstances and there are well-defined and narrowly limited classes of speech, the prevention and punishment of which does not raise any constitutional problem, including the lewd and obscene, the profane, the libelous, and the insulting or "fighting words" which by their very utterance inflict injury or tend to incite an immediate breach of the peace. Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire, 315 U.S. 568, 62 S.Ct. 766, 86 L.Ed. 1031.

Fighting words. Sax. A mulct or fine for making a quarrel to the disturbance of the peace. A payment to a lord possessing soc over a place where a wrong was done.

Figures. Artificial representations of a form, as in sculpture, drawing, or painting, especially the human body represented by art of any king. People v. Eastman, 89 Misc. 596, 152 N.Y.S. 314, 317.

Numerals; number symbols. They are either Roman, made with letters of the alphabet: e.g. "MDCCCLXXVI"; or they are Arabic: e.g. "1776".

Filacer /fibzar/. In England an officer of the superior courts at Westminster, whose duty it was to file the writs on which he made process. There were fourteen filacers, and it was their duty to make out all original process. The office was abolished in 1837.

Filare /fileri/. In old English practice, to file.

Filching /filchin/. To steal money, commonly of little value, secretly or underhandedly. Peck v. Bez, W.Va., 40 S.E.2d 1, 10.

File, n. A record of the court. Milton v. United States, C.C.A.La., 105 F.2d 253, 255. A paper is said to be filed when it is delivered to the proper officer, and by him received to be kept on file as a matter of record and reference. But, in general, "file," or "the files," is used loosely to denote the official custody of the court or the place in the offices of a court where the records and papers are kept. The "file" in a case includes the original complaint and all pleadings and papers belonging thereto. See also Docket; Record.

File, v. To lay away and arrange in order, pleadings, motions, instruments, and other papers for preservation and reference. To deposit in the custody or among the records of a court. To deliver an instrument or other paper to the proper officer or official for the purpose of being kept on file by him as a matter of record and reference in the proper place. It carries the idea of permanent preservation as a public record. City of Overland Park v. Nikias, 209 Kan. 643, 496 P.2d 56, 59.

See also Record.

Constructive filing. See that title.
tax liability. The filing status with the most advantageous rate schedule is "married filing a joint return."

Filius (or filius) /filiyəs/. Lat. A son; a child. As distinguished from filius, filius is a term of nature, hoeres a term of law. In the civil law the term was used to denote a child generally. A distinction was sometimes made, in the civil law, between "filii" and "liberi," the latter word including grandchildren (nepotes), the former not.

Filius est nomen naturae, sed haeres nomen juris. Son is a name of nature, but heir is a name of law.

Filius nullius /filiyəs nəlɪyəs/. An illegitimate child; son of nobody.

Filius in utero matris est pars viscerum matris /filiyəs ɪn ə tuːroʊ meɪtraɪs est pærz viːzərəm meɪtraɪs/. A son in the mother's womb is part of the mother's vitals.

Filius mulieratus /filiyəs myʊˈwɪərətəs/. In old English law, the eldest legitimate son of a woman, who previously had an illegitimate son by his father. Otherwise called "mulier." 2 Bl.Comm. 248.

Filius nullius /filiyəs nəlɪyəs/ /'nəlɪyəs/. An illegitimate child; son of nobody.

Filius populi /filiyəs póʊpəli/. A son of the people. Natural child.

Fill. To make full; to complete; to satisfy or fulfill; to possess and perform the duties of; to occupy the whole capacity or extent of, so as to leave no space vacant. To execute customer's order to buy or sell a security or commodity.

Filthy. Dirty, vulgar, indecent, obscene, lewd, offensive to the moral sense, morally depraving, debasing. Containing or covered with filth. See Obscene.

Filum /fəyələm/. Lat. In old practice, a file, i.e., a thread or wire on which papers were strung, that being the ancient method of filing. An imaginary thread or line passing through the middle of a stream or road, as in the titles following.

Filum aquæ /fəyələm əˈkwəɪə/. A thread of water; a line of water; the middle line of a stream of water, supposed to divide it into two equal parts, and constituting in many cases the boundary between the riparian proprietors on each side. Medium filum is sometimes used with no additional meaning. Cf. Thalweg.

Filum viae /fəyələm vəɹi/. The thread or middle line of a road. The boundary between the owners of the land on each side of a road.

Fin /fɛiŋ/. Fr. An end, or limit; a limitation, or period of limitation.

Final. Last; conclusive; decisive; definitive; terminated; completed. As used in reference to legal actions, this word is generally contrasted with "interlocutory.

For res judicata purposes, a judgment is "final" if no further judicial action by court rendering judgment is required to determine matter litigated. Adolph Coors Co. v. Sickler, D.C.Cal., 608 F.Supp. 1417, 1429. See also Final decision or judgment.

As to final Costs; Decree; Injunction; Judgment; Order; Process; Recovery; Sentence, and Settlement, see those titles.

Final appealable order or judgment. One that disposes of all issues and all parties in the case and leaves nothing for further determination. Schaumburg/Glunt, Inc. v. Parmley, Mo.App., 701 S.W.2d 201, 202. See also Final decision or judgment.

Final architect's certificate. One which is issued after a job is done and which finally determines the rights of the parties as to money and disputes.

Final award. One which conclusively determines the matter submitted and leaves nothing to be done except to execute and carry out terms of award. Trollope v. Jeffries, 55 Cal.App.3d 816, 128 Cal.Rptr. 115, 120. See Final decision or judgment.

Final decision or judgment. One which leaves nothing open to further dispute and which sets at rest cause of action between parties. One which settles rights of parties respecting the subject-matter of the suit and which concludes them until it is reversed or set aside. In re Tiffany, 252 U.S. 32, 40 S.Ct. 239, 240, 64 L.Ed. 443. Also, a decision from which no appeal or writ of error can be taken. U.S. ex rel. Fink v. Tod, C.C.A.N.Y., 1 F.2d 246, 251. Judgment is considered "final," and thus appealable only if it determines the rights of the parties and disposes of all of the issues involved so that no further action by the court will be necessary in order to settle and determine the entire controversy. Howard Gault & Son, Inc. v. First Nat. Bank of Hereford, Tex. Civ.App., 523 S.W.2d 496, 498.

"Final decision" which may be appealed (to Court of Appeals under 28 U.S.C.A. § 1291) is one that ends litigation on merits and leaves nothing for courts to do but execute judgment. U.S. v. One Parcel of Real Property with Bldgs., Etc., C.A.Fla., 767 F.2d 1495, 1497. In criminal case, is imposition of sentence. People ex rel. Grogan v. Lisinski, 1 Dist., 113 Ill.App.3d 72, 68 Ill.Dec. 854, 446 N.E.2d 1251, 1253. See also Final decision rule; Final disposition; Interlocutory Appeals Act; Judgment (Final judgment); Res (Res judicata).

Final decision rule. Appeals to federal courts of appeals from U.S. district courts must be from "final decisions" of district courts. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1291. In other words, the courts of appeals lack jurisdiction over nonfinal judgments. The object of this restriction is to prevent piecemeal litigation which would otherwise result from the use of interlocutory appeals. See Interlocutory Appeals Act.

Final decree. See Final decision or judgment.

Final determination. See Final decision or judgment.
Final disposition. Such a conclusive determination of the subject-matter that after the award, judgment, or decision is made nothing further remains to fix the rights and obligations of the parties, and no further controversy or litigation can arise thereon. See U.C.C. § 2A-103.

Final hearing. Describes that stage of proceedings relating to the determination of a subject matter upon its merits as distinguished from those of preliminary or interlocutory nature.

Finalis concordia /fanécylas koškór(i)y/ A final or conclusive agreement.

Finality rule. See Final decision rule.

Final judgment. See Final decision or judgment; Judgment.

Final judgment rule. See Final decision rule.

Final order. One which terminates the litigation between the parties and the merits of the case and leaves nothing to be done but to enforce what has been determined. Richerson v. Jones, C.A.Pa., 561 F.2d 918, 921. See also Final decision or judgment.

Final passage. The vote on a passage of a bill or resolution in either house of the legislature after it has received the prescribed number of readings and has been subjected to such action as is required by the fundamental law governing the body or its own rule.

Final payment. The point at which monetary credit given for an item cannot be revoked under U.C.C. Article 4, which describes four means of final payment occurs. See U.C.C. § 4-213(1).

Final receiver's receipt. An acknowledgment by the government that it has received full payment for public land, that it holds the legal title in trust for the entryman, and will in due course issue to him a patent.

Final settlement. In probate proceeding, a direct adjudication that the estate is fully administered; that the administrator has completely executed his trust and has accounted for all moneys received as the law requires. In re Braun's Estate, 140 Kan. 188, 34 P.2d 94, 95.

With respect to final settlement in a real estate transaction, see Closing.

Final submission. Exists when nothing remains to be done in proceedings to render submission of case complete. Where the whole case, both requested instructions and evidence, is submitted to the court for its ruling and the court takes the case under advisement, there is a "final submission" of the entire case. Piatt v. Helm & Overly Realty Co., 342 Mo. 772, 117 S.W.2d 327, 329.

Finance. As a verb, to supply with funds through the payment of cash or issuance of stocks, bonds, notes, or mortgages; to provide with capital or loan money as needed to carry on business.

Finance is concerned with the value of the assets of the business system and the acquisition and allocation of the financial resources of the system.

Finance charge. The consideration for privilege of deferring payments of purchase price. The amount however denominated or expressed which the retail buyer contracts to pay or pays for the privilege of purchasing goods or services to be paid for by the buyer in installments; it does not include the amounts, if any, charged for insurance premiums, delinquency charges, attorney's fees, court, costs, collection expenses or official fees. All charges incident to or condition of credit. Such costs are regulated by state and federal "truth-in-lending" statutes which require full disclosure of finance charges on credit agreements, billing statements, and the like. See Truth-in-Lending Act.

Finance committee. A committee of the U.S. Senate with functions and powers similar to that of the Ways and Means Committee of the House. In business, an executive level committee, commonly made up of members of board of directors, responsible for major financial decisions of business.

Finance company. Non-bank company that makes loans to individuals and businesses. Its capital comes from banks and other financial institutions and money markets—rather than from deposits. The primary types of finance companies are: consumer (or small loan) finance companies; sales finance (acceptance) companies, that purchase installment financing paper from e.g. automobile dealers; and, commercial finance or credit companies that make loans to manufacturers and wholesalers.

Finance lease. A lease in which the lessor does not select, manufacture or supply the goods, but enters into a contract with a third party supplier to acquire goods specifically for the purpose of leasing them to the lessee. U.C.C. § 2A–103.

Financial. Fiscal. Relating to finances.

Financial Accounting Standards Board. Independent board with responsibility to establish and interpret Generally Accepted Accounting Principles.

Financial institutions. An insured bank; a commercial bank or trust company; a private banker; an agency or branch of a foreign bank in the United States; an insured institution as defined in the National Housing Act; a thrift institution; a broker or dealer registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission; a broker or dealer in securities or commodities; an investment banker or investment company; a currency exchange; an issuer, redeemer, or cashier of travelers' checks, checks, money orders, or similar instruments; an operator of a credit card system; an insurance company; a Financial interest. An interest equated with money or its equivalent.

Financially able. Solvent; credit worthy; able to pay debts and expenses as due. Means purchaser must be able to command the necessary funds to close the transaction within the required time. Hersh v. Garau, 218 Cal. 460, 23 P.2d 1022. A prospective purchaser is "financially able" if he or she has the capability to make downpayment and all deferred payments required under a proposed contract of sale. Fleming Realty & Ins., Inc. v. Evans, 199 Neb. 440, 259 N.W.2d 604, 606. See also Financial responsibility acts; Solvency.

Financial markets. Markets for the exchange of capital in the economy, including stock, bond, commodity and foreign exchanges.

Financial reports. See Annual report; Financial statement; Profit and loss statement.

Financial responsibility. Term commonly used in connection with motor vehicle insurance equivalents. See also Financial responsibility acts.

Financial responsibility acts. State statutes which require owners of motor vehicles to produce proof of financial accountability as a condition to acquiring a license and registration so that judgments rendered against them arising out of the operation of the vehicles may be satisfied.

Financial responsibility clause. Provision in automobile insurance policy stating that the insured has at least the minimum amount of coverage required by state financial responsibility laws.

Financial statement. Any report summarizing the financial condition or financial results of a person or organization on any date or for any period. Financial statements include the balance sheet and the income statement and sometimes the statement of changes in financial position. See also Annual report.

Consolidated statement. Financial statements that include the accounts of both a parent company and controlled subsidiaries. See also Consolidated financial statements.

Financial worth. The value of one's property less what he owes, or the value of his resources less his liabilities.

Financier. A person or financial institution employed in the economical management and application of money. One skilled in matters appertaining to the judicious investment, loaning, and management of money affairs. Person or institution that financially backs business ventures.

Financing agency. A bank, finance company or other person who in the ordinary course of business makes advances against goods or documents of title or who by arrangement with either the seller or the buyer intervenes in ordinary course to make or collect payment due or claimed under the contract for sale, as by purchasing or paying the seller's draft or making advances against it or by merely taking it for collection whether or not documents of title accompany the draft. "Financing agency" includes also a bank or other person who similarly intervenes between persons who are in the position of seller and buyer in respect to the goods. U.C.C. § 2–104.

Financing statement. A document setting out a secured party's security interest in goods. A document designed to notify third parties, generally prospective buyers or lenders, that there may be an enforceable security interest in the property of the debtor. Villa v. Alvarado State Bank, Tex.Civ.App., 611 S.W.2d 483, 486. It is merely evidence of the creation of a security interest, and usually is not itself a security agreement. Shelton v. Erwin, C.A.Mo., 472 F.2d 1118, 1120.

Under the Uniform Commercial Code, a financing statement is used under Article 9 to reflect a public record that there is a security interest or claim to the goods in question to secure a debt. The financing statement is filed by the security holder with the Secretary of State, or similar public body, and as such becomes public record. When the document is filed with the appropriate government agency, all potential lenders and third parties are put on constructive notice of the security interest. See also Secured transaction; Security interest.

Find. To come upon by seeking or by effort. Shields v. Shields, 115 Mont. 146, 139 P.2d 528, 530. To discover; to determine; to locate; to ascertain and declare. See also Found; Locate.

To announce a conclusion upon a disputed fact or state of facts; as a jury is said to "find a will." To determine a controversy in favor of one of the parties; as a jury "finds for the plaintiff." See also Finding.

Fin de non recevoir /efined non rsouyvyw/. In French law, an exception or plea founded on law, which, without entering into the merits of the action, shows that the plaintiff has no right to bring it, either because the time during which it ought to have been brought has elapsed, which is called "prescription," or that there has been a compromise, accord and satisfaction, or any other cause which has destroyed the right of action which once subsisted.

Finder. An intermediary who contracts to find, introduce and bring together parties to a business opportunity, leaving ultimate negotiations and consummation of business transaction to the principals. Business Development Services, Inc. v. Field Container Corp., 96 Ill. App.3d 834, 52 Ill.Dec. 403, 412, 422 N.E.2d 86, 93. With respect to a securities issue, refers to one who brings together an issuer and an underwriter; in connection with mergers, refers to one who brings two companies together. May also refer to one who secures mortgage financing for borrower; or one who locates a particular type of executive or professional for a corpo-Finder's fee. Amount charged for bringing together parties to business opportunity (e.g., lender and borrower) or bringing issuer and underwriter together, or for performing other types of services described under "finder" supra. A finder's fee for a securities issue may be stock or a combination of cash and stock.

Finder's fee contract. An arrangement by which an intermediary finds, introduces, and brings together parties to a business opportunity, leaving the ultimate negotiation and consummation of the business transaction to the principals. Equity Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Trent, Okl., 566 P.2d 449, 453.

Finding. The result of the deliberations of a jury or a court. A decision upon a question of fact reached as the result of a judicial examination or investigation by a court, jury, referee, coroner, etc. A recital of the facts as found. The word commonly applies to the result reached by a judge or jury. See also Decision; Judgment; Verdict.

Finding of fact. Determinations from the evidence of a case, either by court or an administrative agency, concerning facts averred by one party and denied by another. Kossdby v. O'Fallon Bd. of Fire and Police Com'rs, 31 Ill.App.3d 173, 334 N.E.2d 325, 329. A determination of a fact by the court, averred by one party and denied by the other, and founded on evidence in case. C.I.T. Corp. v. Elliott, 66 Idaho 384, 159 P.2d 891, 897. A conclusion by way of reasonable inference from the evidence. Welfare of Carpenter, 21 Wash.App. 814, 587 P.2d 588, 592. Also the answer of the jury to a specific interrogatory propounded to them as to the existence or non-existence of a fact in issue. Conclusion drawn by trial court from facts without exercise of legal judgment. Compare Conclusion of law.

Findings of fact shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous. Fed.R. Civil P. 52(a). The court may amend, or make additional findings, on motion of a party. Fed.R. Civil P. 52(b).

A general finding by a court is a general statement that the facts are in favor of a party or entitle him to judgment. It is a complete determination of all matters, and is a finding of every special thing necessary to be found in order to sustain the general finding.

A special finding is a specific setting forth of the ultimate facts established by the evidence and which are determinative of the judgment which must be given. It is only a determination of the ultimate facts on which the law must be determined. A special finding may also be said to be one limited to the fact issue submitted. Finding of law. Term applies to rulings of law made by court in connection with findings of fact; such findings or rulings of law are subject to appellate review. See also Conclusion of law. Compare Finding of fact, above.

Fine, n. A pecuniary punishment or penalty imposed by lawful tribunal upon person convicted of crime or misdemeanor. See e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3571. It may include a forfeiture or penalty recoverable in a civil action, and, in criminal convictions, may be in addition to imprisonment. A fine constitutes a "sentence" as defined in Rules of Criminal Procedure. State v. Pitts, 548 P.2d 1202, 1204, 26 Ariz.App. 390. See also Penality.

Fine, v. To impose a pecuniary punishment or mulct. To sentence a person convicted of an offense to pay a penalty in money.

In imposing fines, modern statutes require the court to consider the ability of the defendant to pay, the burden such will have on dependents of the defendant, and the effect such fine will have on the ability of the defendant to make restitution to the victim. E.g., Model Penal Code § 7.02(3)(b); 18 U.S.C.A. § 3571.

Conveyancing. An amicable composition or agreement of a suit, either actual or fictitious, by leave of the court, by which the lands in question become, or are acknowledged to be, the right of one of the parties. Hitz v. Jenks, 123 U.S. 297, 8 S.Ct. 143, 31 L.Ed. 156. Fines were abolished in England by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 74, substituting a disentailing deed. A fine is so called because it puts an end not only to the suit thus commenced, but also to all other suits and controversies concerning the same matter. The party who parted with the land, by acknowledging the right of the other, was said to levy the fine, and was called the "cognizor" or "conusor," while the party who recovered or received the estate was termed the "cognizee" or "conusee," and the fine was said to be levied to him. Executed fine. See Executed.

Tenure law. A money payment made by a feudal tenant to his lord. The most usual fine was that payable on the admittance of a new tenant, but there was also due in some manors fines upon alienation, on a license to demise the lands, or on the death of the lord, or other events.

Fine and recovery act. The English statutes 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 74, abolishing fines and recoveries.

Fine anullando levato de tenemento quod fuit de antiquo dominico /fayniy senalsendow lsveytow diy ténomentsow kwod fywuat diy antákwykow dominaskow/. An abolished writ for disannulling a fine levied of lands in ancient demesne to the prejudice of the lord.

Fine capiendo pro terris /fayniy kępiyendow prów téhrs/. An obsolete writ which lay for a person who, upon conviction by jury, had his lands and goods taken, and his body imprisoned, to be remitted his imprisonment, and have his lands and goods delivered to him, on obtaining favor of a sum of money, etc.

Fine for alienation. A fine anciently payable upon the alienation of a feudal estate and substitution of a new tenant. It was payable to the lord by all tenants holding by knight's service or tenants in capite by socage tenure. Abolished in England by 12 Car. II, c. 24. 2 Bl.Comm. 71, 89.

Fine-force. An absolute necessity or inevitable constraint.
Fine for endowment. A fine ancienly payable to the lord by the widow of a tenant, without which she could not be endowed of her husband's lands. Abolished in England under Henry I, and by Magna Charta. 2 Bl. Comm. 135.

Finem facere /fāynām fēsāry/. To make or pay a fine.

Fine non capiendo pro pulchre placitando /fāyniy nōn kēpīyēndōw prōw pōlīkriy plesstēndōw/. An obsolete writ to inhibit officers of courts to take fines for fair pleading.

Fine print. Term or expression referring to disclaimer or avoidance type provisions in insurance policies, financing agreements, and the like, that are typeset in small type and so located in the document so as to not be readily noticed by the insured, borrower, etc. State and federal disclosure laws have greatly curtailed this practice. Compare Conspicuous term or clause.

Fine pro redisseisinā capiendo /fāyniy prō rēdāsēlyizān kēpīyēndōw/. An old writ that lay for the release of one imprisoned for a redissein, on payment of a reasonable fine.

Fine rolls. See Oblate Rolls.

Fines le roy /fāynyz lō rōy/. In old English law, the king's fines. Fines formerly payable to the king for any contempt or offense, as where one committed any trespass, or falsely denied his own deed, or did anything in contempt of law.

Fine sur cognizance de droit, cum ceeo que il ad de son done /fāyn sēr kēnāyēzān dā drōy tēntām/. A fine upon acknowledgment of the right of the cognizee as that which he hath of the gift of the cognizor. By this the deforciant acknowledged in court a former foessment or gift in possession to have been made by him to the plaintiff. 2 Bl.Comm. 352.

Fine sur cognizance de droit tantum /fāyn sēr kēnāyēzās dā drōy tēntām/. A fine upon acknowledgment of the right merely, and not with the circumstance of a preceding gift from the cognizor. This was commonly used to pass a reversionary interest which was in the cognizor, of which there could be no foessment supposed. 2 Bl.Comm. 353.

Fine sur concessit /fāyn sēr kānēsāt/. A fine upon concessit (he hath granted). A species of fine, where the cognizor, in order to make an end of disputes, though he acknowledged no precedent right, yet granted to the cognizee an estate de novo, usually for life or years, by way of supposed composition. 2 Bl.Comm. 353.

Fine sur done granet et render /fāyn sēr dōn grēnt ēy rēnēr/. A double fine, comprehending the fine sur cognizance de droit come ceeo and the fine sur concessit. It might be used to convey particular limitations of estates, whereas the fine sur cognizance de droit come ceeo, etc., conveyed nothing but an absolute estate, either of inheritance, or at least freehold. In this last species of fines, the cognizee, after the right was acknowledged to be in him, granted back again or rendered to the cognizor, or perhaps to a stranger, some other estate in the premises. 2 Bl.Comm. 353.

Fingerprints. The distinctive pattern of lines on human fingertips, often used as a method of identification in criminal cases. For genetic fingerprinting, see DNA identification.

Finire /fānāry/. In old English law, to fine, or pay a fine. To end or finish a matter.

Finis /fāynas/. Lat. An end; a boundary or terminus; a limit. Also in L. Lat., a fine (q.v.).

Finis est amicabilis compositio et finalis concordia ex concensu et concordia domini regis vel justiciarum /fāynas ēst āmskēyēbalas kōmpasēsh(iy)ow ēt fōnēyās kōnkōrdīyas ēks kānsēnseyūs ēt kōnkōrdīyas dōmānay rījās vēl jāstīshīyēram/. A fine is an amicable settlement and decisive agreement by consent and agreement of our lord, the king, or his justices.

Finis finem litibus imponit /fāynas fāynam lītābas impōnēt/. A fine puts an end to litigation.

Finis rei attendendus est /fāynas rīyā ātēnēndās ēst/. The end of a thing is to be attended to.

Finis unius diei est principium alterius /fāynas yōnāyās dayīyāy ēst prinsēpiyam oltārāyas/. The end of one day is the beginning of another.

Finitio /fānish(iy)ow/. An ending; death, as the end of life.

Finium regundorum actio /fāyniyam rāgōndōram ēskh(iy)ow/. In the civil law, action for regulating boundaries. The name of an action which lay between those who had lands bordering on each other, to settle disputed boundaries.

Finors /fānyarzs/. Those that purify gold and silver, and part them by fire and water from coarser metals. In the English statute of 4 Hen. VII, c. 2, they are also called "parters."

FIO. "Free in and out". Term in a bill of lading means that the shipper supervises and pays for both loading and discharge of cargo. Sumitomo Corp. of America v. M/V Sie Kim, S.D.N.Y., 632 F.Supp. 824, 834.

FIOSS. "Free in and out stowage". Term indicates that the vessel does not pay for the costs of loading, stowage or discharge. Nitram, Inc. v. Cretan Life, C.A.Fla., 599 F.2d 1359, 1368.

Firdfare. Sax. In old English law, a summoning forth to a military expedition (indictio ad profectionem militarem).

Firdiringa. Sax. A preparation to go into the army.

Firdsocne. Sax. In old English law, exemption from military service.

Firdwite. In old English law, a fine for refusing military service (mulcta detectantis militiam). A mulct or penalty imposed on military tenants for their default in not appearing in arms or coming to an expedition. A fine imposed for murder committed in the army; an acquittance of such fine.
Fire. The effect of combustion. The juridical meaning of the word does not differ from the vernacular. The word "fire," as used in insurance policies, does not have the technical meaning developed from analysis of its nature, but more nearly the popular meaning, being an effect rather than an elementary principle, and is the effect of combustion, being equivalent to ignition or burning. A destructive burning.

To dismiss or discharge from a position or employment.

Firearm. An instrument used in the propulsion of shot, shell, or bullets by the action of gunpowder exploded within it. A weapon which acts by force of gunpowder. This word comprises all sorts of guns, fowling-pieces, blunderbusses, pistols, etc. In addition, grenade shells, fuses, and powder may be considered "firearm" even though disassembled. U. S. v. Shafer, C.A.Ill., 445 F.2d 579, 583.

The term "firearm" means any weapon which is designed to or may readily be converted to expel any projectile by the action of an explosive; or the frame or receiver of any such weapon. 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 232(4), 921(3).

Firearms Acts. Statutes (federal and state) imposing criminal penalties for illegal possession, sale and use of firearms; e.g. possession without license; carrying concealed weapon. See 18 U.S.C.A. § 921 et seq.; Model Penal Code § 5.07.

Firebare /fay(o)rbër/. A beacon or high tower by the seaside, wherein are continual lights, either to direct vessels in the night, or to give warning of the approach of an enemy.

Firebote /fay(o)rbëwt/. Allowance of wood or estovers to maintain competent firing for the tenant. A sufficient allowance of wood to burn in a house.

Firebug. A popular phrase referring to persons guilty of the crime of arson; commonly understood to mean an incendiary, pyromaniac, or arsonist. See Arson.

Fire district. One of the districts into which a city may be divided for the purpose of more efficient service by the fire department.

Fire insurance. See Insurance.

Fireman's Rule. Doctrine which holds that professionals, whose occupations by nature expose them to particular risks, may not hold another negligent for creating the situation to which they respond in their professional capacity.

Fire marshal or warden. Official whose duties include supervision of firefighting and fire prevention for a state, county, city or town.

Fire ordeals. See Ordeal.

Fire sales. Sale of merchandise at reduced prices because of damage by fire or water; commonly, any sale at reduced prices, especially one brought about by an emergency. Fire sales are often regulated by statute or ordinance to protect the public-buyer from deceptive sales practices.

Firm. Business entity or enterprise. Unincorporated business. Partnership of two or more persons. See also Firm name.

Binding; fixed; final; definite.

Firma /fërma/. In old English law, the contract of lease or letting; also the rent (or farm) reserved upon a lease of lands, which was frequently payable in provisions, but sometimes in money, in which latter case it was called "alba firma," white rent.

A tribute or custom paid towards entertaining the king for one night.

Firma burgi /fërma bôrjây/. The right, in medieval days, to take the profits of a borough, paying for them a fixed sum to the crown or other lord of the borough.

Firma feodi /fërma fyûwdây/*fly(â)yâdây/. In old English law, a farm or lease of a fee; a fee-farm.

Firman /fërman/. A Turkish word denoting a decree or grant of privileges, or passport to a traveler. A passport granted by the Great Mogul to captains of foreign vessels to trade within the territories over which he has jurisdiction; a permit.

Firmaratio /fërmarây(sh)(i)yow/. The right of a tenant to his lands and tenements.

Firmarium /fërmiyriyam/. In old records, a place in monasteries, and elsewhere, where the poor were received and supplied with food. Hence the word "infirmary."

Firmarius /fërmiyryas/. L. Lat. A fermor. A lessee of a term. Firmarii comprehend all such as hold by lease for life or lives or for year, by deed or without deed.

Firm bid. Offer which contains no conditions which may defeat acceptance and which by its terms remains open and binding until accepted or rejected.

Firme /fërm/. In old records, a farm.

Firmior et potentior est operatio legis quam dispositio hominis /fërmîyâr èt pâtënsiâyâr èst oparéy(sh)(y)ow lîyïjës kwêm dispizish(y)ow hômënas/. The operation of the law is firmer and more powerful [or efficacious] than the disposition [or will] of man.

Firmitas /fërmatâs/. In old English law, an assurance of some privilege, by deed or charter.

Firmly. A statement that an affiant "firmly believes" the contents of the affidavit imports a strong or high degree of belief, and is equivalent to saying that he "verily" believes it. The operative words in a bond or recognizance, that the obligor is held and "firmly bound," are equivalent to an acknowledgment of indebtedness and promise to pay.

Firm name. The name or title under which company transacts its business.

First-class mortgage. As defined by U.C.C. is an offer by a merchant to buy or sell goods in a signed writing which by its terms give assurance that it will be held open.

Such is not revocable for lack of consideration during the time stated or if no time is stated for a reasonable time, but in no event may such period of irrevocability exceed three months; but any such term of assurance on a form supplied by the offeree must be separately signed by the offeror. U.C.C. § 2-205. A binding, definite offer that is irrevocable for an agreed upon time.

Firmura /fɜːrmərə/. In old English law, liberty to scour and repair a mill-dam, and carry away the soil, etc.

First. Preceding all others; foremost; used as an ordi¬ nal of one, as earliest in time or succession or foremost in position; in front of or in advance of all others.

Colgate-Palmolive-Peret Co. v. U. S., C.C.A.Del., 130 F.2d

913, 915. Initial; senior; leading; chief; entitled to priority or preference above others.

As to first Cousin; Distress, and Mortgage, see those titles.

First Amendment. Amendment to U.S. Constitution guaranteeing basic freedoms of speech, religion, press, and assembly and the right to petition the government for redress of grievances. The various freedoms and rights protected by the First Amendment have been held applicable to the states through the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.

First blush rule. This rule, whereby a verdict may be set aside as excessive only if it is so to such an extent as to cause the mind at first blush to conclude that it was returned under influence of passion or prejudice on part of jury, is a mechanism to assist trial court in performing its responsibility when called upon to decide whether award is so excessive as to appear to have been given under influence of passion or prejudice. Davis v. Gra¬ vias, Ky., 672 S.W.2d 928, 932.

First-class. Of the most superior or excellent grade or kind; belonging to the head or chief or numerically precedent of several classes into which the general sub¬ ject is divided; e.g. first class mail, first class airline ticket.

First-class misdemeanor. Under the English prisons act (28 & 29 Vict., c. 126, § 67) prisoners in the county, city, and borough prisons convicted of misdemeanors, and not sentenced to hard labor, were divided into two classes, one of which was called the “first division;” and it was in the discretion of the court to order that such a prisoner be treated as a misdemeanor of the first division, usually called “first-class misdemeanor,” and as such not to be deemed a criminal prisoner, i.e., a prisoner convicted of a crime.

First-class title. A marketable title, shown by a clean record, or at least not depending on presumptions that must be overcome or facts that are uncertain. See also Marketable title.

First degree murder. Murder committed with deliber¬ ately premeditated malice aforethought, or with ex¬ treme atrocity or cruelty, or in the commission or attempted commission of a crime punishable with death or imprisonment for life, is murder in the first degree.

State v. McLaughlin, 286 N.C. 597, 213 S.E.2d 238, 244.

Distinction between “first degree murder” and “second degree murder” is a presence of a specific intent to kill.

Muder; Premeditation.

First devisee /fɜːst dɪvɪzɪ / /ˈdeɪvɪzi//. The person to whom the estate is first given by the will; term “next device” referring to the person to whom the remainder is given.

First fruits. In English ecclesiastical law, the first year’s whole profits of every benefice or spiritual living, anciently paid by the incumbent to the pope, but after¬ wards transferred to the fund called “Queen Anne’s Bounty,” for increasing the revenue from poor livings.

In feudal law, one year’s profits of land which be¬ longed to the king on the death of a tenant in capite; otherwise called “prima seisin.” One of the incidents to the old feudal tenures. 2 Bl.Comm. 66, 67.

First-hand knowledge. Information or knowledge gleaned directly from its source; e.g. eyewitness to a homicide.

A lay witness may not testify to a matter unless evidence is introduced sufficient to support a finding that he has personal knowledge of the matter. Federal Rules Evid. 602. If testimony purports to be based on observed facts but is in fact mere repetition of the statement of another, the proper objection is lack of first-hand knowledge. Compare Hearsay.

First heir. The person who will be first entitled to succeed to the title to an estate after the termination of a life estate or estate for years.

First impression case. First examination. First presentation of question of law to a court for examination or decision. A case is said to be “of the first impression” when it presents an entirely novel question of law for the decision of the court, and cannot be governed by any existing precedent.

First in, first out. See FIFO.

First lien. One which takes priority or precedence over all other charges or encumbrances upon the same piece of property, and which must be satisfied before such other charges are entitled to participate in the proceeds of its sale. See also First mortgage.

First meeting. As used in a statute providing that, for insulting words or conduct to reduce homicide to man¬ slaughter, killing must occur immediately or at “first meeting” after slayer is informed thereof, quoted words mean first time parties are in proximity under such circumstances as would enable slayer to act in the premises.

First meeting of creditors. In bankruptcy, the initial meeting called by the court for the examination of the bankrupt (i.e. debtor). Bankruptcy Code, § 341.

First mortgage. The senior mortgage which, by reason of its position, has priority over all junior encumbrances.

The holder of the first or senior mortgage has priority right to payment on default. See also Mortgage.

First of exchange. Where a set of bills of exchange is drawn in duplicate or triplicate, for greater safety in their transmission, all being of the same tenor, and the intention being that the acceptance and payment of any one of them (the first to arrive safely) shall cancel the others of the set, they are called individually the “first of exchange,” “second of exchange,” etc.

First offender. One who has never before been convicted of a crime and, hence, one generally given special consideration in the disposition of his case. For example, first offenders of less serious crimes often receive suspended sentences or are placed on probation.

First policy year. In insurance, the year beginning with the first issuance of the insurance policy. This phrase in a statute eliminating suicide of insured after such year as defense, means year for which policy, annually renewed, was first issued.

First purchaser. In the law of descent, this term signifies the ancestor who first acquired (in any other manner than by inheritance) the estate which still remains in his family or descendants.

First refusal. A right to elect to take specified property at the same price and on the same terms and conditions as those contained in a good faith offer by a third person if the owner manifests a willingness to accept the offer. Coastal Bay Golf Club, Inc. v. Holbein, Fla.App., 231 So.2d 854, 857.

First sale rule. Under this doctrine, a copyright holder who conveys title to a particular copy of a copyrighted work relinquishes exclusive right to vend that particular copy; although holder’s other rights remain intact, vendee holds right to distribute the transferred copy in whatever manner vendee chooses. U.S. v. Powell, C.A. Minn., 701 F.2d 70, 72.

First vested estate. Refers to first estate to vest in heirs after death of ancestor.

Fisc /fisk/. A treasury of a kingdom, nation, state, or other governmental body. An Anglicized form of the Latin “fiscus” (which see).

Fiscal. In general, having to do with financial matters; i.e. money, taxes, public or private revenues, etc. Belonging to the fisc, or public treasury. Relating to accounts or the management of revenue. Of or pertaining to the public finances of a government or private finances of business.

Fiscal agent. Generally, a bank which collects and disburses money and serves as a depository of private and public funds in behalf of another.

Fiscal court. Formerly, a ministerial and executive body in some states.

Fiscal judge. A public officer named in the laws of the Ripuarrians and some other Germanic peoples, apparently the same as the “Graf,” “reeve,” “comes”, or “count”, and so called because charged with the collection of public revenues, either directly or by the imposition of fines.

Fiscal officers. Those charged with the collection and distribution of public money, as, the revenues of a state (State Treasurer), county, or municipal corporation. In private corporation, officers directly charged with duty to oversee financial transactions such as treasurer and comptroller.

Fiscal period. In accounting, a period of time for which financial statements are prepared such as a year, a month or a quarter. See also Accounting period; Fiscal year.

Fiscal year. A period of twelve consecutive months chosen by a business as the accounting period for annual reports. A corporation’s accounting year. Due to the nature of a particular business, some companies do not use the calendar year for their bookkeeping. A typical example is the department store which finds December 31 too early a date to close its books after Christmas sales. For that reason many stores close their accounting year January 31. Their fiscal year, therefore, runs from February 1 of one year through January 31 of the next. The fiscal year of other companies may run from July 1 through the following June 30. Most companies, though, operate on a calendar year basis. See also Accounting period.

Fiscus /fiskas/. Roman law. The treasury of the prince or emperor, as distinguished from “aerarium,” which was the treasury of the state. This distinction was not observed in France. In course of time the fiscus absorbed the aerarium and became the treasury of the state. The treasury or property of the state, as distinguished from the private property of the sovereign.

English law. The king’s treasury, as the repository of forfeited property. The treasury of a noble, or of any private person.

Fish Commissioner. A public officer of the United States, created by act of congress of February 9, 1871, R.S. § 4395, whose duties principally concerned the preservation and increase throughout the country of fish suitable for food. Office of Commissioner of Fisheries has been abolished with functions transferred to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Fishery. Business or process of catching, processing, or selling fish. A hatchery or place for catching fish.

A right or liberty of taking fish at a particular place or waters. A species of incorporeal hereditament, anciently termed “piscary,” of which there are several kinds:

Common fishery. A fishing ground where all persons have a right to take fish. Not to be confounded with “common of fishery,” as to which see Common, n.

Free fishery. A franchise in the hands of a subject, existing by grant or prescription, distinct from an ownership in the soil. It is an exclusive right, and applies to a public navigable river, without any right in the soil.
Right of fishery. The general and common right of the citizens to take fish from public waters, such as the sea, great lakes, etc. Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U.S. 1, 14 S.Ct. 548, 38 L.Ed. 331. Such rights are restricted however by federal and state laws that establish fishing seasons, licensing requirements, catch limits, etc.

Several fishery. A fishery of which the owner is also the owner of the soil, or derives his right from the owner of the soil. 2 Bl.Comm. 39, 40. One by which the party claiming it has the right of fishing, independently of all other, so that no person can have a coextensive right with him in the object claimed; but a partial and independent right in another, or a limited liberty, does not derogate from the right of the owner.

Fishgarth. A dam or weir in a river for taking fish.

Fishing trip or expedition. Using the courts to find out information beyond the fair scope of the lawsuit. The loose, vague, unfocused questioning of a witness or the overly broad use of the discovery process. Discovery sought on general, loose, and vague allegations, or on suspicion, surmise, or vague guesses. The scope of discovery may be restricted by protective orders as provided for by Fed.Rule Civil P. 26(c).

Fish royal. These were the whale and the sturgeon, which, when thrown ashore or caught near the coast of England, became the property of the king by virtue of his prerogative and in recompense for his protecting the shore from pirates and robbers. Some authorities include the porpoise.

Fistuca or festuca. In old English law, the rod or wand, by the delivery of which the property in land was formerly transferred in making a feoffment. Called, also, "baculum," "virga," and "fustis." See Festuca.

Fit. Suitable or appropriate. Conformable to a duty. Adapted to, designed, prepared. Words "fit" and "proper" on issue of custody in divorce cases are usually interpreted as meaning moral fitness. Farwell v. Farwell, 33 Wis.2d 324, 147 N.W.2d 289, 292.

Fitness for particular purpose. Where the seller at the time of contracting has reason to know any particular purpose for which the goods are required and that the buyer is relying on the seller's skill or judgment to select or furnish suitable goods, there is, unless excluded or modified, an implied warranty that the goods shall be fit for such purpose. U.C.C. § 2-315. See also Warranty.

Fitz. A Norman word, meaning "son." It is used in law and genealogy; as Fitzherbert, the son of Herbert; Fitzjames, the son of James; Fitzroy, the son of the king. It was originally applied to illegitimate children.

Five-Mile Act. An English act of parliament, passed in 1665, against non-conformists, whereby ministers of that body who refused to take the oath of non-resistance were prohibited from coming within five miles of any corporate town, or place where they had preached or lectured since the passing of the act of oblivion in 1660, nullified by act of 1689.

Fix. Adjust or regulate; determine; settle; make permanent. Term imports finality; stability; certainty; definiteness. See also Firm.

To liquidate or render certain. To fasten a liability upon one. To transform a possible or contingent liability into a present and definite liability.

Fixed. Prices are "fixed" when they are mutually agreed upon. United States v. Masonite Corporation, 316 U.S. 265, 62 S.Ct. 1070, 1076, 86 L.Ed. 1461. See Fixed prices; Price-fixing.

In copyright law, a work is "fixed" in a tangible medium of expression when its embodiment in a copy or phonorecord, by or under the authority of the author, is sufficiently permanent or stable to permit it to be perceived, reproduced, or otherwise communicated for a period of more than transitory duration. A work consisting of sounds, images, or both, that are being transmitted, is "fixed" for purposes of this title if a fixation of the work is being made simultaneously with its transmission. Copyright Act, 17 U.S.C.A. § 101.

Fixed assets. Tangible property used in operating a business which will not be consumed or converted into cash or its equivalent during the current accounting period; e.g. plant, machinery, land, buildings, fixtures. Contrasted with liquid assets; e.g. cash, securities.

Fixed bail. Setting the amount and terms of bail.

Fixed capital. The amount of money which is permanently invested in the business. May also refer to capital invested in fixed assets (land, buildings, machinery, etc.). Cost of total plant and general equipment. Lindheimer v. Illinois Bell Telephone Co., Ill., 292 U.S. 151, 54 S.Ct. 658, 78 L.Ed. 1182.

Fixed charges. Costs that do not vary with changes in output and would continue even if firm produced no output at all, such as most management expenses, interests on bonded debt, depreciation, property taxes, and other irreducible overhead. Seattle Rendering Works, Inc. v. Darling-Delaware Co., Inc., 104 Wash.2d 15, 701 P.2d 502, 506.

Fixed costs. See Fixed charges.

Fixed debt. A more or less permanent form of debt commonly evidenced by bonds or debenture. See also Fixed indebtedness; Fixed liabilities.

Fixed expenses. See Fixed charges.

Fixed fee. Term commonly used in construction contracts which provide for payment of costs plus a prede¬termined amount as a fee.

Fixed income. That species of income which does not fluctuate over a period of time such as interest on bonds and debentures or dividends from preferred stock as contrasted with dividend income from common stock. May also refer to income received by retiree from pension, annuity, or other form of fixed retirement benefit or income.
FIXED INDEBTEDNESS

Fixed indebtedness. An established or settled indebtedness; not contingent. State ex rel. Hawkins v. State Board of Examiners, 97 Mont. 441, 35 P.2d 116, 120. See Fixed debt; Fixed liabilities.

Fixed liabilities. Those certain and definite as to both obligation and amount; e.g. interest on bonds or mortgage. Long term liabilities. See also Fixed debt.

Fixed opinion. A conviction, bias, or prejudgment as to guilt or liability disqualifying juror to impartially consider whole evidence and apply free from bias law as given in charge by court.

Fixed price contract. Type of contract in which buyer agrees to pay seller a definite, predetermined price, regardless of costs.

Fixed prices. Prices established (i.e. mutually agreed upon) between wholesalers or retailers for sale or resale of materials, goods, or products. Agreements to fix prices are generally prohibited by state and federal statutes. See Price-fixing.

Fixed rate loan. Loan is which interest rate does not change depending on market conditions.

Fixed salary. One which is definitely ascertained and prescribed as to amount and time of payment, and does not depend upon the receipt of fees or other contingent emoluments; though not necessarily a salary which cannot be changed by competent authority. Established or settled, to remain for a time.

Fixture. An article in the nature of personal property which has been so annexed to the realty that it is regarded as a part of the real property. Leawood Nat. Bank of Kansas City v. City Nat. Bank & Trust Co. of Kansas City, Mo.App., 474 S.W.2d 641, 644. That which is fixed or attached to something permanently as an appendage, and not removable.

A thing is deemed to be affixed to real property when it is attached to it by roots, imbedded in it, permanently resting upon it, or permanently attached to what is thus permanent, as by means of cement, plaster, nails, bolts, or screws.

Goods are fixtures when they become so related to particular real estate that an interest in them arises under real estate law; e.g., a furnace affixed to a house or other building; counters permanently affixed to the floor of a store; a sprinkler system installed in a building. U.C.C. § 9-313(1a).

Trade fixtures. Articles placed in or attached to leased property by the tenant, to facilitate the trade or business for which he occupies the premises, or to be used in connection with such business, or promote convenience and efficiency in conducting it. Such personal property as merchants usually possess and annex to the premises occupied by them to enable them to store, handle, and display their goods, which are generally removable without material injury to the premises. Unlike regular fixtures, trade fixtures are not considered part of the realty. U.S. v. Lambert, D.C.Neb., 362 F.Supp. 609, 612.

FKA. Formerly known as.

Flaco. A place covered with standing water.

Flag. A national standard on which are certain emblems; an ensign; a banner. It is carried by soldiers, ships, etc., and commonly displayed at forts, businesses and many other suitable places.

In common parlance, the word "flag," when used as denoting a signal, does not necessarily mean the actual use of a flag, but by figure of speech the word is used in the secondary sense and signifies a signal given as with a flag, that is to say, as by a waving of the hand for the purpose of communicating information.

Flag desecration. Flagrant misuse of flag by such acts as mutilation, defacement, or burning. Statutes making such acts criminal offenses (e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. § 700 (1989)) have been held to be unconstitutional as violating the freedom of expression protection of the First Amendment. See United States v. Eichman, 110 S.Ct. 2404 (1990). See also Desecrate.

Flag, duty of the. This was an ancient ceremony in acknowledgment of British sovereignty over the British seas, by which a foreign vessel struck her flag and lowered her top-sail on meeting the British flag.

Flag, law of. In maritime law, the law of that nation or country whose flag is flown by a particular vessel. A shipowner who sends his vessel into a foreign port gives notice by his flag to all who enter into contracts with the master that he intends the law of that flag to regulate such contracts, and that they must either submit to its operation or not contract with him.

Flag of convenience. Practice of registering a merchant vessel with a country that has favorable (i.e. less restrictive) safety requirements, registration fees, etc.

Flag of the United States. By the act entitled "An act to establish the flag of the United States," (Rev.St. §§ 1791, 1792), it was provided that, "from and after the fourth day of July next, the flag of the United States be thirteen horizontal stripes, alternate red and white; that the union be twenty stars, white in a blue field; that, on the admission of every new state into the Union, one star be added to the union of the flag; and that such addition shall take effect on the fourth day of July then next succeeding such admission." See 4 U.S.C.A. §§ 1, 2.

FOIA. Freedom of Information Act.

Foiterers. Vagabonds.

Folc-gemote. An assembly of the people in a town or shire. It appears to have had judicial functions of a limited nature, and also to have discharged political offices, such as deliberating upon the affairs of the commonwealth or complaining of misgovernment, and probably possessed considerable powers of local self-government. The name was also given to any sort of a popular assembly.

Folc-land. In Saxon law, land of the folk or people. Land belonging to the people or the public. Folc-land was the property of the community. In might be occupied in common, or possessed in severalty; and, in the latter case, it was probably parcelled out to individuals in the folc-gemote or court of the district, and the grant sanctioned by the freemen who were there present. But, while it continued to be folc-land, it could not be alienated in perpetuity; and therefore, on the expiration of the term for which it had been granted, it reverted to the community, and was again distributed by the same authority. It was subject to many burdens and exactions from which loc-land was exempt.

Folec-mote /fôwkkmôwt/. A general assembly of the people, under the Saxons. See Folc-gemote.

Folc-right /fôwkräyt/. The common right of all the people. 1 Bl.Comm. 65, 67.

The jus commune, or common law, mentioned in the laws of King Edward the Elder, declaring the same equal right, law, or justice to be due to persons of all degrees.

Foldage. In old English law, a privilege possessed in some places by the lord of a manor, which consisted in the right of having his tenant's sheep to feed on his fields, so as to manure the land. The name of foldage is also given in parts of Norfolk to the customary fee paid to the lord for exemption at certain times from this duty.

Fold-course. In English law, land to which the sole right of folding the cattle of others is appurtenant. Sometimes it means merely such right of folding. The right of folding on another's land, which is called "common foldage."

Fold-soke. A feudal service which consisted in the obligation of the tenant not to have a fold of his own but to have his sheep lie in the lord's fold.

Folgarii /fôlgâryây/. Menial servants; followers.

Folgere /ôwljar/. In old English law, a freeman, who had no house or dwelling of his own, but was the follower or retainer of another (hearthfoest), for whom he performed certain predial services.

Folgers /ôwljar/. Menial servants or followers.

Folgoth. Official dignity.

Folie brightique /folî brâytîyk/. See Insanity.

Folie circulaire /folî sirkyuwlîr/. See Insanity.

Folio. A leaf of a book or manuscript. A page number. In the ancient lawbooks it was the custom to number the leaves, instead of the pages; hence a folio would include both sides of the leaf, or two pages. The references to these books are made by the number of the folio, the letters "a" and "b" being added to show which of the two pages is intended.

A large size of book, the page being obtained by folding the sheet of paper once only in the binding. Many of the ancient lawbooks are folios.

When used in connection with legal documents, it formerly meant a certain number of words varying from 72 to 100, but generally in the United States it consisted of 100. Such was used as a unit for measuring the text length of the legal instrument.

Placing a serial number on each leaf or page of printed matter.

Folk-land; folk-mote /fôwkklànd/fôwkkmôwt/. See Folc-land; Folc-gemote.

Follow. To conform to, comply with, or be fixed or determined by; as in the expressions "costs follow the event of the suit," "the situs of personal property follows that of the owner," "the offspring follows the mother" (partus sequitur ventrem). To go, proceed, or come after. To seek to obtain; to accept as authority.

Fonds de commerce. Fr. Goods of commerce, and trade.

Fonds et biens. Fr. In French law, goods and effects; including realty.

Fonds perdu. In French law, a capital is said to be invested à fonds perdu when it is stipulated that in consideration of the payment of an amount as interest, higher than the normal rate, the lender shall be repaid his capital in this manner. The borrower, after paying the interest during the period determined, is free as regards the capital itself.

Fonsadera /ônsaâyâs/. In Spanish law, any tribute or loan granted to the king for the purpose of enabling him to defray the expenses of a war.

Fontana /fontânyâ/. A fountain or spring.

Food and Drug Administration. An agency within the Department of Health and Human Services established to set safety and quality standards for foods, drugs, cosmetics, and other household substances sold as consumer products. Among the basic tasks of the FDA are research, inspection and licensing of drugs for manufacturing and distribution. This agency is in charge of administering Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act (q.v.).

Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act. Federal Act of 1938 prohibiting the transportation in interstate commerce of adulterated or misbranded food, drugs and cosmetics. Act is administered by Food and Drug Administration.

Foot. A measure of length containing twelve inches or one-third of a yard. The base, bottom, or foundation of anything; and, by metonomy, the end or termination; as the foot of a fine. The terminal part of the leg. That part of leg at or below ankle joint; including the arch. Trustees for Arch Preserver Shoe Patents v. James McCreeery & Co., Cust. & Pat.App., 49 F.2d 1068, 1071. See also Foundation.

Foot acre. One acre of coal one foot thick.

Foot-frontage rule. Under rule, assessment is confined to actual frontage on line of improvement, and depth of lot, number or character of improvements, or value thereof, is immaterial.

Footgeld /ôftgèld/. In the forest law, an amercement for not cutting out the ball or cutting off the claws of a dog's feet (expeditating, him). To be quit of footgeld is to have the privilege of keeping dogs in the forest unlawed without punishment or control.
Foot of the Fine. In old records, a forebalk; a balk (that is, an unplowed piece of land) lying forward or next the highway.

Forbárr /fórbár/ /ˈfɔːbr/ /ˈfɔːbr/. In old records, a forebalk; a balk (that is, an unplowed piece of land) lying forward or next the highway.

Forbænnitus /fórbæn尼斯tus/ /ˈfɔːbrn尼斯stus/. A pirate; an outlaw; one banished.

Forbarer. L. Fr. To bar out; to preclude; hence, to estop.

Forbatudus. In old English law, the aggressor slain in combat.

Refraining from action. The term is used in this sense in general jurisprudence, in contradistinction to "act."

Within usury law, term signifies contractual obligation of lender or creditor to refrain, during given period of time, from requiring borrower or debtor to repay loan or debt then due and payable. Hafer v. Spaeth, 22 Wash.2d 378, 156 P.2d 408, 411.

As regards forbearance as a form of consideration, see Consideration.

For cause. With respect to removal from office "for cause", means for reasons which law and public policy recognize as sufficient warrant for removal and such cause is "legal cause" and not merely a cause which the appointing power in the exercise of discretion may deem sufficient. State ex rel. Nagle v. Sullivan, 98 Mont. 425, 40 P.2d 995, 998. They do not mean removal by arbitrary or capricious action but there must be some cause affecting and concerning ability and fitness of official to perform duty imposed on him. The cause must be one in which the law and sound public policy will recognize as a cause for official no longer occupying his office. Napolitano v. Ward, D.C.I11., 317 F.Supp. 79, 81.

Force. Power, violence, compulsion, or constraint exerted upon or against a person or thing. Landry v. Daley, D.C.I11., 280 F.Supp. 938, 954. Power dynamically considered, that is, in motion or in action; constraining power, compulsion; strength directed to an end. Commonly the word occurs in such connections as to show that unlawful or wrongful action is meant; e.g. forcible entry.

Power statically considered; that is at rest, or latent, but capable of being called into activity upon occasion for its exercise. Efficacy; legal validity. This is the meaning when we say that a statute or a contract is "in force."

In old English law, a technical term applied to a species of accessory before the fact.

See also Constructive force; Excessive force; Intervening force; Reasonable force.
Deadly force. Force which the actor uses with the purpose of causing or which he knows to create a substantial risk of causing death or serious bodily harm. Purposely firing a firearm in the direction of another person or at a vehicle in which another person is believed to be constitutes deadly force. A threat to cause death or serious bodily harm, by the production of a weapon or otherwise, so long as the actor's purpose is limited to creating an apprehension that he will use deadly force if necessary, does not constitute deadly force. Model Penal Code, § 3.11.

Unlawful force. Force, including confinement, which is employed without the consent of the person against whom it is directed and the employment of which constitutes an offense or actionable tort or would constitute such offense or tort except for a defense such as the absence of intent, negligence, or mental capacity; duress; youth; or diplomatic status) not amounting to a privilege to use the force. Assent constitutes consent, within the meaning of this Section, whether or not it otherwise is legally effective, except assent to the infliction of death or serious bodily harm. Model Penal Code, § 3.11(1). See also Battery.

Force and arms. A phrase used in common law pleading in declarations of trespass and in indictments, but now unnecessary, to denote that the act complained of was done with violence.

Force and fear. Called also "vi metuque" means that any contract or act extorted under the pressure of force (vis) or under the influence of fear (metus) is voidable on that ground, provided, of course, that the force or the fear was such as influenced the party.

Forced heirs. Those persons whom the testator or donor cannot deprive of the portion of his estate reserved for them by law, except in cases where he has a just cause to disinherit them (e.g., person's spouse). See Election by spouse.

Forced sale. A sale made at the time and in the manner prescribed by law, in virtue of execution issued on a judgment already rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction; a sale made under the process of the court, and in the mode prescribed by law. A sale which is not the voluntary act of the owner, such as to satisfy a debt, whether of a mortgage, judgment, tax lien, etc. Sale brought about in shorter time than normally required because of creditor's action. For comparable sale purposes in eminent domain proceedings, "forced sales" are those occurring as result of legal process, such as tax sale. Colonial Pipeline Co. v. Gimbel, 54 Md.App. 32, 456 A.2d 946, 952. See also Fire sale; Foreclosure; Judicial sale; Sale (Tax-sale); Sheriff's sale.

Force majeste /förz mzáhestýr/. Includes lightnings, earthquakes, storms, flood, sunstrokes, freezing, etc., wherein latter two can be considered hazards in contemplation of employer within compensation acts. See also Act of God; Vis major.

Force majeure /förz mázhýur /*mázhýr/. Fr. In the law of insurance, superior or irresistible force. Such clause is common in construction contracts to protect the parties in the event that a part of the contract cannot be performed due to causes which are outside the control of the parties and could not be avoided by exercise of due care. An oil and gas lease clause that provides that the lessee will not be held to have breached the lease terms while the lessee is prevented by force majeure (literally, "superior force") from performing. Typically, such clauses specifically indicate problems beyond the reasonable control of the lessee that will excuse performance. See also Act of God; Vis major.

Forces /förz/. The military and naval power of the country.

Forcheapum /förklyypam/. Pre-emption; forestalling the market.

Forsible. Effected by force used against opposition or resistance; obtained by compulsion or violence. Offutt v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 251 Md. 262, 247 A.2d 272, 276.

Forsible detainer. A summary, speedy and adequate statutory remedy for obtaining possession of premises by one entitled to actual possession. Casa Grande Trust Co. v. Superior Court In and For Pinal County, 8 Ariz. App. 103, 444 P.2d 521, 523. Existe where one originally in rightful possession of property refuses to surrender it at termination of his possessory right. Sayers & Muir Service Station v. Indian Refining Co., 266 Ky. 779, 100 S.W.2d 687, 689. Forsible detainer may ensue upon a peaceable entry, as well as upon a forcible entry; but it is most commonly spoken of in the phrase "forcible entry and detainer." See also Ejection; Eviction; Forsible entry and detainer; Process (Summary process).

Every person is guilty of forcible entry who either (1) by breaking open doors, windows, or other parts of a house, or by any kind of violence or circumstance of terror, enters upon or into any real property; or (2) who, after entering peaceably upon real property, turns out by force, threats, or menacing conduct the party in possession. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1159.

In many states, an entry effected without consent of rightful owner, or against his remonstrance, or under circumstances which amount to no more than a mere trespass, is now technically considered "forcible," while a detainer of the property consisting merely in the refusal to surrender possession after a lawful demand, is treated as a "forcible" detainer, the "force" required at common law being now supplied by a mere fiction. See Ejectment; Eviction; Forsible detainer; Forsible entry and detainer; Process (Summary process).
FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER

Forcible entry and detainer. A summary proceeding for restoring to possession of land by one who is wrongfully kept out or has been wrongfully deprived of the possession. Wein v. Albany Park Motor Sales Co., 312 Ill.App. 387, 38 N.E.2d 566, 559. An action to obtain possession or repossess of real property which had been transferred from one to another pursuant to contract; such proceeding is not an action to determine ownership of title to property. Behrle v. Beam, 6 Ohio St.3d 41, 6 O.B.R. 61, 451 N.E.2d 237, 240. See also Ejectment; Eviction; Forcible detainer; Process (Summary process).

Forcible rape. Aggravated form of statutory rape made punishable by statute. See also Rape.

Forcible trespass. An invasion of the rights of another with respect to his personal property, of the same character, or under the same circumstances, which would constitute a "forcible entry and detainer" of real property at common law. It consists in taking or seizing the personal property of another by force, violence, or intimidation or in forcibly injuring it. There must be actual violence used, or such demonstration of force as is calculated to intimidate or tend to a breach of the peace. It is not necessary that the person actually be put in fear.

For collection. A form of indorsement on a note or check where it is not intended to transfer title to it or to give it credit or currency, but merely to authorize the transferee to collect the amount of it. Such an indorsement is restrictive. U.C.C. § 3-205(c).

Forda /fórdə/. In old records, a ford or shallow, made by damming or penning up the water.

Fordal /fórdəl/. A but or headland, jutting out upon other land.

Fordanno /fórdánəw/. In old European law, he who first assaulted another.

Forbearance. See Forbearance.

Foreclosure /fɔrkloʊzər/. To shut out, to bar, to destroy an equity of redemption. Anderson v. Barr, 178 Okl. 508, 62 P.2d 1242, 1246. A termination of all rights of the mortgagor or his grantee in the property covered by the mortgage. The process by which a mortgagor of real or personal property, or other owner of property subject to a lien, is deprived of his interest therein. A proceeding in equity whereby a mortgagee either takes title to or forces the sale of the mortgagor's property in satisfaction of a debt. Procedure by which mortgaged property is sold on default of mortgagor in satisfaction of mortgage debt. If proceeds from sale fail to pay debt in full, mortgagee creditor may obtain a Deficiency judgment (q.v.).

A default under a security interest in personal property can be foreclosed by a judicial sale of collateral. U.C.C. § 9-501.

In common usage, refers to enforcement of lien, trust deed, or mortgage in any method provided by law. See also Equity of redemption.

Statutory foreclosure. The term is sometimes applied to foreclosure by execution of a power of sale contained in the mortgage, without recourse to the courts, as it must conform to the provisions of the statute regulating such sales.

Strict foreclosure. A decree of strict foreclosure of a mortgage finds the amount due under the mortgage, orders its payment within a certain limited time, and provides that, in default of such payment, the debtor's right and equity of redemption shall be forever barred and foreclosed; its effect is to vest the title of the property absolutely in the mortgagee, on default in payment, without any sale of the property.

Foreclosure decree. Properly speaking, a decree ordering the strict foreclosure of a mortgage; but the term is also loosely and conventionally applied to a decree ordering the sale of the mortgaged premises and the satisfaction of the mortgage out of the proceeds.

Foreclosure sale. A sale of mortgaged property to obtain satisfaction of the mortgage out of the proceeds, whether authorized by a decree of the court or by a power of sale contained in the mortgage. See also Deficiency judgment; Forced sale.

Foregift /fɔrgift/. A premium for a lease.

Foregoers /fɔrgəwərz/. Royal surveyors.

Forehand rent. In English law, rent payable in advance; or, more properly, a species of premium or bonus paid by the tenant on the making of the lease, and particularly on the renewal of leases by ecclesiastical corporations.

Foreign answer. In old English practice, an answer which was not triable in the county where it was made.

Foreign apposer /fɔhrən əpəwəzər/. In England, an officer in the exchequer who examines the sheriff's estreats, comparing them with the records, and apposes Foreign bill of exchange. Bill of exchange which is drawn in one state or country and payable in another state or country. See also Bill (Bill of exchange).

Foreign coins. Coins issued as money under the authority of a foreign government.

Foreign commerce. Trade between persons in the United States and those in a foreign country. See also Commerce; Foreign trade.

Foreign consulate. The office or headquarters of a consul who represents a foreign country in the United States.

Foreign corporation. A corporation doing business in one state though chartered or incorporated in another state is a foreign corporation as to the first state, and, as such, is required to consent to certain conditions and restrictions in order to do business in such first state. Rev. Model Bus. Corp. Act § 1.40. Under federal tax laws, a foreign corporation is one which is not organized under the laws of one of the states or territories of the United States. I.R.C. § 7701(a)(5). Service of process on foreign corporations is governed by Fed.R.Civ. P. 4. See also Corporation; Controlled foreign corporation.

U.S. owned foreign corporation. A foreign corporation in which 50 percent or more of the total combined voting power or total value of the stock of the corporation is held directly or indirectly by U.S. persons. A U.S. corporation is treated as a U.S.-owned foreign corporation if dividend or interest income paid by such corporation is classified as foreign source under I.R.C. § 861.

Foreign courts. The courts of a foreign state or nation. In the United States, this term is frequently applied to the courts of one of the states when their judgments or records are introduced in the courts of another.

Foreign diplomatic or consular offices. Officials appointed by a foreign government to protect the interest of its nationals in the United States. See also Foreign agent.

Foreign dominion. In English law, this means a country which at one time formed part of the dominions of a foreign state or potentate, but which by conquest or cession has become a part of the dominions of the British crown.

Foreigner. In old English law, this term, when used with reference to a particular city, designated any person who was not an inhabitant of that city. According to later usage, it denotes a person who is not a citizen or subject of the state or country of which mention is made, or any one owing allegiance to a foreign state or sovereign.

Person belonging to or under citizenship of another country.

Foreign exchange. Conversion of the money of one country into its equal of another country. Process by which money of one country is used to pay balances due in another country.

A forensic engineering engagement may require investigations, studies, evaluations, advice to counsels, reports, advisory opinions, depositions and/or testimony to assist in the resolution of disputes relating to life or property in cases before courts, or other lawful tribunals.

Forensic linguistics. A technique concerned with in-depth evaluation of linguistic characteristics of text, including grammar, syntax, spelling, vocabulary and phrasing, which is accomplished through a comparison of textual material of known and unknown authorship, in an attempt to disclose idiosyncrasies peculiar to authorship to determine whether the authors could be identical. U.S. v. Clifford, C.A.Fa., 704 F.2d 86. See Fed.Evid.R. 901. See also Comparative interpretation; Comparative stylistics; Comparison of handwriting.

Forensic medicine. That science which teaches the application of every branch of medical knowledge to the purposes of the law; hence its limits are, on the one hand, the requirements of the law, and, on the other, the whole range of medicine. Anatomy, physiology, medicine, surgery, chemistry, physics, and botany lend their aid as necessity arises; and in some cases all these branches of science are required to enable a court of law.
to arrive at a proper conclusion on a contested question affecting life or property.

Forensic pathology. That branch of medicine dealing with diseases and disorders of the body in relation to legal principles and cases.

Forensic psychiatry. That branch of medicine dealing with disorders of the mind in relation to legal principles and cases.

Forensis /fərˈɛnзəs/. In Civil law, belonging to or connected with a court; forensic. Forensis homo, an advocate; a pleader of causes; one who practices in court.

Foreseeability. The ability to see or know in advance; e.g., the reasonable anticipation that harm or injury is likely to result from certain acts or omissions. Emery v. Thompson, 347 Mo. 494, 148 S.W.2d 479, 480. In tort law, the "foreseeability" element of proximate cause is established by proof that actor, as person of ordinary intelligence and prudence, should reasonably have anticipated danger to others created by his negligent act.

Foreseeable consequences. See Foreseeability.

Foreshore. The strip of land that lies between the high and low water marks and that is alternately wet and dry according to the flow of the tide. According to the medium line between the greatest and least range of tide (spring tides and neap tides). See also Shore.

Foresight. heedful thought for the future; reasonable anticipation of result of certain acts or omissions. Emery v. Thompson, 347 Mo. 494, 148 S.W.2d 479. See Foreseeability.

Forest. A tract of land covered with trees and one usually of considerable extent.

In old English law, a certain territory of wooded ground and fruitful pastures, privileged for wild beasts and fowls of forest, chase, and warren, to rest and abide in the safe protection of the prince for his princely delight and pleasure, having a peculiar court and officers. A royal hunting-ground which lost its peculiar character with the extinction of its courts, or when the franchise passed into the hands of a subject. The word is also used to signify a franchise or right, being the right of keeping, for the purpose of hunting, the wild beasts and fowls of forest, chase, park, and warren, in a territory or precinct of woody ground or pasture set apart for the purpose.

Forestage /fərˈɛstəж/. In old English law, a duty or tribute payable to the king's foresters.

Forestall. In old English law, to intercept or obstruct a passenger on the king's highway. To beset the way of a tenant so as to prevent his coming on the premises. 3 Bl.Comm. 170. To intercept a deer on his way to the forest before he can regain it.

Forestaller. In old English law, obstruction; hindrance; the offense of stopping the highway; the hindering a tenant from coming to his land; intercepting a deer before it can regain the forest. Also one who forestalls; one who commits the offense of forestalling. 3 Bl. Comm. 170.

Forestalling. Obstructing the highway. Intercepting a person on the highway.

Forestalling the market. Securing control of commodities on way to market.

The act of buying or contracting for any merchandise or provision on its way to the market, with the intention of selling it again at a higher price; or dissuading of persons from bringing their goods or provisions there; or persuading them to enhance the price when there. This was formerly an indictable offense in England, but is now abolished by St. 7 & 8 Vict., c. 24.

Forestarius /fərˈɛstrəriəs/. In English law, a forester. An officer who takes care of the woods and forests. De forestario apponendo, a writ which lay to appoint a forester to prevent further commission of waste when a tenant in dower had committed waste.

Forest courts. In English law, courts instituted for the government of the king's forest in different parts of the kingdom, and for the punishment of all injuries done to the king's deer or venison, to the vert or greensward, and to the covert in which such deer were lodged. They consisted of the courts of attachments, of regard, of sweinmote, and of justice-seat. Such courts are now obsolete. 3 Bl.Comm. 71.

Forester. In old English law, a sworn officer of the forest, appointed by the king's letters patent to walk the forest, watching both the vert and the venison, attaching and presenting all trespassers against them within their own bailiwick or walk. These letters patent were generally granted during good behavior; but sometimes they held the office in fee.

Person trained in forestry; employee of U.S. Forest Service.

Forest law. The system or body of old law relating to the royal forests. The last of the forest laws were repealed by the Wild Creatures and Forest Laws Act of 1971.

Forfang /fərˈfænd/. In old English law, the taking of provisions from any person in fairs or markets before the royal purveyors were served with necessaries for the sovereign. Also the seizing and rescuing of stolen or strayed cattle from the hands of a thief, or of those having illegal possession of them; also the reward fixed for such rescue.
Forfeitable. LIABLE TO BE FORFEITED; SUBJECT TO FORFEITURE

Forfeited /fəˈfɪt/. To lose, or lose the right to, by some error, fault, offense, or crime; or to subject, as property, to forfeiture or confiscation. To lose, in consequence of breach of contract, neglect of duty, or offense, some right, privilege, or property to another or to the State. United States v. Chavez, C.C.A.N.M., 87 F.2d 16, 19. To incur a penalty; to become liable to the payment of a sum of money, as the consequence of a certain act. It can be a loss of position or personal right, as well as property. State v. Norton, 57 Or.App. 679, 646 P.2d 53, 55.

To lose an estate, a franchise, or other property belonging to one, by the act of the law, and as a consequence of some misfeasance, negligence, default, or omission. It is a deprivation (that is, against the will of the losing party), with the property either transferred to another or resumed by the original grantor.

See also Forfeiture; Seizure.

Forfeitable. LIABLE TO BE FORFEITED; SUBJECT TO FORFEITURE FOR NON-USER, NEGLECT, CRIME, ETC.

Forfeiture /fəˈfɔtʃər/. A comprehensive term which means a divestiture of specific property without compensation; it imposes a loss by the taking away of some preexisting valid right without compensation. L & K Realty Co. v. R.W. Farmer Const. Co., Mo.App., 633 S.W.2d 274, 279. A deprivation or destruction of a right in consequence of the nonperformance of some obligation or condition. Loss of some right or property as a penalty for some illegal act. Loss of property or money because of breach of a legal obligation (e.g. default in payment).

Forfeiture of property (including money, securities, and real estate) is one of the penalties provided for under certain federal and state criminal statutes (e.g., RICO and Controlled Substances Acts). Such forfeiture provisions apply to property used in the commission of a crime under the particular statutes, as well as property acquired from the proceeds of the crime. See, e.g., 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 981, 982 (criminal and civil forfeiture). 21 U.S.C.A. § 853 (forfeiture in drug cases).

In old English law, the loss of land by a tenant to his lord, as the consequence of some breach of fidelity. The loss of goods or chattels, as a punishment for some crime or misdemeanor in the party forfeiting, and as a compensation for the offense and injury committed against him to whom they are forfeited.

See also Confiscate; Default; Divestiture; Foreclosure; Forfeit; Seizure.

Forfeiture of bond. A failure to perform the condition upon which obligor was to be excused from the penalty in the bond. Hall v. Browning, 71 Ga.App. 835, 32 S.E.2d 424, 427. With respect to a bail bond, occurs when the accused fails to appear for trial.

Forfeiture of marriage. A penalty incurred by a ward in chivalry who married without the consent or against the will of the guardian.

Forgabulium, or forgavel /fɔrgæˈbjuːlɪəm/. A quit-rent; a small reserved rent in money.

Forge. To fabricate by false imitation. Carter v. State, 135 Tex.Cr.R. 457, 116 S.W.2d 371, 377. To fabricate, construct, or prepare one thing in imitation of another thing, with the intention of substituting the false for the genuine, or otherwise deceiving and defrauding by the use of the spurious article. To counterfeit or make falsely. Especially, to make a spurious written instrument with the intention of fraudulently substituting it for another, or of passing it off as genuine; or to fraudulently alter a genuine instrument to another’s prejudice; or to sign another person’s name to a document, with a deceitful and fraudulent intent. See Counterfeiter; Forgery; Fraud.

Forgery. The false making or the material altering of a document with the intent to defraud. A signature of a person that is made without the person’s consent and without the person otherwise authorizing it. A person is guilty of forgery if, with purpose to defraud or injure anyone, or with knowledge that he is facilitating a fraud or injury to be perpetrated by anyone, the actor: (a) alters any writing of another without his authority; or (b) makes, completes, executes, authenticates, issues or transfers any writing so that it purports to be the act of another who did not authorize that act, or to have been executed at a time or place or in a numbered sequence other than was in fact the case, or to be a copy of an original when no such original existed; or (c) utters any writing which he knows to be forged in a manner specified in paragraph (a) or (b). Model Penal Code, § 224.1. See also MPC § 241.7, “Tampering with or Fabricating Physical Evidence”.

Crime includes both act of forgery handwriting of another and act of uttering as true and genuine any forged writing knowing same to be forged with intent to prejudice, damage or defraud any person. State v. May, 93 Idaho 343, 461 P.2d 126, 129. Crime is committed when one makes or passes a false instrument with intent to defraud, and the element of loss or detriment is immaterial. People v. McAffery, 182 Cal.App.2d 486, 6 Cal.Rptr. 333, 337. The false making of an instrument, which purports on face of it to be good and valid for purposes for which it was created, with a design to defraud any person or persons. State v. Goranson, 67 Wash.2d 456, 408 P.2d 7, 9.

For jury royal. To abjure the realm.

Form. A model or skeleton of an instrument to be used in a judicial proceeding or legal transaction, containing the principal necessary matters, the proper technical terms or phrases and whatever else is necessary to make it formally correct, arranged in proper and methodical order, and capable of being adapted to the circumstances of the specific case or transaction.

In contradistinction to “substance,” “form” means the legal or technical manner or order to be observed in legal instruments or juridical proceedings, or in the construction of legal documents or processes. Antithesis of “substance.”

Common form, solemn form. See Probate.

Form of the statute. This expression means the words, language, or frame of a statute, and hence the inhibition or command which it may contain; used in the phrase (in criminal pleading) “against the form of the statute in that case made and provided.”

Forms of action. This term is the general designation of the various species or kinds of personal actions known to the common law, such as trover, trespass, debt, assumpsit, etc., and also to the general classification of actions as those in “equity” or “law.” These differ in their pleadings and evidence, as well as in the circumstances to which they are respectively applicable. Under Rules of Civil Procedure (applicable in federal and most state courts) there is now only one form of action known as a “civil action,” Fed.R.Civ.Proc., Rule 2. See also Forms of action.
FORM

Matter of form. In pleadings, indictments, affidavits, conveyances, etc., matter of form (as distinguished from matter of substance) is all that relates to the mode, form, or style of expressing the facts involved, the choice or arrangement of words, and other such particulars, without affecting the substantial validity or sufficiency of the instrument, or without going to the merits.

Form 10-K. Financial reporting form required to be filed annually with SEC by publicly traded corporations.

Form 10-Q. Financial reporting form required to be filed quarterly with SEC by publicly traded corporations. Such is less comprehensive than Form 10-K.

Forma. Lat. Form; the prescribed form of judicial proceedings.

Forma dat esse /forma dát ēsī/. Form gives being. Called "the old physical maxim."

Forma et figura judicii /forma et figúrya juydishiyya/. The form and shape of judgment or judicial action. 3 Bl.Comm. 271.

Formal. Relating to matters of form; as, "formal defects"; inserted, added, or joined pro forma. See Form; Parties.

Formal contract. A contract or agreement as formal. Relating to matters of form; as, "formal de¬

Formalities. In England, robes worn by the magistrates of a city or corporation, etc., on solemn occasions.

Formality. The conditions, in regard to method, order, arrangement, use of technical expressions, performance of specific acts, etc., which are required by the law in the making of contracts or conveyances, or in the taking of legal proceedings, to insure their validity and regularity. Term generally refers to "procedure" in contrast to "substance".

Formal parties. See Parties.

Forma non observata, infertur adnullatio actus /forma nón oñzavéyta, infártár ándaléyshiywów áktas/. Where form is not observed, a nullity of the act is inferred. Where the law prescribes a form, the non-ob¬

Forma pauperis /forma póporas/. See Appeal in forma pauperis; In forma pauperis.

Formata /formáytya/. In canon law, canonical letters.

Formata brevia /formáytya brývíywa/. Formed writs; writs of form. See Brevia formata.

Formed action. An action for which a set form of words is prescribed, which must be strictly adhered to. Such are now generally obsolete. See Forms of action.

Formed design. In criminal law, and particularly with reference to homicide, this term means a deliberate and fixed intention to kill, whether directed against a particular person or not. See also Premeditation.

Formedon /fórødóan/. An ancient writ in English law which was available for one who had a right to lands or tenements by virtue of a gift in tail. It was in the nature of a writ of right, and was the highest action that a tenant in tail could have; for he could not have an absolute writ of right, that being confined to such as claimed in fee-simple, and for that reason this writ of formedon was granted to him by statute and was emphatically called "his" writ of right. The writ was distinguished into three species, viz.: Formedon in the descender, in the remainder, and in the reverter. It was abolished in England by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 27. 3 Bl.Comm. 191.

Formedon in the descender /fórødóan in ðó dáséýndar/. A writ of formedon which lay where a gift was made in tail, and the tenant in tail aliened the lands or was dispossessed of them and died, for the heir in tail to recover them, against the actual tenant of the freehold. 3 Bl.Comm. 192.

Formedon in the remainder /fórødóan in ðó ráméyn¬

Formedon in the reverter /fórødóan in ðó râvörtar/. A writ of formedon which lay where a gift was made in tail, and afterwards, by the death of the donee or his heirs without issue of his body, the reversion fell in upon him in remainder, and kept him out of possession. In this case he in remainder, or his heir, was entitled to this writ. 3 Bl.Comm. 192.

Formedon in the reversion /fórødóan in ðó rvértana/. A writ of formedon which lay where there was a gift in tail, and the tenant in tail aliened the lands or was dispossessed of them and died, for the heir in tail to recover them, against the actual tenant of the freehold. 3 Bl.Comm. 192.

Formed design. In criminal law, and particularly with reference to homicide, this term means a deliberate and fixed intention to kill, whether directed against a particular person or not. See also Premeditation.

In this case he in remainder, or his heir, was entitled to this writ. 3 Bl.Comm. 192.

Former acquittal /fórmar akwitál/. See Autrefois.

Former jeopardy. Also called "double jeopardy." Plea of "former jeopardy," that a person cannot be tried for an offense more than once, is fundamental common law and constitutional right of defendant, affording protection against the defendant being again tried for the same offense, and not against the peril of second punish¬ Former proceedings. Term used in reference to action taken earlier and its result in determining whether present proceeding is barred by res judicata.

Former statements. As used in evidence, declarations made by a party or witness at an earlier time. Fed. Evid.R. 613.

Former testimony. In evidence, testimony given by party or witness at an earlier trial or hearing and which, under certain conditions, may be used in present proceeding. Fed. Evid.R. 613.

Forms of action. Forms of action governed common law pleading and were the procedural devices used to give expression to the theories of liability recognized by the common law. Failure to analyze the cause of action properly, to select the proper theory of liability and to choose the appropriate procedural mechanism or forms of action could easily result in being thrown out of court. A plaintiff had to elect his remedy in advance and could not subsequently amend his pleadings to conform to his proof or to the court's choice of another theory of liability. According to the relief sought, actions have been divided into three categories: real actions were brought for the recovery of real property; mixed actions were brought to recover real property and damages for injury to it; personal actions were brought to recover debts or personal property, or for injuries to personal, property, or contractual rights. The common law actions are usually considered to be eleven in number: trespass, trespass on the case, trover, ejectment, detinue, repelvin, debt, covenant, account, special assumpsit, and general assumpsit.

Under the Rules of Civil Procedure (applicable in the federal and most state courts) there is now only one form of action known as a "civil action". Fed.R.Civil P., Rule 2.

Formula. In common-law practice, a set form of words used in judicial proceedings. In the civil law, an action.

Formula deal. An agreement between motion picture distributors and independent or affiliated circuits to exhibit a feature in all theatres at specified percentage of national gross receipts realized from such feature by all theatres in the United States. U. S. v. Paramount Pictures, D.C. N.Y., 66 F.Supp. 323, 333, 347.

Formulæ /fôrmyâliy/. In Roman law, when the legis actions were proved to be inconvenient, a mode of procedure called "per formulæ" (i.e., by means of formulæ), was gradually introduced, and eventually the legis actions were abolished by the Lex Ebutia, B.C. 164, excepting in a very few exceptional matters. The formulæ were four in number, namely: (1) The Demonsstratio, wherein the plaintiff stated, i.e., showed, the facts out of which his claim arose; (2) the Intentio, where he made his claim against the defendant; (3) the Adjudicatio, wherein the judex was directed to assign or adjudicate the property or any portion or portions thereof according to the rights of the parties; and (4) the Condemnatio, in which the judex was authorized and directed to condemn or to acquit according as the facts were or were not proved. These formulæ were obtained from the magistrate (in jure), and were thereafter proceeded with before the judex (in judicio).

Formularies /fôrm'yâliyiz/. Collections of formulæ, or forms of forensic proceedings and instruments used among the Franks, and other early continental nations of Europe.

Fornagium /fôrné'yijyam/. The fee taken by a lord of his tenant, who was bound to bake in the lord's common oven (in furno domini), or for a commission to use his own.

Fornication. Sexual intercourse other than between married persons. State v. Cook, App., 139 Ariz. 406, 678 P.2d 987, 989. Further, if one of the persons be married and the other not, it is fornication on the part of the latter, though adultery for the former. In some jurisdictions, however, by statute, it is adultery on the part of both persons if the woman is married, whether the man is married or not. This offense, which is variously defined by state statutes, is very seldom enforced. See also Adultery; illicit cohabitation.

Fornix /fôrniks/. Lat. A brothel; fornication.

Foro /fôrow/. In Spanish law, the place where tribunals hear and determine causes,—exercendam litium locus.

Foros /fôrows/. In Spanish law, emphyteutic rents.

Forprize /fôprâyz/. An exception; reservation; excepted; reserved. Anciently, a term of frequent use in leases and conveyances. In another sense, the word is taken for any exaction.

For purpose of. With the intention of.

Forschel. A strip of land lying next to the highway.

Forspecia /fôrspréyka/. An attorney or advocate in a cause.

Forswear /fôrswer/. In criminal law, to make oath to that which the deponent knows to be untrue. This term is wider in its scope than "perjury," for the latter, as a technical term, includes the idea of the oath being taken before a competent court or officer, and relating to a material issue, which is not implied by the word "forswear." See Perjury.

Fort. This term means something more than a mere military camp, post, or station. The term implies a fortification, or a place protected from attack by some means as a moat, wall, or parapet.

Fortalice, or fortelace /fɔrtələs/. A fortress or place of strength, which ancients did not pass without a special grant.

Fortaxed /fɔrtəkst/. Wrongly or extortionately taxed.

For that. In pleading, words used to introduce the allegations of a declaration. "For that" is a positive allegation; "For that whereas" is a recital. Such words are not required in federal court pleadings nor in the majority of states that have adopted Rules of Civil Procedure.

For that whereas. In pleading, formal words introducing the statement of the plaintiff's case, by way of recital, in his declaration, in all actions except trespasses. In trespass, where there was no recital, the expression used was, "For that." Such words are not required in federal court pleadings nor in the majority of states that have adopted Rules of Civil Procedure.

Forthcoming bond. A bond conditioned on the forthcoming of property to answer such judgment as may be entered. If the property be forthcoming, no liability ensues. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Sabbath, 286 Ill.App. 320, 3 N.E.2d 330, 335. A bond given to a sheriff who has levied on property, conditioned that the property shall be forthcoming, i.e., produced, when required. On the giving of such bond, the goods are allowed to remain in the possession of the debtor.

Forthwith. Immediately; without delay; directly; within a reasonable time under the circumstances of the case; promptly and with reasonable dispatch. U. S. ex rel. Carter v. Jennings, D.C.Pa., 333 F.Supp. 1392, 1397. Within such time as to permit that which is to be done, to be done lawfully and according to the practical and ordinary course of things to be performed or accomplished. The first opportunity offered.

Fortia /fɔrˈʃiə/; Fortis /fɔrtəs/; Fortis et sana, strong and sound; staunch and strong; as a vessel.

Fortlett /fɔrtbli/. A place or port of some strength; a fortress or place of strength; a castle; a bulwark.

Fortior /fɔrʃiər/. Lat. Stronger. A term applied, in the law of evidence, to that species of presumption, arising from facts shown in evidence, which is strong enough to shift the burden of proof to the opposite party.

Fortior est custodia legis quam hominis /fɔrʃiər ɛst kostəwoʊdiə liːjəs kwəːm həʊmənəs/. The custody of the law is stronger than that of man.

Fortior et potentior est dispositio legis quam hominis /fɔrʃiər ɛt pəˈtɛnʃəriər ɛst dɪˈspɔzɪʃə(ɹ)iə ɛst lɪˈiːjəs kwəːm həʊmənəs/. The disposition of the law is of greater force and effect than that of man. The law in some cases overrides the will of the individual, and renders ineffective or futile his expressed intention or contract.

Fortiori /fɔrʃiəˈri/. See A fortiori.

Fortis /fɔrtəs/; Fortis et sana, strong and sound; staunch and strong; as a vessel.

Fortuit /fɔrtwi/. In French law, accidental; fortuitous. Cas fortuit, a fortuitous event. Fortuitement, accidentally; by chance; casually.

Fortuitous /fɔrtiˈuːtəs/. Happening by chance or accident. Occurring unexpectedly, or without known cause. Accidental; undesigned; adventitious. Resulting from unavoidable physical causes.

Fortuitous collision /fɔrtiˈuːtwədəs kɔlɪˈziən/. In maritime law, the accidental running foul of vessels.

Fortuitous event /fɔrtiˈuːtwədəs ɛvənt/. An event happening by chance or accident. That which happens by a cause which cannot be resisted. An unforeseen occurrence, not caused by either of the parties, nor such as they could prevent. For purposes of an all risk insurance policy, an event which occurs accidentally, as a lay-person, and not a technician or scientist, would understand that term. It is an event which happens by chance, unexpectedly, or without known cause; one which is undesigned or unplanned. Standard Structural Steel Co. v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., D.C.Conn., 597 F.Supp. 164, 193.

Fortuna /fɔrtʊˈwənə/. Lat. Fortune; also treasure-trove.

Fortunam faciunt judicem /fɔrtʊˈwənəm fəˈʃiənt jəˈdiːkəm/. They make fortune the judge. Spoken of the process of making partition among coparceners by drawing lots for the several purparts.

Fortune teller. One who professes to tell future events in the life of another.

In English law, persons pretending or professing to tell fortunes, and punishable as rogues and vagabonds or disorderly persons. 4 Bl.Comm. 62.

Fortunium /fɔrtʊˈwəniəm/. In old English law, a tournament or fighting with spears, and an appeal to fortune therein.

Forty. In land laws and conveyancing, in those regions where grants, transfers, and deeds are made with reference to the subdivisions of the government survey, this term means forty acres of land in the form of a square, being the tract obtained by quartering a section of land (640 acres) and again quartering one of the quarters.
Forty-days court. In old English forest law, the court of attachment in forest, or woodmote court.

Forum /fórum/. Lat. A court of justice, or judicial tribunal; a place of litigation; an administrative body. Particular place where judicial or administrative remedy is pursued. See also Venue.

In Roman law, the market place, or public paved court, in the city of Rome, where such public business was transacted as the assemblies of the people and the judicial trial of causes and where also elections, markets, and the public exchange were held.

Forum actus /fórum éktas/. The forum of the act. The forum of the place where the act was done which is now called in question.

Forum conscientiae /fórum kóns(h)iýénişiyiy/. The forum or tribunal of conscience.

Forum contentiousum /fórum kónténgóshiyówzám/. A contentious forum or court; a place of litigation; the ordinary court of justice, as distinguished from the tribunal of conscience. 3 Bl.Comm. 211.

Forum contractus /fórum kontráéktas/. The forum of the contract; the place where a contract is made; the place where a contract is made, considered as a place of jurisdiction.

Forum conveniens /fórum konviýniš(yyy)énz/. The state or judicial district in which an action may be most appropriately brought, considering the best interest of the parties and the public. Compare Forum non conveniens.

Forum domesticum /fórum doméståkam/. A domestic forum or tribunal. The visitatorial power is called a "forum domesticum," calculated to determine, sine strepitu, all disputes that arise within themselves.

Forum domicilii /fórum dú(w)mašiýay/. The forum or court of the domicile; the domicile of a defendant, considered as a place of jurisdiction.

Forum ecclesiasticum /fórum aklíšiyéståkam/. An ecclesiastical court. The spiritual jurisdiction, as distinguished from the secular.

Forum ligeantiae rei /fórum liýénişiyiy riýay/. The forum of defendant's allegiance. The court or jurisdiction of the country to which he owes allegiance.

Forum non conveniens /fórum nón konviýniš(yyy)énz/. Term refers to discretionary power of court to decline jurisdiction when convenience of parties and ends of justice would be better served if action were brought and tried in another forum. Johnson v. Spider Staging Corp., 87 Wash.2d 577, 555 P.2d 997, 999, 1000. See 28 U.S.C.A. § 1404.

The rule is an equitable one embracing the discretionary power of a court to decline to exercise jurisdiction which it has over a transitory cause of action when it believes that the action may be more appropriately and justly tried elsewhere. Leet v. Union Pac. R. Co., 25 Cal.2d 605, 155 P.2d 42, 44. The doctrine presupposes at least two forums in which the defendant is amenable to process and furnishes criteria for choice between such forums. Wilson v. Seas Shipping Co., D.C.Pa., 78 F.Supp. 464, 465. In determining whether doctrine should be applied, court should consider relative ease of access to sources of proof, availability of compulsory process for attendance of unwilling witnesses, cost of obtaining attendance of willing witnesses, possibility of view of premises, and all other practical problems that make trial easy, expeditious and inexpensive. Di Lella v. Lehigh Val. R. Co., D.C.N.Y., 7 F.R.D. 192, 193. See also Change of venue; Forum conveniens.

Forum originis /fórum ariýaýas/. The court of one's nativity. The place of a person's birth, considered as a place of jurisdiction.

Forum regium /fórum riýay(yyy)am/. The king's court.

Forum rei /fórum riýay/. This term may mean either (1) the forum of the defendant, that is, of his residence or domicile; or (2) the forum of the res or thing in controversy, that is, of the place where the property is situated. The ambiguity springs from the fact that rei may be the genitive of either reus or res.

Forum rei gestae /fórum riýay jéšitý/. The forum or court of a res gesta (thing done); the place where an act is done, considered as a place of jurisdiction and remedy.

Forum rei sitæ /fórum riýay sátiýy/. The court where the thing in controversy is situated. The place where the subject-matter in controversy is situated, considered as a place of jurisdiction.

Forum seculare /fórum sékýalériý/. A secular, as distinguished from an ecclesiastical or spiritual, court.

Forum selection clause. A clause in a contract preselecting a particular forum, such as a given state, country, court or administrative proceeding, for the resolution of a dispute. Usually upheld unless the clause is designed to discourage litigation.

Forum shopping. Such occurs when a party attempts to have his action tried in a particular court or jurisdiction where he feels he will receive the most favorable judgment or verdict.

For use. For the benefit or advantage of another. Thus, where an assignee is obliged to sue in the name of his assignor, the suit is entitled "A. for use of B. v. C." For enjoyment or employment without destruction. A loan "for use" is one in which the bailee has the right to use and enjoy the article, but without consuming or destroying it, in which respect it differs from a loan "for consumption."

For value. See Holder.

For value received. See Value (Value received).

Forward. To send forward; to send toward the place of destination; to transmit. To ship goods by common carrier. See Forwarder.

Forward contract. An agreement to sell a commodity at a fixed future date but at a price set at the time the contract is written. In re Gold Coast Seed Co., C.A.Cal., 751 F.2d 1118, 1119.
Forwarder. Person or business whose business it is to receive goods for further handling by way of warehousing, packing, carload shipping, delivery, etc. See Forwarding agent; Freight forwarder.

Forwarding agent. Freight forwarder who assembles less than carload shipments (small shipments) into carload shipments, thus taking advantage of lower freight rates. Company or individual whose business it is to receive and ship merchandise for others. See Forwarder.

Forward rate. The rate of exchange between two currencies being bought and sold for delivery at a future date.

For whom it may concern. Salutation used when particular name of addressee or recipient is unknown. Phrase creates presumption of intention on part of named insured to cover any persons who may have an insurable interest in the property.

Fossa /fɔːsə/. In the civil law, a ditch; a receptacle of water, made by hand.

In old English law, a ditch. A pit full of water, in which women committing felony were drowned. A grave or sepulcher.

Fossagium /fɔːsɛˈjɪəm/. In old English law, the duty levied on the inhabitants for repairing the moat or ditch round a fortified town.

Fossatorum operatio /fʌsˈtɔrəm əˈpərɛəˌʃɪəˈrəʊ//. In old English law, fosse-work; or the service of laboring, done by inhabitants and adjoining tenants, for the repair and maintenance of the ditches round a city or town, for which some paid a contribution, called "fossagium."

Fossatum /fɔːsəˈtəm/. A dyke, ditch, or trench; a place inclosed by a ditch; a moat; a canal.

Fosterage /ˈfɒstərɪdʒ/. Care of a foster child, brother, sister, parent, etc.—one considered as holding the relationship indicated in consequence of nursing and rearing, though not related by blood. In re Norman's Estate, 209 Minn. 19, 295 N.W. 63, 66.

Foster child. Child whose care, comfort, education and upbringing has been left to persons other than his natural parents. See Foster parent.

Foster home. A home for children without parents or who have been taken from their parents.

Fostering. An ancient custom in Ireland, in which persons put away their children to fosterers. Fostering was held to be a stronger alliance than blood, and the foster children participated in the fortunes of their foster fathers.

Fosterland. Land given, assigned, or allotted to the finding of food or victuals for any person or persons; as in monasteries for the monks, etc.

Fosterlean /ˈfɒstərliən/. The remuneration fixed for the rearing of a foster child; also the jointure of a wife.

Foster parent. One who has performed the duties of a parent to the child of another by rearing the child as his or her own child. See Foster child.

Foul bill of lading. Type of bill of lading which shows on its face that the goods were damaged or that there was a shortage at the time of shipment.

Found. A person is said to be "found" within a state for purposes of service of process when actually present therein. But only if a person is in a place voluntarily and not by reason of plaintiff's fraud, artifice, or trick for purpose of obtaining service. Shields v. Shields, 115 Mont. 146, 139 P.2d 528, 530, 531. It does not necessarily mean physical presence; e.g. defendant who, after removal of action for breach of contract to federal court, entered general appearance, defended on the merits, and filed counterclaim, was "found" in the district. Freeman v. Bee Mach. Co., Mass., 319 U.S. 448, 63 S.Ct. 1146, 1149, 87 L.Ed. 1509. As applied to a corporation it is necessary that it be doing business in such state through an officer or agent or by statutory authority in such manner as to render it liable then to suit and to constructive or substituted service of process. A corporation is "found" in a district for venue purposes if it is subject to personal jurisdiction in that district. Stith v. Manor Baking Co., D.C.Mo., 418 F.Supp. 150, 155. See also Locate; Service (Service of process).

Foundation. Permanent fund established and maintained by contributions for charitable, educational, religious, research, or other benevolent purpose. An institution or association given to rendering financial aid to colleges, schools, hospitals, and charities and generally supported by gifts for such purposes.

The founding or building of a college or hospital. The incorporation or endowment of a college or hospital is the foundation; and he who endows it with land or other property is the founder. Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 518, 4 L.Ed. 229; Seagrace's Appeal, 125 Pa. 362, 17 A. 412; Union Baptist Ass'n v. Huhn, 7 Tex.Civ.App. 249, 26 S.W. 755.

Preliminary questions to witness to establish admissibility of evidence. "Laying foundation" is a prerequisite to the admission of evidence at trial. It is established by testimony which identifies the evidence sought to be admitted and connects it with the issue in question. Taylor v. State, Wyo., 642 P.2d 1294, 1295. See, e.g., Fed.Evid.R. 104.

See also Charitable foundation; Endowment.

Founded. Based upon; arising from, growing out of, or resting upon; as in the expressions "founded in fraud," "founded on a consideration," "founded on contract," and the like.

Founded on. To serve as a base or basis for.

Founder. The person who endows an eleemosynary corporation or institution, or supplies the funds for its establishment. See Foundation.

Founders' shares. In English Company Law, shares issued to the founders of (or vendors to) a public company as a part of the consideration for the business, or concession, etc., taken over, and not forming a part of the ordinary capital. As a rule, such shares only participate in profits after the payment of a fixed minimum dividend on paid-up capital.

Foundling. A deserted or abandoned infant; a child found without a parent or guardian, its relatives being unknown.

Foundling hospitals. Charitable institutions which exist in many European countries for taking care of infants forsaken by their parents, such being generally the offspring of illegal connections.

Four /fûr/. Fr. In old French law, an oven or bakehouse. Four banal, an oven, owned by the seignior of the estate, to which the tenants were obliged to bring their bread for baking. Also the proprietary right to maintain such an oven.

Fourcher /fûrshéy/. Fr. To fork. This was a method of delaying an action anciently resorted to by defendants when two of them were joined in the suit. Instead of appearing together, each would appear in turn and cast an essoin for the other, thus postponing the trial.

Four corners. The face of a written instrument.

Four corners rule. Under "four corners rule", intention of parties, especially that of grantor, is to be gathered from instrument as a whole and not from isolated parts thereof. Davis v. Andrews, Tex.Civ.App., 361 S.W.2d 419, 423.

Fourierism /fûriyarizem/fôr*/. A form of socialism.

401(k) plan. A savings plan established by corporations for the benefit of employees. Such a plan allows employees to defer pre-tax income on a certain portion of their gross salary and invest the funds in stocks, bonds, or other investment tools. In addition, many companies match a percentage of the employees' contributions. The contributions and earnings from such are accumulated tax free until such time as the funds are withdrawn. There is a penalty for early withdrawal, with some exceptions such as death or disability of the employee. I.R.C. § 401(k).

Four seas. The seas surrounding England. These were divided into the Western, including the Scottich and Irish; the Northern, or North sea; the Eastern, being the German ocean; the Southern, being the British channel.

Fourteenth Amendment. The Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, ratified in 1868, creates or at least recognizes for the first time a citizenship of the United States, as distinct from that of the states; forbids the making or enforcement by any state of any law abridging the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States; and secures all "persons" against any state action which results in either deprivation of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or, in denial of the equal protection of the laws. This Amendment also contains provisions concerning the apportionment of representatives in Congress. See also Due process of law; Equal protection clause.

Fourth Amendment. Amendment of the U.S. Constitution guaranteeing people the right to be secure in their homes and property against unreasonable searches and seizures and providing that no warrants shall issue except upon probable cause and then only as to specific places to be searched and persons and things to be seized. See Probable cause; Search (and other cross-references thereunder).

Fourth estate. The journalistic profession (i.e. the press). Term has its source from a reference to the reporters' gallery of the British Parliament whose influence on public policy was said to equal that of Parliament's three traditional estates, the clergy, nobility, and commons.

Fox's Libel Act. In English law, this was the statute 52 Geo. III, c. 60, which secured to juries, upon the trial of indictments for libel, the right of pronouncing a general verdict of guilty or not guilty upon the whole matter in issue, and no longer bound them to find a verdict of guilty on proof of the publication of the paper charged to be a libel, and of the sense ascribed to it in the indictment.

Foy /fôy/(w)ey/fwâ/. L. Fr. Faith; allegiance; fidelity. F.P.A. In maritime insurance: "Free from particular average". See Average.

F.P.R. Federal Procurement Regulations. See now Federal Acquisition Regulations.

Fr. A Latin abbreviation for "fragmentum," a fragment, used in citations to the Digest or Pandects in the Corpus Juris Civilis of Justinian, the several extracts from juristic writings of which it is composed being so called.

Fractio /fræksh(y)ow/. Lat. A breaking; division; fraction; a portion of a thing less than the whole.

Fraction. A breaking, or breaking up; a fragment or broken part; a portion of a thing, less than the whole.

Fractional. As applied to tracts of land, particularly townships, sections, quarter sections, and other divisions according to the government survey, and also mining claims, this term means that the exterior boundary lines are laid down to include the whole of such a division or such a claim, but that the tract in question does not measure up to the full extent or include the whole acreage, because a portion of it is cut off by an overlapping survey, a river or lake, or some other external interference. Any irregular division whether containing more or less than conventional amount of acreage.

Fractional share. Unit of stock less than a full share. This term comes into use with a stock dividend in an instance for example where an owner of 75 shares receives a 10% stock dividend. That part or portion of a share of stock indicated on a right or warrant as subject to purchase by the exercise of such right.

Fractional share formula. See Marital deduction.

Fractionem diei non recipit lex /frèkshiyôwnam dayiyay nôn résapat léks/. The law does not take notice of a portion of a day.
Fraction of a day. A portion of a day. The dividing a day. Generally, the law does not allow the fraction of a day.

Fracultura navium /fræktʃərə nəv(ə)zm/. Lat. The breaking or wreck of ships; the same as naufragium (q.v.).

Fragmenta /frægmentə/. Lat. Fragments. A name sometimes applied (especially in citations) to the Digest or Pandects in the Corpus Juris Civilis of Justinian, as being made up of numerous extracts or "fragments" from the writings of various jurists.

Fragmented literal similarity. In copyright law, an infringement plaintiff can prove copying by the defendant by showing that scattered throughout the defendant's work are words (or musical phrases, or artistic symbols or images) that constitute part of the protected work.

Frais /frɛ̃/. Fr. Expense; charges; costs. Frais d'un procès, costs of a suit.

Frais de justice /frɛ̃ də zhyst(y)z/. In French and Canadian law, costs incurred incidentally to the action.

Frais jusqu'à bord /frɛ̃ jaskə bɔ(r)d/. Fr. In French commercial law, expenses to the board; expenses incurred on a shipment of goods, in packing, cartage, commissions, etc., up to the point where they are actually put on board the vessel.

Framed. Incrimination of person on false or fabricated evidence. Compare Entrapment.

When used to describe evidence, word is generally accepted as implying that willful perjurers, suborned by and conspiring with parties in interest to litigation, are swearing or have sworn to matters without any basis in fact. Tri-State Transit Co. of Louisiana v. Westbrook, 207 Ark. 270, 180 S.W.2d 121, 125.

Frame-up. Conspiracy or plot, especially for evil purpose, as to incriminate person on false evidence. See Entrapment.

Franc aleu /frɔ̃k alyu/. In French feudal law, an allod; a free inheritance; or an estate held free of any services except such as were due to the sovereign.

Franchise. A special privilege to do certain things conferred by government on individual or corporation, and which does not belong to citizens generally of common right; e.g., right granted to offer cable television service. Artesian Water Co. v. State, Dept. of Highways and Transp., Del.Super., 330 A.2d 432, 439. In England it is defined to be a royal privilege in the hands of a subject.

A privilege granted or sold, such as to use a name or to sell products or services. The right given by a manufacturer or supplier to a retailer to use his products and name on terms and conditions mutually agreed upon.

In its simplest terms, a franchise is a license from owner of a trademark or trade name permitting another to sell a product or service under that name or mark. More broadly stated, a "franchise" has evolved into an elaborate agreement under which the franchisee undertakes to conduct a business or sell a product or service in accordance with methods and procedures prescribed by the franchisor, and the franchisor undertakes to assist the franchisee through advertising, promotion and other advisory services. H & R Block, Inc. v. Lovelace, 208 Kan. 538, 493 P.2d 205, 211. Term also refers to such business as owned by franchisee. State and Federal laws regulate business franchising. See also Franchised dealer.

Corporate franchise. See that title. See also Charter.

Elective franchise. The right of suffrage; the right or privilege of voting in public elections. Such right is guaranteed by Fifteenth, Nineteenth, and Twenty-fourth Amendments to U.S. Constitution.

Exclusive franchise. See Exclusive agency.

General and special. The charter of a corporation is its "general" franchise, while a "special" franchise consists in any rights granted by the public to use property for a public use but with private profit.

Sports franchise. As granted by a professional sports association, it is a privilege to field a team in a given geographic area under the auspices of the league that issues it. It is merely an incorporeal right.

Tax treatment. A franchise is an agreement which gives the transferee the right to distribute, sell, or provide goods, services, or facilities, within a specified area. The cost of obtaining a franchise may be amortized over the life of the agreement. In general, a franchise is a capital asset and results in capital gain or loss if all significant powers, rights or continuing interests are transferred pursuant to the sale of a franchise.

Franchise agreement. Generally, an agreement between a supplier of a product or service or an owner of a desired trademark or copyright (franchisor), and a reseller (franchisee) under which the franchisee agrees to sell the franchisor's product or service or to do business under the franchisor's name. State and federal laws regulate the content of franchise agreements.

Franchise appurtenant to land. Usually a franchise is not regarded as real property or land and is not included in the term "tenement;" but it is sometimes characterized or classified as real property or as property of the nature of real property when exercised in connection with real property, and is, in terms, classified as real property, real estate, or land by some statutes.

Franchise clause. Provision in casualty insurance policy to the effect that the insurer will pay those claims only over a stated amount and that the insured is responsible for all damage under the agreed amount. This clause differs from a deductible provision in that the insured bears the loss in every claim up to the deductible amount whereas, under the franchise clause, once the claim exceeds the agreed amount, the insurer pays the entire claim.
Franchise tax. A tax upon the privilege of existing or the privilege of doing certain things. An annual tax on the privilege of doing business in a state; it is not a direct tax on income. Hoosier Engineering Co. v. Shea, 124 Vt. 341, 205 A.2d 821, 822. A tax on the franchise of a corporation, that is, on the right and privilege of carrying on business in the character of a corporation, for the purposes for which it was created, and in the conditions which surround it. City of Poplar Bluff v. Poplar Bluff Loan and Bldg. Ass'n, Mo.App., 369 S.W.2d 764, 766.

Though the value of the franchise, for purposes of taxation, may be measured by the amount of business done, or the amount of earnings or dividends, or by the total value of the capital or stock of the corporation in excess of its tangible assets, a franchise tax is not a tax on either property, capital, stock, earnings, or dividends. Greene v. Louisville & I. R. Co., 244 U.S. 499, 37 S.Ct. 763, 678, 61 L.Ed. 1280.

Franchisee. Person or company that is granted franchise by a franchisor.

Franchised dealer. A retailer who sells the product or service of a manufacturer or supplier under a franchise agreement which generally protects the territory for the retailer and provides advertising and promotion support to him. See Franchise.

Frank bank. In old English law, free bench. See Free-bench.

Frank-chase. A liberty of free chase enjoyed by any one, whereby all other persons having ground within that compass are forbidden to cut down wood, etc., even in their own demesnes, to the prejudice of the owner of the liberty. See Chase.

Frank-fee. Freehold lands exempted from all services, but not from homage; lands held otherwise than in ancient demesne. That which a man holds to himself and his heirs, and not by such service as is required in ancient demesne, according to the custom of the manor.

Frank ferm. In English law, a species of estate held in socage, said by Britton to be "lands and tenements whereof the nature of the fee is changed by feoffment out of chivalry for certain yearly services, and in respect whereof neither homage, ward, marriage, nor relief can be demanded." 2 Bl.Comm. 80.

Frank-fold. In old English law, free-fold; a privilege for the lord to have all the sheep of his tenants and the inhabitants within his seigniority, in his fold, in his demesnes, to manure his land.

Franking privilege. The privilege of sending certain matter through the public mails without payment of postage, in pursuance of a personal or official privilege. The privilege granted to members of Congress to send out a certain amount of mail under signature without charge. See 39 U.S.C.A. § 3210 et seq.

Frank-law. An obsolete expression signifying the rights and privileges of a citizen, or the liberties and civic rights of a freeman.

Frankleyn /fræŋklæn/. (Spelled, also, "Franceling" and "Franklin"). A freeman; a freeholder; a gentleman.

Frank-marry. In old English law, a species of entailed estates. When tenements are given by one to another, together with a wife, who is a daughter or cousin of the donor, to hold in frank-marriage, the donees shall have the tenements to them and the heirs of their two bodies begotten, i.e., in special tail. The word "frank-marriage," ex vi termini, both creates and limits an inheritance, not only supplying words of descent, but also terms of procreation. The donees are liable to no service except fealty, and a reserved rent would be void, until the fourth degree of consanguinity be passed between the issues of the donor and donee, when they were capable by the law of the church of intermarrying. 2 Bl.Comm. 115.

Frank-pledge. In old English law, a pledge or surety for freemen; that is, the pledge, or corporate responsibility, of all the inhabitants of a tithing for the general good behavior of each free-born citizen above the age of fourteen, and for his being forthcoming to answer any infraction of the law. A pledge of surety to the sovereign for the collective good conduct of a group.

Frank-tenant. A freeholder.
Frank-tenement. In English law, a free tenement, freeholding, or freehold. 2 Bl.Comm. 61, 62, 104. Used to denote both the tenure and the estate.

Frater /fréytar/. In the civil law, a brother. Frater consanguineus, a brother having the same father, but born of a different mother. Frater uterinus, a brother born of the same mother, but by a different father. Frater nutricius, a bastard brother.

Fraternal benefit association or society. One whose form of life (or accident) Fraterna /fraterr(n)laya/. A fraternity or brotherhood. Fraternity. A body of persons associated for their common interest, business or pleasure. In American colleges, a student organization, either a nationally chartered society comprising many affiliated chapters or a single chapter in one institution, formed chiefly to promote friendship and welfare among the members, and usually having secret rites and a name consisting of Greek letters. Woman’s Club of Little Falls v. Township of Little Falls, 20 N.J.Misc. 275, 26 A.2d 739, 741.

Fraternal Conjuration /frátriKir konjóréitya/. Sworn brothers or companions for the defense of their sovereign, or for other purposes.

Fraternity. Brotherly; relating or belonging to a fraternity or an association of persons formed for mutual aid and benefit, but not for profit. In re Mason Tire & Rubber Co., 56 App.D.C. 170, 11 F.2d 556, 557.

Fraternal benefit association or society. One whose members have adopted the same, or a very similar, calling, avocation, or profession, or who are working in unison to accomplish some worthy object, and who for that reason have joined themselves together as an association or society to aid and assist one another, and to promote the common cause. Alpha Rho Alumni Ass’n v. City of New Brunswick, 126 N.J.L. 233, 18 A.2d 68, 70. A society or voluntary association organized and carried on for the mutual aid and benefit of its members, not for profit; which ordinarily has a lodge system, a ritualistic form of work, and a representative government, makes provision for the payment of death benefits, and (sometimes) for benefits in case of accident, sickness, or old age, the funds therefor being derived from dues paid or assessments levied on the members.

Fraternal insurance. The form of life (or accident) insurance furnished by a fraternal beneficial association, consisting in the payment to a member, or his heirs in case of death, of a stipulated sum of money, out of funds raised for that purpose by the payment of dues or assessments by all the members of the association.

Fraternal lodge. See Fraternal benefit association or society.

Fraternia /fraterr(n)laya/. A fraternity or brotherhood.

Fraternity. A body of persons associated for their common interest, business or pleasure. In American colleges, a student organization, either a nationally chartered society comprising many affiliated chapters or a single chapter in one institution, formed chiefly to promote friendship and welfare among the members, and usually having secret rites and a name consisting of Greek letters. Woman’s Club of Little Falls v. Township of Little Falls, 20 N.J.Misc. 275, 26 A.2d 739, 741.

Fraud. An intentional perversion of truth for the purpose of inducing another in reliance upon it to part with some valuable thing belonging to him or to surrender a legal right. A false representation of a matter of fact, whether by words or by conduct, by false or misleading allegations, or by concealment of that which should have been disclosed, which deceives and is intended to deceive another so that he shall act upon it to his legal injury. Anything calculated to deceive, whether by a single act or combination, or by suppression of truth, or suggestion of what is false, whether it be by direct falsehood or innuendo, by speech or silence, word of mouth, or look or gesture. Delahanty v. First Pennsylvania Bank, N.A., 318 Pa.Super. 90, 464 A.2d 1243, 1251. A generic term, embracing all multifarious means which human ingenuity can devise, and which are resorted to by one individual to get advantage over another by false suggestions or by suppression of truth, and includes all surprise, trick, cunning, dissembling, and any unfair way by which another is cheated. Johnson v. McDonald, 170 Okl. 117, 39 P.2d 150. "Bad faith" and "fraud" are synonymous, and also synonyms of dishonesty, infidelity, faithlessness, perfidy, unfairness, etc.

Elements of a cause of action for "fraud" include false representation of a present or past fact made by defendant, action in reliance thereupon by plaintiff, and damage resulting to plaintiff from such misrepresentation. Citizens Standard Life Ins. Co. v. Gilley, Tex.Civ.App., 521 S.W.2d 354, 356.

As distinguished from negligence, it is always positive, intentional. It comprises all acts, omissions, and concealments involving a breach of a legal or equitable duty and resulting in damage to another. And includes anything calculated to deceive, whether it be a single act or combination of circumstances, whether the suppression of truth or the suggestion of what is false, whether it be by direct falsehood or by innuendo, by speech or by silence, by word of mouth, or by look or gesture. Fraud, as applied to contracts, is the cause of an error bearing on a material part of the contract, created or continued by artifice, with design to obtain some unjust advantage to the one party, or to cause an inconvenience or loss to the other.

See also Actionable fraud; Badges of fraud; Cheat; Civil fraud; Collusion; Constructive fraud; Criminal (Criminal Fraud); Defeat; False pretenses; False representation; Intrinsic fraud; Mail fraud; Material fact; Misrepresentation; Promissory fraud; Reliance; Scheme or artifice to defraud.
Actionable fraud. See Actionable fraud.

Actual or constructive fraud. Fraud is either actual or constructive. Actual fraud consists in deceit, artifice, trick, design, some direct and active operation of the mind; it includes cases of the intentional and successful employment of any cunning, deception, or artifice used to circumvent or cheat another. It is something said, done, or omitted by a person with the design of perpetrating what he knows to be a cheat or deception. Constructive fraud consists in any act of commission or omission contrary to legal or equitable duty, trust, or confidence justly reposed, which is contrary to good conscience and operates to the injury of another. Or, as otherwise defined, it is an act, statement or omission which operates as a virtual fraud on an individual, or which, if generally permitted, would be prejudicial to the public welfare, and yet may have been unconnected with any selfish or evil design. Or, constructive frauds are such acts or contracts as, though not originating in any actual evil design or contrivance to perpetrate a positive fraud or injury upon other persons, are yet, by their tendency to deceive or mislead other persons, or to violate private or public confidence, or to impair or injure the public interests, deemed equally reprehensible with actual fraud. Constructive fraud consists in any breach of duty which, without an actually fraudulent intent, gains an advantage to the person in fault, or any one claiming under him, by misleading another to his prejudice, or to the prejudice of any one claiming under him; or, in any such act or omission as the law specially declares to be fraudulent, without respect to actual fraud.

Extrinsic fraud. Fraud which is collateral to the issues tried in the case where the judgment is rendered. Type of deceit which may form basis for setting aside a judgment as for example a divorce granted ex parte because the plaintiff-spouse falsely tells the court he or she is ignorant of the whereabouts of the defendant-spouse. Patrick v. Patrick, 245 N.C. 195, 95 S.E.2d 585.

Fraud in fact or in law. Fraud is also classified as fraud in fact and fraud in law. The former is actual, positive, intentional fraud. Fraud disclosed by matters of fact, as distinguished from constructive fraud or fraud in law. Fraud in law is fraud in contemplation of law; fraud implied or inferred by law; fraud made out by construction of law, as distinguished from fraud found by a jury from matter of fact; constructive fraud (q.v.). See also Fraud in the factum; Legal or positive fraud, below.

Fraud in the execution. Misrepresentation that deceives the other party as to the nature of a document evidencing the contract.

Fraud in the factum. Misrepresentation as to the nature of a writing that a person signs with neither knowledge nor reasonable opportunity to obtain knowledge of its character or essential terms. See U.C.C. § 3-305(2)(c). See also Fraud in fact or in law, above.

Fraud in the inducement. Fraud connected with underlying transaction and not with the nature of the contract or document signed. Misrepresentation as to the terms, quality or other aspects of a contractual relation, venture or other transaction that leads a person to agree to enter into the transaction with a false impression or understanding of the risks, duties or obligations she has undertaken.

Intrinsic fraud. That which pertains to issue involved in original action or where acts constituting fraud were, or could have been, litigated therein. Fahrendoch v. People ex rel. Taber, 169 Colo. 70, 453 F.2d 601. Perjury is an example of intrinsic fraud.

Larceny. See Larceny (Larceny by fraud or deception).

Legal or positive fraud. Fraud is also said to be legal or positive. The former is fraud made out by legal construction or inference, or the same thing as constructive fraud. Positive fraud is the same thing as actual fraud.

Mail and wire fraud. Criminal offense of using mails or interstate wires to create or in furtherance of a scheme or artifice to defraud, or for obtaining money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses. 18 U.S.C. §§ 1341, 1343.

Statute of frauds. See Frauds, Statute of.

Tax fraud. Federal offense of willfully attempting to evade or defeat the payment of taxes due and owing. I.R.C. § 7201. Tax fraud falls into two categories: civil and criminal. Under civil fraud, the IRS may impose as a penalty an amount equal to 75 percent of the underpayment. I.R.C. § 6653(b). Fines and/or imprisonment are prescribed for conviction of various types of criminal tax fraud. I.R.C. §§ 7201-7207. Both civil and criminal fraud require a specific intent on the part of the taxpayer to evade the tax; mere negligence is not enough. Criminal fraud requires the additional element of willfulness (i.e., done deliberately and with evil purpose). In practice, it becomes difficult to distinguish between the degree of intent necessary to support criminal, rather than civil, fraud. In either situation, the IRS has the burden of proving fraud.

Fraudare /frôdérî/. Lat. In the civil law, to deceive, cheat, or impose upon; to defraud.

Fraud on court. A scheme to interfere with judicial machinery performing task of impartial adjudication, as by preventing opposing party from fairly presenting his case or defense. Finding of fraud on the court is justified only by most egregious misconduct directed to the court itself such as bribery of a judge or jury to fabrication of evidence by counsel and must be supported by clear, unequivocal and convincing evidence. In re Coordinated Pretrial Proceedings in Antibiotic Antitrust Actions, C.A.Minn., 538 F.2d 180, 195. It consists of conduct so egregious that it undermines the integrity of the judicial process. Stone v. Stone, Alaska, 647 P.2d 582, 586.

Frauds, Statute of. This is the common designation of a very celebrated English statute (29 Car. II, c. 3), passed in 1677, which has been adopted, in a more or less modified form, in nearly all of the United States. Its Fraudulent alienation. In a general sense, the transfer of property with an intent to defraud creditors, lienors, or others. In a particular sense, the act of an administrator who wastes the assets of the estate by giving them away or selling at a gross undervalue.

Fraudulent alienation. In a general sense, the transfer of property with an intent to defraud creditors, lienors, or others. In a particular sense, the act of an administrator who wastes the assets of the estate by giving them away or selling at a gross undervalue.

Fraudulent alteration. A change in the terms of an instrument, document or other paper made with a dishonest and deceitful purpose to acquire more than one was entitled to under the original terms of the paper. See also Alteration; Forgery; Raised check.

Fraudulent banking. Receipt of deposit by banker who knows that bank is insolvent at the time.

Fraudulent claims. See False claim.

Fraudulent concealment. The hiding or suppression of a material fact or circumstance which the party is legally or morally bound to disclose. The employment of artifice planned to prevent inquiry or escape investigation and to mislead or hinder the acquisition of information disclosing a right of action; acts relied on must be of an affirmative character and fraudulent. Fundunburka v. Michigan Mut. Liability Co., 63 Mich.App. 405, 234 N.W.2d 545, 547. The test of whether failure to disclose material facts constitutes fraud is the existence of a duty, legal or equitable, arising from the relation of the parties; failure to disclose a material fact with intent to mislead or defraud under such circumstances being equivalent to an actual "fraudulent concealment." Fraudulent concealment justifying a rescission of a contract is the intentional concealment of some fact known to the party charged, which is material for the party injured to know to prevent being defrauded; the concealment of a fact which one is bound to disclose being the equivalent of an indirect representation that such fact does not exist. See Material fact.

Fraudulent conversion. Receiving into possession money or property of another and fraudulently withholding, converting, or applying the same to or for one's own use and benefit, or to use and benefit of any person other than the one to whom the money or property belongs. See Conversion.

Fraudulent conveyance. A conveyance or transfer of property, the object of which is to defraud a creditor, or hinder or delay him, or to put such property beyond his reach. Dean v. Davis, 242 U.S. 438, 37 S.Ct. 130, 61 L.Ed. 419. Conveyance made with intent to avoid some duty or debt due by or incumbent on person making transfer.

In bankruptcy law, refers to a gift or transfer of the bankrupt's property for little or no consideration at a time when the debtor is insolvent, or one which renders debtor's capital unreasonably small, or one made by debtor who believes that he will not be able to meet maturing obligations, or one made with actual intent to hinder, delay or defraud his creditors. Such fraudulent conveyances may be avoided by the trustee. Bankruptcy Code § 548.

For a conveyance to be a "fraudulent conveyance" under Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act, there must be actual intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors, or grantor must be insolvent or be rendered insolvent by conveyance, and conveyance must be made without fair consideration. Georgia-Pacific Corp. v. Lumber Products Co., Okl., 590 P.2d 661, 665, 100 A.L.R.3d 1. Many states have enacted this Uniform Act.

Fraudulent intent. Such intent exists where one, either with a view of benefiting oneself or misleading another into a course of action, makes a representation which one knows to be false or which one does not believe to be true. In re Orenduff, D.C.Okl., 226 F.Supp. 312, 314. See Fraud; Fraudulent misrepresentation.

Fraudulent misrepresentation. A false statement as to material fact, made with intent that another rely thereon, which is believed by other party and on which he relies and by which he is induced to act and does act to his injury, and statement is fraudulent if speaker knows statement to be false or if it is made with utter disregard of its truth or falsity. Cormack v. American Underwriters Corp., 288 N.W.2d 634. As basis for civil action, establishment of representation, falsity, scienter, deception, and injury, are generally required. See also Deceit; Fraud; Material fact; Misrepresentation.

Fraudulent or dishonest act. One which involves bad faith, a breach of honesty, a want of integrity, or moral Fraudulent pretense. Crime which consists of a false pretense, obtaining property of value thereby, and an intent to cheat and defraud. Com. v. Evans, 190 Pa.Super. 179, 154 A.2d 57, 81. E.g., credit purchases made without requisite intent or ability to pay.

Fraudulent sale. See Sale.

Fraudulent transfers. See Fraudulent conveyance.

Fraun, fraunche, fraunk /frɔŋk/. Sanctories; seats of peace.

Fraus dans locum contractui /frɔs dáñLocäktrŏktywʌ/. A misrepresentation or concealment of some fact that is material to the contract, and had the truth regarding which been known the contract would not have been made as made, is called a "fraud dans locum contractui"; i.e., a fraud occasioning the contract, or giving place or occasion for the contract.

Fraus est celare fraudem /frɔs êst saleri frɔðam/. It is a fraud to conceal a fraud.

Fraus est odiosa et non presumenda /frɔs êst ówdliyɔwɔs êt nɔn priʒyɔsmɛndə/. Fraud is odious, and not to be presumed.

Fraus et dolus nemini patrocinari debent /frɔs êt dɔulus nɛmɪni pɑtrɔsɛnɛri dɛbɛnt/. Fraud and deceit should not be presumed.

Fraus et jus nunquam cohabitant /frɔs êt jɔs nɔŋkwɔm kɔwɪhɛbɔdant/. Fraud and justice never dwell together.

Fraus latet in generalibus /frɔs lɔtɔt in ʒenɛrælɪbɔs/. Fraud lies hid in general expressions.

Fraus legis /frɔs lìjʒ/. Lat. In the civil law, fraud of law; fraud upon law. See in fraudem legis.

Fraus meretur fraudem /frɔs mɛriθɔr frɔðam/. Fraud merits fraud.

Fray /frɛj/. See Affray.

F.R.B. Federal Reserve Board.

Freedum /friyðam/. A fine paid for obtaining pardon when the peace had been broken. A sum paid the magistrate for protection against the right of revenge.

Fredwit, or fredwite /frɪðwɪt/. A liberty to hold courts and take up the fines for beating and wounding.

Free. Not subject to legal constraint of another.

Unconstrained; having power to follow the dictates of own will. Not subject to the dominion of another. Not compelled to involuntary servitude; used in this sense as opposed to "slave."

Not bound to service for a fixed term of years; in distinction to being bound as an apprentice. Enjoying full civic rights. Available to all citizens alike without charge; as a free school.

Not despotic; assuring liberty; defending individual rights against encroachment by any person or class; instituted by a free people; said of governments, institutions, etc.

Certain, and also consistent with an honorable degree in life; as free services, in the feudal law.

Confined to the person possessing, instead of being shared with others; as a free fishery.

Not engaged in a war as belligerent or ally; neutral, as in the maxim: "Free ships make free goods."

See also Freedom.

Free alms. The name of a species of tenure. See Frank almoign.

Free alongside ship (FAS). In price quotations, means that the price includes all costs of transportation and delivery of the goods alongside of the ship. See U.C.C. § 2-319(2-4).

Free and clear. The title to property is said to be "free and clear" when it is not incumbered by any liens; but it is said that an agreement to convey land "free and clear" is satisfied by a conveyance passing a good (i.e., marketable) title.

Free and equal. As used in a constitutional provision that election shall be free and equal, the word "free" means that every one entitled to vote should have a reasonable opportunity to do so, a reasonable manner of doing so, etc., and the word "equal" means that every vote cast should have its decisive effect in the selection or choice to be made at the election. The term means that the voter shall not be physically restrained in the exercise of his right of franchise, by either civil or military authority, and that every voter shall have the same right as every other voter. Asher v. Arnett, 280 Ky. 347, 132 S.W.2d 772, 775. It is the essence of free elections that the right of suffrage be untrammeled and unfettered, and that the ballot represent and express the electors' own intelligent judgment and conscience, and there can be no "free election" unless there is freedom of opinion. An election to be free must be without coercion of any description or any deterrent from the elector's exercise of his free will by means of any intimidation or influence whatever, although there is no violence or physical coercion.
Free-bench. In old English law, a widow's dower out of copyholds to which she was entitled by the custom of some manors. It was regarded as an excrecence growing out of the husband's estate, and was a continuaunce of his estate.

Free-bord. In old records, an allowance of land over and above a certain limit or boundary, as so much beyond or without a fence. The right of claiming that quantity.

Free chapel. In English ecclesiastical law, a place of worship, so called because not liable to the visitation of the ordinary. It is always of royal foundation, or founded at least by private persons to whom the crown has granted the privilege.

Free course. In admiralty law, a vessel having the wind from a favorable quarter is said to sail on a "free course," or said to be "going free" when she has a fair (following) wind and her yards braced in.

Freedman. In Roman law, one who was set free from a state of bondage; an emancipated slave. The word was used in the same sense in the United States, respecting negroes who were formerly slaves.

Freedom. The state of being free; liberty; self-determination; absence of restraint; the opposite of slavery.

The power of acting, in the character of a moral personality, according to the dictates of the will, without other check, hindrance, or prohibition than may be imposed by just and necessary laws and the duties of social life. See Liberty.

The prevalence, in the government and constitution of a country, of such a system of laws and institutions as secure civil liberty to the individual citizen.

Freedom of choice. As used in context of freedom of choice to attend school of choice in unitary, integrated school system, devoid of any de jure segregation, means the maximum amount of freedom and clearly understood choice in bona fide unitary system where schools are not white schools or Negro schools, but just schools. Hall v. St. Helena Parish School Bd., D.C.La., 268 F.Supp. 923, 926. With respect to punishment, loss of freedom of choice is a natural by-product of the detention process and should not be considered "punishment" in the constitutional sense. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 537, 99 S.Ct. 1861, 1873, 60 L.Ed.2d 447 (1979).

Freedom of expression. Right guaranteed by First Amendment of U.S. Constitution; includes freedom of religion, speech, and press. See also Liberty.

Freedom of Information Act. The Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C.A. § 552) provides for making infor-
Free election. Exists where each voter is allowed to cast his ballot as his own conscience dictates. See also Free and equal.

Free entry, egress, and regress. An expression used to denote that a person has the right to go on land again and again as often as may be reasonably necessary. Thus, in the case of a tenant entitled to emblements.

Free exercise clause. First Amendment to U.S. Constitution provides that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." See also Establishment clause; Freedom of religion; Liberty.

Free fishery. See Fishery.

Freehold. An estate for life or in fee. Intermountain Realty Co. v. Allen, 60 Idaho 228, 90 P.2d 704, 706. A "freehold estate" is a right of title to land. Cohn v. Litwin, 311 Ill.App. 55, 35 N.E.2d 410, 413. An estate in land or other real property, of uncertain duration; that is, either of inheritance or which may possibly last for the life of the tenant at the least (as distinguished from a leasehold); and held by a free tenure (as distinguished from copyhold or villeinage).

An estate to be a freehold must possess these two qualities: (1) Immobility, that is, the property must be either land or some interest issuing out of or annexed to land; and (2) indeterminate duration, for, if the utmost period of time to which an estate can endure be fixed and determined, it cannot be a freehold.

Freehold in deed is the real possession of land or tenements in fee, fee-tail, or for life. Freehold in law is the right to such tenements before entry. The term has also been applied to those offices which a man holds in fee or for life.

Determinable freeholds are estates for life, which may determine upon future contingencies before the life for which they are created expires, as if an estate be granted to a woman during her widowhood, or to a man until he be promoted to a benefice. In these and similar cases, whenever the contingency happens,—when the widow marries, or when the grantee obtains the benefit,—the respective estates are absolutely determined and gone. Yet, while they subsist, they are reckoned estates for life; because they may by possibility last for life, if the contingencies upon which they are to determine do not sooner happen. 2 Bl.Comm. 121.

Freehold in law is a freehold which has descended to a man, upon which he may enter at pleasure, but which he has not entered on.

Freeholder. One having title to realty; either of inheritance or for life; either legal or equitable title. A person who possesses a freeholder estate; i.e. the owner of a freehold.

Freehold land societies. Societies in England designed for the purpose of enabling mechanics, artisans, and other workingmen to purchase at the least possible price a piece of freehold land of a sufficient yearly value to entitle the owner to the elective franchise for the county in which the land is situated.

Free ice. All ice in navigable streams not included within that authorized to be appropriated is sometimes called "free" ice, and does not belong to the adjacent riparian owners, but to the person who first appropriates it. Hudson River Ice Co. v. Brady, 158 App.Div. 142, 142 N.Y.S. 819, 821.

Free law. A term formerly used in England to designate the freedom of civil rights enjoyed by freemen. It was liable to forfeiture on conviction of treason or an infamous crime.

Freeman. A person in the possession and enjoyment of all the civil and political rights accorded to the people under a free government.

In the Roman law, it denoted one who was either born free or emancipated, and was the opposite of "slave." In feudal law, it designated an allodial proprietor, as distinguished from a vassal or feudal tenant. (And so in Pennsylvania colonial law.) In old English law, the word described a freeholder or tenant by free services; one who was not a villein. The term later referred to a member of a city or borough having the right of suffrage, or a member of any municipal corporation invested with full civic rights.

Freeman's roll. A list of persons admitted as burgesses or freemen for the purposes of the rights reserved by the municipal corporation act. Distinguished from the Burgess Roll. The term was used, in early colonial history, in some of the American colonies.

Free men. Before the Norman Conquest, a free man might be a man of small estate dependent on a lord. Every man, not himself a lord, was bound to have a lord or be treated as unworthy of a free man's right. Among free men there was a difference in their estimation for Wergild. See Homo liber.

Free on board (FOB). The term "F.O.B." is an abbreviation for "free on board" and means that seller will deliver subject matter contracted for, on certain conveyance, without expense to buyer. Tyson v. Seaport Grain, Inc., Tex.Civ.App., 388 S.W.2d 731, 735. In sales price quotation, means generally that the seller assumes all responsibilities and costs up to the point of delivery, including insurance, transportation, etc. See U.C.C. § 2-319.

Free port. An area or section of a port set aside for handling of foreign goods without entering customs. See also Foreign trade zone.

Free services. In feudal and old English law, such feudal services as were not unbecoming the character of a soldier or a freeman to perform; as to serve under his lord in the wars, to pay a sum of money, and the like.
Free shareholders. The free shareholders of a building and loan association are subscribers to its capital stock who are not borrowers from the association.

Free ships. In international law, ships of a neutral nation. The phrase "free ships shall make free goods" is often inserted in treaties, meaning that goods, even though belonging to an enemy, shall not be seized or confiscated, if found in neutral ships.

Free socage. See Socage.

Free tenure. Tenure by free services; freehold tenure.

Free time. Period that railroad car or vessel may remain unloaded before demurrage charges begin.

Free trade zone. See Foreign trade zone.

Free warren. See Warren.

Freeze-out. Refers to a process, usually in a closely held corporation, by which minority shareholders are prevented from receiving any direct or indirect financial return from the corporation in an effort to persuade them to liquidate their investment in the corporation on terms favorable to the controlling shareholders. The use of corporate control vested in the statutory majority of shareholders or the board of directors to eliminate minority shareholders from the enterprise or to reduce to relevant insignificance their voting power or claims on corporate assets. It implies a purpose to force upon the minority shareholder a change which is not incident to any other business goal of the corporation. Gabhart v. Gabhart, Ind., 370 N.E.2d 345, 353. See also Squeeze-out.

Freight. The price or compensation paid for the transportation of goods by a carrier. Name also applied to goods transported by such carriers. See also Freight rate.

Dead freight. Money payable by a person who has chartered a ship and only partly loaded her, in respect of the loss of freight caused to the ship-owner by the deficiency of cargo.

Freight booking. Making of specific arrangements for the transportation of goods in advance. See Forwarding agent; Freight forwarder.

Freighter. One who charters a ship to transport cargo; also, the vessel so chartered. The party by whom a vessel is engaged or chartered; otherwise called the "charterer." In French law, the owner of a vessel is called the "freighter" (fréteur); the merchant who hires it is called the "affreighter" (affrèteur).

Freight forwarder. One who in the ordinary course of business assembles and consolidates small shipments into a single lot and assumes responsibility for transportation of such property from point of receipt to point of destination. Mercury Motor Express, Inc. v. Brinke, C.A.Fla., 475 F.2d 1086, 1090. Freight forwarders collect and consolidate less than carload or less than truckload shipments and secure common carrier transportation for the long haul movement of property owned by individual shippers by carload or truckload. National Motor Freight Traffic Ass'n v. U. S., D.C.D.C., 253 F.Supp. 661, 663.

Freight mile. The equivalent of one ton of goods (i.e. freight) carried one mile.

Freight rate. The transportation charge for goods carried based on number of pieces carried, or the weight, or the mileage, or the value of the goods, or a combination thereof.

Frenchman. In early times, in English law, this term was applied to every stranger or "outlandish" man.

French pool. A system of gambling, especially on horse races, now generally known as "pari mutuel" (q.v.).

Frendlesman /fréndlsman/. Sax. An outlaw. So called because of his outlawry he was denied all help of friends after certain days.

Frendwite /fréndwyt/. In old English law, a mulct or fine exacted from him who harbored an outlawed friend.

Freneticus /frénetikus/. In old English law, a madman, or person in a frenzy.

Freeborgh /fríyborg/. A free-surety, or free-pledge. See Frank-pledge.

Freeling /fríyling/. (Sax. freoh, free, plus ling, progeny.) A freeman born. See Frillingi.

Frequent /frékwént/. v. To visit often; to resort to often or habitually.

Frequenter /frékwéntar/. Any person not an employee who may go in or be in place of employment or public building under circumstances which render him other than trespasser. An employee of an independent contractor working upon the premises of an owner is a "frequenter" working in a place of employment. Young v. Anaconda Am. Brass Co., 43 Wis.2d 36, 168 N.W.2d 112, 117.

Frequentia actus multum operatur /frékwéntiá aéktas múltam ópæréatar/. The frequency of an act effects much. A continual usage is of great effect to establish a right.

Fresca /fréska/. In old records, fresh water, or rain and land flood.

Fresh. Immediate; recent; following without any material interval.

Fresh complaint rule. The fresh complaint rule provides that in certain sexual assault cases proof that the alleged victim complained of the criminal act within a reasonable time after it occurred to a person she would ordinarily turn to for help or advice is admissible to bolster the credibility of the victim. State v. Tirone, 64 N.J. 222, 314 A.2d 601.
In old English law, a fine that had been imposed was known as a fresh fine or freshot. A flood, or overflowing of a river, by which means of rains or melted snow; an inundation.

Fresh fine. In old English law, a fine that had been levied within a year past.

Fresh pursuit. Refers to common-law right of police officer to cross jurisdictional lines in order to arrest a felon. Carson v. Pape, 15 Wis.2d 300, 112 N.W.2d 693, 697. Several states have adopted the Uniform Extra-Territorial Arrest on Fresh Pursuit Act. Basically, the law permits a police officer, of a state which has enacted the Act, to enter a state, which has enacted a similar Act, if he is in fresh pursuit and he can continue in fresh pursuit, of a person in order to arrest him on the ground that he had committed a felony in the state of the pursuing officer. The officer has the same powers of arrest and to hold in custody as the law enforcement officials of the state that he has entered.

Also refers to Fourth Amendment doctrine allowing warrantless searches and arrests where police pursue a fleeing suspect into a protected area.

One from whom property has been taken may use reasonable force to retake it if such force is used immediately after the taking. Sometimes referred to as hot pursuit.

Fresh start adjustment. For persons dying after 1976, normally the decedent's income tax basis in property will carry over to the estate of heirs. The "fresh start" adjustment, however, permits an addition to basis for the appreciation attributable to the period from the date the property was acquired by the decedent to December 31, 1976. The "fresh start" adjustment is only allowed for purposes of determining income tax gain on the later disposition of the property by the estate or heirs. I.R.C. § 1023.

Fresh suit. In old English law, immediate and unremitting pursuit of an escaping thief. "Such a present and earnest following of a robber as never ceases from the time of the robbery until apprehension."

Fret. Fr. In French marine law, freight.

Fréter /fré’té/ Fr. In French marine law, to freight a ship; to let it.

Fréteur /fré’tyur/ Fr. In French marine law, freighter. The owner of a ship, who lets it to the merchant.

Frettum, frectum /fré(k)tom/ In old English law, the freight of a ship; freight money.

Fretum /friytam/ Lat. A strait.

Friars /fríyars/. An order of religious persons, of whom there were four principal branches, viz.: (1) Minors, Grey Friars, or Franciscans; (2) Augustines; (3) Dominicans, or Black Friars; (4) White Friars, or Carmelites, from whom the rest descend.

Friburgh /friybarg/. (Also, Frithburg, Frithborgh, Fri-borg, Froeborg, and Freeburgh.) (Sax.) A kind of frank-pledge whereby the principal men were bound for themselves and servants.

Fribusculum /frábiskylam/. In the civil law, a temporary separation between husband and wife, caused by a quarrel or estrangement, but not amounting to a divorce, because not accompanied with an intention to dissolve the marriage.

Fridborg, frithborg /fríðbôrg/. Frank-pledge. Security for the peace.

Fridburghus /friðbôrgas/. In old English law, a kind of frank-pledge, by which the lords or principal men were made responsible for their dependents or servants.

Friend. One favorably disposed. Ned v. Robinson, 181 Okl. 507, 74 P.2d 1156. Varying in degree from greatest intimacy to acquaintance more or less casual. United States Trust Co. of Newark v. Montclair Trust Co., 133 N.J.Eq. 579, 33 A.2d 901, 903. One that seeks society or welfare of another whom one holds in affection, respect or esteem or whose companionship and personality are pleasurable; acquaintance, intimate, or confidant. Sioux Associates, Inc. v. Iowa Liquor Control Commission, 257 Iowa 308, 132 N.W.2d 421, 426. See also Next friend.

Friendless man. In old English law, an outlaw; so called because he was denied all help of friends.

Friendly fire. Fire burning in place where it was intended to burn, although damages may result. Progress Laundry & Cleaning Co. v. Reciprocal Exchange, Tex. Civ.App., 109 S.W.2d 226, 227.

Friendly societies. In English law, associations supported by subscription, for the relief and maintenance of the members, or their wives, children, relatives, and nominees, in sickness, infancy, advanced age, widowhood, etc. The statutes regulating these societies were consolidated and amended by St. 38 & 39 Vict., c. 60.

Friendly suit. A suit brought by a creditor against an executor or administrator, being really a suit by the executor or administrator, in the name of a creditor, against himself, in order to compel the creditors to take an equal distribution of the assets. Also any suit instituted by agreement between the parties to obtain the opinion of the court upon some doubtful question in which they are interested. See also Amicable action; Declaratory judgment. Compare Adversary proceeding.

Friend of the court. See Amicus curiae.

Fringlingi /fraljinjay/. Persons of free descent, or freemen born; the middle class of persons among the Saxons. See Freeling.

Fringe benefits. Side, non-wage benefits which accompany or are in addition to a person's employment such as paid insurance, recreational facilities, sick leave, profit-sharing plans, paid holidays and vacations, etc. Such Frisk. Contact of the outer clothing of a person to detect by the sense of touch whether a concealed weapon is being carried. People v. Francis, 1 Dept., 108 A.D.2d 322, 489 N.Y.S.2d 166. A pat-down search of a suspect by police, designed to discover weapons for purpose of insuring safety of officer and others nearby, and not to recover contraband or other evidence for use at subsequent trial. The scope of a frisk has been limited by the courts to be less than a full-scale search. In determining whether a police officer had a basis for initiating a frisk, there are two matters to be considered. One concerns whether the officer had a sufficient degree of suspicion that the party frisked was armed and dangerous, and the other whether the officer was rightfully in the presence of the party frisked so as to be endangered if that person was armed. Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1, 88 S.Ct. 1868, 20 L.Ed.2d 889. See also Stop and frisk.

Frith. Sax. Peace, security, or protection. This word occurs in many compound terms used in Anglo-Saxon law.

Frithsplot /fríðsplot/. A spot or plot of land, encircling Frithstool /fríðstúwl/. The stool of peace. A stool or Frithgar /fríðgár/. The year of jubilee, or of meeting for Frithbreach /fríðbriych/. The breaking of the peace.

Frithbote /fríðbówt/. A satisfaction or fine, for a breach of the peace.

Frithgilda /fríðgilds/. Guildhall; a company or fraternity for the maintenance of peace and security; also a fine for breach of the peace.

Frithman /fríðmán/. A member of a company or fraternity.

Frithsocne /fríðsówkán/. Surety of defense. Jurisdiction of the peace. The franchise of preserving the peace. Also spelled "frithsoken."

Frithsploit /fríðsploit/. A spot or plot of land, encircling some stone, tree, or well, considered sacred, and therefore affording sanctuary to criminals.

Frithstool /fríðstúwl/. The stool of peace. A stool or chair placed in a church or cathedral, and which was the symbol and place of sanctuary to those who fled to it

Frivorous. Of little weight or importance. A pleading is "frivorous" when it is clearly insufficient on its face, and does not controvert the material points of the opposite pleading, and is presumably interposed for mere purposes of delay or to embarrass the opponent. A claim or defense is frivorous if a proponent can present no rational argument based upon the evidence or law in support of that claim or defense. Liebowitz v. Aimexco Inc., Colo.App., 701 P.2d 140, 142. Frivulous pleadings may be amended to proper form, or ordered stricken, under federal and state Rules of Civil Procedure.

Frivulous action. Groundless lawsuit with little prospect of success; often brought to embarrass or annoy the defendant. See Failure to state cause of action.

Frivulous appeal. One in which no justiciable question has been presented and appeal is readily recognizable as devoid of merit in that there is little prospect that it can ever succeed. Brooks v. General Motors Assembly Division, Mo.App., 527 S.W.2d 50, 53. In federal practice, if a court of appeals determines that an appeal is "frivulous," it may award damages and single or double costs to the appellee. Fed.R.App.P. 38.

From. As used as a function word, implies a starting point, whether it be of time, place, or condition; and meaning having a starting point of motion, noting the point of departure, origin, withdrawal, etc., as he traveled "from" New York to Chicago. Silva v. MacAuley, 135 Cal.App. 249, 26 P.2d 887. One meaning of "from" is "out of". Word "from" or "after" an event or day does not have an absolute and invariable meaning, but each should receive an inclusion or exclusion construction according to intention with which such word is used. Acme Life Ins. Co. v. White, Tex.Civ.App., 99 S.W.2d 1059, 1060. Words "from" and "to," used in contract, may be given meaning to which reason and sense entitles them, under circumstances of case. Woodruff v. Adams, 134 Cal.App. 490, 25 P.2d 529.

From one place to another. From premises owned by one person to premises owned by another person in some legal subdivision or from one legal subdivision to another.

From person. Includes taking from presence of person assaulted as well as taking of property in actual contact with person of one robbed.

From, through, or under. The term refers to origin or devolution of property, and unless some title to or interest therein has been derived by assignment or otherwise from party adverse to decedent's estate, statute barring testimony is inapplicable.

From time to time. Occasionally, at intervals, now and then. See From.

Front. Forepart, as opposed to the back or rear. Any side or face of a building is a front, although the word is more commonly used to denote the entrance side. In re McInerney, 47 Wyo. 258, 34 P.2d 35, 43. As applied to a bare lot, it is that side of lot towards which, in ordinary circumstances, house, when built, will most likely face, and very general usage of building houses with their main entrance toward shorter street line results in common understanding that this is side intended when front of lot is referred to.

Frontage. Linear distance of property along street, highway, river, or lake. Extent of front along road or street. Tzeses v. Barbahenn, 125 N.J.L. 643, 17 A.2d 539, 540. The line of property on a public street. Jagendorf v. City of Memphis, Tenn., 520 S.W.2d 333, 335. Space available for erection of buildings, and does not include cross streets or space occupied by sidewalk or any ornamental spaces in plat between sidewalks and curb. The expense of local improvements made by municipal corporations (such as paving, curbing, and sewer ing) is generally assessed on abutting property owners in proportion to the "frontage" of their lots on the street or highway, and an assessment so levied being called a "frontage assessment."

Front foot. Measurement used in assessing and apportioning cost of public improvements; e.g. curbs, sewers, sidewalks, streets. As respects assessment, synonymous with "abutting foot." See also Frontage.

Front-foot rule. One by which cost of improvement is to be apportioned among several properties in proportion to their frontage on improvement and without regard to benefits conferred.

Frontier. In international law, that portion of the territory of any country which lies close along the border line of another country, and so "fronts" or faces it. Border between two countries. The term means something more than the boundary line itself, and includes a tract or strip of country, of indefinite extent, contiguous to the line.

Fronting and abutting. Very often, "fronting" signifies abutting, adjoining, or bordering on, depending largely on the context. Rombauer v. Compton Heights Christian Church, 328 Mo. 1, 40 S.W.2d 545, 551. As used in statutes relating to assessment for improvements, property between which and the improvement there is no intervening land.

Front wages. Type of prospective compensation paid to a victim of job discrimination without harm to incumbent employees until the victim achieves the position that he would have attained but for the illegal and discriminatory act. See also Back pay award.

Frozen account. An account in which no activity is permitted until a court order is lifted.

Frozen assets. Those assets of a business which cannot be readily sold without injuring the capital structure of the business in contrast to liquid assets which are readily convertible into cash.

Frozen deposits. Bank deposits that cannot be withdrawn because, for example, the financial institution is bankrupt or insolvent. In general, taxpayers are not required to report interest on frozen deposits.

Fructarius /frɔktuweriyos/. Lat. In the civil law, one who had the usufruct of a thing; i.e., the use of the fruits, profits, or increase, as of land or animals. Bracton applies it to a lessee, fermoer, or farmer of land, or one who held lands ad firmam, for a farm or term.

Fructus /frɔktas/. Lat. In the civil law, fruit, fruits; produce, profit or increase; the organic productions of a thing. The right to the fruits of a thing belonging to another. The compensation which a man receives from another for the use or enjoyment of a thing, such as interest or rent.

Fructus augment hæreditatem /frɔktas ɔʝant hærɔdætætem/. The yearly increase goes to enhance the inheritance.

Fructus civiles /frɔktas sivaliyoz/. All revenues and recompenses which, though not fruits, properly speaking, are recognized as such by the law. The term includes such things as the rents and income of real property, interest on money loaned, and annuities.

Fructus fundi /frɔktas fɔnday/. The fruits (produce or yield) of land.

Fructus industriales /frɔktas andəstriyeliyoz/. Industrial fruits, or fruits of industry. Those fruits of a thing, as of land, which are produced by the labor and industry of the occupant, as crops of grain; as distinguished from such as are produced solely by the powers of nature. Emblements are so called in the common law. Annual crops obtained by yearly labor and cultivation. Term includes those plants which are sown annually and grown primarily by manual labor such as wheat, corn and vegetables. Key v. Loder, D.C.Mun.App., 182 A.2d 60, 61.

Fructus legis /frɔktas liyjas/. The fruit of the law, i.e. execution.

Fructus naturales /frɔktas nətyərəliliyoz/. Those products which are produced by the powers of nature alone; as wool, metals, milk, the young of animals. Term includes any plant which has perennial roots, such as trees, shrubs and grasses. Key v. Loder, D.C.Mun.App., 182 A.2d 60, 61.

Fructus pecudum /frɔktas pəkiyədəm/. The produce or increase of flocks or herds.

Fructus pendentes /frɔktas pendəntiyz/. Hanging fruits; those not severed. The fruits united with the thing which produces them. These form a part of the principal thing.

Fructus pendentes pars fundi videntur /frɔktas pendəntiyz pərz fɔnday vədentər/. Hanging fruits make part of the land.

Fructus perceptos ville non esse constat /frɔktas pərsəptows vɪlɪə nən əsə kənstət/. Gathered fruits do not make a part of the farm.

Fructus rei alienae /frɔktas riəi æliyiəni/. The fruits of another's property; fruits taken from another's estate.

Fructus separati /frɔktas səpərətiyətə/. Separate fruits; the fruits of a thing when they are separated from it.

Fructus stantes /frɔktas stəntiyz/. Standing fruits; those not yet severed from the stalk or stem.

Fruges /frujiyz/. In the civil law, anything produced from vines, underwood, chalk-pits, stone-alleys.

Grains and leguminous vegetables. In a more restricted sense, any esculent growing in pods.

Fruit. The produce of a tree or plant which contains the seed or is used for food. The edible reproductive body of a seed plant. The effect or consequence of an act or operation.

Civil fruits. In the civil law (fructus civiles) are such things as the rents and income of real property, the interest on money loaned, and annuities. Rents and revenues of an immovable.

Fruit fallen. In old English law, the produce of any possession detached therefrom, and capable of being enjoyed by itself. Thus, a next presentation, when a vacancy has occurred, is a fruit fallen from the advowson.

Natural fruits. In the civil law, the produce of the soil, or of fruit-trees, bushes, vines, etc., which are edible or otherwise useful or serve for the reproduction of their species. The term is used in contradistinction to "artificial fruits," i.e., such as by metaphor or analogy are likened to the fruits of the earth. Of the latter, interest on money is an example.

Fruit and the tree doctrine. The courts have held that an individual who earns income from his property or services cannot assign that income to another to avoid taxation. For example, a father cannot assign his earnings from commissions to his son and escape income tax on such amount.

Fruit of poisonous tree doctrine. Evidence which is spawned by or directly derived from an illegal search or illegal interrogation is generally inadmissible against the defendant because of its original taint, though knowledge of facts gained independently of the original and tainted search is admissible. Wong Sun v. U.S., 371 U.S. 471, 83 S.Ct. 407, 9 L.Ed.2d 441. This doctrine is to the effect that an unlawful search taints not only evidence obtained at the search, but facts discovered by process initiated by the unlawful search. This doctrine is generally applied to cases involving searches in violation of the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution right against unlawful searches and seizures, but it can be applied to searches in violation of a statutory right. Duncan v. State, 278 Ala. 145, 176 So.2d 840, 865. See Exclusionary rule.

Fruits of crime. In the law of evidence, material objects acquired by means and in consequence of the commission of crime, and sometimes constituting the subject-matter of the crime. See also Fruit of poisonous tree doctrine.

Fruventa que sata sunt solo cedere intelliguntur. Grain which is sown is understood to form a part of the soil.

Fruamentum. In the civil law, grain. That which grows in an ear.

Frumgyl. Sax. The first payment made to the kindred of a slain person in recompense for his murder.

Frumstoll. Sax. In Saxon law, a chief seat, or mansion house.

Frusca terra. In old records, uncultivated and desert ground.

Frusura. A breaking; plowing.
cused under this rule even though there is no impediment to actual performance. Hees v. Dumouchel Paper Co., 154 Conn. 343, 225 A.2d 797, 801.

Frustrum terrae /fréstram téhríy/. A piece or parcel of land lying by itself.

Frymith /frámilt/. In old English law, the affording harbor and entertainment to any one.

Frythe. Sax. In old English law, a plain between woods. An arm of the sea, or a strait between two lands.

F.T.C. Federal Trade Commission.

Fuage, feuage, or feugue /fyuyj/. Hearth money. A tax laid upon each fireplace or hearth. An imposition of a shilling for every hearth, levied by Edward III in the dukedom of Aquitaine. 1 Bl.Comm. 324.

Fuer /fyuyar/. In old English law, flight. It was of two kinds: (1) Fuer in fact, or in facto, where a person did apparently and corporally flee; (2) fuen in ley, or in lege, when, being called in the county court, he did not appear, which legal interpretation makes flight.

Fuero /fwerow/. In Spanish law, a law; a code.

A general usage or custom of a province, having the force of law. Ir contra fuero, to violate a received custom.

A grant of privileges and immunities. Conceder fuesros, to grant exemptions.

A charter granted to a city or town. Also designated as "cartas pueblas."

An act of donation made to an individual, a church, or convent, on certain conditions.

A declaration of a magistrate, in relation to taxation, fines, etc.

A charter granted by the sovereign, or those having authority from him, establishing the franchises of towns, cities, etc.

A place where justice is administered. A peculiar forum, before which a party is amenable.

The jurisdiction of a tribunal, which is entitled to take cognizance of a cause; as fuero ecclesiastico, fuero militar.

Fuero de castilla /fwerow ðè kástylya/. The body of laws and customs which formerly governed the Castilians.

Fuero de correos y caminos /fwerow ðè kórayyows iy kámlynows/. A special tribunal taking cognizance of all matters relating to the post office and roads.

Fuero de guerra /fwerow ðè gérra/. A special tribunal taking cognizance of all matters in relation to persons serving in the army.

Fuero de marina /fwerow ðè máriýna/. A special tribunal taking cognizance of all matters relating to the navy and to the persons employed therein.

Fuero municipal /fwerow mwunlysiypal/. The body of laws granted to a city or town for its government and the administration of justice.

Fuero viejo /fwerów v(i)yéýhow/. The title of a compilation of Spanish law, published about A.D. 992.

Fugacia /fyegéysh(i)y/. A chase.

Fugam fecit /fyúwgm fyýsat/. Lat. He has made flight; he fled. A clause inserted in an inquisition, in old English law, meaning that a person indicted for treason or felony had fled. The effect of this was to make the party forfeit his goods absolutely, and the profits of his lands until he had been pardoned or acquitted.

Fugator /fyegéytoar/. In old English law, a privilege to hunt.

A driver. Fugatores carrucarum, drivers of wagons.

Fugit and to the persons employed therein.

Fugitivus /fyuyjástéyshən/. When a criminal does not obey the citation to answer, the court pronounces sentence of fugitation against him, which induces a forfeiture of goods and chattels to the crown.

Fugitive. One who flees; used in criminal law with the implication of a flight, evasion, or escape from arrest, prosecution, or imprisonment. See Extradition; Fugitive from justice; Rendition.

Fugitive Felon Act. A federal statute which makes it a felony to flee across the state line for the purpose of avoiding prosecution or confinement for a state felony or attempted felony, or to avoid giving testimony in a state felony case. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1073. See Extradition.

Fugitive from justice. A person who, having committed a crime, flees from jurisdiction of court where crime was committed or departs from his usual place of abode and conceals himself within the district. A person who, having committed or been charged with crime in one state, has left its jurisdiction and is found within territory of another state when it is sought to subject him to criminal process of former state. King v. Noe, 244 S.C. 344, 137 S.E.2d 102, 103. See 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 1073, 1074. See also Extradition; Harbor; Rendition.

Fugitive's goods. Under the old English law, where a man fled for felony, and escaped, his own goods were not forfeited as bona fugitivorum until it was found by proceedings of record (e.g. before the coroner in the case of death) that he fled for the felony.

Fugitive slave law. Acts of Congress passed in 1793 and 1850 (prior to abolition of slavery) providing for the surrender and deportation of slaves who escaped from their masters and fled into the territory of another state, generally a "free" state.

Fugitivus /fyúwjástéyvas/. In the civil law, a fugitive; a runaway slave.

Fugue /fyuyg/. Period of memory loss during which subject functions almost as if normal, but concerning which he has no subsequent recollection. See Automatism.

Full. Abundantly provided, sufficient in quantity or degree, complete, entire, and detailed. Having no open space. Ample, perfect, mature, not wanting in any essential quality.

Full age. The age of legal majority; legal age.

Full blood. Relations of the "full blood," "whole blood," or "entire blood" are those derived not only from the same ancestor, but from the same couple of ancestors.

Full cash value. For property tax purposes, that which is synonymous with market value; that estimate of value which is derived annually by the use of standard appraisal methods and techniques. Caldwell v. Department of Revenue, App., 122 Ariz. 45, 596 P.2d 45, 47. See Fair market value.

Full copy. In equity practice, a complete and unabbreviated transcript of a bill or other pleading, with all indorsements, and including a copy of all exhibits.

Full court. In practice, a court en banc. A court duly organized with all the judges present. Court containing permissible complement of judges, as distinguished from a lesser quorum or panel. Textile Mills Securities Corporation v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 314 U.S. 326, 62 S.Ct. 272, 277, 86 L.Ed. 249. See En banc.

Full cousin. Son or daughter of one's uncle or aunt.

Full covenants. See Covenant.

Full coverage. Type of insurance protection which covers all losses with no deductible amount and which covers to the full amount.

Full crew laws. Laws which regulate the number of railroad employees who are required to man trains.

Full defense. In common law pleading, the formula of defense in a plea, stated at length and without abbreviation, thus: "And the said C.D., by E.F., his attorney, comes and defends the force (or wrong) and injury when and where it shall behove him, and the damages, and whatsoever else he ought to defend, and says," etc. Such technical pleading is no longer required under federal or state Rules of Civil Procedure.

Full disclosure. Term used in variety of legal contexts, e.g. a fiduciary who participates in a transaction for his own benefit is required to fully reveal the details of such. In consumer law, the obligation to reveal all details of a transaction to the consumer; e.g. federal and state Truth-in-Lending Acts. Also, federal election laws require candidates to make full disclosure of the extent and source of their campaign contributions. See also Compulsory disclosure; Disclosure.

Full faith and credit clause. The clause of the U.S. Constitution (Art. IV, Sec. 1) which provides that the various states must recognize legislative acts, public records, and judicial decisions of the other states within the United States. There are exceptions to this, a major one being that a state need not recognize a divorce decree of a state where neither spouse was a legal resident. Doctrine means that a state must accord the judgment of a court of another state the same credit that it is entitled to in the courts of that state. Morphet v. Morphet, 263 Or. 311, 502 P.2d 255, 260. A judgment or record shall have the same faith, credit, conclusive effect, and obligatory force in other states as it has by law or usage in the state from whence taken. Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co. of Philadelphia v. Gold Issue Min. & Mill. Co., 243 U.S. 93, 37 S.Ct. 344, 61 L.Ed. 610. See also Comity; Fauntleroy doctrine.

Full hearing. Embraces not only the right to present evidence, but also a reasonable opportunity to know the claims of the opposing party, and to meet them. Morgan v. U.S., 304 U.S. 1, 58 S.Ct. 773, 777, 773, 52 L.Ed. 1129. One in which ample opportunity is afforded to all parties to make, by evidence and argument, a showing fairly adequate to establish the propriety or impropriety from the standpoint of justice and law of the step asked to be taken. Akron, C. & Y. Ry. Co. v. U.S., 261 U.S. 184, 43 S.Ct. 270, 67 L.Ed. 605.

Full indorsement. See Indorsement.

Full jurisdiction. Complete jurisdiction over a given subject-matter or class of actions without any exceptions or reservations. See Jurisdiction.

Full life. Life in fact and in law. See In full life.

Full name. The first, middle and surname of a person, or the first name, middle initial and surname. May also refer to name under which a person is known in the community.

Full-paid stock. Stock on which no further payments can be demanded by the issuing company.

Full powers. A document issued by the government of a nation empowering its diplomatic agent to conduct special business with a foreign government.

Full proof. In the civil law, proof by two witnesses, or a public instrument. Evidence which satisfies the minds of the jury of the truth of the fact in dispute, to the entire exclusion of every reasonable doubt. See Prima facie; Proof.

Full right. The union of a good title with actual possession.

Full settlement. Implies an adjustment of all pending matters, the mutual release of all prior obligations existing between the parties. Hickox v. Hickox, Tex.Civ. App., 151 S.W.2d 913, 918.

Full value. See Fair market value.

Fully administered. The English equivalent of the Latin phrase "plene administravit"; being a plea by an executor or administrator that he has completely and legally disposed of all the assets of the estate, and has nothing left out of which a new claim could be satisfied.
Fumage /fjúmæ/ In old English law, the same as fuage, or smoke farthings. 1 Bl.Comm. 324. See Fuage.

Function. Derived from Latin “functus,” the past participle of the verb “fungor” which means to perform, execute, administer. The nature and proper action of anything; activity appropriate to any business or profession. Rosenblum v. Anglim, D.C.Cal., 43 F.Supp. 889, 892. Office; duty; fulfillment of a definite end or set of ends by the correct adjustment of means. The occupation of an office. By the performance of its duties, the officer is said to fill his function. The proper activities or duties of municipality. Bean v. City of Knoxville, 180 Tenn. 448, 175 S.W.2d 954, 955.

Functional depreciation. Such results from necessary replacement of equipment before it is worn out, by reason of invention and improved machinery, equipment, etc. which render more efficient and satisfactory service. See Functional obsolescence.

Functional discount. Such as occurs where a supplier charges different prices to purchasers at different functional levels of distribution and where the higher price is charged to the purchaser at the level farther from the supplier in the chain of distribution, i.e., the retailer is charged more than the wholesaler. Such is permissible under the Robinson-Patman Act. FLM Collision Parts, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., D.C.N.Y., 406 F.Supp. 224, 234.

Functional disease. One which prevents, obstructs, or interferes with the due performance of its special function by any organ of the body, without anatomical defect or abnormality in the organ itself. Distinguished from “organic” disease, which is due to some injury to, or lesion or malformation in, the organ in question.

Functionality. Under trademark law, doctrine allowing protection to a shape, configuration or color scheme only if it is non-functional. Functionality exists if the design or color is so superior to available alternatives that competition would be hindered by giving the first user exclusive rights.

Functional obsolescence. The need for replacement because a structure or equipment has become inefficient or out-moded because of improvements developed since its original construction or production. The loss of value due to inherent deficiencies within the property. Fisher-New Center Co. v. Michigan State Tax Commision, 380 Mich. 340, 157 N.W.2d 271, 279.

With respect to valuation of property for taxation, is loss of value brought about by the failure or inability to deliver full service, and includes any loss of value by reason of shortcomings or undesirable features contained within the property itself and is a loss of utility and failure to function due to inadequacies of design and deficiencies in the property. Piazza v. Town Assessor of Town of Porter, 16 A.D.2d 865, 226 N.Y.S.2d 397, 398.

Functionary. A public officer or employee. An officer of a private corporation is also sometimes so called.

Funcus officio /fʌkts ɒfɪʃɪəʊ/. Lat. A task performed. Board of School Trustees of Washington City Administrative Unit v. Benner, 222 N.C. 566, 24 S.E.2d 259, 263. Having fulfilled the function, discharged the office, or accomplished the purpose, and therefore of no further force or authority. Applied to an officer whose term has expired and who has consequently no further official authority; and also to an instrument, power, agency, etc., which has fulfilled the purpose of its creation, and is therefore of no further virtue or effect. Holmes v. Birmingham Transit Co., 270 Ala. 215, 116 So.2d 912, 919.

Fund or funds. To capitalize with a view to the production of interest. Also, to put into the form of bonds, stocks, or other securities, bearing regular interest, and to provide or appropriate a fund or permanent revenue for the payment thereof. An asset or group of assets set aside for a specific purpose. To fund a debt is to pledge a specific fund to keep down the interest and reduce the principal.

A generic term and all-embracing as compared with term “money,” etc., which is specific. A sum of money or other liquid assets set apart for a specific purpose, or available for the payment of general debts, claims, or expenses.

In the plural, this word has a variety of slightly different meanings, as follows: moneys and much more, such as notes, bills, checks, drafts, stocks and bonds, and in broader meaning may include property of every kind. State v. Finney, 141 Kan. 12, 40 P.2d 41, 421. Money in hand, assets, cash, money available for the payment of a debt, legacy, etc. Corporate stocks or government securities; in this sense usually spoken of as the “funds.” Assets, securities, bonds, or revenue of a state or government appropriated for the discharge of its debts. Generally, working capital; sometimes used to refer to cash or to cash and marketable securities.

See also Contingent fund; Current funds; Funded; Funding; General fund; Mutual fund; Revolving fund.

Funded debt. As applied to states or municipal corporations, a funded debt is one for the payment of which (interest and principal) some fund is appropriated, either specifically, or by provision made for future taxation and the quasi pledging in advance of the public revenue. As applied to the financial management of corporations (and sometimes of estates in course of administration or properties under receivership) funding means the borrowing of a sufficient sum of money to discharge a variety of floating or unsecured debts, or debts evidenced by notes or secured by bonds but maturing within a short time, and creating a new debt in lieu thereof, secured by a general mortgage, a series of bonds, or an issue of stock, generally maturing at a more remote period, and often at a lower rate of interest. The new debt thus substituted for the pre-existing debts is called the “funded debt.” This term is very seldom applied to the debts of a private individual; but when so used it must be understood as referring to a debt embodied in securities of a permanent character and to the payment of which certain property has been applied or pledged. See also Funded.
Fund in court. As used in the rule providing for allowance of costs out of a "fund in court," this is a term of art and is applied where the plaintiffs' actions have created, preserved or increased property to the benefit of a class of which the plaintiff is not a member. Sarner v. Sarner, 38 N.J. 463, 185 A.2d 851, 853.

Funding system. The practice of borrowing money to defray the expenses of government, and creating a "sinking fund," designed to keep down interest, and to effect the gradual reduction of the principal debt. See Sinking fund, below.

General fund. This phrase, in many states, is a collective designation of all the assets of the state which furnish the means for the support of government and for defraying the discretionary appropriations of the legislature. Such are distinguished from assets of a special character, such as the school fund. See also General fund.

General revenue fund. As used in connection with municipal finances, term refers to the fund out of which the usual, ordinary, running, and incidental expenses of a municipality are paid.

No funds. This term denotes a lack of assets or money for a specific use. It is the return made by a bank to a check drawn upon it by a person who has no deposit to his credit there; also by an executor, trustee, etc., who has no assets for the specific purpose.

Public funds. An untechnical name for (1) the revenue or money of a government, state, or municipal corporation; (2) the bonds, stocks, or other securities of a national or state government. Money, warrants, or bonds, or other paper having a money value, and belonging to the state, or to any county, city, incorporated town or school district. The term applies to funds of every political subdivision of state wherein taxes are levied for public purposes. See also General fund.

Sinking fund. The aggregate of sums of money (as those arising from particular taxes or sources of revenue) set apart and invested, usually at fixed intervals, for the extinguishment of the debt of a government or corporation, by the accumulation of interest. A fund arising from particular taxes, imposts, or duties, which is appropriated towards the payment of the interest due on a public loan and for the gradual payment of the principal. A fund created for extinguishing or paying a funded debt.

Sinking fund tax. A tax raised to be applied to the payment of interest on, and principal of public loan.

Fundamental error. See Error; Plain error rule.

Fundamental fairness doctrine. Due process of law as applied to judicial procedure. See Due process of law.

Fundamental law. The law which determines the constitution of government in a nation or state, and prescribes and regulates the manner of its exercise. The organic law of a nation or state; its constitution.

Fundamental rights. Those rights which have their source, and are explicitly or implicitly guaranteed, in the federal Constitution, Price v. Cohen, C.A.Pa., 715 F.2d 87, 93, and state constitutions, Sidle v. Majors, 264 Ind. 206, 341 N.E.2d 763. See e.g., Bill of rights.

Challenged legislation that significantly burdens a "fundamental right" (examples include First Amendment rights, (privacy, and the right to travel interstate)) will be reviewed under a stricter standard of review. A law will be held violative of the due process clause if it is not closely tailored to promote a compelling or overriding interest of government. A similar principle applies under Equal Protection law.

Fundamans /fándéymas/. We found. One of the words by which a corporation may be created in England. 1 Bl.Comm. 473.

Fundatio /fándésysh(y)ow/. Lat. A founding or foundation. Particularly applied to the creation and endowment of corporations. As applied to eleemosynary corporations such as colleges and hospitals, it is said that "fundatio incipiens" is the incorporation or grant of corporate powers, while "fundatio perfectiens" is the endowment or grant or gift of funds or revenues. Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 518, 4 L.Ed. 629. See also Foundation.

Fundator /fándéytør/. A founder (q.v.).

Funded. Said of a pension plan or other obligation when funds have been set aside for meeting the obligation when it becomes due. See also Fund (Funded debt).

Funded pension plan. One containing sufficient funds as contributed by a corporation to meet current and future retirement benefit obligations. The Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) regulates funding of pension plans.

Funding. Process of financing capital expenditures by issuing long term debt obligations or by converting short term obligations into long term obligations to finance current expenses. Allocation of money to investments or other type of reserve fund to meet future expenses for pension, welfare, or other benefits. ERISA specifies the requirements for funding of qualified retirement plans. See also Fund; Funded.

Future interests. Interests in real or personal property, a gift or trust, or other things in which the privilege of possession or of enjoyment is in the future and not present. Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Wells, C.C.A.6, 132 F.2d 405, 407. An interest that will come into being at some future point in time. It is distinguished from a present interest which is already in existence. Assume, for example, that D transfers securities to a newly created trust. Under the terms of the trust instrument, income from the securities is to be paid each year to W for her life, with the securities passing to S upon W's death. W has a present interest in the trust since she is currently entitled to receive the income from the securities. S has a future interest since she must wait for W's death to benefit from the trust.

Future performance. In contracts, execution which is due in the future; deferred performance.

Futures contract. A present right to receive at a future date a specific quantity of a given commodity for a fixed price. Clayton Brokerage Co. of St. Louis, Inc. v. Mouer, Tex.Civ.App., 520 S.W.2d 802, 804. Commodity futures contracts are commitments to buy or sell commodities at a specified time and place in the future. The price is established when the contract is made in open auction on a futures exchange. Only a small percentage of futures trading actually leads to delivery of a commodity, for a contract may change hands or be liquidated before the delivery date. Participants fall into two categories: commercial hedgers who use futures to minimize price risks inherent in their marketing operations and speculators who, employing venture capital, seek profits through price changes. Both purchase contracts with only a small margin payment. Futures prices are an indication of the direction of prices based on current market conditions. Such exchanges and transactions are regulated by the federal Commodity Futures Trading Commission. See also Option.

Currency futures contract. Futures contracts that allow one to purchase or sell a specified currency at a specified price on a specified settlement date.

General improvement. One which exists where primary improvement not specifically earmarked for other purposes. The primary operating fund of a governmental unit not designated for any specific purpose. See also Fund.

General jurisdiction. Such as extends to all controversies that may be brought before a court within the legal bounds of rights and remedies; as opposed to special or limited jurisdiction, which covers only a particular class of cases, or cases where the amount in controversy is below a prescribed sum, or which is subject to specific exceptions. The terms "general" and "special," applied to jurisdiction, indicate the difference between a legal authority extending to the whole of a particular subject and one limited to a part; and, when applied to the terms of court, the occasion upon which these powers can be respectively exercised. A court of "general jurisdiction" is one which takes cognizance of all cases, civil or criminal, of a particular nature. Bomar v. State ex rel. Stewart, 201 Tenn. 480, 300 S.W.2d 885, 887. See also Jurisdiction.

General Land Office. Formerly an office of the United States government, being a division of the Department of the Interior, having charge of all executive action relating to the public lands, including their survey, sale or other disposition, and patenting; originally constituted by Act of Congress in 1812. The General Land Office and the U.S. Grazing Service were consolidated into the Bureau of Land Management under the Department of the Interior by 1946 Reorganization Plan No. 3, § 403. See Bureau of Land Management.

General law. A law that affects the community at large. A general law as contradistinguished from one that is special or local, is a law that embraces a class of subjects or places, and does not omit any subject or place naturally belonging to such class. A law, framed in general terms, restricted to no locality, and operating equally upon all of a group of objects, which, having regard to the purposes of the legislation, are distinguished by characteristics sufficiently marked and important to make them a class by themselves, is not a special or local law, but a general law. A law that relates to a subject of a general nature, or that affects all people of state, or all of a particular class. Albuquerque Metropolitan Arroyo Flood Control Authority v. Swinburne, 74 N.M. 487, 394 P.2d 998, 1000. Compare Private law; Special law.

General ledger. An accounting term used to describe the book or other instrument which summarizes an entity's financial accounts. The general ledger is the source from which the entity's trial balance and financial statements are prepared. The general ledger contains a separate account for each of the assets, liabilities, revenues and expenses of the entity.

General lien. A general lien is a right to detain a chattel, etc., until payment be made, not only of any debt due in respect of the particular chattel, but of any balance that may be due on general account in the same line of business.

Generally Accepted Accounting Principles (GAAP). The conventions, rules and procedures necessary to define accepted accounting practices at a particular time; includes both broad and specific guidelines. The source of such principles is the Financial Accounting Standards Board.

Generally Accepted Auditing Standards (GAAS). The standards, as opposed to particular procedures, promulgated by the AICPA which concern the auditor’s professional qualities and the judgment exercised by him in the performance of his examination and in his report.

General manager. One having general direction and control of corporation’s affairs, and who may do everything which corporation could do in transaction of its business. Continental Supply Co. v. Forrest E. Gilmore Co. of Texas, Tex.Civ.App., 55 S.W.2d 622. A manager for all general purposes of the corporation.

A tax, imposed solely or primarily for purpose of raising revenue and merely granting person taxed right to conduct business or profession.

General welfare. General term used to describe the government’s concern for the health, peace, morals, and safety of its citizens.

General welfare clause. The provision of the U.S. Constitution (Art. I, Sec. 8, Cl. 1) which declares that Congress may tax and pay debts in order to provide for the “general welfare of the United States.”

General words. Such words of a descriptive character as are used in conveyances in order to convey, not only the specific property described but also all kinds of easements, privileges, and appurtenances which may possibly belong to the property conveyed. Such words are in general unnecessary; but are properly used when there are any easements or privileges reputed to belong to the property not legally appurtenant to it.

Generatio /jenaréyush(ī)ow/. The issue or offspring of a mother-monastery.

Generation. May mean either a degree of removal in computing descents, or a single succession of living beings in natural descent. Average span of time between birth of parents and that of their offspring. Group of people born and living contemporaneously.

Generation-skipping transfer. Transfer of assets more than a single generation removed from the transferor (e.g., from grandfather to grandchild). See Generation-skipping transfer tax; Generation-skipping trust.

Generation-skipping transfer tax. The 1986 Tax Reform Act imposes a generation-skipping transfer tax on (1) transfers under trusts (or similar arrangements) having beneficiaries in more than one generation below that of the transferor, and (2) direct transfers to beneficiaries more than one generation below that of the transferor. The tax is imposed (with certain exemptions) on the occurrence of any one of three taxable events: a taxable termination, a taxable distribution (including distributions of income) and a direct skip, that is, an outright transfer to or for the benefit of a person at least two generations below that of the transferor. I.R.C. §§ 2601 et seq. See Generation-skipping trust.

Generation-skipping trust. A trust established to transfer assets more than a single generation removed from the transferor. See Deemed transferor; Generation-skipping transfer tax.

Generic. Relating to or characteristic of a whole group or class; general, as opposed to specific or special.

Generic mark or term. Within the purview of trademark law, this term means a lack of distinctiveness necessary for name or mark to be given federal trademark law protection. Hallmark Cards, Inc. v. Hallmark Dodge, Inc., W.D.Mo., 634 F.Supp. 990, 997. Generic marks are marks which include words which embrace entire class of products or services, not all of which necessarily emanate from same source. Team Central Inc. v. Xerox Corp., D.C.Minn., 606 F.Supp. 1408, 1413.

A "generic term" is one which is commonly used as name or description of a kind of goods and it is generally accepted that a generic term is incapable of achieving trade name protection. Discount Muffler Shop, Inc. v. Melineke Realty Corp., Inc., D.C.Ohio, 535 F.Supp. 439, 444.

Generic name. The "established name" of a drug; its chemical name, a common name, or an official name used in an official compendium. Abbott Laboratories v. Celebrezze, C.A.Del., 352 F.2d 286, 287. See also Name.

Generic drug laws. Laws which permit pharmacists to substitute generic drugs for brand name drugs under specified conditions. Most states have passed such laws. The purpose of these laws ostensibly is to make available to consumers less expensive generic drugs in lieu of more expensive brand-name drugs. Pharmaceutical Soc. of State of N.Y., Inc. v. Lefkowitz, D.C.N.Y., 454 F.Supp. 1175.

Generosa /jénarówṣa/. Gentlemewoman.

Gentleman. In its English origin, this term formerly referred to a man of noble or gentle birth; one belonging to the landed gentry; a man of independent means; all above the rank of Yeomen.

Gentlemen's agreement. Generally an unsigned and unenforceable agreement made between parties who expect its performance because of good faith.

Gentrification. A term used in land development to describe a trend whereby previously underdeveloped areas become revitalized as persons of relative affluence invest in homes and begin to upgrade the neighborhood economically. Business Ass'n of Univ. City v. Landrieu, C.A.Pa., 660 F.2d 867, 874 n. 8.

Genuine. As applied to notes, bonds, and other written instruments, this term means that they are truly what they purport to be, and that they are free of forgery or counterfeiting. U.C.C. § 1-201(18).

Genuine issue. Genuine issues which will preclude entry of summary judgment are issues which can be sustained by substantial evidence. Riss & Co. v. Association of Am. Railroads, D.C.D.C., 190 F.Supp. 10, 17. As used in rule that burden of proving absence of material fact so that no "genuine issue" is left for jury determination is on movant for summary judgment, means a real as opposed to a false or colorable issue. Byrd v. Leach, Fla.App., 226 So.2d 866, 868. A "genuine issue of fact" exists, precluding rendition of summary judgment, where there is the slightest doubt as to the facts, so long as the fact in doubt is a material one which has legal probative force as to a controlling issue. Peer v. MPA Milling Co., Mo.App., 578 S.W.2d 291, 292. See Fed.R. Civil P. 56(c).

Genus /jynas/. In the civil law, a general class or division, comprising several species. In toto jure generi per speciem derogatur, et illud potissimum habetur quod ad speciem directum est, throughout the law, the species takes from the genus, and that is most particularly regarded which refers to the species.
A person's lineage, or direct descendants.

In logic, it is the first of the universal ideas, and is when the idea is so common that it extends to other ideas which are also universal; e.g., incorporeal heredity is genus with respect to a rent, which is species.

Geodetic survey system. A system of nationwide survey marks (bench) at longitude and latitude points, created by the federal government. A scientific method of integrating all real estate within the continental United States into one unified system.

Gestio /jést(i)yow/. In the civil law, behavior or conduct. Management or transaction. Negotiorum gestio, the doing of another’s business; an interference in the affairs of another in his absence, from benevolence or friendship, and without authority.

Gestio pro hærede /jést(i)yow prów harydiy/. Behavior as heir. This expression was used in the Roman law, and adopted in the civil law and Scotch law, to denote conduct on the part of a person appointed heir to a deceased person, or otherwise entitled to succeed as heir, which indicates an intention to enter upon the inheritance, and to hold himself out as heir to creditors of the deceased; as by receiving the rents due to the deceased, or by taking possession of his title-deeds, etc. Such acts will render the heir liable to the debts of his ancestor.

Gestor /jéstör/. In the civil law, one who acts for another, or transacts another’s business.

Gestu et fama /jést(y)uw ét féyma/. An ancient and obsolete writ resorted to when a person’s good behavior was impeached.

Gestum /jèstam/. Lat. In Roman law, a deed or act; a thing done. Some writers affected to make a distinction between “gestum” and “factum.” But the best authorities pronounced this subtile and indefensible.

Gesture. Motion of the body calculated to express a thought or used for emphasis. An act used as a sign of feeling, such as a gesture of friendship.

Get. To receive; gain possession of; obtain; to prevail or have influence on.

Under Hebraic law, evidence of the granting of a divorce. A bill of divorce among the Jews which is drawn in the Aramaic language, uniformly worded and carefully written by a proper scribe, and after proper ceremonies and questionings by the rabbi, especially as to whether both parties agree to the divorce, the husband hands to the wife in the presence of ten witnesses.

Gewineda /gswináds/. In Saxon law, the ancient convention of the people to decide a cause.

Gewitnessa /gswitnássas/. In Saxon and old English law, the giving of evidence.

Gewrite /garëytliy/. In Saxon law, deeds or charters; writings.
Gibbon. A gallows; the post on which malefactors were hanged, or on which their bodies were exposed. It differed from a common gallows, in that it consisted of one perpendicular post, from the top of which proceeded one arm, except when it was a double gibbet, which was formed in the shape of the Roman capital T.

Gibbet law. Lynch law; in particular a custom anciently prevailing in the parish of Halifax, England, by which the free burghers held a summary trial of any one accused of petty larceny, and, if they found him guilty, ordered him to be decapitated.

Gideon v. Wainwright. Landmark Supreme Court decision which held that provision guaranteeing a criminal defendant the assistance of counsel under the Sixth Amendment, U.S. Const., is binding on the states in state proceedings through the due process provision of the Fourteenth Amendment. 372 U.S. 335, 83 S.Ct. 792, 9 L.Ed.2d 799. See also Counsel, right to; Effective assistance of counsel.

Gift. A voluntary transfer of property to another made gratuitously and without consideration. Bradley v. Bradley, Tex.Civ.App., 540 S.W.2d 504, 511. Essential requisites of "gift" are capacity of donor, intention of donor to make gift, completed delivery to or for donee, and acceptance of gift by donee.

In tax law, a payment is a gift if it is made without conditions, from detached and disinterested generosity, out of affection, respect, charity or like impulses, and not from the constraining force of any moral or legal duty or from the incentive of anticipated benefits of an economic nature.

An absolute gift, or gift inter vivos, as distinguished from a testamentary gift, or one made in contemplation of death, is one by which the donee becomes in the lifetime of the donor the absolute owner of the thing given, whereas a donatio mortis causa leaves the whole title in the donor, unless the event occurs (the death of the donor) which is to divest him.

The only important difference between a "gift" and a "voluntary trust" is that in the case of a gift the thing itself passes to the donee, while in the case of a trust the actual, beneficial, or equitable title passes to the cestui que trust, and the legal title is transferred to a third person, or retained by the person creating it. In re Alberts' Estate, 38 Cal.App.2d 42, 100 P.2d 538, 540.

In old English law, a conveyance of lands in tail; a conveyance of an estate tail in which the operative words are "I give," or "I have given." 2 Bl.Com. 316.

Gift in contemplation of death. See Gift causa mortis; Gifts within three years of death.

Gifts (or Transfers) to Minors Act. A Uniform Act adopted by most states providing for a means of transferring property (usually stocks and bonds) to a minor.
The designated custodian of the property has the legal right to act on behalf of the minor without the necessity of a guardianship. Generally, the custodian possesses the right to change investments (e.g., sell one type of stock and buy another), apply the income from the custodial property to the minor's support, and even terminate the custodianship. In this regard, however, the custodian is acting in a fiduciary capacity on behalf of the minor. The custodian could not, for example, appropriate the property for his or her own use because it belongs to the minor. During the period of the custodianship, the income from the property is taxed to the minor. The custodianship terminates when the minor reaches legal age. One of the primary reasons for making gifts to minors pursuant to the requirements of the Uniform Act had been to receive favorable tax treatment; however, the Tax Reform Act of 1986 reduced the tax benefits of such income shifting.

This uniform act has been replaced by and renamed the Uniform Transfers to Minors Act. See Transfers to Minors Act.

Gifts within three years of death. Some taxable gifts automatically are included in the gross estate of the donor if death occurs within three years of the gift. I.R.C. § 2035.

Gift tax. A tax imposed on the transfer of property by gift. Such tax is imposed upon the donor of a gift and is based on the fair market value of the property on the date of the gift. See also Gift splitting election; Tax.

Gift to a class. A gift of aggregate sum to body of persons uncertain in number at time of gift, to be ascertained at future time, who are all to take in equal shares, or some other definite proportion; share of each being dependent for its amount upon ultimate number taking. See also Class gift.

Gild. In Saxon law, a tax or tribute.

A fine, mulct, or amerciament; a satisfaction or compensation for an injury.

In old English law, a fraternity, society, or company of persons combined together, under certain regulations, and with the king's license, and so called because its expenses were defrayed by the contributions (geld, gild) of its members. In other words, a corporation; called, in Latin, "societas," "collegium," "fratelia," "fraterntas," "sodalitium," "adunatio;" and, in foreign law, "gildonia." There were various kinds of these gilds, as merchant or commercial gilds, religious gilds, and others. See Gilda mercatoria; Guild.

A friborg, or decennary; called, by the Saxons, "gildscipes," and its members, "gildones" and "congildones."

Gildable /gildabal/. In old English law, taxable, tributary, or contributory; liable to pay tax or tribute.

Gilda mercatoria /gilda märkstörjys/. In Old English law, a gild merchant, or merchant gild; a gild, corporation, or company of merchants.

Gild-hall. See Guildhall.

Gildo /gildow/. In Saxon law, members of a gild or decennary. Often spelled "congildon."

Gild-rent. In old English law, certain payments made to the crown from any gild or fraternity.

Gill. A measure of capacity, equal to one-fourth of a pint.

Gilion /géylar/. L. Fr. A cheat or deceiver. Applied in Britton to those who sold false or spurious things for good, as pewter for silver or laten for gold.

Gilt edge. As applied to commercial paper, a coloquialism, meaning of the best quality or highest price, first class; but not implying that a note which is not gilt edge is not collectible, or that the maker is irresponsible. Also, a bond or other security issue with the highest rating (i.e. highest investment quality).

Ginnie Mae. Government National Mortgage Association; and the securities guaranteed by that agency.

Girante /jirántey/. An Italian word, which signifies the drawer of a bill. It is derived from "girare," to draw.

Girth. In Saxon and old English law, a measure of length, equal to one yard, derived from the girth or circumference of a man’s body.

Gisement /jéyzmont/. L. Fr. Agistment; cattle taken in to graze at a certain price; also the money received for grazing cattle.

Giser /jéyzor/. L. Fr. To lie. Gist en le bouche, it lies in the mouth. Le action bien gist, the action well lies. Gisant, lying.

Gisetaker /jéyztékər/. An agister; a person who takes cattle to graze.

Gisle /jéyzəl/. In Saxon law, a pledge. Fredgisle, a pledge of peace. Gislebert, an illustrious pledge.

Gist /jist/. In common law pleading, the essential ground or object of the action in point of law, without which there would be no cause of action. The cause for which an action will lie or the ground or foundation of a suit without which it would not be maintainable; the essential ground or object of the suit without which there is no cause of action. This term is no longer used in those states that have adopted Rules of Civil Procedure, nor in the federal courts.

Give. To transfer ownership or possession without compensation. To bestow upon another gratuitously or without consideration. See also Gift.

Give and bequeath. These words, in a will, import a benefit in point of right, to take effect upon the decease of the testator and proof of the will, unless it is made in terms to depend upon some contingency or condition precedent.

Give bail. To furnish or post bail or security for one's appearance. See Bail.

Give color. To admit an apparent or colorable right in the opposite party. In common law pleading, a plea of confession and avoidance had to give color to the affirmative averments of the complaint, or it would be fatally defective. The "giving color" was simply the absence of any denials, and the express or silent admission that the declaration, as far as it went, told the truth. See Color.

Give judgment. To render, pronounce, or declare the judgment of the court in an action at law; not spoken of a judgment obtained by confession. See Rendition of judgment.

Give notice. To communicate to another, in any proper or permissible legal manner, information or warning of an existing fact or state of facts or (more usually) of some intended future action; e.g.: tenant giving landlord thirty day notice of termination of tenancy; employee giving employer two weeks notice of intention to quit; to give notice of appeal to appellee. See also Notice.

Giver. A donor; person who makes a gift.

Give time. Extending the period at which, by the con¬ tract between them, the principal debtor was originally liable to pay the creditor. Buffalo Forge Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 142 Misc. 647, 256 N.Y.S.
329, 334. See Forbearance.

Give way. In the rules of navigation, one vessel is said to "give way" to another when she deviates from her course in such a manner and to such an extent as to allow the other to pass without altering her course.

Giving in payment. In Louisiana law, a phrase (trans¬ slating the Fr. "dation en paiement") which signifies the delivery and acceptance of real or personal property in satisfaction of a debt, instead of a payment in money.
Civil Code La. art. 2655 et seq.

Gladius/gladiyad/. Lat. A sword. An ancient emblem of defense. Hence the ancient earls or comites (the king's attendants, advisers, and associates in his govern¬ ment) were made by being girt with swords (gladio succincti).

The emblem of the executory power of the law in punishing crimes. 4 Bl.Comm. 177.

In old Latin authors, and in the Norman laws, this word was used to signify supreme jurisdiction (jus gla¬ dii).

Glaive /glyv/. A sword, lance, or horseman's staff.
One of the weapons allowed in a trial by combat.

Glass-Steagall Act. Also known as the Banking Act of 1933, restricts the securities-related business of com¬ cercial banks in order to protect depositors. Such Act, which prohibits commercial banks from owning broker¬ age firms or engaging in brokerage business, applies both to national banks and to state-chartered banks that are members of the Federal Reserve System. 12 U.S.
C.A. § 378.

Gleaning. The gathering of grain after reapers, or of grain left ungathered by reapers. Held not to be a right at common law.

Glebe /glyb/. In Ecclesiastical law, the land possessed as part of the endowment or revenue of a church or ecclesiastical benefice.

In Roman law, a clod; turf; soil. Hence, the soil of an inheritance; an agrarian estate. Servi addicti glebe were serfs attached to and passing with the estate.

Glescywa. In Saxon law, a fraternity.

Glos /glos/. Lat. In the civil law, a husband's sister.

Gloss. An interpretation, consisting of one or more words, interlinear or marginal; an annotation, explaina¬ tion, or comment on any passage in the text of a work, for purposes of elucidation or amplification.

Glossa /glosa/. Lat. A gloss, explanation, or interpreta¬ tion.

The glossa of the Roman law are brief illustrative comments or annotations on the text of Justinian's collections, made by the professors who taught or lec¬ tured on them about the twelfth century (especially at the law school of Bologna), and were hence called "glos¬ sators." These glosses were at first inserted in the text with the words to which they referred, and were called "glossae interlineares;" but afterwards they were placed in the margin, partly at the side, and partly under the text, and called "glossae marginales." A selection of them was made by Accursius, between A.D. 1220 and 1260, under the title of "glossa Ordinaria," which is of the greatest authority.

Glossator /glosaetar/. In the civil law, a commentator or annotator. A term applied to the professors and teachers of the Roman law in the twelfth century, at the head of whom was Imerius.

Glossa viperina est que corrodit viscera textus /glosa vayparays est kwiy karowdst visara tekstas/. It is a poisonous gloss which corrupts the essence of the text.

Glocester, Statute of /stetuywt av glotst/. The Eng¬ lish statute of 6 Edw. I, c. 1, A.D. 1278. It takes its name from the place of its enactment, and was the first statute giving costs in actions.

Gloves /glavz/. In England, it was an ancient custom on a maiden assize, when there was no offender to be tried, for the sheriff to present the judge with a pair of white gloves. It was an immemorial custom to remove the glove from the right hand on taking oath.

Glove silver. In old English law, extraordinary rewards formerly given to officers of courts, etc.; money formerly given by the sheriff of a county in which no offenders are left for execution to the clerk of assize and judges' officers.

G.N.M.A. Government National Mortgage Association (Ginnie Mae).

GNP. Gross National Product.

Go. To be dismissed from a court. To issue from a court. "The court said a mandamus must go."

Go bail. To assume the responsibility of a surety on a bail-bond.
God and my country. The answer formerly made by a prisoner, when arraigned, in answer to the question, "How will you be tried?" In the ancient practice he had the choice (as appears by the question) whether to submit to the trial by ordeal (by God) or to be tried by a jury (by the country); and it is probable that the original form of the answer was, "By God or my country," whereby the prisoner averred his innocence by declining neither of the modes of trial.

God-bote. An ecclesiastical or church fine paid for crimes and offenses committed against God.

God-gild. That which is offered to God or his service.

God's penny. In old English law, earnest-money; money given as evidence of the completion of a bargain. This name is probably derived from the fact that such money was given to the church or distributed in alms.

Go hence. To depart from the court; with the further implication that a suitor who is directed to "go hence" is dismissed from further attendance upon the court in respect to the suit or proceeding which brought him there, and that he is finally denied the relief which he sought, or, as the case may be, absolved from the liability sought to be imposed upon him.

Going. In various compound phrases (as those which follow) this term implies either motion, progress, active operation, or present and continuous validity and efficac—

Going and coming rule. Under this rule, employees who suffer injuries while going to and returning from work are generally excluded from the benefits of workers' compensation acts. Wiley Mfg. Co. v. Wilson, 30 Md.App. 87, 351 A.2d 487, 490. Such injuries, generally, are not compensable because they do not arise out of or in the course of the employment. Church v. Arko, 75 C.A.3d 291, 142 Cal.Rptr. 92, 95.

Going before the wind. In the language of mariners and in the rules of navigation, a vessel is said to be going "before the wind" when the wind is free as respects her course, that is, comes from behind the vessel or over the stern, so that her yards may be braced square across. She is said to be "going off large" when she has the wind free on either tack, that is, when it blows from some point abaft the beam or from the quarter.

Going concern. An enterprise which is being carried on as a whole, and with some particular object in view. The term refers to an existing solvent business, which is being conducted in the usual and ordinary way for which it was organized. When applied to a corporation, it means that the firm's organization and assets remain intact and are used to generate future income and cash flows. The value which inheres in a company where its business is established, as distinguished from one which has yet to establish its business. East Bay Water Co. v. McLaughlin, D.C.Cal., 24 F.Supp. 222, 226. The value of the assets of a business as an operating, active concern, rather than merely as items of property (book value of assets alone) which would be the case in a liquidation sale. Such value includes goodwill.

Going off large. See Going before the wind.

Going price. The prevalent market price; the current market value of the article in question at the time and place of sale. See Fair market value.

Going private. Process by which a publically owned company becomes a privately held company. Causing of a class of equity securities to be delisted from a national securities exchange or the causing of a class of equity securities which is authorized to be quoted in an inter-dealer quotation system of a registered national securities exchange to cease to be so authorized. Nearly all attempts to go private utilize variations of one or more of a limited number of basic techniques. These include (in probable order of frequency): (1) A cash tender offer to purchase all outstanding publically held shares by the issuer, its management or an affiliated entity; (2) a merger or consolidation of the issuer with, or the sale of its assets to, another corporation controlled by management of the issuer; (3) an exchange offer (almost always involving a debt security) by the issuer, its management or an affiliated entity; and (4) a reverse stock split. See also Leveraged buyout.

Going public. Term used to describe the process by which a corporation issues its first stock for public purchase. Also, when a private corporation becomes a public corporation. Said of a business when its shares become traded to the general public, rather than being closely held by relatively few stockholders.

Going short. See Short sale.

Going through the bar. The act of the chief of an English common-law court in demanding of every member of the bar, in order of seniority, if he has anything to move. This was done at the sitting of the court each day in term, except special paper days, crown paper days in the queen's bench, and revenue paper days in the exchequer. On the last day of term this order is reversed, the first and second time round. In the exchequer the postman and tubman are first called on.

Going to the country. When a party, under the common-law system of pleading, finished his pleading by the words "and of this he puts himself upon the country," this was called "going to the country." It was the essential termination of a pleading which took issue upon a material fact in the preceding pleading.

Going value. See Going concern value.

Going witness. One who is about to depart from the jurisdiction of the court, although only into a state or country under the general sovereignty; as from one state to another.

Gold bond. One payable in gold coin or its equivalent, which means any money acceptable to United States government in payment of debts due it.

Golden parachute. A slang term for a termination agreement which shelters executives from the effects of a corporate change in control. Koenings v. Joseph Schlitz Brewing Co., 126 Wis.2d 349, 377 N.W.2d 593, 598. Such an agreement generally provides for substantial bonuses and other benefits for top management and certain directors who may be forced to leave the target company or otherwise voluntarily leave upon a change in control. Revlon, Inc. v. MacAndrews & Forbes Holdings, Inc., Del., 506 A.2d 173, 178. A special tax is imposed on golden parachute payments. I.R.C. § 4999.

Golden Rule argument. "Golden Rule" type of argument, by which jurors are urged to place themselves or members of their families or friends in place of person who has been offended and to render verdict as if they or either of them or member of their families or friends was similarly situated, is improper in both civil and criminal cases. Lycans v. Com., Ky., 562 S.W.2d 303.

Goldsmiths' notes. Bankers' cash notes (i.e., promissory notes given by a banker to his customers as acknowledgments of the receipt of money) were originally called in London "goldsmiths' notes," from the circumstance that all the banking business in England was originally transacted by goldsmiths.

Gold standard. A monetary system in which every form of currency is convertible on demand into its legal equivalent in gold or gold coin. The United States adopted the gold standard in 1900 and terminated it in 1934.

Goldwit. A mulet or fine in gold.

Gomashtah /gomashta/. In Hindu law, an agent; a steward; a confidential factor; a representative.

Good. Valid; sufficient in law; effectual; unobjectionable; sound; responsible; solvent; able to pay an amount specified.

Of a value corresponding with its terms; collectible. A note is said to be "good" when the payment of it at maturity may be relied on.

Good abearing. See Abearing.

Good and clear record title, free from all incumbrances. A title which on the record itself can be again sold as free from obvious defects and substantial doubts; it differs from a "good, marketable title," which is an actual title, but which may be established by evidence independently of the record. See Marketable title.

Good and valid. Reliable, sufficient, and unimpeachable in law; adequate; responsible.

Good and workmanlike manner. In a manner generally considered skillful by those capable of judging such work in the community of the performance.

Good behavior. Orderly and lawful conduct; behavior such as is proper for a peaceable and law-abiding citizen. A term is used in an order suspending sentence upon a defendant during good behavior, means merely conduct conformable to law, or to the particular law theretofore breached.

Under some state penal systems, each day of "good behavior" by a prisoner reduces his or her sentence by one day. See also Goodtime allowance.

Good cause. Term generally means a substantial reason amounting in law to a legal excuse for failing to perform an act required by law. People v. Gillett, Colo., 629 P.2d 613, 618. Legally sufficient ground or reason. Phrase "good cause" depends upon circumstances of individual case, and finding of its existence lies largely in discretion of officer or court to which decision is committed. Wilson v. Morris, Mo., 369 S.W.2d 402, 407. It is a relative and highly abstract term, and its meaning must be determined not only by verbal context of statute in which term is employed but also by context of action and procedures involved in type of case presented. Wray v. Folsom, D.C.Ark., 166 F.Supp. 390, 394, 395. See also Probable cause.

Alimony modification. "Good cause" for modification or revocation of orders for alimony means material and substantial change in circumstances and depends upon circumstances of individual case. Creager v. Creager, 219 Neb. 760, 366 N.W.2d 414, 416.

Discovery. "Good cause" for discovery is present if information sought is material to moving party's trial preparation. Daniels v. Allen Industries, Inc., 391 Mich. 398, 216 N.W.2d 762, 766. Such requirement for discovery and production of documents is ordinarily satisfied by a factual allegation showing that requested documents are necessary to establishment of the movant's claim or that denial of production would cause moving party hardship or injustice. Black v. Sheraton Corp. of America, D.C.D.C., 47 F.R.D. 263, 273. Under a 1970 amendment to Fed.R.Civ. P. 34, however, "good cause" is no longer required to be shown for production of documents and things. Federal Rule 35(a) does, however, require that "good cause" be shown for order requiring physical or mental examination, as does Rule 26(c) for protective orders to restrict scope of discovery.

Unemployment compensation. "Good cause" for leaving employment, so as not to render one ineligible for unemployment compensation benefits, must be objectively related to the employment and be such cause as would compel a reasonably prudent person to quit under sim-

Good character. Sum or totality of virtues of a person which generally forms the basis for one's reputation in the community, though his reputation is distinct from his character. See Character; Reputation.

Good conduct. See Certificate of good conduct.

Good consideration. Any benefit conferred, or agreed to be conferred, upon the promisor, by any other person, to which the promisor is not lawfully entitled, or any prejudice suffered, or agreed to be suffered, by such person, other than such as the person is at the same time of consent lawfully bound to suffer, as an inducement to the promisor, is a good consideration for a promise. That consideration or detriment which the law considers valid and to this extent "good" does not refer to moral goodness. See Consideration; Valuable consideration.

Good faith. Good faith is an intangible and abstract quality with no technical meaning or statutory definition, and it encompasses, among other things, an honest belief, the absence of malice and the absence of design to defraud or to seek an unconscionable advantage, and an individual's personal good faith is concept of his own mind and inner spirit and, therefore, may not conclusively be determined by his protestations alone. Doyle v. Gordon, 158 N.Y.S.2d 248, 259, 260. Honesty of intention, and freedom from knowledge of circumstances which ought to put the holder upon inquiry. An honest intention to abstain from taking any unconscionable advantage of another, even through technicalities of law, together with absence of all information, notice, or benefit or belief of facts which render transaction unconscientious. In common usage this term is ordinarily used to describe that state of mind denoting honesty of purpose, freedom from intention to defraud, and, generally speaking, means being faithful to one's duty or obligation. Efron v. Kalmanovitz, 249 Cal.App. 187, 57 Cal.Rptr. 248, 251. See Bona fide. Compare Bad faith.

Bankruptcy law. "Good faith" as used in statute requiring debtor to propose Chapter 13 plan in good faith has a meaning consisting of two elements: honesty of purpose and full and complete disclosure of the financial facts of the debtor. Matter of Harper, Bkrtcy.Ga., 11 B.R. 395, 396.

Commercial law. Honesty in fact in the conduct or transaction concerned. U.C.C. § 1-201(19). In the case of a merchant, honesty in fact and the observance of reasonable commercial standards of fair dealing in the trade. U.C.C. § 2-103(1)(b).

Good faith bargaining. In labor law, requirement of "good faith bargaining" imposes upon employer and employee organization obligation to come to the bargain-

Good faith exception to exclusionary rule. See Exclusionary Rule.

Good faith purchaser. A purchaser who buys without notice of circumstance which would put a person of ordinary prudence on inquiry as to the title, or as to an impediment on the title, of a seller. Sometimes used interchangeably with a "buyer in ordinary course of business" when the seller is a merchant. UCC 1-201(9), 2-403.

Good health. A relative term, meaning a condition of body and mind that ordinary affairs of life may be attended to without serious strain upon the vital powers. Life & Cas. Ins. Co. of Tenn. v. Truett, 112 Ga.App. 338, 145 S.E.2d 84, 87. As employed in insurance contracts, ordinarily means a reasonably good state of health. It means that the applicant has no grave, important, or serious disease, and is free from any ailment that seriously affects the general soundness and healthfulness of the system. Norwich v. United Sec. Life Co., 82 S.D. 640, 152 N.W.2d 439, 443. A mere temporary indisposition not tending to weaken or undermine constitution does not render a person in "bad health." It does not mean a condition of perfect health.

Good jury. A jury of which the members are selected from the list of special jurors.

Good, merchantable abstract of title. An abstract showing a good title, clear from incumbrances, and not merely an abstract of matters of record affecting the title, made by one engaged in the business of making abstracts in such form as is customary, as passing current among persons buying and selling real estate and examining titles. See also Marketable title.

Good moral character. As a prerequisite to the admission to the practice of law, an absence of proven conduct or acts which have been historically considered as manifestation of moral turpitude. Reese v. Board of Com'rs of Alabama State Bar, Ala., 379 So.2d 564, 569.

Good order. Goods or property are in "good order" when they are in acceptable condition under all the circumstances. See Merchantability.

Good record title. A "good record title," without words of limitation, means that the proper records shall show an unencumbered, fee-simple title, the legal estate in fee, free and clear of all valid claims, liens, and incumbrances. See also Marketable title.

Good repute. An expression, synonymous with and meaning only "of good reputation." See Reputation.

Goodright, goodtitle. The fictitious plaintiff in the old action of ejectment, most frequently called "John Doe," was sometimes called "Goodright" or "Goodtitle."
GOODS

Goods. A term of variable content and meaning. It may include every species of personal property or it may be given a very restricted meaning.

Items of merchandise, supplies, raw materials, or finished goods. Sometimes the meaning of "goods" is extended to include all tangible items, as in the phrase "goods and services."

All things (including specially manufactured goods) which are movable at the time of identification to the contract for sale other than the money in which the price is to be paid, investment securities and things in action. Also includes the unborn of animals and growing crops and other identified things attached to reality as fixtures. U.C.C. § 2–105(1). All things treated as movable for the purposes of a contract of storage or transportation. U.C.C. § 7–102(1)(f). In context of U.C.C., includes used goods. Moore v. Burt Chevrolet, Inc., 39 Colo.App. 11, 563 P.2d 369, 370.

As used with reference to secured transactions, goods include all things which are movable at the time the security interest attaches or which are fixtures, but does not include money, documents, instruments, accounts, chattel paper, general intangibles, or minerals or the like (including oil and gas) before extraction. "Goods" also includes standing timber which is to be cut and removed under a conveyance or contract for sale, the unborn young of animals, and growing crops. U.C.C. § 9–105(h).

See also Confusion of goods; Future goods; Identification of goods.

Capital goods. The equipment and machinery used in production of other goods or services.

Consumer goods. Goods which are used or bought for use primarily for personal, family or household purposes. U.C.C. § 9–109(1). See also Consumer goods.

Durable goods. Goods which have a reasonably long life and which are not generally consumed in use; e.g. refrigerator.

Fungible goods. Goods, every unit of which is similar to every other unit in the mass; e.g. uniform goods such as coffee, grain, etc. U.C.C. § 1–201(17).

Hard goods. Consumer durable goods. See Durable goods, above.

Soft goods. Generally consumer goods such as wearing apparel, curtains, etc., in contrast to hard goods (e.g. appliances).

Good Samaritan doctrine. One who sees a person in imminent and serious peril through negligence of another cannot be charged with contributory negligence, as a matter of law, in risking his own life or serious injury in attempting to effect a rescue, provided the attempt is not recklessly or rashly made. Jobst v. Butler Well Servicing, Inc., 190 Kan. 86, 372 P.2d 55, 59. Under this doctrine, negligence of a volunteer rescuer must worsen position of person in distress before liability will be imposed. U. S. v. DeVane, C.A.Fla., 306 F.2d 182, 186. This protection from liability is provided by statute in most states.

Goods and chattels. This phrase is a general denomination of personal property, as distinguished from real property. In the law of wills, the term "goods and chattels" will, unless restrained by the context, pass all the personal estate.

Goods sold and delivered. A phrase frequently used in the action of assumpsit, when the sale and delivery of goods furnish the cause.

Goods, wares, and merchandise. A general and comprehensive designation of such chattels and goods as are ordinarily the subject of traffic and sale. The phrase is used in the statute of frauds, and is sometimes found in pleadings and other instruments.

Goodtime allowance. "Good time" credit is awarded for good conduct and reduces period of sentence which prisoner must spend in prison although it does not reduce the period of the sentence itself. Carothers v. Follette, D.C.N.Y., 314 F.Supp. 1014, 1026, 1027. Credit allowed on the sentence which is given for satisfactory conduct in prison. Introduced as an incentive for inmates, it has become practically automatically awarded. It may reduce the minimum or maximum sentence or both. See also Good behavior.

Good title. One free from reasonable doubt, that is, not only a valid title in fact, but one that can again be sold to a reasonable purchaser or mortgaged to a person of reasonable prudence. MacGowan v. Gaines, 127 Vt. 477, 253 A.2d 121, 123. A title free from litigation, palpable defects and grave doubts. See also Marketable title.

The custom of patronage of any established trade or business; the benefit or advantage of having established a business and secured its patronage by the public. And as property incident to business sold, favor vendor has won from public, and probability that all customers will continue their patronage. It means every positive advantage that has been acquired by a proprietor in carrying on his business, whether connected with the premises in which the business is conducted, or with the name under which it is managed, or with any other matter carrying with it the benefit of the business.

The excess of cost of an acquired firm or operating unit over the current or fair market value of net assets of the acquired unit. Informally used to indicate the value of good customer relations, high employee morale, a well-respected business name, etc. which are expected to result in greater than normal earning power.

The ability of a business to generate income in excess of normal rate on assets, due to superior managerial skills, market position, new product technology, etc.
The capacity to earn profits in excess of a normal rate of return due to establishment of favorable community reputation and consumer identification of the business name. North Clackamas Community Hospital v. Harris, C.A.Or., 664 F.2d 701, 706.

As applied to law firms, term refers to ability to attract clients as result of firm’s name, location, or the reputation of lawyers. Bump v. Stewart, Wimer & Bump, P.C., Iowa, 336 N.W.2d 731, 736.

For accounting purposes, goodwill has no basis unless it is purchased. In the purchase of a business, goodwill generally is the difference between the purchase price and the value of the assets acquired. Goodwill is an intangible asset and cannot be amortized for tax purposes. See also Amortization.

Gore. In old English law, a small, narrow slip of ground. In modern land law, a small triangular piece of land, such as may be left between surveys which do not close. In some of the New England states (as Maine and Vermont) the term is applied to a subdivision of a county, having a scanty population and for that reason not organized as a town.

Gossiped /góspréd/. In canon law, paternity; spiritual affinity.

Go to. In a statute, will, or other instrument, a direction that property shall “go to” a designated person means that it shall pass or proceed to such person, vest in and belong to him.

Governing body. Governing body of institution, organization or territory means that body which has ultimate power to determine its policies and control its activities. Student Bar Ass’n Bd. of Governors of School of Law, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill v. Byrd, N.C., 239 S.E.2d 415, 421.

Government. From the Latin gubernaculum. Signifies the instrument, the helm, whereby the ship to which the state was compared, was guided on its course by the “gubernator” or helmsman, and in that view, the government is but an agency of the state, distinguished as it must be in accurate thought from its scheme and machinery of government.

In the United States, government consists of the executive, legislative, and judicial branches in addition to administrative agencies. In a broader sense, includes the federal government and all its agencies and bureaus, state and county governments, and city and township governments.

GOVERNMENTAL ACT
Governmental activity. A function of government in providing for its own support or in providing services to the public; e.g., taxation and the collection of taxes. Goble v. Zolot, 144 Neb. 70, 12 N.W.2d 311, 312. Generally, when a municipality’s activity is for advantage of state as a whole, or is in performance of a duty imposed by sovereign power, activity is “public” and “governmental.” Department of Treasury v. City of Evansville, Ind., 223 Ind. 435, 60 N.E.2d 952, 955. See Governmental act; Governmental functions.

Governmental agency. A subordinate creature of federal, state or local government created to carry out a governmental function or to implement a statute or statutes. For example, the Federal Trade Commission was created and functions to implement and enforce the Federal Trade Commission Act and various other federal antitrust and consumer protection laws. See also Administrative agency; Governmental subdivision.

Governmental agents. Those performing services and duties of a public character for benefit of all citizens of the community. The term includes firemen and policemen. Miller v. City of Albany, 158 Misc. 720, 287 N.Y.S. 889, 891. Also, public school officials are government agents within the purview of both the Federal and State Constitutions and, thus, must respect the constitutional rights of students in their charge against unreasonable searches and seizures. In re William G., 40 C.3d 550, 221 Cal.Rptr. 118, 124, 709 P.2d 1287, 1293.

Governmental body. See Administrative agency; Governmental agency; Governmental subdivision.

Governmental duties. Those duties of a municipality that have reference to some part or element of the state’s sovereignty granted it to be exercised for the benefit of the public, and all other duties are “proprietary”. Those duties that the framers of the Constitution intended each member of the union of states would assume in order adequately to function under the form of government guaranteed by the Constitution. Department of Treasury v. City of Evansville, Ind., 223 Ind. 435, 60 N.E.2d 952, 955. See also Governmental functions.

Governmental enterprise. A project or undertaking by the government of a more or less permanent nature, such as a drainage district. Rorick v. United States Sugar Corporation, C.C.A.Fla., 120 F.2d 418, 421.

Governmental facility. A building or institution provided by the government to care for a specified need, such as a courthouse or county jail. Haney v. Town of Rainelle, 125 W.Va. 397, 25 S.E.2d 207, 211.

Governmental functions. The functions of a municipality which are essential to its existence, in sense of serving public at large, and are to be distinguished from those which are private, which are not necessary to its existence, and which enure to advantage of its inhabitants. City of New Rochelle v. State, 34 Misc.2d 454, 228 N.Y.S.2d 279, 282. Activities which are carried on by city, pursuant to state requirement, in discharge of state’s obligation for health, safety or general welfare of public generally, or which are voluntarily assumed by city for benefit of public generally rather than for its own citizens, are performed in governmental capacity and as “governmental function”. See also Governmental act; Governmental activity.

Governmental immunity. See Federal Tort Claims Act; Sovereign immunity.

Governmental instrumetality. Any agency constitutionally or legislatively created. For purposes of the doctrine that federal agencies or instrumentalities are immune from special assessments by state and local governments, a governmental instrumentality is that which performs an important governmental function. Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis v. Metrocentre Imp. Dist. No. 1, City of Little Rock, Ark., C.A.Ark., 657 F.2d 183, 185. See Administrative agency; Governmental agency; Governmental subdivision.

Governmental interests. In conflicts of law, term used to describe the particular governmental policies of a jurisdiction in terms of whether its law or another law should be applied in a choice of law issue.

Governmental powers. The totality of power which reposes in a government enabling it to carry out its proper functions as a sovereign. General powers of federal government are enumerated in U.S. Constitution; powers of state governments in state constitutions; municipal governments in charters.

Governmental privileges. See Governmental secrets.

Governmental purpose. One which has for its objective the promotion of the public health, safety, morals, general welfare, security, prosperity and contentment of the inhabitants of a given political division. See also Governmental functions.

Governmental secrets. In evidence, a privilege exists which protects the government from revealing military or diplomatic secrets or other information the disclosure of which would be contrary to the public interest. U. S. v. Reynolds, 345 U.S. 1, 73 S.Ct. 528, 97 L.Ed. 727. See also Executive privilege.

Governmental subdivision. An agency created to carry out a governmental purpose or function. See Administrative agency; Governmental agency.

Governmental trusts. Type of charitable trust used for promotion and maintenance of public buildings and for the promotion of purposes which are of a character sufficiently beneficial to the community to justify permitting property to be devoted forever to their accomplishment. Restatement, Second, Trusts, §§ 373, 374.

Government annuities societies. Societies formed in England under 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 14, 7 & 8 Vict., c. 83, 16 & 17 Vict., c. 45, and 27 & 28 Vict., c. 43, to enable the industrious classes to make provisions for themselves by purchasing, on advantageous terms, a government annuity for life or term of years.

Government bonds. See Bond.

Government contract. See Government contract.
Government de facto. A government of fact. A government actually exercising power and control, as opposed to the true and lawful government; a government not established according to the constitution of the nation, or not lawfully entitled to recognition or supremacy, but which has nevertheless supplanted or displaced the government de jure. A government deemed unlawful, or deemed wrongful or unjust, which, nevertheless, receives presently habitual obedience from the bulk of the community.

There are several degrees of what is called "de facto government." Such a government, in its highest degree, assumes a character very closely resembling that of a lawful government. This is when the usurping government expels the regular authorities from their customary seats and functions, and establishes itself in their place, and so becomes the actual government of a country. The distinguishing characteristic of such a government is that adherents to it in war against the government de jure do not incur the penalties of treason; and, under certain limitations, obligations assumed by it in behalf of the country or otherwise will, in general, be respected by the government de jure when restored.

Such a government might be more aptly denominated a "government of paramount force," being maintained by active military power against the rightful authority of an established and lawful government; and obeyed in civil matters by private citizens. They are usually administered directly by military authority, but they may be administered, also, by civil authority, supported more or less by military force. Thorton v. Smith, 75 U.S. (8 Wall.) 1, 19 L.Ed. 361.

Government de jure /gəvərnmənt dɪ ˈdʒʊriː/. A government of right; the true and lawful government; a government established according to the constitution of the nation, and lawfully entitled to recognition and supremacy and the administration of the nation, but which is actually cut off from power or control. A government deemed lawful, or deemed rightful or just, which, nevertheless, has been supplanted or displaced; that is to say, which receives not presently (although it received formerly) habitual obedience from the bulk of the community.

Government immunity. See Governmental immunity.

Government instrumentality doctrine. The doctrine that government instrumentalities are tax exempt.

Government National Mortgage Association. Agency of Federal government (division of HUD) which is primarily engaged in purchasing on the secondary market federally subsidized residential mortgages originated by local lenders, and also in guaranteeing payment of securities backed by residential mortgages. Referred to as "Ginnie Mae."

Government of laws. Fundamental principle of American jurisprudence which requires decisions of courts to be based on laws, statutory and common law, irrespective of the character of the litigants and the personal predilections of the judges.

Government securities. Direct debt obligations of U.S. government; see e.g., Treasury bill; Treasury bond; Treasury note.

Government survey. General mapping out by government of towns, sections, quarter sections, etc.; sometimes known as a congressional survey. See also Government survey system.

Government survey system. A type of legal description whereby the United States is generally divided into checks or tracts of ground. These are further broken down by smaller descriptions, such as metes and bounds. See also Government survey; Metes and bounds.

Government tort. A wrong perpetrated by the government through an employee or agent or instrumentality under its control which may or may not be actionable depending upon whether there is governmental tort immunity. Tort actions against the federal government are governed by the Federal Tort Claims Act; many states also have Tort Claims Acts. See also Federal Tort Claims Act; Sovereign immunity.

Governor. The chief executive official of a state in the United States, and territories of the United States; and also of the chief magistrate of some colonies, provinces, and dependencies of other nations. Governors serve terms ranging from two to four years; are usually restricted to two terms in office; possess veto powers, powers to call special sessions of legislature, powers to pardon and reprieve, and many other appointive, administrative, and financial powers. See also Lieutenant governor.

Go without day. Words used to denote that a party is dismissed by the court. Party is said to go without day, because there is no day appointed for the party to appear again.

GPO. Government Printing Office. Such office prints and publishes laws, regulations, forms, etc. of federal government.

Grace. A favor or indulgence as distinguished from a right. See also Days of grace; Grace, days of; Grace period; Of grace.

Grace, days of. Time of indulgence granted to an acceptor or maker for the payment of his bill of exchange or note. It was originally a gratuitous favor (hence the name), but custom has rendered it a legal right. See also Days of grace; Grace period.

Grace period. In insurance law, a period beyond the due date of premium (usually 30 or 31 days) during which insurance is continued in force and during which payment may be made to keep policy in good standing. The grace period for payment of premium does not contemplate free insurance or operate to continue the policy in force after it expires by agreement of the parties. Miller v. Travelers Ins. Co., 143 Pa.Super. 270, 17 A.2d 907, 909. May also refer to period of time provided for in a loan agreement during which default will not occur even though payment is overdue.
Gradatim /gradétyam/. In old English law, by degrees or steps; step by step; from one degree to another.

Grade, v. To establish a level by mathematical points and lines, and then to bring the surface of the street or highway to the level by the elevation or depression of the natural surface to the line fixed. To bring property to the level of an abutting highway. Nassau County v. O’Connell, Sup., 37 N.Y.S.2d 1009, 1012.

Grade, n. Used in reference to streets: (1) The line of the street’s inclination from the horizontal; (2) a part of a street inclined from the horizontal. The hypothetical line to which the work is to be constructed. Musto-Keehan Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 139 Cal.App. 506, 34 P.2d 506, 509. The street wrought to the line.

“Grades of crime” in legal parlance are understood as higher or lower in grade or degree, according to the measure of punishment attached and meted out on conviction and the consequences resulting to the party convicted; e.g. first, second or, third degree murder. See Classification of crimes; Graded offense.

Quality, value, relative position, rank, status, or standing. Mossman v. Chicago & Southern Air Lines, 236 Mo.App. 282, 153 S.W.2d 799, 801, 802.

Grade crossing. A place where a railroad is crossed at grade by a public or private road, or by another railroad, or where one highway crosses another.

Graded offense. One for which offender is subject to a more severe penalty for a higher grade than for a lower grade of offense according to terms of statute; e.g., first degree murder, as opposed to second or third degree; aggravated as opposed to simple assault. Most state criminal statutes provide for degrees of crimes with corresponding differing punishments or sentences. See Classification of crimes.

Graduate. One who has received a degree, or other evidence of completion, from a grade school, high school, trade or vocational school, college, university, graduate or professional school, or the like.

Gramm-Rudman-Hollings amendment. Federal law (1986) setting balanced budget goals and requiring automatic reductions in federal expenditures (with certain programs exempted) if Congress fails to meet such annual goals.
Granatarius /grænætær(i)yəs/. In old English law, an officer having charge of a granary.

Grand, n. Jargon term for one thousand dollars.

As to grand Assize; Cape; Distress; Jury; Larceny; Serjeanty, see those titles.

Grand coutumier /grɔn kuwtjuwmnyɛy/. A collection of customs, laws, and forms of procedure in use in early times in France. See Coutumier.

Grand days. In English practice, certain days in the terms, which are solemnly kept in the ins of court and chancery, viz., Candlemas day in Hilary term, Ascension day in Easter, St. John the Baptist day in Trinity, and All Saints in Michaelmas; which are dies non juridici. They are days set apart for peculiar festivity; the members of the respective ins being on such occasions regaled at their dinner in the hall, with more than usual sumptuousness.

Grandfather. The father of either of one's parents.

Grandfather clause. Provision in a new law or regulation exempting those already in or a part of the existing system which is being regulated. An exception to a restriction that allows all those already doing something to continue doing it even if they would be stopped by the new restriction. A clause introduced into several of the constitutions of the southern states, limiting the right to vote to those who can read and write any article of the constitution of the United States, and have worked or been regularly employed in some lawful employment for the greater part of the year next preceding the time they offer to register unless prevented from labor or ability to read or write by physical disability, or who own property assessed at three hundred dollars upon which the taxes have been paid; but excepting those who have served in the army or navy of the United States or in the Confederate States in time of war, their lawful descendants in every degree, and persons of good character who understand the duties and obligations of citizenship under a republican form of government.

One of the original purposes of the "grandfather" clause of the Motor Carrier Act was to permit the continued operation of carrier businesses already established prior to passage of the Act. Transamerican Freight Lines v. United States, D.C.Del., 51 F.Supp. 405, 409.

Grand jury. See Jury.

Grand jury investigation. Investigations conducted by a grand jury into possible wrongdoing. Generally, such are conducted under the aegis of the prosecuting official and they may or may not result in indictments. See Jury (Grand Jury).

Grand larceny. See Larceny.

Grandmother. See Larceny.

Grandmother. The mother of either of one's parents.

Grand remonstrance. A constitutional document passed by the British House of Commons in November, 1641. It was in the nature of an appeal to the country, setting forth political grievances. It consisted of a preamble of 20 clauses and the body of the remonstrance with 206 clauses, each of which was voted separately. Its first remedial measure was against papists; its second demanded that all illegal grievances and exactions should be presented and punished at the sessions and assizes and that judges and justices should be sworn to the due execution of the Petition of Rights and other laws. The third was a series of precautions to prevent the employment of evil councillors.

Grange. A farm furnished with barns, granaries, stables, and all conveniences for husbandry.

Grangarius /grɛnŋjʊtiɭiɭiəs/. A keeper of a grange or farm.

Granger Cases. A name applied to six cases decided by the supreme court of the United States in 1876, which are reported in Munn v. Illinois, 94 U.S. 113, 24 L.Ed. 77; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Iowa, 94 U.S. 155, 24 L.Ed. 94; Peik v. Ry. Co., 94 U.S. 164, 24 L.Ed. 97; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ackley, 94 U.S. 179, 24 L.Ed. 99; Winona & St. Peter R. Co. v. Blake, 94 U.S. 180, 24 L.Ed. 99; those most frequently cited being Munn v. Illinois, and C., B. & Q. R. Co. v. Iowa. They are so called because they arose out of an agitation commenced by the grangers which resulted in the enactment of statutes for the regulation of the tolls and charges of common carriers, warehousemen, and the proprietors of elevators. The enforcement of these acts was resisted and their constitutionality questioned. The supreme court affirmed the common-law doctrine that private property appropriated by the owner to a public use is thereby subjected to public regulation. They also held that the right of regulation was not restrained by the prohibition of the fourteenth amendment of the federal constitution against the taking by the states of private property without due process of law.

Grangia /grɛnŋjʊtiɭiɭiəs/. A grange.

Grant. To bestow; to confer upon some one other than the person or entity which makes the grant. Porto Rico Ry., Light & Power Co. v. Colom, C.C.A.Puerto Rico, 106 F.2d 345, 354. To bestow or confer, with or without compensation, a gift or bestowal by one having control or authority over it, as of land or money. Palmer v. U. S. Civil Service Commission, D.C.I11., 191 F.Supp. 495, 537.

Gratia dictum /grâtyâs diktam/. A voluntary assertion; a statement which a party is not legally bound to make, or in which he is not held to precise accuracy.

Gratuitous. Given or granted without valuable or legal consideration. A term applied to deeds of conveyance and to bailments and other contracts.

In old English law, voluntary; without force, fear, or favor.

As to gratuitous Bailment; Contract; Deposit, see those titles. See also Gratis.

Gratuitous bailee. Person to whom possession of personal property is transferred and who furnishes no consideration for such transfer and hence is required to use great care to avoid liability for negligence. One responsible for goods entrusted to him or her when goods are damaged or lost through one's gross negligence. Christensen v. Dady, 238 Ark. 577, 383 S.W.2d 283, 285. See also Bailee.

Gratuitous guest. In motor vehicle law, a person riding at invitation of owner or authorized agent without payment of a consideration or fare. Hart v. Hogan, 173 Wash. 598, 24 P.2d 99. See Guest; Guest statute.

Gratuitous licensee. Person who has permission though not an invitation to come on to the property of another and who has furnished no consideration for such permission. He is not an invitee, though, because of the permission, he is not a trespasser.

Gratuitous promise. Promise made by one who has not received consideration for it. The absence of consideration makes such unenforceable as legal contracts.

Gratuity. Something acquired or otherwise received without bargain or inducement. State ex rel. Stafford v. Fox-Great Falls Theatre Corporation, 114 Mont. 52, 132 P.2d 689, 697. Something given freely or without remuneration; a gift. Something voluntarily given in return for a favor or especially a service, hence, a bounty; a tip; a bribe. McCook v. Long, 193 Ga. 299, 18 S.E.2d 488, 490. See also Honorarium.

Gravamen /gravami/. The material part of a grievance, complaint, indictment, charge, cause of action, etc. Williamson v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, 67 Cal.App.2d 250, 153 P.2d 990, 991. The burden or gist of a charge; the grievance or injury specially complained of.

In English Ecclesiastical law, a grievance complained of by the clergy before the bishops in convocation.

Gravatio /gravation/. In old English law, an accusation or impeachment.

Grave. An excavation in earth in which a dead body is or is to be buried, or place for interment of a corpse, such as a tomb, or a sepulcher.

Graveyard. A cemetery; a place for the interment of dead bodies; sometimes defined in statutes as a place where a minimum number of persons (as "six or more") are buried.

Graveyard insurance. A term applied to insurances fraudulently obtained (as, by false personation or other means) on the lives of infants, very aged persons, or those in the last stages of disease. Also occasionally applied to an insurance company which writes wager policies, takes extra-hazardous risks, or otherwise exceeds the limits of prudent and legitimate business.

Gravis /gravis/. Grievous; great. Ad grave damnum, to the grievous damage.

Gravius /gravius/. A graf; a chief magistrate or officer. A term derived from the more ancient "grafia," and used in combination with various other words, as an official title in Germany; as Margravius, Rheingravius, Landgravius, etc.

Gravius est divinum quam temporalem iudicem majestatem /gravius est divinum quam temporalem iudicem majestatem/. It is more serious to hurt divine majesty than temporal majesty.

Gray market goods. Foreign-manufactured goods, bearing a valid United States trademark, that are imported without the consent of the U.S. trademark holder.

The gray market arises in three general contexts. In the first case, despite a domestic firm's having purchased from an independent foreign firm the rights to register and use the latter's trademark as a U.S. trademark and to sell its foreign manufactured products here, the foreign firm imports the trademarked goods and distributes them here, or sells them abroad to a third party who imports them here.

In the second case, domestic firms register the trademark in the U.S. for goods which are manufactured abroad by an affiliated manufacturer. The foreign affiliate may be a subsidiary of the U.S. firm, the parent company or an unincorporated manufacturing division of the U.S. firm. The gray market arises when the trademark holder or its foreign affiliate sells trademarked articles overseas which are then imported into the U.S. by a third party without authorization of the U.S. trademark holder.

In the third case, the domestic holder of a U.S. trademark authorizes an independent foreign manufacturer to use that trademark in a particular foreign location. The foreign manufacturer or a third party then imports and distributes the foreign made goods. K Mart Corp. v. Cartier, Inc., et al., 486 U.S. 281, 108 S.Ct. 1811, 100 L.Ed.2d 313.

Gray's inn. An inn of court. See Inns of Court.

Great. Considerable in magnitude, power, importance, intensity or degree. Thompson v. Anderson, 107 Utah 331, 153 P.2d 665, 666. As used in various compound legal terms, this word generally means extraordinary, that is, exceeding the common or ordinary measure or standard, in respect to physical size, or importance, dignity, etc.

For presumption great, see Proof. As to great Care; Pond; Seal; Tithes; see those titles.

Great bodily injury. Bodily injury which involves a substantial risk of death, serious permanent disfigurement, or protracted loss or impairment of function of any part of an organ of the body. People v. Reed, Colo.App., 696 P.2d 806, 808. Term as used in statute stating when an assault and battery becomes aggravated, is not susceptible of precise definition, but implies an injury of a graver and more serious character than ordinary battery. Herrington v. State, Okl.Cr., 352 P.2d 931, 933.

Great charter. Magna Charta (q.v.).
Great-grandchildren. Children of one's grandchildren.

Great Law, The. "The Body of Laws of the Province of Pennsylvania and Territories thereunto belonging. Past at an Assembly held at Chester alias Upland, the 7th day of the tenth month, called 'December,' 1682." This was the first code of laws established in Pennsylvania, and is justly celebrated for the provision in its first chapter for liberty of conscience.

Great tithes. In ecclesiastical law, the more valuable tithes: as, corn, hay, and wood. See Tithes.

For gifts made within three years of death, any gift tax paid on the transfer is added to the gross estate. I.R.C. § 2035. Process by which U.S. corporations add pre-foreign tax income in federal income tax returns in order to acquire credit against federal taxes for foreign income taxes paid.

Grouping of contacts. In conflict of laws, when choice-of-law issue arises, court will apply the law of the jurisdiction most intimately concerned with the outcome of the litigation; also known as "center of gravity" approach or doctrine. Industrial Credit Co. v. J. A. D. Const. Co., 29 A.D.2d 952, 289 N.Y.S.2d 243. See also Center of gravity doctrine.

Group life insurance. A contract of group life insurance is one between insurer and employer for benefit of employees. Crawford v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., Mo. App., 167 S.W.2d 915, 924. In its nature, group life insurance is similar, if not identical, with that form of insurance known as "term" life insurance. See Group policy; Insurance.

Group libel. See Libel.

Group policy. A contract of insurance whereby persons, usually employees of a business enterprise, are insured in consideration of a determined payment per period, so long as the person remains in employment and the premiums are paid. The employer holds a master policy from the insurer, and each employee participant holds a certificate as evidence of coverage. Martin v. Prier Brass Mfg. Co., Mo.App., 710 S.W.2d 466, 469. See also Insurance.

Growing crop. A crop in the process of growth; though decisions differ as to whether such must be above the surface of the soil, and as to whether matured crops are "growing" crops. The cases as well differ as to whether pasture grass is a growing crop. Growing crops are personal property. Estate of Ruwe v. Ruwe, 190 Neb. 663, 211 N.W.2d 610, 613.

Growth half-penny. In old English law, a rate paid in some places for the tithe of every fat beast, ox, or other unfruitful cattle.

Growth stock. Type of security characterized by the prospect of increase in market value, but not necessarily with a good dividend return.

Gruarii /gru-wérii-yay/. The principal officers of a forest.

Grub stake. In mining law, a contract between two parties by which one undertakes to furnish the necessary provisions, tools, and other supplies, and the other to prospect for and locate mineral lands and stake out mining claims thereon, the interest in the property thus acquired inuring to the benefit of both parties, either equally or in such proportion as their agreement may fix.

G.S.A. General Services Administration.

Guadalupe Hidalgo, Treaty of /triyd-y yhîydâlgow/. A treaty between the United States and Mexico, terminating the Mexican War, dated February 2, 1848. See Gadsden Purchase.

Guadia /gwa-di-ya/. In old European law, a pledge. A custom. Spelled also "wadia."
Guarantee. One to whom a guaranty is made. This word is also used, as a noun, to denote the contract of guarantee or the obligation of a guarantor, and, as a verb, to denote the action of assuming the responsibilities of a guarantor.

Guarantee clause. That provision in a contract, deed, mortgage, etc. by which one person promises to pay the obligation of another. Also, the provision in Art. IV, § 4, U.S.Const., in which the federal government guarantees to every state a republican form of government and the protection of the federal government in the event of domestic violence.

Guaranteed annual wage. Provision in labor agreement in which employer agrees to pay an employee a certain basic sum of money each year, even though the employee has an hourly or weekly salary arrangement.

Guaranteed payment. See Payment guaranteed.

Guaranteed sale. A guarantee in a real estate listing agreement which states that after a specified length of time, if the subject property has not been sold, the real estate firm will buy it, under particular terms and conditions, usually at a substantial discount from the listed price.

Guaranteed stock. See Stock.

Guarantee stock. Guarantee stock of a building and loan association is a fixed non-withdrawal investment which guarantees to all other investors in the association a fixed rate of dividend or interest. Stumph v. Wheat Belt Building & Loan Ass'n of Pratt, 148 Kan. 25, 79 P.2d 896, 899.

Guarantor. One who makes a guaranty. Person who becomes secondarily liable for another's debt or performance in contrast to a strict surety who is primarily liable with the principal debtor. One who promises to answer for a debt, default or miscarriage of another. Superior Wholesale Elec. Co. v. Cameron, 264 Cal.App.2d 488, 70 Cal.Rptr. 636, 638. See also Surety.

For purposes of U.C.C. Article 3, a party to an instrument who, by adding words to her signature, makes either a guaranty of collectibility or a guaranty of payment. A guarantor is usually also an accommodation party.

Guaranty, v. To undertake collaboratively to answer for the payment of another's debt or the performance of another's duty, liability, or obligation; to assume the responsibility of a guarantor; to warrant. See Guaranty, n.

Guaranty, n. A collateral agreement for performance of another's undertaking. An agreement in which the guarantor agrees to satisfy the debt of another (the debtor), only if and when the debtor fails to repay (secondarily liable). An undertaking or promise that is collateral to primary or principal obligation and that binds guarantor to performance in event of nonperformance by the principal obligor. Commercial Credit Corp. v. Chisholm Bros. Farm Equipment Co., 96 Idaho 194, 525 P.2d 976, 978.

A promise to answer for payment of debt or performance of obligation if person liable in first instance fails to make payment or perform obligation. An undertaking by one person to be answerable for the payment of some debt, or the due performance of some contract or duty, by another person, who himself remains liable to pay or perform the same. A promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person. See Guaranty of payment.

A guaranty is a contract that some particular thing shall be done exactly as it is agreed to be done, whether it is to be done by one person or another, and whether there be a prior or principal contractor or not. A guarantor of a bill or note is said to be one who engages that the note shall be paid, but is not an indorser or surety.

The contract of a guarantor is the guarantor's own separate contract. It is in the nature of a warranty by guarantor that the thing guaranteed to be done by the principal shall be done, not merely an engagement jointly with the principal to do the thing. See Suretyship, contract of; also Collateral guaranty, below.

Synonyms

The terms guaranty and suretyship are sometimes used interchangeably; but they should not be confounded. The distinction between contract of suretyship and contract of guaranty is whether or not the undertaking is a joint undertaking with the principal or a separate and distinct contract; if it is the former it is one of "suretyship", and if the latter, it is one of "guaranty". General Finance Corp. of Atlanta, Northeast v. Welborn, 98 Ga.App. 280, 105 S.E.2d 386, 389.

Guaranty and warranty are derived from the same root, and are in fact etymologically the same word, the "g" of the Norman French being interchangeable with the English "w." They are often used colloquially and in commercial transactions as having the same significance, as where a piece of machinery or the produce of an estate is "guaranteed" for a term of years, "warranted" being the more appropriate term in such a case. A distinction is also sometimes made in commercial usage, by which the term "guaranty" is understood as a collateral warranty (often a conditional one) against some default or event in the future, while the term "warranty" is taken as meaning an absolute undertaking in personam, against the defect, or for the quantity or quality contemplated by the parties in the subject-matter of the contract. But in strict legal usage the two terms are widely distinguished in this, that a warranty is an absolute undertaking or liability on the part of the warrantor, and the contract is void unless it is strictly and literally performed, while a guaranty is a promise, entirely collateral to the original contract, and not imposing any primary liability on the guarantor, but binding him to be answerable for the failure or default of another. See Warranty.

Absolute guaranty. An unconditional undertaking by a guarantor that debtor will pay debt or perform the obligation. An unconditional promise of payment or Collateral guaranty. A contract by which the guarantor undertakes, in case the principal fails to do what he has promised or undertaken to do, to pay damages for such failure; distinguished from an engagement of suretyship in this respect, that a surety undertakes to do the very thing which the principal has promised to do, in case the latter defaults.

Conditional guaranty. One which depends upon some extraneous event, beyond the mere default of the principal, and generally upon notice of the guaranty, notice of the principal's default, and reasonable diligence in exhausting proper remedies against the principal. One which is not immediately enforceable against the guarantor upon default of the principal but one in which the creditor must take some action in order that liability arise. Shur–Gain Feed Division William Davies Co., Inc. v. Huntsville Production Credit Ass'n, Ala.Civ.App., 372 So.2d 1317, 1320.

Continuing guaranty. A guaranty which is not limited to a particular transaction but which is intended to cover future transactions until revoked. Farmers–People Bank v. Clemler, Tenn., 519 S.W.2d 801, 805. One relating to a future liability of the principal, under successive transactions, which either continue the principal's liability or from time to time renew it after it has been satisfied.

Special guaranty. A guaranty which is available only to the particular person to whom it is offered or addressed; as distinguished from a general guaranty, which will operate in favor of any person who may accept it.

Guaranty company. A corporation authorized to transact the business of entering into contracts of guaranty and suretyship; as one which, for fixed premiums, becomes surety on judicial bonds, fidelity bonds, and the like.

Guaranty bond. See Bond.

Guaranty clause. See Guarantee clause.

Guaranty fund. Statutes have made provision for depositors’ guaranty funds to be raised, in whole or in part, by assessments on banks and to be used to pay the depositors of an insolvent bank. Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U.S. 104, 31 S.Ct. 186, 55 L.Ed. 112; Shallenberger v. Bank, 219 U.S. 114, 31 S.Ct. 189, 55 L.Ed. 117; Assaria State Bank v. Dolley, 219 U.S. 121, 31 S.Ct. 189, 55 L.Ed. 123; Abilenenat. Bank v. Dolley, 228 U.S. 1, 33 S.Ct. 409, 57 L.Ed. 707. Most bank deposits are insured to a specified limit by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (q.v.).

Guaranty insurance. See Insurance.

Guaranty of payment. A party to an instrument who, by adding "payment guaranteed" or equivalent words to signature, affects contract of liability on the instrument such that, regardless of the capacity in which he signs, he “engages that if the instrument is not paid when due he will pay it according to its tenor without resort by the holder to any other party.” U.C.C. § 3–416(1). A person who makes a guaranty of payment is a guarantor, specifically a guarantor of payment.

Guardian. A state of wardship.

Guardian. A person lawfully invested with the power, and charged with the duty, of taking care of the person and managing the property and rights of another person, who, for defect of age, understanding, or self-control, is considered incapable of administering his own affairs. One who legally has responsibility for the care and management of the person, or the estate, or both, of a child during its minority. See also Next friend.

Classification

A testamentary guardian is one appointed by the deed or last will of the child’s father or mother, while a guardian by election is one chosen by the infant in a case where he or she would otherwise be without one.

A general guardian is one who has the general care and control of the person and estate of a ward; while a special guardian is one who has special or limited powers and duties with respect to a ward, e.g., a guardian who has the custody of the estate but not of the person, or vice versa, or a guardian ad litem.

A domestic guardian is one appointed at the place where the ward is legally domiciled; while a foreign guardian derives authority from appointment by the courts of another state, and generally has charge only of such property as may be located within the jurisdiction of the power appointing him.

A guardian ad litem is a special guardian appointed by the court in which a particular litigation is pending to represent an infant, ward or unborn person in that particular litigation, and the status of guardian ad litem exists only in that specific litigation in which the appointment occurs. Bowen v. Sonnenburg, Ind.App., 411 N.E.2d 390, 396.

A guardian by estoppel is one who assumes to act as guardian without legal authority; similar to a guardian de son tort (see below).

A guardian by nature, at common law, is the father, and, on his death, the mother, of a child. Daniels v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 135 Pa.Super. 450, 5 A.2d 608, 611. This guardianship extends only to the custody of the person of the child to the age of majority. Sometimes called "natural guardian". The common law preference for the father has been changed by statute in many states; e.g., in New York mothers and fathers are now equal in their rights of guardianship over their children. N.Y. Dom. Rel. L. § 81.

A guardian by statute or testamentary guardian is a guardian appointed for a child by the deed or last will of the father, and who has the custody both of his person and estate until the attainment of full age. This kind of guardianship is founded on the statute of 12 Car. II, c. 24, and has been extensively adopted in this country. 1 Bl.Comm. 462.
A guardian for nurture is the father, or, at his decease, the mother, of a child. This kind of guardianship at common law extended only to the person, and ended when the infant arrived at the age of fourteen. 1 Bl.Comm. 461.

With respect to a child born out of wedlock, the child's mother was the guardian by nurture and had the sole right to the custody and control of her child. Morey v. Pepin, Minn., 375 N.W.2d 19. Today, statutes have superseded the common law in this regard.

A guardian de son tort, sometimes described as "quasi guardian" or "guardian by estoppel," is one who assumes to act as guardian without valid authority. Similar to guardian by estoppel (see above).

Guardian in chivalry. In the tenure by knight's service, in the feudal law, if the heir of the feud was under the age of twenty-one, being a male, or fourteen, being a female, the lord was entitled to the wardship (and marriage) of the heir, and was called the "guardian in chivalry." This wardship consisted in having the custody of the body and lands of such heir, without any account of the profits. 2 Bl.Comm. 67.

Guardian in socage. At the common law, this was a species of guardian who had the custody of lands coming to the infant by descent, as also of the infant's person, until the latter reached the age of fourteen. Such guardian was always "the next of kin to whom the inheritance cannot possibly descend." 1 Bl.Comm. 461.

Natural guardian. At common law, the father of the child, or the mother if the father be dead. In most states, statutes have superseded this rule and mothers and fathers are equal in their rights of guardianship over their children. E.g., N.Y.Dom.Rel.L. § 81.

Guardian of the peace /gárðiýéyn as/ av ða piýis/. A ward¬en or conservator of the peace.

Guardian of the poor. In English law, a person elected by the ratepayers of a parish to have the charge and management of the parish work-house or union.

Guardian of the spiritualities /gárðiýéyn av ða spiri¬tyuwélàstýiz/. In England, the person to whom the spiritual jurisdiction of any diocese is committed during the vacancy of the see.

Guardian of the temporalities /gárðiýéyn av ða témparéástýiz/. The person to whose custody a vacant see or abbey was committed by the crown.

Guardian or warden of the cinque ports /gárðiýéyn av ða slíŋg pórtas/ wórdan/. A magistrate who has the jurisdiction of the ports or havens which are called the "Cinque Ports" (q.v.). This office was first created in England, in imitation of the Roman policy, to strengthen the sea-coasts against enemies, etc.

Guardianship. The office, duty, or authority of a guardian. Also the relation subsisting between guardian and ward. A legal arrangement under which one person (a guardian) has the legal right and duty to care for another (the ward) and his or her property. A guardianship is established because of the ward's inability to legally act on his or her own behalf [e.g., because of minority (he or she is not of age) or mental or physical incapacity]. See Guardian; Ward.

Guardianus /gárdiyéynas/. A guardian, warden, or keeper.

Guarentigio /gárentiyhiyow/. In Spanish law, a written authorization to a court to enforce the performance of an agreement in the same manner as if it had been decreed upon regular legal proceedings.

Guarnimentum /gárménýéntum/. In old European law, a provision of necessary things. A furnishing or garnishment.

Guastald. In old English law, one who had the custody of the royal mansions.

Gubernator /gyuwbarneytar/. Lat. In Roman law, the pilot or steersman of a ship.

Guerra, guerre /ger(a)/. War.

Guest. A person receiving lodging for pay at an inn, motel, or hotel on general undertaking of keeper there¬of. A traveler who lodges with the consent of the keeper or owner.

Guest is a person who is received and entertained at one's home, club, etc., and who is not a regular member. Stadelmann v. Glen Falls Ins. Co. of Glen Falls, 5 Mich.App. 536, 147 N.W.2d 460, 463. See also Social guest.

A "guest" in an automobile is one who takes ride in automobile driven by another person, merely for his own pleasure or on his own business, and without making any return or conferring any benefit on automobile driver. Guest is used to denote one whom owner or possessor of vehicle invites or permits to ride with him as gratuity, without any financial return except such slight benefits as are customarily extended as part of ordinary courtesies of road. Rothwell v. Transmeier, 206 Kan. 199, 477 P.2d 960, 963, 966. See Guest statute.

Business guest. See Business.

Guest statute. Many states have statutes referred to as "automobile guest statutes," which provide that operators of automobiles shall only be liable for injuries to guests carried gratuitously for gross or willful negligence, willful or wanton misconduct, or the like, with a further provision in some statutes continuing liability for want of ordinary care in case of hosts operating automobiles while intoxicated. In recent years however there has been a trend towards repealing or delimiting such statutes.

While a typical guest statute excludes all non-paying guests from suing the host-driver or owner for damages arising out of the host-driver's ordinary negligence, certain statutes are more narrow in their scope; e.g. precluding only those guests without payment who are related within the second degree of consanguinity or affinity to the owner or operator from suing.
A "guest," under provisions of guest statute, is a recipient of the voluntary hospitality of the driver or owner, that is, one who is invited or permitted by owner or possessor of automobile to ride with owner-possessor as a gratuity. Walker v. Bounds, Tex.Civ.App., 510 S.W.2d 392, 394.

Guidage /gáýdaj/. In old English law, that which was given for safe conduct through a strange territory, or another's territory. The office of guiding of travelers through dangerous and unknown ways.

Guidon de la mer /giydown do la mer/. The name of a treatise on maritime law, by an unknown author, supposed to have been written about 1671 at Rouen, and considered, in continental Europe, as a work of high authority.

Guild. A voluntary association of persons, pursuing the same trade, art, profession or business, such as printers, goldsmiths, artists, wool merchants, etc., united under a distinct organization of their own, analogous to that of a corporation, regulating the affairs of their trade or business by their own laws and rules, and aiming, by cooperation and organization, to protect and promote the interests of their common vocation. Goodman v. Federal Trade Commission, C.A.9, 244 F.2d 584, 594.

In medieval history these fraternities or guilds played an important part in the government of some states; as at Florence, in the thirteenth and following centuries, where they chose the council of government of the city. The word is said to be derived from the Anglo-Saxon "gild" or "geld," a tax or tribute, because each member of the society was required to pay a tax towards its support.

Guildhall. The hall or place of meeting of a guild, or gild.

The place of meeting of a municipal corporation. The mercantile or commercial gilds of the Saxons are supposed to have given rise to the present municipal corporations of England, whose place of meeting is still called the "Guildhall."

Guildhall sittings. The sittings held in the Guildhall of the city of London for city of London causes.

Guild rents. In England, rents payable to the crown by guilds, and came to the crown at the general dissolution of the monasteries.

Guidotin /gilstyun/glystyn/. An instrument for decapitation, used in France for the infliction of the death penalty on convicted criminals, consisting, essentially, of a heavy and weighted knife-blade moving perpendicularly between grooved posts, which is made to fall from a considerable height upon the neck of the sufferer, immovably fixed in position to receive the impact.

Guilt. In criminal law, that quality which imparts criminality to a motive or act, and renders the person amenable to punishment by the law. Responsibility for offense. That disposition to violate the law which has manifested itself by some act already done. The opposite of innocence.

Guilty verdict. Formal pronouncement by jury that they adjudge the defendant guilty of the offense charged.

Guilty plea. Formal admission in court as to guilt of having committed criminal act charged which a defendant may make if he or she does so intelligently and voluntarily; i.e., accused can only make such plea after he or she has been fully advised of rights and has determined that accused understands such rights and is making plea voluntarily. Boykin v. Alabama, 395 U.S. 288, 89 S.Ct. 1709, 23 L.Ed.2d 274. Fed.R.Crim.P. 11. It is equivalent to and is binding as a conviction after trial on the merits, and it has the same effect in law as a verdict of guilt and authorizes imposition of punishment prescribed by law. State v. Cantrell, 250 S.C. 376, 158 S.E.2d 189, 191. See also Alford plea; Nolo contendere; Plea; Plea bargaining.

Gun. Portable firearm such as a rifle, pistol, revolver, shotgun, carbine, etc. See also Firearm.

Gun control laws. Laws which regulate the sale and use of guns and firearms in a variety of ways such as prohibitions against carrying concealed weapons or requiring a license to buy or possess a handgun or any type of firearm. e.g. N.Y. Penal Law §§ 265.11, 265.12; M.G.L.A. (Mass.) Ch. 140; 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 921-928.

Gwalstow. A place of execution.

Gwayf /gwéyf/. In old English law, waif, or waived; that which has been stolen and afterwards dropped in the highway for fear of a discovery.

Gyltwite, or guiltwit /giltwit/. Sax. Compensation for conduct; justly chargeable with a crime; responsible for a crime or tort or other offense or fault. The word is "evil," "wrongdoing," or "culpability." Hilkert v. Canning, 58 Ariz. 290, 119 P.2d 233, 236.

Gyl twite /giltwit/ /giltwat/. Sax. Compensation for conduct; justly chargeable with a crime; responsible for a crime or tort or other offense or fault. The word is "evil," "wrongdoing," or "culpability." Hilkert v. Canning, 58 Ariz. 290, 119 P.2d 233, 236.

Gynecocracy. Government by a woman; a state in which women are legally capable of the supreme command; e.g. in Great Britain (Queen).}

Gyves /jáyv/. Fetters or shackles for the legs.
This letter, as an abbreviation, stands for Henry (a king of that name) in the citation of English statutes. In the Year Books, it is used as an abbreviation for Hilary term. In tax assessments and other such official records, "h" may be used as an abbreviation for "house". Also, abbreviation for House, as in House of Representatives, House Report, House Bill.

H.A. An abbreviation for hoc anno, this year, in this year.

Habeas, or have. Lat. A form of the salutatory expression "Ave" (hail) in the titles of the constitutions of the Theodosian and Justinian Codes.

Habeas corpora in the Year Books, it is used as an abbreviation for habeas corpus, a writ which is issued to remove a person from an inferior court to a superior court having jurisdiction, there to be disposed of. It is also called "habeas corpus cum causa."

Habeas corpus ad delibertandum et recipiendum. A writ which is issued to remove a person in custody for an action, and the plaintiff desirous to bring him up to the court into that of another, in order that he may be sued and answer the action in the latter.

Habeas corpus ad respondendum. A writ which is usually employed in civil cases to remove a person out of the custody of one court into that of another, in order that he may be sued and answer the action in the latter.

Habeas corpus ad satisfaciendum. In English practice, a writ which issues when a prisoner has had judgment against him in an action, and the plaintiff is desirous to bring him up to some superior court, to charge him with process of execution.

Habeas corpus acts. The English statute of 31 Car. II, c. 2, is the original and prominent habeas corpus act. It was amended and supplemented by St. 56 Geo. III, c. 100. Similar statutes have been enacted in all the United States. This act is regarded as the great constitutional guaranty of personal liberty. See also Post-conviction remedies with respect to review of sentence of federal prisoner.

Habeas corpus ad subjiciendum. A judicial proceeding instituted to determine whether a defendant is being unlawfully deprived of his or her liberty. It is not an appropriate proceeding for appeal-like review of discretionary decisions of a lower court. See also Habeas corpus ad prossequendum. A writ which is issued to remove a person who is confined for some other offense before the issuing court for trial. U. S. v. Cogdell, C.A., 585 F. 2d 1130, 1132, 190 U.S.App.D.C. 185.

Habeas corpus ad respondendum. A writ which is used in civil cases to remove a person out of the custody of one court into that of another, in order that he may be sued and answer the action in the latter.

Habeas corpus ad satisfaciendum. In English practice, a writ which issues when a prisoner has had judgment against him in an action, and the plaintiff is desirous to bring him up to some superior court, to charge him with process of execution.

Habeas corpus ad subjiciendum. A writ directed to the person detaining another, and commanding him to produce the body of the prisoner, or person detained. This is the most common form of habeas corpus writ, the purpose of which is to test the legality of the detention or imprisonment; not whether he is guilty or innocent. This writ is

This is the well-known remedy in England and the United States for deliverance from illegal confinement, called by Sir William Blackstone the most celebrated writ in the English law, and the great and efficacious writ in all manner of illegal confinement. 3 Bl.Comm. 129. The “great writ of liberty,” issuing at common law out of courts of Chancery, King’s Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer.

Habeas corpus ad testificandum /hέbibiβας κόρπος ἀν ἀναφαφακάδεκαμ/. The writ, meaning “you have the body to testify”, used to bring up a prisoner detained in a jail or prison to give evidence before the court. Hottle v. District Court in and for Clinton County, 233 Iowa 904, 11 N.W.2d 30, 34; 3 Bl.Comm. 130.

Habeas corpus cum causa /hέbibiβας κόρπος καμ κόκα/. (You have the body, with the cause.) Another name for the writ of habeas corpus ad faciendum et recipiendum (q.v.).

Habemus optimum testem, confitentem reum /hαβιβιμας ὁπταμμα τέσταμ, κακάφανταμ ριγάμ/. We have the best witness,—a confessing defendant.

Habendum clause /habενδαμ ετ τανενδαμ/. Portion of deed beginning with the words “To have and to hold”. Banin v. Peck, 266 App.Div. 209, 41 N.Y. S.2d 668, 670. The clause usually following the granting part of the premises of a deed, which defines the extent of the ownership in the thing granted to be held and enjoyed by the grantee. New York Indians v. U. S., 170 U.S. 1, 18 S.Ct. 531, 42 L.Ed. 927. The office of the “habendum” is properly to determine what estate or interest is granted by the deed, though office may be performed by the premises, in which case the habendum may lessen, enlarge, explain, or qualify, but not totally contradict or be repugnant to, estate granted in the premises. Claridge v. Phelps, 105 Ind.App. 344, 11 N.E.2d 503, 504.

Habendum et tenendum /habενδαμ ετ τανενδαμ/. In old conveyancing “to have and to hold”. Formal words in deeds of land from a very early period.

Habentes homines /habéntyiz hómmiyəz/. In old English law, rich men; literally, having men. The same writ in all manner of illegal confinement. 3 Bl.Comm. 129. The “great writ of liberty,” issuing at common law out of courts of Chancery, King’s Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer.

Habere facias visum /habiriβίας fεύς(βί)ιας vεύζαμαμ/. Lat. That you cause to have a view. The writ of execution in real actions, directing the sheriff to cause the demandant to have seisin of the lands recovered. It was the proper process for giving seisin of a freehold, as distinguished from a chattel interest in lands.

Habere facias visum /habiriβίας fεύς(βί)ιας vεύζαμαμ/. Lat. That you cause to have a view. A writ to cause the sheriffs to take a view of lands or tenements.

Habere licere /habiriβίας lαςβίας/. Lat. In Roman law, to allow [one] to have [possession]. This phrase denoted the duty of the seller of property to allow the purchaser to have the possession and enjoyment. For a breach of this duty, an actio ex empto might be maintained.

Habeto tihi res tuas /hαβιτο τιβα τιβα τιβα τιβα τιβα τιβα τιβα τιβα τιβα/. Lat. Have or take your effects to yourself. One of the old Roman forms of divorcing a wife.

Habilis /hαβιβιλας/. Lat. Fit; suitable; active; useful (of a servant). Proved; authentic (of Book of Saints). Fixed; stable (of authority of the king).

Habit. A disposition or condition of the body or mind acquired by custom or a usual repetition of the same act or function. The customary conduct, to pursue which one has acquired a tendency, from frequent repetition of the same acts. Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. v. Foley, 105 U.S. 350, 26 L.Ed. 1055. A regular practice of meeting a particular kind of situation with a certain type of conduct, or a reflex behavior in a specific set of circumstances. Frase v. Henry, C.A.Kan., 44 F.2d 1228, 1232. Course of behavior of a person regularly repeated in like circumstances. Evidence of a specific habit may be admissible to show specific conduct or acts within the sphere of the developed habit. Fed.Evid. R. 406. See also Custom and usage; Habitual.

Habitable. See Habitability.

Habitability. Condition of premises which permits inhabitant to live free of serious defects to health and safety.

Warranty of habitability. Under “implied warranty of habitability,” applicable to new housing, the builder-vendor warrants that he has complied with the building code of the area in which the structure is located and that the residence was built in a workmanlike manner and is suitable for habitation. Duncan v. Schuster-Graham Homes, Inc., 39 Colo.App. 92, 563 P.2d 976, 977. In most states, either by statute or case law, every landlord is held to impliedly warrant that the residential premises rented are fit for human habitation (i.e. free of violations of building and sanitary codes) at the time of the inception of the tenancy, and will continue as such during the term. Boston Housing Authority v. Hemingway et al., 363 Mass. 184, 293 N.E.2d 831; Hinson v. Delis, 26 Cal.App.3d 62, 102 Cal.Rptr. 681. See Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Law, § 2.104. See also Constructive eviction; Home Owners Warranty.

Habitable repair. A covenant by a lessee to “put the premises into habitable repair” binds him to put them into such a state that they may be occupied, not only with safety, but with reasonable comfort, for the purposes for which they are taken. See Habitability.

It is difficult to give an exact definition of "habitancy." In general terms, one may be designated as an "inhabitant" of that place which constitutes the principal seat of his residence, of his business, pursuits, connections, attachments, and of his political and municipal relations. The term, therefore, embraces the fact of residence at a place, together with the intent to regard it and make it a home. The act and intent must concur.

See also Domicile; Residence.

Habitant. Fr. In French and Canadian law, a resident tenant; a settler; a tenant who kept hearth and home on the seigniory. A native of Canada of French descent, particularly of the peasant or farming class.

Habitation. Place of abode; dwelling place; residence.

The right of dwelling; the right of free residence in another's house.

Habitation. Place of abode; dwelling place; residence.

In the civil law, the right of a person to live in the house of another without prejudice to the property. It differed from a usufruct, in that the usufructuary might apply the house to any purpose, as of a business; whereas the party having the right of habitation could only use it for the residence of himself and family.

See Domicile; Habitancy; Residence.

Habitual. Customary, usual, of the nature of a habit. Synonyms are customary, common, regular; while its antonyms are unusual, unwonted, extraordinary, rare. Illinois Bankers Life Ass'n v. Theodore, 47 Ariz. 314, 55 P.2d 806, 811. Formed or acquired by or resulting from habit; frequent use or custom. See also Habit.

Habitual criminal. A recidivist (q.v.). A legal category created by statute in many states by which more severe penalties can be imposed on offenders who have multiple felony convictions. In general, habitual offender statutes (which differ from state-to-state) impose greater sentences on offender for repeated crimes, with life imprisonment being imposed upon commission of several felonies. (see e.g. 21 U.S.C.A. § 848 repeat drug offenders). The criminal history of a defendant is an important factor in imposing sentence under federal sentencing guidelines. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3553. See also Model Penal Code § 7.03.

Habitual drunkenness or intoxication. One who frequently and repeatedly becomes intoxicated by excessive indulgence in intoxicating liquor so as to acquire a fixed habit and an involuntary tendency to become intoxicated as often as the temptation is presented, even though he remains sober for days or even weeks at a time. A person given to inebriety or the excessive use of intoxicating drink, who has lost the power or the will, by frequent indulgence, to control his appetite for it. The custom or habit of getting drunk; the constant indulgence in stimulants, whereby intoxication is produced; not the ordinary use, but the habitual use of them; the habit should be actual and confirmed, but need not be continuous, or even of daily occurrence. That degree of intemperance from the use of intoxicating drinks which disqualifies the person a great portion of the time from properly attending to business, or which would reasonably inflict a course of great mental anguish upon the innocent party.

Habitually. Customarily; by frequent practice or use. It does not mean entirely or exclusively. See Habitual.

Hacienda /h(ə)s(i)yénda/(h)osiyénda/. In Spanish law, the public domain; the royal estate; the aggregate wealth of the state. The science of administering the national wealth; public economy.

Also an estate or farm belonging to a private person. A royal estate.

Had. As used in a statute providing that no suit, action or proceeding to foreclose a mortgage or trust deed shall be had or maintained, "had" means commenced or begun.

Hadbote /h(ə)dëbët/. In Saxon law, a tax or mulct.

Hadley v. Baxendale, rule of. Under the rule of Hadley v. Baxendale, "special" or "consequential" damages (as opposed to "general" damages which so obviously result from a breach that all contracting parties are deemed to have contemplated them) will only be awarded if they were in the parties' contemplation, at the time of contracting, as a probable consequence of a breach of contract. See also Damages (Consequential damages).

Hec est conventio /hi'yk ést kanvëns(i)yow/. Lat. This is an agreement. Words with which agreements anciently commenced.

Hec est finalis concordia /hi'yk ést fanëylas kankórd(i)ya/. L. Lat. This is the final agreement. The words with which the foot of a fine commenced.

Hereda /hariyda/. In Gothic law, a tribunal answering to the English court-leet or hundred court.

Herede abducto /hariydiy abdáktow/. An ancient writ that lay for the lord, who, having by right the wardship of his tenant under age, could not obtain his person, the same being carried away by another person.

Herede deliberando alteri qui habet custodium terræ /hariydiy dalbirandow óltaray kwá hybot kástovdiysi tóthriy/. An ancient writ, directed to the sheriff, to require one that had the body of an heir, being in ward, to deliver him to the person whose ward he was by reason of his land.

Heredem deus facit, non homo /hariydam diyas fēysat, nōn hōwmow/. God makes the heir, not man.

Herede rapto /hariydiy rāptow/. An ancient writ that lay for the ravishment of the lord’s ward.

Heredes /hariydiyz/. Lat. In the civil law, heirs. The plural of hares (q.v.).

Heredes proximi /hariydiyz próksmay/. Nearest or next heirs. The children or descendants of the deceased.

Heredes remotiores /hariydiyz ramōwshiýoyriyz/. More remote heirs. The kinsmen other than children or descendants.

Heredes sui et necessarii /hariydiyz syúway èt nēssēriyay/. In Roman law, own and necessary heirs; i.e., the lineal descendants of the estate-leaver. They were called “necessary” heirs, because it was the law that made them heirs, and not the choice of either the decedent or themselves. But since this was also true of slaves (when named “heirs” in the will) the former class was designated “sui et necessarii,” by way of distinction, the word “sui” denoting that the necessity arose from their relationship to the decedent.

Heredipeta /hiridiptay/. Lat. In old English law, a seeker of an inheritance; hence, the next heir to lands.

Heredipeta suo propinquo vel extraneo periculooso sane custodi nullus committatur /hiridiptay syůyow prōpiŋkwo wēl ekstrēniniyow parikyōlōwsw seyny kastōwday nāls kōmōtēytor/. To the next heir, whether a relation or a stranger certainly a dangerous guardian, let no one be committed.

Hereditas /harēdatas/. In Roman law, the hereditas was a universal succession by law to any deceased person, whether such person had died testate or intestate, and whether in trust (ex fideicommisso) for another or not. The like succession according to Praetorian law was bonorum possessio.

In old English law, an estate transmissible by descent; an inheritance.

Hereditas, alia corporalis, alia incorporalis; corporalis est, quæ tangit potest et videri; incorporalis quæ tangi non potest nec videri /harēdatas ēyliyà kōrpērēyay ēyliyay ìnkōrpērēyay; kōrpērēyay ēst, kwīy tēnjay pówstadt ēt vādiyay; ìnkōrpērēyay kwīy tēnjay nōn pówstadt nēk vādiyay/. An inheritance is either corporeal or incorporeal. Corporeal is that which can be touched and seen; incorporeal, that which can neither be touched nor seen.

Hereditas damnosa /harēdatas dāmmɔwswa/. A burdensome inheritance; one which would be a burden instead of a benefit, that is, the debts to be paid by the heir would exceed the assets.

Hereditas est successio in universum jus quod de functus habuerit /harēdatas ēst saksés(h)xiyow in yuwnawswarm jās kwōd dafṣat̂as habiyūwarst/. Inheritance is the succession to every right which the deceased had.

Hereditas jacens /harēdatas jēysan/. In civil law, a prostrate or vacant inheritance. The inheritance left to a voluntary heir was so called so long as he had not manifested, either expressly or by silence, his acceptance or refusal of the inheritance. So long as no one had acquired the inheritance, it was termed “hereditas jacens”; and this, by a legal fiction, represented the person of the decedent. The estate of a person deceased, where the owner left no heirs or legatee to take it, called also “caduca”; an escheated estate. The term has also been used in English law to signify an estate in abeyance; that is, after the ancestor’s death, and before assumption of heir. An inheritance without legal owner, and therefore open to the first occupant.

Hereditas legitima /harēdatas lajítama/. A succession or inheritance devolving by operation of law (intestate succession) rather than by the will of the decedent.

Hereditas lucutoosa /harēdatas līktuywówswa/. A sad or mournful inheritance or succession; as that of a parent to the estate of a child, which was regarded as disturbing the natural order of mortality (turbato ordine mortalitatis). It was sometimes termed tristis successio.

Hereditas nihil aliud est, quam successio in universum jus, quod de functus habuerit /harēdatas nāy(h)al ālīyay ēst, kwām saksēsh(i)yow in yuwnawswarm jās, kwōd dafṣat̂as habiyūwarst/. The right of inheritance is nothing else than the faculty of succeeding to all the rights of the deceased.

Hereditas nunquam ascendit /harēdatas nāŋkwam asēndat/. An inheritance never ascends. 2 Bl.Comm. 211. A maxim of feudal origin, and which invariably prevailed in the law of England down to the passage of the statute 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 106, § 6, by which it was abrogated.

Hereditas testamentaria /harēdatas tēstamentérya/. Testamentary inheritance, that is, succession to an estate under and according to the last will and testament of the decedent.

Heredum appellatōne veniunt heredes heredum in infinitum /hariydam āpālēsхиyowny vēniyant hariydiyz hariydam in infaŋyaytay/. By the title of heirs, come the heirs of heirs to infinity.

Hares /hiriyz/. In Roman law, the heir, or universal successor in the event of death. The heir is he who actively or passively succeeds to the entire property of the estate-leaver. He is not only the successor to the rights and claims, but also to the estate-leaver’s debts, and in relation to his estate is to be regarded as the identical person of the estate-leaver, inasmuch as he represents him in all his active and passive relations to his estate.

The institution of the hares was the essential characteristic of a testament: if this was not done, the instrument was called a codicillus. The office, powers, and duties of the hares, in Roman law, were much more closely assimilated to those of a modern executor than to those of an heir at law. Hence "heir" is not at all an accurate translation of "haeres," unless it be understood in a special technical sense.

In Common law, an heir; to whom lands, tenements, or hereditaments by the act of God and right of blood to descend, of some estate of inheritance.

Heres astrarius /hiriyz astréryas/. In old English law, an heir in actual possession of the house of his ancestor.

Heres de facto /hiriyz dy fékctow/. In old English law, heir from fact; that is, from the disseisin or other act of his ancestor, without or against right. An heir in fact, as distinguished from an heir de jure, or by law.

Heres est alter ipse, et filius est pars patris /hiriyz est oltar ipisy et filiyas, est pàrz pètras/. An heir is another self, and a son is part of the father.

Heres est aut jure proprietatis aut jure representationis /hiriyz est oṭr jùry prapyaystéytas oṭ jùry répraproyshiyòwnas/. An heir is either by right of property, or right of representation.

Heres est cadem persona cum antecessore /hiriyz est iyéyam parsòwno kàn àntassòriy/. An heir is the same person with his ancestor.

Heres est nomen collectivum /hiriyz est nòwman kòlôktyàvam/. "Heir" is a collective name or noun.

Heres est nomen juris; filius est nomen naturae /hiriyz est nòwman juris, filiyas est nòwman nàtrýy/. "Heir" is a name or term of law; "son" is a name of nature.

Heres est pars antecessoris /hiriyz est pàrz àntasòras/. An heir is a part of the ancestor. So said because the ancestor, during his life, bears in his body (in judgment of law) all his heirs.

Heres ex asse /hiriyz èks åsiy/. In the civil law, an heir to the whole estate; a sole heir.

Heres extraneus /hiriyz akstrényias/. In the civil law, a strange or foreign heir; one who was not subject to the power of the testator, or person who made him heir. Qui testatoris juri subjecti non sunt, extranei heredes appellan tur.

Heres factus /hiriyz fékctas/. In the civil law, an heir made by will; a testamentary heir; the person created universal successor by will. Otherwise called "heres ex testamento," and "heres institutus."

Heres fideicommissarius /hiriyz fidiyaykòmaséríyas/. In the civil law, the person for whose benefit an estate was given to another (termed "heres fidi carius," q.v.) by will. Answering nearly to the cestui que trust of the English law.

Heres fiduciarius /hiriyz fèdùwsh(ò)jìrìyas/. A fiduciary heir, or heir in trust; a person constituted heir by will, in trust for the benefit of another, called the "fideicommissarius."

Heres haredis mei est meus heres /hiriyz hàrdìyas míyas èst míyas hiriyz/. The heir of my heir is my heir.

Heres institutus /hiriyz instaywytas/. A testamentary heir; one appointed by the will of the decedent.

Heres legitimus /hiriyz lajitamas/. A lawful heir; one pointed out as such by the marriage of his parents.

Heres legitimus est quem nuptiae demonstrant /hiriyz lajitamas èst kwèm nàpsìhiyàl diomònsìrant/. He is a lawful heir whom marriage points out as such; who is born in wedlock.

Heres minor uno et viginti annis non respondet, nisi in casu doxis /hiriyz miyànar yuwnò et vaçintay ánàs nòn respòndiybyot nàysay in késìyuw doxtas/. An heir under twenty-one years of age is not answerable, except in the matter of dower.

Heres natus /hiriyz nèytas/. In the civil law, an heir born; one born heir, as distinguished from one made heir (heres factus, q.v.); an heir at law, or by intestacy (ab intestato); the next of kin by blood, in cases of intestacy.

Heres necessarius /hiriyz nèsséryias/. In the civil law, a necessary or compulsory heir. This name was given to the heir when, being a slave, he was named "heir" in the testament, because on the death of the testator, whether he would or not, he at once became free, and was compelled to assume the heirship.

Heres non tenetur in Anglia ad debita antecessoris reddenda, nisi per antecessorem ad hoc fuerit obligatus, praterquam debita regis tantum /hiriyz nòn tònyìtar in àngliyo àd débòta àntasòras réndenda, nàysay por àntasòras àd hòk ùyìwarì oòblgàyta praòrkwàm débòta rìjas tântam/. In England, the heir is not bound to pay his ancestor's debts, unless he be bound to it by the ancestor, except debts due to the king. However, by 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 104, he is now liable.

Heres rectus /hiriyz rèktas/. In old English law, a right heir.

Heres suus /hiriyz sùwùwà/. In the civil law, a man's own heir; a decedent's proper or natural heir. This name was given to the lineal descendants of the deceased. Persons who were in the power of the testator but became sui juris at his death. Those descendants who were under the power of the deceased at the time of his death, and who are most nearly related to him.

Haretare /hèhràtèryì/. In old English law, to give a right of inheritance, or make the donation hereditary to the grantee and his heirs.

Haretico comburendo /hàrètskòw kòmbyarèndòw/. The English statute 2 Hen. IV, c. 15, de hereticò combu rendo, was the first penal law enacted against heresy, and imposed the penalty of death by burning against all heretics who relapsed or who refused to abjure their opinions. This statute was repealed by the statute 29 Car. II, c. 9. This was also the name of a writ for the purpose indicated.

Hafne /hèyvan/. A haven or port.

Hafne courts /hèyvan kòrta/. Haven courts; courtsanciently held in certain ports in England.

Hagnebut /hækbot/hæg/. A handgun of a larger description than the hagne.

Hague Tribunal /hægy tæbyʊnwl/. The Court of Arbitration established by the Hague Peace Conference of 1899. The object of the establishment was to facilitate the immediate recourse to arbitration for the settlement of international differences by providing a permanent court, "accessible at all times, and acting, in default of agreement to the contrary between the parties, in accordance with the rules of procedure inserted in the present convention." The court was given jurisdiction over all arbitration cases, provided the parties did not agree to institute a special tribunal. An international Bureau was likewise established to serve as a registry for the court and to be the channel of communications relative to the meetings of the court. The court, although called "permanent," is really so only in the fact that there is a permanent list of members from among whom the arbitrators in a given case are selected. At the Second Hague Conference of 1907, apart from minor changes made in the court, it was provided that, of the two arbitrators appointed by each of the parties, only one should be a national of the appointing state.

Haia /hēya/. In old English law, a park inclosed. A hedge.

It was anciently held on Sunday next before St. Thomas' day, and therefore called the "halymote", or holy court.

Halywercfolk /hælɨwɜːrkˈfʊk/. Sax. In old English law, tenants who held land by the service of repairing or defending a church or monument, whereby they were exempt from feudal and military services. Especially in the county of Durham, those who held by service of defending the corpse of St. Cuthbert.

Ham. In England, a place of dwelling; a homestead; a little narrow meadow. A house or little village.

Hama /hɛˈmæ/. In English law, a piece of land.

Hamel, hameleta, or hamleta /hɛməl/hæmlətə/. A hamlet.

Hamezecken /hɛməzəkən/. In old English law, the crime of housebreaking or burglary. See also Hamsocone.

Hamfare /hæmˈfər/. (Sax. From ham, a house.) In Saxon law, an assault made in a house; a breach of the peace in a private house. This word by some is said to signify the freedom of a man's house. See also Hamsocone.

Hamlet. A small village; a part or member of a vill. It is the diminutive of "ham", a village. A "village" or "hamlet" in a rural community may be no more than a store, a school, a church, and a few residences.

Hammer. Metaphorically, a forced sale or sale at public auction. "To bring to the hammer", i.e. to put up for sale at auction. "Sold under the hammer", i.e. sold by an officer of the law or an auctioneer. See also Forced sale.

Hamsocone /hæmsəkwən/. In Saxon law, the word is variously spelled hamsooca, hamsooca, haimsweken, hamsaken, hamsocan. The right of security and privacy in a man's house. The breach of this privilege by a forcible entry of a house is breach of the peace.

Among the Anglo-Saxons it was breaking into a house; perhaps the time of the day was not an element. See also Hamezecken.

Hanaper /hænəpər/. In old English law, a hamper or basket in which were kept the writs of the court of chancery relating to the business of a subject, and their returns; equivalent to the Roman _fiscus_. The fees accruing on writs, etc., were there kept.

Hanaper-office /hænəpər ˈɒfəs/. An office formerly belonging to the common-law jurisdiction of the court of chancery, so called because all writs relating to the business of a subject, and their returns, were formerly kept in a hamper, _in hanaperio_.

Hand. A measure of length equal to four inches, used in measuring the height of horses.

A person's signature.

In anatomical usage the hand, or manus, includes the phalanges, or fingers and thumb; the metacarpus, or hand proper; and the carpus, or wrist; but in popular usage the wrist is often excluded.

An instrumental part; e.g. "he had a hand in the crime". One who performs some work or labor; e.g. a "hired hand". To give assistance; e.g. to lend a "hand". To deliver; e.g. to "hand over".
In the plural, the term may be synonymous with "possession"; as, the "hands" of an executor, garnishee, etc.

In old English law, an oath.

For the meaning of the terms Strong hand and Clean hands doctrine, see those titles.

Handbill. A written or printed notice displayed, handed out, or posted, to inform those concerned of something to be done or some event. Posting and distribution of handbills is regulated by ordinance or statute in most localities.

Handborow. In Saxon law, a hand pledge; a name given to the nine pledges in a decennary or friborg; the tenth or chief, being called "handborow" (q.v.). So called as being an inferior pledge to the chief.

Handcuffs. See Fetter.

Hand down. To announce or file an opinion in a cause. Used originally and properly of the opinions of appellate courts transmitted to the court below; but in later usage the term is employed more generally with reference to any decision by a court upon a case or point reserved for consideration.

Hand-fasting. In old English law, betrothment.

Hand-grith. Peace or protection given by the king with his own hand; used in the laws of Henry I.

Handhabend or hand-habende /hændhæbænd/. In Saxon law, one having a thing in his hand, that is, a thief found having the stolen goods in his possession. Jurisdiction to try such thief.

Handle. To control, direct, to deal with, to act upon, to perform some function with regard to or to have passed through one's hands. To buy and sell, or to deal or trade in. State ex rel. Bell v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 349 Mo. 360, 160 S.W.2d 764, 769. To manage or operate.

Hand money. Money paid in hand to bind a bargain; earnest money, when it is in cash.

Handsale. Anciently, among the northern European nations, shaking of hands was held necessary to bind a bargain,—a custom still retained in verbal contracts. A sale thus made was called "handsale" (venditio per mutuam manum complexionem). In process of time the same word was used to signify the price or earnest money which was given immediately after the shaking of hands, or instead thereof. 2 Bl.Comm. 448.

Handsel. Handsale, or earnest money.

Handwriting. The chirography of a person. The cast or form of writing peculiar to a person, including the size, shape, and style of letters, tricks of penmanship, and whatever gives individuality to his writing, distinguishing it from that of other persons. Anything written by hand; an instrument written by the hand of a person, or a specimen of his writing.

Handwriting, considered under the law of evidence, includes not only the ordinary writing of one able to write, but also writing done in a disguised hand, or in cipher, and a mark made by one able or unable to write. For nonexpert opinion as to genuineness of handwriting, as based on familiarity not required for purposes of litigation, see Fed.Evid. R. 901(b)(2).

Handwriting exemplars. Samples of one's handwriting required in criminal cases involving forgery, kidnapping, etc., for comparison purposes.

Compelling grand jury witness to produce handwriting and printing exemplars, to be used solely as standard of comparison in order to determine whether witness was author of certain writings, does not violate Fifth Amendment privilege although privilege might be asserted if government should seek more than physical characteristics of handwriting as by seeking to obtain written answers to incriminating questions or a signature on incriminating statement. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 5. U. S. v. Mara, 410 U.S. 19, 93 S.Ct. 774, 35 L.Ed.2d 99.

Hang. In old practice, to remain undetermined. Thus, the present participle means pending; during the pendency. Remaining undetermined. See Pending.

Hanged, drawn and quartered. A method of executing traitors in England, said to have been introduced in 1241. The traitor was carried on a sled, or hurdle to the gallows (formerly dragged there tied to the tail of a horse); hanged till half dead and then cut down; his entrails cut out and burnt; his head cut off and his body to be divided into quarters, which, with his head, were hung in some public place. In practice the executioner usually cut out the heart and held it up to view.

Hanging. As a form of capital punishment, means suspension by neck until dead. Such means of capital punishment is seldom used in United States.

Hanging in chains. In atrocious cases it was at one time usual, in England, for the court to direct a murderer, after execution, to be hanged upon a gibbet in chains near the place where the murder was committed. Its legality was declared by acts in 1751 and 1828, and abolished by 4 & 5 Wm. IV, c. 26.

Hangman. An executioner. One who executes condemned criminals by hanging.

Hangwite /hæwst/. In Saxon law, a fine for illegal hanging of a thief, or for allowing him to escape. Immutuity from such fine.

Hanse /hæns/ or hänze/. In Germany, formerly an alliance or confederation among merchants or cities, for the good ordering and protection of the commerce of its members. An imposition upon merchandise.

Hanseatric /hæniyédæk/. Pertaining to a hance or commercial alliance; but, generally, the union of the Hanse Towns is the one referred to, as in the expression the "Hanseatic League."

Hanse Towns /hæns tawnz/. The collective name of certain German cities, including Lübeck, Hamburg, and Bremen, which formed an alliance for the mutual protection and furtherance of their commercial interests, in the twelfth century. The powerful confederacy thus formed was called the "Hanseatic League." The league framed and promulgated a code of maritime law, which was known as the "Laws of the Hanse Towns," or Jus Hanseatcum Maritimum.

The years 1356 to 1377 marked the zenith of the league's power. The league gradually declined till, in 1669, the last general assembly was held and Lübeck, Hamburg and Bremen were left alone to preserve the name and small inheritance of the "Hansa."

Hanse Towns, laws of the /loz sv dø häns tawnz/. The maritime ordinances of the Hanseatic towns, first published in German at Lübeck, in 1597, and in May, 1614, revised and enlarged.

Hantelod, or hantelode /haentslowd/. In old European law, an arrest, or attachment.

Hap. To catch. Thus, "hap the rent," "hap the deed-poll," were formerly used.

Happiness. Comfort, consolation, contentment, ease, enjoyment, pleasure, satisfaction. The constitutional right of men to pursue their "happiness" means the right to enjoy快乐, pleasure, satisfaction. The constitutional right to pursue any lawful business or vocation, in any manner not inconsistent with the equal rights of others, which may increase their prosperity, or develop their faculties, so as to give to them their highest enjoyment. Butchers' Union Co. v. Crescent City Co., 111 U.S. 746, 4 S.Ct. 652, 28 L.Ed. 585.

Harassment. As defined in federal statute providing for a civil action to restrain harassment of a victim or witness, is "a course of conduct directed at a specific person that causes substantial emotional distress in such person and serves no legitimate purpose." 18 U.S.C.A. § 1514(c)(1). Term is used in a variety of legal contexts to describe words, gestures and actions which tend to annoy, alarm and abuse (verbally) another person; e.g., the use of "obscene or profane language or language the natural consequence of which is to abuse the hearer or reader" is unlawful harassment under the Federal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1692(d)(2).

Sexual harassment by employers against employees is recognized as a cause of action under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C.A. § 2000e et seq., e.g., Tomkins v. Public Service Electric & Gas Co., C.A.N.J., 568 F.2d 1044. See also Sexual harassment.

A person commits a petty misdemeanor if, with purpose to harass another, he: (1) makes a telephone call without purpose of legitimate communication; or (2) insults, taunts or challenges another in a manner likely to provoke violent or disorderly response; or (3) makes repeated communications anonymously or at extremely inconvenient hours, or in offensively coarse language; or (4) subjects another to an offensive touching; or (5) engages in any other course of alarming conduct serving no legitimate purpose of the actor. Model Penal Code, § 250.4.

The federal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act prohibits debt collectors from using such harassment tactics as threats, abusive language, or telephone excesses. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1692c et seq.

Harbinger /hárbanjər/. In England, an officer of the royal household.

Harbor, n. A haven, or a space of deep water so sheltered by the adjacent land and surroundings as to afford a safe anchorage for ships. A port or haven for ships; a sheltered place, natural or artificial, on the coast of a sea, lake, or other body of water. A place of security and comfort; a refuge. See also Haven.

Harbor, v. To afford lodging to, to shelter, or to give a refuge to. To clandestinely shelter, succor, and protect improperly admitted aliens. Susnjar v. U.S., C.C.A. Ohio, 27 F.2d 223, 224. To receive clandestinely and without lawful authority a person for the purpose of so concealing him that another having a right to the lawful custody of such person shall be deprived of the same. Or, in a less technical sense, it is the reception of persons improperly. It may be aptly used to describe the furnishing of shelter, lodging, or food clandestinely or with concealment, and under certain circumstances, may be equally applicable to those acts divested of any accompanying secrecy. Harboring a criminal is a crime under both federal and state statutes, and a person who harbors a criminal is an accessory after the fact. See, e.g., 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 2, 1071, 1072; Model Penal Code, § 242.3. See also Accessory (Accessory after the fact); Aid and abet.

Harboring a criminal. See Harbor.

Harbor line. A line marking the boundary of a certain part of a public water which is reserved for a harbor. The line beyond which wharves and other structures cannot be extended.

Hard cases. A phrase used to indicate judicial decisions which, to meet a case of hardship to a party, are not entirely consonant with the true principle of the law. It is said of such: "Hard cases make bad law."

Hard goods. Durable merchandise (e.g., appliances, furniture, hardware).

Hard labor. A punishment, additional to mere imprisonment, sometimes imposed upon convicts sentenced to a penitentiary for serious crimes, or for misconduct while in prison.

Hard money. Lawful coined money (as contrasted with paper currency).

Hardship. In general, privation, suffering, adversity. As used in zoning statutes as grounds for variance, it refers to fact that zoning ordinance or restriction as applied to a particular property is unduly oppressive, arbitrary or confiscatory. St. Onge v. City of Concord, 95 N.H. 306, 63 A.2d 221.

The severity with which a proposed construction of the law would bear upon a particular case, founding, sometimes, an argument against such construction, which is otherwise termed the "argument ab inconvenienti." See Hard cases.
Harm. The existence of loss or detriment in fact of any kind to a person resulting from any cause. See also Damages; Injury; Physical injury.

Harmful. As used in connection with foods, means noxious, hurtful, pernicious, likely to cause illness or damage. See also Adulteration.

As used in connection with errors committed at trial, it means that rights were seriously affected; an appellate court will consider harmful error but not harmless error. See also Error; Harmless error doctrine; Plain error rule.

Harmless error doctrine. The doctrine that minor or harmless errors during a trial do not require reversal of the judgment by an appellate court. An error which is trivial or formal or merely academic and was not prejudicial to the substantial rights of the party assigning it, and in no way affected the final outcome of the case. State v. Johnson, 1 Wash.App. 553, 463 P.2d 205, 206. An error is "harmless" if reviewing court, after viewing entire record, determines that no substantial rights of defendant were affected and that error did not influence or had only very slight influence on verdict. U.S. v. McCrady, C.A.Minn., 774 F.2d 868, 874. Doctrine which permits an appellate court to affirm a conviction in spite of such type error appearing in the record. State v. Michelli, La., 301 So.2d 577, 579.

Harmless error is not a ground for granting a new trial or for setting aside a verdict or for vacating, modifying or otherwise disturbing a judgment or order, unless such refusal appears to the court inconsistent with substantial justice. Fed.R.Civil P. 61. Any error, defect, irregularity or variance which does not affect substantial rights will be disregarded by court. Fed.R.Crim.P. 7(c), 52.

See also Error.

Harmonic plane. The zero adopted by the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey of the Department of Commerce upon which its tidal tables, charts, and maps are based. It is an arbitrary plane, and, in Puget Sound, is the lowest plane of the tide recognized by that department.

Harmonize. See Harmony.

Harmony. The phrase “in harmony with” is synonymous with “in agreement, conformity, or accordance with.”

Haro, harron /hárow/. Fr. In Norman and early English law, an outcry, or hue and cry after felons and malefactors.

Harter Act. A name commonly applied to the act of Congress of February 13, 1893, c. 105, providing: (§ 1) that agreements in a bill of lading relieving the owner, etc., of a vessel sailing between the United States and foreign ports, from liability for negligence or fault in proper loading, storage, custody, care, or delivery of merchandise, are void (46 U.S.C.A. § 190); (§ 2) that no bill of lading shall contain any agreement whereby the obligations of the owner to exercise due diligence, properly equip, man, provision and outfit a vessel and make it seaworthy, and whereby the obligations of the master, etc., carefully to handle, store, care for and deliver the cargo, are in any way lessened, weakened or avoided (46 U.S.C.A. § 191); (§ 3) that if the owner shall exercise due diligence to make such vessel in all respects seaworthy and properly manned, equipped and supplied, neither the vessel nor her owners, etc., shall be liable for loss resulting from faults or errors in navigation or management, nor for losses arising from dangers of the sea, acts of God, or public enemies, or the inherent defect of the thing carried, or insufficiency of package, or seizure under legal process, or any act or omission of the shipper of the goods, or from saving or attempting to save life at sea, or deviation in rendering such service (46 U.S.C.A. § 192).

Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvement Act. A (1976) procedural statute that gives states attorneys general the right to sue as parens patriae for injuries suffered by consumers in the state, provides for premerger notification, and generally strengthens the antitrust enforcement powers of the Department of Justice.

Harvesting. The act or process of gathering of crops of any kind. Also the quantity or yield of a crop.

Hashish. Drug which is formed of resin scraped from the flowering top of the cannabis plant, as distinguished from marijuana which consists of the chopped leaves and stems of the cannabis plant.

Haspa /hásptə/. In old English law, the hasp of a door; by which livery of seisin might anciently be made, where there was a house on the premises.

Hasta /héstə/. Lat. A spear. In the Roman law, a spear was the sign of a public sale of goods or sale by auction. Hence the phrase "hasta subjicere" (to put under the spear) meant to put up at auction.

In feudal law, a spear, the symbol used in making investiture of a fief.

Hatch Act. Federal statute which prohibits federal, state, and local employees from partaking in certain types of political activities. 5 U.S.C.A. § 7324.

Haustrus /hó̱stəs/. Lat. In the civil law, a species of servitude, consisting in the right to draw water from another's well or spring, in which the iter (right of way to the well or spring), so far as it is necessary, is tacitly included.
Have. Lat. A form of the salutatory expression "Ave," used in the titles of some of the constitutions of the Theodosian and Justinian Codes.

Have. Imports ownership, and has been defined to mean "to keep," "to hold in possession," "to own." To bear (children).

Have and hold. A common phrase in conveyancing, derived from the habendum et tenendum of the old common law. See Habendum et tenendum.

Haven. A place of a large receipt and safe riding of ships, so situate and secured by the land circumjacent that the vessels thereby ride and anchor safely, and are protected by the adjacent land from dangerous or violent winds; as Milford Haven, Plymouth Haven, and the like. Lowndes v. Board of Trustees, 153 U.S. 1, 14 S.Ct. 758, 38 L.Ed. 615. A place of refuge. See also Harbor.

Hawker. An itinerant or traveling salesman who carries goods about in order to sell them, and who actually sells them to purchasers, in contradistinction to a trader who has goods for sale and sells them in a fixed place of business. A hawker or peddler usually sells his goods in the public streets, or from door-to-door, and commonly is required to have a license.

Formerly, a peddler who used beast of burden to carry wares and who cried out merits of wares in street. City of Washington v. Reed, 229 Mo.App. 1195, 70 S.W.2d 121, 122. See Hawking; Peddler.

Hawking. The act of offering goods for sale from door-to-door, or on the streets by outcry or by attracting the attention of persons by exposing goods in a public place, or by placards, labels, or signals. The business of peddling or hawking is distinct from that of a manufacturer selling his own products, and those who raise or produce what they sell, such as farmers and butchers, are not peddlers or hawkers.

Hay-bote /heᵇʰoᵽᵽᵧt/ In old English law, another name for "hedge-bote," being one of the estovers allowed to a tenant for life or years, namely, material for repairing the necessary hedges or fences of his grounds, or for making necessary farming utensils. 2 Bl.Comm. 35.

Hayward. In old English law, an officer appointed in the lord's court to keep a common herd of cattle of a town; so called because he was to see that they did not break or injure the hedges of inclosed grounds. His duty was also to impound trespassing cattle, and to guard against poundbreaches.

In insurance law, the risk, danger, or probability that the event insured against may happen, varying with the circumstances of the particular case.

In old English law, an unlawful game at dice, those who play at it being called "hazardors."

See also Dangerous; Extraordinary hazard; Risk.

Moral hazard. In fire insurance, the risk or danger of the destruction of the insured property by fire, as measured by the character and interest of the insured owner, his habits as a prudent and careful man or the reverse, his known integrity or his bad reputation, and the amount of loss he would suffer by the destruction of the property or the gain he would make by suffering it to burn and collecting the insurance.

Hazardor /ˈhezdərdər/. In old English law, one who played at a hazard, i.e., an unlawful game of dice.

The terms "hazardous", "extra-hazardous", "specially hazardous", and "not hazardous" are well-understood technical terms in the business of insurance, having distinct and separate meanings. See Extraordinary hazard.

Hazardous contract. See Contract.

Hazardous employment. High risk and extra perilous work. When used in context of workers' compensation, it refers to employment which requires employer to carry workers' compensation coverage or its equivalent regardless of the number of employees.

Hazardous insurance. Insurance effected on property which is in unusual or peculiar danger of destruction by fire, or on the life of a person whose occupation exposes him to special or unusual perils.

Hazardous negligence. See Negligence.

Hazardous substance. A solid waste, or combination of solid wastes, which because of its quantity, concentration or physical, chemical, or infectious characteristics may cause, or significantly contribute to an increase in mortality or an increase in serious irreversible, or incapacitating reversible, illness or pose a substantial present or potential hazard to human health or the environment when improperly treated, stored, transported, or disposed of, or otherwise managed. 42 U.S.C.A. § 6903(5).

Includes certain flammable, toxic or radioactive substances. Under the Federal Hazardous Substance Act, a substance may be a "hazardous substance" if it meets the statutory definition or has been so defined by regulation. U.S. v. Articles of Hazardous Substance, C.A.N.C., 598 F.2d 39. See 15 U.S.C.A. § 1261(f) et seq.

Hazard pay. Special compensation for work under unpleasant or unsafe conditions.

Head. Chief; leading; principal; the upper part or principal source of a stream.

The principal person or chief of any agency, bureau, organization, corporation, or firm.

Headborough. In Saxon law, the head or chief officer of a borough; chief of the frank-pledge tithing or decennary. This office was afterwards, when the petty constableship was created, united with that office.

Head money. A sum of money reckoned at a fixed amount for each head (person) in a designated class. Particularly (1) a capitation or poll tax. (2) A bounty offered by the laws of the United States for each person on board an enemy's ship or vessel, at the commencement of a naval engagement, which shall be sunk or destroyed by a ship or vessel of the United States of equal or inferior force, the same to be divided among the officers and crew in the same manner as prize money. A similar reward is offered by the British statutes. (3) The tax or duty imposed by act of congress of Aug. 3, 1882, on owners of steamships and sailing vessels for every immigrant brought into the United States. Head Money Cases, 112 U.S. 580, 5 S.Ct. 247, 28 L.Ed. 798. (4) A bounty or reward formerly paid to one who pursued and killed a bandit or outlaw and produced his head as evidence; the offer of such a reward being popularly called "putting a price on his head". See Bounty; Reward.

Headnote. A brief summary of a legal rule or significant facts in a case, which, among other headnotes applicable to the case, precedes the printed opinion in reports. A syllabus to a reported case; a summary of the points decided in the case, which is placed at the head or beginning of the opinion. See also Digest; Syllabus.

Head of household. An individual who actually supports and maintains in one household one or more individuals who are closely connected with him by blood relationship, relationship by marriage, or by adoption, and whose right to exercise family control and provide for the dependent individuals is based upon some moral or legal obligation. Miller v. Glenn, D.C.Ky., 47 F.Supp. 794, 796, 797.

A taxpayer classification which, generally, describes an unmarried individual (other than a surviving spouse) who provides a home for his or her dependents. I.R.C. § 2(b). The Internal Revenue Code provides for preferential treatment for those individuals that qualify as a head of household. The head of household status entitles the taxpayer to use income tax rates which are lower than those applicable to other unmarried individuals, but higher than those applicable to surviving spouses and married persons filing a joint return.

A term used in homestead and exemption laws to designate a person who maintains a family; a householder. Not necessarily a husband or father, but any person who has charge of, supervises, supports, maintains, and manages the affairs of the household or the collective body of persons residing together and constituting the family. The term may thus include an abandoned wife maintaining minor children or a bachelor supporting his parents.

Head of stream. The highest point on the stream which furnishes a continuous stream of water, not necessarily the longest fork or prong. The source of a stream. See also Headstream.

Headright. An interest in trust funds arising from mineral income from land held or once held by an Indian tribe as well as the right to any royalties or interest. Sheppard v. Sheppard, 104 Idaho 1, 655 P.2d 895, 904. Under the Allotment Act (Act Cong. June 28, 1906 [34 Stat. 539]), creating a trust fund from all tribal funds which included funds from sale of tribal lands, funds allowed on claims against the United States and received from tribal oil, gas, and mineral rights, each allottee owned his pro rata share of the trust fund, and this pro rata beneficial interest is commonly called a "headright."

Headright certificate. In the laws of the republic of Texas, a certificate issued under authority of an act of 1839, which provided that every person immigrating to the republic between October 1, 1837, and January 1, 1840, who was the head of a family and actually resided within the government with his or her family should be entitled to a grant of 640 acres of land, to be held under such a certificate for three years, and then conveyed by absolute deed to the settler, if in the meantime he had resided permanently within the republic and performed all the duties required of citizens.

Headsilver. In old English law, a name sometimes given to a Common Fine (q.v.). By a payment of a certain sum of money to the lord, litigants might try their suits nearer home.

Headstream. Stream that is the source of a river. See also Head of stream.

Head tax. Tax of flat amount per person.

Heafodweard. In old English law, one of the services to be rendered by a thane, or a geneath or villein, the precise nature of which is unknown.

Healer. One who heals or cures; specifically, one who professes to cure bodily diseases without medicine or any material means, according to the tenets and practices of so-called "Christian Science," whose beliefs and practices are founded on their religious convictions.
Health /hél/.

In Saxon law, a sort of pillory, by which the head of the culprit was caught between two boards, as feet are caught in a pair of stocks. It was very early disused, no mention of it occurring in the laws of the Saxon Kings.

Healing act.

Another name for a curative act or statute. See Curative (Curative statute).

Healsfang /hélfsfag/.

In Saxon law, a sort of pillory, by which the head of the culprit was caught between two boards, as feet are caught in a pair of stocks. It was very early disused, no mention of it occurring in the laws of the Saxon Kings.

Health. State of being hale, sound, or whole in body, mind or soul, well being. Freedom from pain or sickness. See Healthy.

Bill of health. See Bill.

Board of health. See Board.

Health laws. Laws, ordinances, or codes prescribing sanitary standards and regulations, designed to promote and preserve the health of the community.

Health officer. The officer charged with the execution and enforcement of health laws, e.g. Surgeon General. The powers and duties of health officers are regulated by federal, state and local laws.

Public health. As one of the objects of the police power of the state, the "public health" means the prevailing healthful or sanitary condition of the general body of people or the community in mass, and the absence of any general or widespread disease or cause of mortality. The wholesome sanitary condition of the community at large. Many cities have "Public Health Departments" or agencies of similar function and status. Federal laws dealing with health are administered by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Sound health. See Sound.

Health Maintenance Organization (HMO). Groups of participating health care providers (physicians, hospitals, clinics) that provide medical services to enrolled members of group health insurance plan.

Healthy. Free from disease, injury, or bodily ailment, or any state of the system peculiarly susceptible or liable to disease or bodily ailment.

Hearing. A proceeding of relative formality (though generally less formal than a trial), generally public, with definite issues of fact or of law to be tried, in which witnesses are heard and evidence presented. It is a proceeding where evidence is taken to determine issue of fact and to render decision on basis of that evidence. People v. Iwenditti, 276 C.A.2d 178, 80 Cal.Rptr. 761, 762. The parties proceeded against or otherwise involved have right to be heard, in much the same manner as a trial and such proceedings may terminate in final order. See e.g. 5 U.S.C.A. § 556.

It is frequently used in a broader and more popular significance to describe whatever takes place before magistrates clothed with judicial functions and sitting without jury at any stage of the proceedings subsequent to its inception (see Preliminary hearing, below), and to hearings before administrative agencies as conducted by a hearing examiner or Administrative Law Judge. As to the latter type, it consists of any confrontation, oral or otherwise, between an affected individual and an agency decision-maker sufficient to allow individual to present his case in a meaningful manner. Gray Panthers v. Schweiker, C.A., 652 F.2d 146, 151, 209 U.S.App.D.C. 153.

The introduction and admissibility of evidence is usually more lax in a hearing than in a civil or criminal trial (see e.g., 42 U.S.C.A. § 405(b) which provides for admissibility of evidence at social security hearings that would otherwise be inadmissible at regular trial).

Hearings are extensively employed by both legislative and administrative agencies and can be adjudicative or merely investigatory. Adjudicative hearings can be appealed in a court of law. Congressional committees often hold hearings prior to enactment of legislation; these hearings are then important sources of legislative history.

See also Administrative hearing; Detention hearing; Final hearing; Full hearing; Omnibus hearing.

Ex parte hearing. See Ex parte.

Final hearing. See Final.

In criminal law. The examination of a person charged with a crime or misdemeanor, and of the witnesses for or against the accused; See Preliminary hearing, below.

Preliminary examination. The examination of a person charged with crime, before a magistrate or judge. See Preliminary hearing, below.

Preliminary hearing. In criminal law, synonymous with "preliminary examination". The hearing given to a person accused of crime, by a magistrate or judge, exercising the functions of a committing magistrate, to ascertain whether there is sufficient evidence to warrant and require the commitment and holding to bail of the persons accused. It is in no sense a trial for the determination of accused's guilt or innocence, but simply a course of procedure whereby a possible abuse of power may be prevented, and accused discharged or held to answer, as the facts warrant. See Fed.R.Crim.P. 5(c), 5.1. See also Suppression hearing.

Probable cause hearing. See Preliminary hearing, above.

Unfair hearing. See that title.

Hearing de novo /hiriq diy nówvow/.

Generally, a new hearing or a hearing for the second time, contemplating an entire trial in same manner in which matter was originally heard and a review of previous hearing. Trying matter anew the same as if it had not been heard before and as if no decision had been previously rendered. Ray v. Illinois Racing Bd., 1 Dist., 113 Ill.App.3d 510, 69 Ill.Dec. 451, 454, 447 N.E.2d 886, 889. On hearing "de novo" court hears matter as court of original and not appellate jurisdiction. Collier & Wallis v. Astor, 9 Cal.2d 202, 70 P.2d 171, 173.

Hearing examiner.

Generally, a civil service employee of an administrative agency whose responsibility is to conduct hearings on matters within the agency's jurisdiction. See e.g. 5 U.S.C.A. § 556(b). Now called "Ad-
Hearth silver. A term applied to that species of testimony given by a witness who relates, not what he knows personally, but what others have told him, or what he has heard said by others. A statement, other than one made by the declarant while testifying at the trial or hearing, offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted. Fed.R.Evid. 801(c). Hearsay includes any statement made outside the present proceeding which is offered as evidence of the truth of matters asserted therein. Also included as hearsay is nonverbal conduct which is intended to be the equivalent of a spoken assertion. Such conduct is called assertive conduct. Under Fed.R.Evid. Rule 801(a) conduct which was not intended as an assertion at the time it was done is not hearsay. Such conduct is called nonassertive conduct. Fed.R.Evid. Rule 801(c) also provides that assertions which are offered to prove something other than the matter asserted are not hearsay.

Hearsay evidence is testimony in court of a statement made out of the court, the statement being offered as an assertion to show the truth of matters asserted therein, and thus resting for its value upon the credibility of the out-of-court asserter. Mutyambizi v. State, 33 Md.App. 55, 363 A.2d 511, 518. Evidence not proceeding from the personal knowledge of the witness, but from the mere repetition of what he has heard others say. That which does not derive its value solely from the credit of the witness, but rests mainly on the veracity and competency of other persons. The very nature of the evidence shows its weakness, and, as such, hearsay evidence is generally inadmissible unless it falls within one of the many exceptions which provides for admissibility (see e.g., Fed.R.Evid. 803, 804).

See also Double (or multiple) hearsay.

Heart balm statutes. State statutes abolishing right of action for alienation of affections, breach of promise to marry, criminal conversation, and seduction of person over legal age of consent.

Hearth money. A tax levied in England by St. 14 Car. II, c. 10, consisting of two shillings on every hearth or stove in the kingdom. It was extremely unpopular, and was abolished by 1 W. & M., St. 1, c. 10. This tax was otherwise called "chimney money."

Hearth silver. In old English law, a species of modus or composition for tithes; viz.: a prescription for cutting down and using for fuel the tithe of wood.

Heat of passion. A term used by the common law to refer to the condition of a defendant who can assert provocation as a basis for mitigating murder to manslaughter. Refers to passion or anger suddenly aroused at the time by some immediate and reasonable provocation, by words or acts of one at the time. As sufficient to reduce killing from murder to voluntary manslaughter means any intense or vehement emotional excitement of the kind prompting violent and aggressive action, which would cause an ordinary person to act on impulse without reflection. State v. Guebara, 236 Kan. 791, 696 P.2d 381, 385. The term includes an emotional state of mind characterized by anger, rage, hatred, furious resentment or terror. State v. Lott, 207 Kan. 602, 485 P.2d 1314, 1317. See also Hot blood.

Heave to. In maritime parlance and admiralty law, to stop a sailing vessel's headway by bringing her head "into the wind," that is, in the direction from which the wind blows. A steamer is said to be "hove to" when held in such a position that she takes the heaviest seas upon her quarter.

Hebberthef /hēbărthef/. In Saxon law, the privilege of having the goods of a thief, and the trial of him, within a certain liberty.

Hebdomad /hēbdəməd/. A week; a space of seven days.

Hebephrenia /hiybəfriəniə/. Psychotic form of schizophrenia featuring regression into silly, deteriorated, or infantile behavior and mannerisms.

Hebote. The king's edict commanding his subjects into the field.

Heda. A small haven, wharf, or landing place. See Harbor, Haven.

Hedagium /hēdəjɪəm/. In old English law, a toll or customary dues at the hithe or wharf, for landing goods, etc., from which exemption was granted by the crown to some particular persons and societies.

Hedge fund. Mutual funds that utilize various types of hedging techniques for their investments. See Hedging.

Hedger. A commodities trader with an interest in the cash market for the commodity, who deals in futures contracts as a means of transferring risks which he or she faces in the cash market. Leist v. Simplot, C.A. N.Y., 638 F.2d 283, 287. See Hedging.

Hedging. A means by which traders and exporters of grain or other products, and manufacturers who make contracts in advance for the sale of their goods, secure themselves against the fluctuations of the market by counter-contracts for the purchase or sale of an equal quantity of the product or of the material of manufacture. Whorley v. Patton-Kjose Co., 90 Mont. 461, 5 P.2d 210, 214. A means by which a party who deals in the purchase of commodities in large quantities for actual delivery at some future time insures itself against unfavorable changes in the price of such commodities by entering into compensatory arrangements or counterbalancing transactions on the other side. Ralston Purina Co. v. McFarland, C.A.N.C., 550 F.2d 967, 970. A transaction where an identified forward exchange contract is locked into an identified agreement to purchase or sell goods in the future. Siegel v. Titan Indus. Corp., C.A. N.Y., 779 F.2d 891, 893. Safeguarding one's self from loss on a bet or speculation by making compensatory arrangements on the other side. Whorley v. Patton-Kjose Co., 90 Mont. 461, 5 P.2d 210, 214.
Hedonic damages. See Damages.

Heedless. Term is almost as strong as word "reckless" and includes the element of disregard of the rights or safety of others. Thoughtless; inconsiderate.

Hegemony /hējēmənē/hējsmənē/hai'ma hējemia hajemaniy/hejsmowniy/hageV. The leadership of one among several independent confederate states.

Heir /ēr/. See Heirs.

Heir apparent. An heir whose right of inheritance is indefeasible, provided he outlive the ancestor; as in England the eldest son, or his issue, who must, by the course of the common law, be heir to the father whenever he happens to die. One who, before the death of the ancestor, is next in the line of succession, provided he be heir to the ancestor whenever he happens to die. See also Apparent heir.

Heir at law. At common law, he who, after his ancestor dies intestate, has a right to all lands, tenements, and hereditaments which belonged to him or of which he was seised. The same as "heir general."

A deceased person's "heirs at law" are those who succeed to his estate of inheritance under statutes of descent and distribution, in absence of testamentary disposition, and not necessarily his heirs at common law, who are persons succeeding to deceased's realty in case of his intestacy. In re Towndrow's Will, 47 N.M. 173, 138 P.2d 1001, 1003.

As the term is used in wrongful death statute, means lineal descendants. Howlett v. Greenberg, 34 Colo. App. 356, 530 P.2d 1285, 1287.

See also Descent; Heir, legal.

Heir beneficiary. In the civil law, one who has accepted the succession under the benefit of an inventory regularly made.

Heirs are divided into two classes, according to the manner in which they accept the successions left to them, to-wit, unconditional and beneficiary heirs. Unconditional heirs are those who inherit without any reservation, or without making an inventory, whether their acceptance be express or tacit. Beneficiary heirs are those who have accepted the succession under the benefit of an inventory regularly made. Civ.Code La. art. 883. If the heir apprehend that the succession will be burdened with debts beyond its value, he accepts with benefit of inventory, and in that case he is responsible only for the value of the succession. See Beneficiary.

Heir by adoption. By statute in most all jurisdictions, an adopted child takes all the rights of succession to intestate property as those of a natural born child unless a contrary intention is clearly expressed. Statutes differ however as to whether such adopted child may in addition inherit from its natural parents or family.

Heir by custom. In old English law, one whose right of inheritance depends upon a particular and local custom, such as gavelkind, or borough English.

Heir by devise. One to whom lands are devised by will; a devisee of lands. Answering to the hæres factus (q.v.) of the civil law.

Heir collateral. One who is not lineally related to the decedent, but is of collateral kin; e.g., his uncle, cousin, brother, nephew.

Heir conventional. In the civil law, one who takes a succession by virtue of a contract or settlement entitling him thereto.

Heirdom /ērdəm/. Succession by inheritance.

Heiress /ērəs/. A female heir to a person having an estate of inheritance. When there are more than one, they are called "co-heiresses," or "co-heirs."

Heir expectant. See Heir apparent.

Heir, forced. One who cannot be disinherited. See Forced heirs.

Heir general. An heir at law. The ordinary heir by blood, succeeding to all the lands.

Heir hunter. Those whose business or occupation consists in tracking down missing heirs.

Heir, legal. The person to whom the law would give the decedent's property, real and personal, if he should die intestate. In legal strictness, the term signifies one who would inherit real estate, but it is also used to indicate one who would take under the statute of distribution. See also Descent; Heir at law; Heirs.

Heirless estate. The property of one who dies intestate leaving no heirs in which case there generally is escheat (q.v.).

Heirlooms /ēr'lōwmz/. In general, valued possessions of great sentimental value passed down through generations within a family.

In old English law, such goods and chattels as, contrary to the nature of chattels, shall go by special custom to the heir along with the inheritance, and not to the executor. The termination "loom" (Sax.) signifies a limb or member; so that an heirloom is nothing else but a limb or member of the inheritance. They are generally such things as cannot be taken away without damaging or dismembering the freehold; such as deer in a park, doves in a cote, deeds and charters, etc.

Heir, male. In English law, the nearest male blood-relationship of the decedent, unless further limited by the words "of his body," which restrict the inheritance to sons, grandsons, and other male descendants in the right line.

Heir of the blood. An inheritor who succeeds to the estate by virtue of consanguinity with the decedent, either in the ascending or descending line, including illegitimate children, but excluding husbands, wives, and adopted children.
HEIR OF THE BODY

Heir of the body. An heir begotten or borne by the person referred to, or a child of such heir; any lineal descendant of the decedent, excluding a surviving husband or wife, adopted children, and collateral relations; bodily heir. May be used in either of two senses: In their unrestricted sense, as meaning the persons who from generation to generation become entitled by descent under the entail; and in the sense of heirs at law, or those persons who are descendants of him whom the statute of descent appoints to take intestate estate.

Heir presumptive. The person who, if the ancestor should die immediately, would, in the present circumstances of things, be his heir, but whose right of inheritance may be defeated by the contingency of some nearer heir being born; as a brother or nephew, whose presumptive succession may be destroyed by the birth of a child.

Heir, pretermitted. One who, except for an unambiguous act of the ancestor, would take his property on his death. See also Pretermitted heir.

Heirs /ərərz/. At common law, the person appointed by law to succeed to the estate in case of intestacy. One who inherits property, whether real or personal. A person who succeeds, by the rules of law, to an estate in lands, tenements, or hereditaments, upon the death of his ancestor, by descent and right of relationship. One who would receive his estate under statute of descent and distribution. Faulkner's Guardian v. Faulkner, 237 Ky. 147, 35 S.W.2d 6, 7. Moreover, the term is frequently used in a popular sense to designate a successor to property either by will or by law. Word "heirs" is no longer limited to designated character of estate as at common law. Jay v. Dollarhide, 3 Cal.App.3d 1001, 84 Cal.Rptr. 538, 547.

Word "heirs" is a technical term and is used to designate persons who would, by statute, succeed to an estate in case of intestacy. Wells Fargo Bank v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 22 Cal.App.3d 295, 99 Cal.Rptr. 464, 466. See also Descent.

Bodily laws. See Heir of the body.

Civil law. A universal successor in the event of death. He who actively or passively succeeds to the entire property or estate, rights and obligations, of a decedent, and occupies his place.

The term is indiscriminately applied to all persons who are called to the succession, whether by the act of the party or by operation of law. The person who is created universal successor by a will is called the "testamentary heir;" and the next of kin by blood is, in cases of intestacy, called the "heir at law," or "heir by intestacy." The executor of the common law in many respects corresponds to the testamentary heir of the civil law. Again, the administrator in many respects corresponds with the heir by intestacy. By the common law, executors and administrators have no right except to the personal estate of the deceased; whereas the heir by the civil law is authorized to administer both the personal and real estate. The term "heir" has several significations. Sometimes it refers to one who has formally accepted a succession and taken possession thereof; sometimes to one who is called to succeed, but still retains the faculty of accepting or renouncing, and it is frequently used as applied to one who has formally renounced.

Collateral heir. See that title.

Joint heirs. Co-heirs. The term is also applied to those who are or will be heirs to both of two designated persons at the death of the survivor of them, the word "joint" being here applied to the ancestors rather than the heirs.

Known heirs. See that title.

Lawful heirs. See Descent; Heir at law; Heir, legal.

Legitimate heirs. Children born in lawful wedlock and their descendants, not including collateral heirs or issue in indefinite succession.

Lineal heir. See Lineal heir.

Natural heirs. Heirs by consanguinity as distinguished from heirs by adoption, and also as distinguished from collateral heirs.

Right heir. This term was formerly used, in the case of estates tail, to distinguish the preferred heir, to whom the estate was limited, from the heirs in general, to whom, on the failure of the preferred heir and his line, the remainder over was usually finally limited. With the abolition of estates tail, the term has fallen into disuse, but when still used, in modern law, it has no other meaning than "heir at law."

Heirs and assigns. Ordinarily words of limitation and not of purchase. At common law, the words were essential to conveyance granting title in fee simple, and though they are unnecessary for that or any purpose under statute when used in wills or deeds, words still have that meaning.

Heirs at law shall not be disinherited by conjecture, but only by express words or necessary implication. Maxim which means that ancestor must clearly cut off heir and that such disinheriting is not lightly inferred.

Heirship /ərʃəp/. The quality or condition of being heir, or the relation between the heir and his ancestor. It is a legal right, regulated by law, to be enjoyed subject to the provisions of the statute.

Heir special. In English law, the issue in tail, who claims per formam doni; by the form of the gift.

Heirs per stirpes. See Per stirpes.

Heir testamentary. In the civil law, or who is named and appointed heir in the testament of the decedent. This name distinguishes him from a legal heir (one upon whom the law casts the succession), and from a conventional heir (one who takes it by virtue of a previous contract or settlement).

Held. In reference to the decision of a court, means decided. In context of kidnapping offense, connotes a state or degree of physical restraint. See also Held; Judgment.
Hell. The name formerly given in England to a place under the exchequer chamber, where the king's debtors were confined.

Helsing. A Saxon brass coin, of the value of a half-penny.

Henceforth /hensfərθ/. A word of futurity, which, as employed in legal documents, statutes, and the like, always imports a continuity of action or condition from the present time forward, but excludes all the past.

Henchman. A page; an attendant; servant; a herald.

Henfare. In old English law, a fine for flight on account of murder.

Hengen /hɛgən/. In Saxon law, a prison, a gaol, or house of correction.

Hengwyte /hɛŋwɪt/. Sax. In old English law, an acquittance from a fine for hanging a thief.

Henricus Vetus /henrɪkəs ˈviːtəs/. Henry the Old, or Elder. King Henry I is so called in ancient English chronicles and charters, to distinguish him from the subsequent kings of that name.

Heordfaete, or Heodfaest. In Saxon law, a master of a family, keeping house, distinguished from a lower class of freemen, viz., folgeras (folgarii), who had no habitations of their own, but were house-retainers of their lords.

Heordpenny /ˈhɑːrdpɛni/. Peter-pence (q.v.).

Heordwerch, heordwerch /ˈhɑːrdwɜːk/. In old English law, herdsmen's work, or customary labor, done by herdsmen or inferior tenants, at the will of the lord.

Hebburn Act. The name commonly given to an act of Congress (1906), amending §§ 1, 6, 14, 15, 16 and 20 of the Interstate Commerce Act. Such Act increased the jurisdiction of the I.C.C. to include pipelines; prohibited free passes except to employees; prohibited common carriers from transporting any products, except timber, in which they had an interest; required joint tariffs and uniform system of accounts.

Heptarchy /hɛptərki/. A government exercised by seven persons, or a nation divided into seven governments. In the year 560, seven different monarchies had been formed in England by the German tribes, namely, that of Kent by the Jutes; those of Sussex, Wessex, and Essex by the Saxons; and those of East Anglia, Bernicia, and Deira by the Angles. To these were added, about the year 586, an eighth, called the "Kingdom of Mercia," also founded by the Angles, and comprehending nearly the whole of the heart of the kingdom. These states formed what has been designated the "Anglo-Saxon Octarchy," or more commonly, though not so correctly, the "Anglo-Saxon Heptarchy," from the custom of speaking of Deira and Bernicia under the single appellation of the "Kingdom of Northumberland."

Herald. In ancient law, a herald was a diplomatic messenger who carried messages between kings or states, and especially proclamations of war, peace, or truce. In English law, a herald is an officer whose duty is to keep genealogical lists and tables, adjust armorial bearings, and regulate the ceremonies at royal coronations and funerals.

Heraldry /hɛrˈəldri/. The art, office, or science of heralds. Also an old and obsolete abuse of buying and selling precedence in the paper of causes for hearing.

Heralds' College. In England, an ancient royal corporation, first instituted by Richard III, in 1483. It comprised three kings of arms, six heralds, and four marshals or pursuivants of arms, together with the earl marshal and a secretary. The heralds' books, compiled when progresses were solemnly and regularly made into every part of the kingdom, to inquire into the state of families, and to register such marriages and descendents as were verified to them upon oath, are allowed to be good evidence of pedigrees. The heralds' office is still allowed to make grants of arms and to permit change of names.

Herbage /ˈhɛrbɪdʒ/. In English law, an easement or liberty, which consists in the right to pasture cattle on another's ground.

Herciscunda /ˈhɛrɪskʊnˈdɑː/. In the civil law, to be divided. Familia herciscunda, an inheritance to be divided. Actio familie herciscunde, an action for dividing an inheritance. Herciscunda is more commonly used in the civil law.

Herd, n. An indefinite number, more than a few, of cattle, sheep, horses, or other animals of the larger sorts, assembled and kept together as one drove and under one care and management. Boland v. Cecil, 65 Cal.App.2d Supp. 832, 150 P.2d 819, 822.

Herd, v. To tend, take care of, manage, and control a herd of cattle or other animals, implying something more than merely driving them from place to place.

Herder. One who herds or has charge of a herd of cattle, in the senses above defined.

Herdwerc, heordwerc /ˈhɑːrdwɜːrk/. In old English law, herdsmen's work, or customary labor, done by herdsmen and inferior tenants, at the will of the lord.

Hereafter. A word of futurity, used in statutes and legal documents as indicative of future time, excluding both the present and the past.

Herebannum /ˈhɛrabənəm/. In old English law, a proclamation summoning the army into the field. A mulct or fine for not joining the army when summoned. A tax or tribute for the support of the army.

Herebote /ˈhɛrbəwt/. In old English law, the royal edict summoning the people to the field.

Heredad /hɛrədəd/. In Spanish law, a piece of land under cultivation; a cultivated farm, real estate; an inheritance or heirship.
Inheritance by law; title by Hereditary/hsred3t(eh)rt3/iy/. That which is the subject Hereditary right to the crown. The crown of England, /haredatamgnts/hehradifomants/. Hereditaments Heredaeat (q.v.). Heredaments /heredataments/hehradifomants/. Things capable of being inherited, be it corporeal or incorporeal, real, personal, or mixed, and including not only lands and everything thereon but also heirlooms, and certain furniture which, by custom, may descend to the heir together with the land. Things which may be directly inherited, as contrasted with things which go to the personal representative of a deceased. Denver Joint Stock Land Bank of Denver v. Dixon, 57 Wyo. 523, 122 P.2d 842, 846.

At common law corporeal hereditaments were physical objects, comprehended under the term land, and were said to lie in livery, while incorporeal hereditaments existed only in contemplation of law, were said to lie in grant and were affiliated with chattel interests. Corporeal hereditaments. Substantial permanent objects which may be inherited. The term "land" will include all such. Incorporeal hereditaments. Anything, the subject of property, which is inheritable and not tangible or visible. A right issuing out of a thing corporate (whether real or personal) or concerning or annexed to or exercisable within the same. A right growing out of, or concerning, or annexed to, a corporeal thing, but not the substance of the thing itself.

Hereditary /heredat(eh)riy/. That which is the subject of inheritance. Genetically transmitted or transmissible from parent to offspring. Hereditary right to the crown. The crown of England, by the positive constitution of the kingdom, has ever been descendible, and so continues, in a course peculiar to itself, yet subject to limitation by parliament; but, notwithstanding such limitation, the crown retains its descendible quality, and becomes hereditary in the prince to whom it is limited. 1 Bl.Comm. 191. Hereditary succession. Inheritance by law; title by descent. The title whereby a person, on the death of his ancestor, acquires his estate by right of representation as his heir at law. See Descent.

Heredita /heredity/. Inheritance. That biological law by which all living beings tend to repeat themselves in their descendants. The transmission through genes of characteristics from parents to children. Herefare /hérəfr/. Sax. A going into or with an army; a going out to war (profectio militaris); an expedition. Heregeat /hérəgy/. A heriot (q.v.).
Heroin. Narcotic drug which is a derivative of opium.

Hermer /hàrm3r/. A great lord.

See /hàrmajinyànt kàwàd/. Codex Hermogenian Code /hàrm3n(y)uwtaks/. The science or art of Hermeneutics /hàrmàn(y)uánts/. The science or art of construction and interpretation. By the phrase "legal hermeneutics" is understood the systematic body of rules which are recognized as applicable to the construction and interpretation of legal writings.

Hermer /hàrmàr/. A great lord.

High Court of Errors and Appeals. See Court of Errors and Appeals.

High Court of Parliament. See Parliament.

High degree of care and diligence. See Care.

High degree of negligence. See Negligence (Gross negligence).

Higher and lower scale. In the practice of the English supreme court of judicature there were two scales regulating the fees of the court and the fees which solicitors were entitled to charge. The lower scale applied (unless the court otherwise ordered) to the following cases: All causes and matters assigned by the acts to the king's bench, or the probate, divorce, and admiralty divisions; all actions of debt, contract, or tort; and in almost all causes and matters assigned by the acts to the chancery division in which the amount in litigation was under £1,000. The higher scale applied in all other causes and matters, and also in actions falling under one of the above classes, but in which the principal relief sought to be obtained was an injunction.

Highest and best use. In real estate valuation (e.g. in condemnation proceedings) the use of land or buildings which will bring the greatest economic return over a given time. This method of valuation requires expert to determine what condemned property's fair market value would realistically be if owner were hypothetically allowed to adapt his property to its most advantageous and valuable use. Raleigh-Durham Airport Authority v. King, 75 N.C.App. 57, 330 S.E.2d 622, 626.

Highest court. Court of last resort; a court whose decision is final and cannot be appealed because there is no higher court to further consider such matter; e.g. U.S. Supreme Court is highest federal court.

Highest degree of care. That degree of care that a very careful and prudent person would use under same or similar circumstances. Schneider v. Bi-State Development Agency, Mo.App., 447 S.W.2d 788, 791. A standard of care exacted in some jurisdictions of common carriers of passengers. The standard is relative, not absolute, and is sometimes regarded as no more than reasonable care measured by the circumstances.

Highest proved value. In an action of trover the amount which the jury from a consideration of all the evidence, may find to be the highest value of the property during the period between the conversion and the trial.

Highness. A title of honor given to princes. The kings of England, before the time of James I were not usually saluted with the title of "Majesty", but with that of "Highness". The children of crowned heads generally receive the title of "Highness". Since 1917 the title "Royal Highness" is limited to the sovereign's children, and children of sons of the sovereign, and the eldest living son of the eldest living son of the Prince of Wales.

This indeed is exceedingly hard, but so the law is written; such is the written or positive law. An observation quoted by Blackstone as used by Ulpian in the civil law; and applied to cases where courts of equity have no power to abate the rigor of the law.

Hoc servavitur quod initio convenit /ˈhɒk sɜːrvɪˈbətər kwɒd ɪnˈtɪo kəˈvɛnit/. This shall be preserved which is useful in the beginning.

Hodge-Podge Act. A name applied to a statute which comprises a medley of incongruous subjects.

Hoghenhyne /ˈhɒwənhyn(ə)d/. In Saxon law, a house-servant. Any stranger who lodged three nights or more at a man’s house in a decennary was called “hoghenhyne,” and his host became responsible for his acts as for those of his servant.

Hold, v. 1. To possess in virtue of a lawful title; as in the expression, common in grants, “to have and to hold,” or in that applied to notes, “the owner and holder.”

2. To be the grantee or tenant of another; to take or have an estate from another. Properly, to have an estate on condition of paying rent, or performing service.
3. To adjudge or decide, spoken of a court, particularly to declare the conclusion of law reached by the court as to the legal effect of the facts disclosed. See Holding.

4. To maintain or sustain; to be under the necessity or duty of sustaining or proving; as when it is said that a party "holds the affirmative" or negative of an issue in a cause.

5. To bind or obligate; to restrain or constrain; to keep in custody or under an obligation; as in the phrases "hold to bail," "hold for court," "held and firmly bound," etc.

6. To administer; to conduct or preside at; to convene, open, and direct the operations of; as to hold a court, hold pleas, etc.

7. To prosecute; to direct and bring about officially; to conduct according to law; as to hold an election.

8. To possess; to occupy; to be in possession and administration of; as to hold office.

9. To keep; to retain; to maintain possession of or authority over.

See also Ownership; Possession.

Hold over. To retain possession as tenant of property leased, after the end of the term. To continue in possession of an office and continue to exercise its functions, after the end of the officer's lawful term.

Hold pleas. To hear or try causes. 3 Bl.Comm. 35, 298.

Hold, n. In old English law, tenure. A word constantly occurring in conjunction with others, as freehold, leasehold, copyhold, etc., but rarely met with in the separate form.

Holder. The holder of a bill of exchange, promissory note, check, or other commercial paper, is the person who has legally acquired possession of the same, by indorsement or delivery, and who is entitled to receive payment of the instrument. Person who is in possession of a document of title or an instrument or an investment security drawn, issued or endorsed to him or to his order, or to bearer or in blank. U.C.C. § 1-201(20).

Holder for value. A holder who has given a valuable consideration for the document of title, instrument or investment security which he has in his possession. A holder takes an instrument for value: (a) to the extent that the agreed consideration has been performed or that he acquires a security interest in, or a lien on, the instrument otherwise than by legal process; or (b) when he takes the instrument in payment of, or as security for, an antecedent claim against any person whether or not the claim is due; or (c) when he gives a negotiable instrument for it or makes an irrevocable commitment to a third person. U.C.C. § 3-303.

Holder in due course. In commercial law, a holder of an instrument who took it for value, in good faith and without notice of any claim or defense against it, U.C.C. § 3-302(1), and who can enforce the instrument free from all claims and personal defenses. U.C.C. § 3-305. A payee may be a holder in due course. A holder does not become a holder in due course of an instrument by purchase of it at a judicial sale or by taking it under legal process, or by acquiring it in taking over an estate, or by purchasing it as part of a bulk transaction not in regular course of business of the transferor. A purchaser of a limited interest can be a holder in due course only to the extent of the interest purchased. Kaw Valley State Bank & Trust Co. v. Riddle, 219 Kan. 550, 549 P.2d 927, 933.

A holder in due course of a consumer credit contract (i.e. consumer paper) is subject to all claims and defenses which the debtor (buyer) could assert against the seller of the goods or services obtained pursuant to the credit contract or with the proceeds thereof. 16 CFR § 433.1 et seq.

Compare Bona fide purchaser. See also Real defenses.

Holder in good faith. One who takes property or an instrument without knowledge of any defect in its title.

Hold harmless agreement. A contractual arrangement whereby one party assumes the liability inherent in a situation, thereby relieving the other party of responsibility. Such agreements are typically found in leases, and easements. Agreement or contract in which one party agrees to hold the other without responsibility for damage or other liability arising out of the transaction involved. See also Guaranty; Indemnity; Surety.

Holding. The legal principle to be drawn from the opinion (decision) of the court. Opposite of dictum (q.v.). It may refer to a trial ruling of the court upon evidence or other questions presented during the trial. Edward L. Eyre & Co. v. Hirsch et al., 36 Wash.2d 439, 218 P.2d 888. Also, general term for property, securities, etc. owned by person or corporation. See also Decision; Dicta.

In English law, a piece of land held under a lease or similar tenancy for agricultural, pastoral, or similar purposes.

Holding company. A company that usually confines its activities to owning stock in, and supervising management of, other companies. A holding company usually owns a controlling interest in the companies whose stock it holds. In order for a corporation to gain the benefits of tax consolidation, including tax free dividends and the ability to share operating losses, the holding company must own 80% or more of the voting stock of the corporation. I.R.C. § 243. See also Investment company.

Personal holding company. A closely held corporation which receives personal holding company income. Personal holding income includes but is not limited to: dividends, interest, rents, royalties, etc. If a company comes within the definition of a personal holding company, it may be subject to the regular corporate tax, as well as a personal holding company tax on the undistributed personal holding company income. The tax is imposed to prevent individuals from accumulating income in the corporation and not subjecting the individuals to the personal income tax on the earnings. See also Holding company tax; Personal holding company.
Holding company tax. Tax on undistributed personal holding company income after allowable deductions for dividends paid, etc. I.R.C. § 545.

Holding period. In taxation, that period of time in which a capital asset must be held to determine whether gain or loss from its sale or exchange is long term or short term. I.R.C. §§ 1222–1223.

Holdings. Extent of ownership of investments (real estate, securities, etc.).

Holdover tenant. A tenant who remains in possession after the expiration of a lease, or after a tenancy at will has been terminated.

Holiday. A religious festival; a day set apart for commemorating some important event in history; a day of exemption from labor. A day upon which the usual operations of business and government are suspended and the courts closed, and, generally, no legal process is permitted to be served. In addition to national holidays (e.g. Fourth of July), there are also state holidays (e.g. “Bunker Hill” holiday in Massachusetts).

Legal holiday. See Legal holiday.

Public holiday. A legal holiday (q.v.).

Statutory holidays. Most states observe the same holidays as those observed by the federal government (see 5 U.S.C.A. § 6103). There are variations however, e.g., several states do not celebrate Columbus Day, several states do not observe the National Memorial Day, while many other states have special holidays commemorating historical events, the birthdays of state or regional heroes, religious festival days, or other occasions deemed worthy of celebration. See also Legal holiday.

Hológrafo /højológrafow/. In Spanish law, a holograph. An instrument (particularly a will) wholly in the handwriting of the person executing it; or which, to be valid, must be so written by his own hand.

Holograph /hó(w)løgræf/. A will or deed written entirely by the testator or grantor with his own hand and not witnessed (attested). State laws vary widely with respect to the status of self-written “holographic” wills. Some states categorically refuse to recognize any will not meeting the formal statutory requirements relating to attestation clause, witnesses, etc. Others will recognize a holographic will if all or certain portions are in the handwriting of the testator. And many states that do not recognize holographic wills executed by their own citizens within their borders will nevertheless recognize such wills if valid under other jurisdictions. Under the Uniform Probate Code (as adopted by several states), such will is valid, whether or not witnessed, if the signature and the material provisions are in the handwriting of the testator. § 2-503.

Holy Orders. In ecclesiastical law, the orders of bishops (including archbishops), priests, and deacons in the Church of England. The Roman canonists had the orders of bishop (in which the pope and archbishops were included), priest, deacon, subdeacon, psalmist, acolyte, exorcist, reader, ostiarius. One of the seven sacraments of the Roman Catholic Church.

Homage /hómaj/. In feudal law, a service (or the ceremony of rendering it) which a tenant was bound to perform to his lord on receiving investiture of a fee, or succeeding to it as heir, in acknowledgment of the tenure. It is described as the most honorable service of reverence that a free tenant might do to his lord. The ceremony was as follows: The tenant, being ungirt and with bare head, knelt before the lord, the latter sitting, and held his hands extended and joined between the hands of the lord, and said: “I become your man [homo] from this day forward, of life and limb and earthly honor, and to you will be faithful and loyal, and bear you faith, for the tenements that I claim to hold of you, saving the faith that I owe unto our sovereign lord the king, so help me God.” The tenant then received a kiss from the lord. Homage could be done only to the lord himself. “Homage” is to be distinguished from “fealty,” another incident of feudalism, and which consisted in the solemn oath of fidelity made by the vassal to the lord, whereas homage was merely an acknowledgment of tenure. If the homage was intended to include fealty, it was called “liege homage;” but otherwise it was called “simple homage.”

Homage ancestral. In feudal law, homage was called by this name where a man and his ancestors had immemorially held of another and his ancestors by the service of homage, which bound the lord to warrant the title, and also to hold the tenant clear of all services to superior lords. If the tenant aliened in fee, his alienee was a tenant by homage, but not by homage ancestral. 2 Bl.Comm. 300.

Homage jury. In feudal law, a jury in a court-baron, consisting of tenants that do homage, who are to inquire and make presentments of the death of tenants, surrenders, admittances, and the like.

Homage liege /hómaij lij/. In feudal law, that kind of homage which was due to the sovereign alone as supreme lord, and which was done without any saving or exception of the rights of other lords.

Homager /hómaj/or. In feudal law, one who does or is bound to do homage.

Homaggio respectuando /haméyi(y)iyow ræpɛktjʊwəndow/. A writ to the escheator commanding him to deliver seisin of lands to the heir of the king’s tenant, notwithstanding his homage not done.

Homagium /haméyi(y)iyom/. L. Lat. Homage (q.v.).

Homagium ligium /haméyi(y)iyam lájijiyam/. In feudal law, liege homage; that kind of homage which was due to the sovereign alone as supreme lord, and which was done without any saving or exception of the rights of other lords. So called from ligando (binding), because it could not be renounced like other kinds of homage.

Homagium, non per procuratores nec per literas fieri potuit, sed in propria persona tam domini quam tenenitis capi debet et fieri /haméyi(y)iyom, nón par prókyuratōriyz něk par liṭaras fāyaray pōtuwat, sěd in prówprziwa parsówna têm dômanay kwêm tanéntas képây débat êt fâyray/. Homage cannot be done by proxy, nor by letters, but must be paid and received in the proper person, as well of the lord as the tenant.

Homagium planum /həmə́j(i)yəm plə́ynəm/. In feudal law, plain homage; a species of homage which bound him who did it to nothing more than fidelity, without any obligation either of military service or attendance in the courts of his superior.

Homagium reddere /həmə́j(i)yəm rə́dərəiy/. In feudal law, to renounce homage. This was when a vassal made a solemn declaration of disowning and defying his lord; for which there was a set form and method prescribed by the feudal laws.

Homagium simplex /həmə́j(i)yəm sə́mpləkəs/. In feudal law, simple homage; that kind of homage which was merely an acknowledgment of tenure, with a saving of the rights of other lords.

Hombre bueno /(h)ɔ́mbre bwéynəw/. In Spanish law, the judge of a district. Also an arbitrator chosen by the parties to a suit. Also a man in good standing; one who is competent to testify in a suit.

Home. One’s own dwelling place; the house in which one lives, especially the house in which he lives with his family; the habitual abode of one’s family; a dwelling house. Mann v. Haines, 146 Kan. 988, 73 P.2d 1066, 1072. That place in which one in fact resides with the intention of residence, or in which he has so resided, and with regard to which he retains residence or to which he intends to return. Place where a person dwells and which is the center of his domestic, social and civil life.

Restatement of Conflicts, Second, § 12. As relating to deductors of expenses for carrying on a trade or business while living away from home, “home” within I.R.C. § 162(a)(2) is defined as taxpayer’s principal place of business. Ellwein v. U.S., C.A.N.D, 778 F.2d 506, 509. See also Domicile; Residence; Tax home.

Home brew. An intoxicating beverage made at home or on general premises. Moonshine.

Home loan bank. See Federal Home Loan Banks.

Home ne sera puny pur suer des briefes en court le roy, soit il a droit ou a tort. A man shall not be punished for suing out writs in the king’s court, whether he be right or wrong.

Home office. The department of state through which the English sovereign administers most of the internal affairs of the kingdom, especially the police, and communicates with the judicial functionaries. As applied to a corporation, its principal office or corporate headquarters.

Homeowner’s association. An association of people who own homes in a given area, formed for the purpose of improving or maintaining the quality of the area.

An association formed by a land developer or the builder of condominiums or planned unit developments to provide management for and maintenance of property in which they own undivided, common interest. The builder’s participation as well as the duties of the association are controlled by statute in certain states. Such non-profit associations are commonly formed pursuant to a restrictive covenant or a declaration of restrictions.

Homeowner’s equity loan. See Equity loan.

Homeowners policy. In insurance, multi-peril type policy available to homeowners, combining coverage for fire, water, burglary, liability, etc.

Home Owners Warranty (HOW). A warranty and insurance protection program offered by many home builders in the United States. The program was developed by the Home Owners Warranty Corporation, a subsidiary of the National Association of Home Builders. The major provisions of the program are that a new home is protected for ten years against major structural defects. Similar warranty protection is provided by statute in many states.

Home port. In maritime law, the home port of a vessel is either the port where she is registered or enrolled, or the port at or nearest to which her owner usually resides, or, if there be more than one owner, the port at or nearest to which the husband, or acting and managing owner resides. But for some purposes any port where the owner happens at the time to be with his vessel is its home port. Under the shipping laws, every vessel has what is called her “home port,” to which she belongs, and which constitutes her legal abiding place or residence, regardless of her actual absence therefrom. See also Port.

Home port doctrine. Under “home-port” doctrine vessels engaged in interstate and foreign commerce are taxable at their home port only. Scandinavian Airlines System, Inc. v. Los Angeles County, 56 Cal.2d 11, 14 Cal.Rptr. 25, 29, 363 P.2d 25. Under this doctrine a vessel plying the high seas may be taxed at its full value in its home port or in true domicile of its owner, and no other jurisdiction, including those ports visited by the vessel during its voyages, has power to tax it. Star-Kist Foods, Inc. v. Byram, 241 C.A.2d 313, 50 Cal.Rptr. 381, 382, 385.

Where repairs have been made, or necessaries furnished to a foreign ship, or to a ship in a port of the State to which she does not belong, the general maritime law, following the civil law, gives the party a lien on the ship itself for his security; and he may well maintain a suit in rem in the Admiralty to enforce his right. But in respect to repairs and necessaries in the port or State to which the ship belongs, the case is governed altogether by the municipal law of that State; and no lien is implied, unless it is recognized by that law. The General Smith, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 438, 442, 4 L.Ed. 609.

Home rule. State constitutional provision or type of legislative action which results in appropriating power between state and local governments by providing local cities and towns with a measure of self government if such local government accepts terms of the state legislation. See also Local option.
HOME RULE CHARTER

Home rule charter. The organizational plan or framework of a municipal corporation, analogous to a constitution of a state or nation, drawn by the municipality itself and adopted by popular vote of its people.

Homestead. The dwelling house and the adjoining land where the head of the family dwells; the home farm. The fixed residence of the family, with the land, usual and customary appurtenances, and buildings surrounding the main house.

Technically, and under the modern homestead laws, an artificial estate in land, devised to protect the possession and enjoyment of the owner against the claims of his creditors, by withdrawing the property from execution and forced sale, so long as the land is occupied as a home. See Homestead exemption laws, below.

Homestead corporations. Corporations organized for the purpose of acquiring lands in large tracts, paying off incumbrances thereon, improving and subdividing them into homestead lots or parcels, and distributing them among the shareholders, and for the accumulation of a fund for such purposes.

Homestead entry. See Entry.

Homestead exemption laws. Laws passed in most states allowing a householder or head of a family to designate a house and land as his homestead, and exempting the homestead may include a formal declaration to be recorded annually.

Homestead right. The personal right to the peaceful and uninterrupted use of the home property free from claims of creditors.

Probate homestead. A homestead set apart by the probate court for the use of a surviving husband or wife and the minor children out of the common property, or out of the real estate belonging to the deceased.

Homicidal. Pertaining, relating, or impelling to homicide, as a homicidal mania.

Homicide. The killing of one human being by the act, procurement, or omission of another. A person is guilty of criminal homicide if he purposely, knowingly, recklessly or negligently causes the death of another human being. Criminal homicide is murder, manslaughter or negligent homicide. Model Penal Code, § 210.1; 18 U.S.C.A. § 1111 et seq. See Manslaughter; Murder.

Homicide is not necessarily a crime. It is a necessary ingredient of the crimes of murder and manslaughter, but there are other cases in which homicide may be committed without criminal intent and without criminal consequences, as, where it is done in the lawful execution of a judicial sentence, in self-defense, or as the only possible means of arresting an escaping felon. The term "homicide" is neutral; while it describes the act, it pronounces no judgment on its moral or legal quality.

People v. Mahon, 77 Ill.App.3d 413, 395 N.E.2d 950, 958. See Excusable homicide; Justifiable homicide, below.

Classification

Homicide is ordinarily classified as "justifiable," "excusable," and "felonious." For the definitions of these terms, and of some other compound terms, see below.

Culpable homicide. Described as a crime varying from the very lowest culpability, up to the very verge of murder.

Excusable homicide. The killing of a human being, either by misadventure or in self-defense. Such homicide consists of a perpetrator's acting in a manner which the law does not prohibit, such as self-defense or accidental homicide. Law v. State, 21 Md.App. 13, 318 A.2d 859, 869. The name itself imports some fault, error, or omission, so trivial, however, that the law excuses it from guilt of felony, though in strictness it judges it deserving of some little degree of punishment. It is of two sorts,—either per infortunium, by misadventure, or se defendendo, upon a sudden affray. Homicide per infortunium is where a man, doing a lawful act, without any intention of hurt, unfortunately kills another; but, if death ensue from any unlawful act, the offense is manslaughter, and not misadventure. Homicide se defendendo is where a man kills another upon a sudden affray, merely in his own defense, or in defense of his wife, child, parent, or servant, and not from any vindictive feeling. See Self-defense; also Justifiable homicide, below.

Felonious homicide. The wrongful killing of a human being, of any age or either sex, without justification or excuse in law; of which offense there are two degrees, manslaughter and murder.

Homicide by misadventure. The accidental killing of another, where the slayer is doing a lawful act, unaccompanied by any criminally careless or reckless conduct. The same as "homicide per infortunium." See Manslaughter.

Homicide by necessity. A species of justifiable homicide, because it arises from some unavoidable necessity, without any will, intention, or desire, and without any inadvertence or negligence in the party killing, and therefore without any shadow of blame. See Self-defense.

Homicide per infortunium. Homicide by misfortune, or accidental homicide; as where a man doing a lawful act without any intention of hurt, accidentally kills another; a species of excusable homicide. See Negligent homicide.

Homicide se defendendo. Homicide in self-defense; the killing of a person in self-defense upon a sudden affray, where the slayer had no other possible (or, at least, probable) means of escaping from his assailant. A species of excusable homicide. See Self defense.

Justifiable homicide. Such as is committed intentionally, but without any evil design, and under such circumstances of necessity or duty as render the act proper, and relieve the party from any shadow of blame; as where a sheriff lawfully executes a sentence of death Homicidium /hómásádiyam/. Lat. Homicide (q.v.).

Homicidium ex casu, homicide by accident.

Homicidium ex justitia, homicide in the administration of justice, or in the execution of the sentence of the law.

Homo pertinens. In feudal law, a feudal bondman or vassal; one who belonged to the soil (qui gleboe adscribitur).

Homo potest esse habilis et in habilis diversis temporibus. A man may be capable and incapable at different times.

Homo regius. A king’s vassal.

Homo romanus. A Roman. An appellation given to the old inhabitants of Gaul and other Roman provinces, and retained in the laws of the barbarous nations.

Homo trium litterarum. That is, the three letters, “f,” “u,” “r;” the Latin word for “thief.”

Honestus. Of good character or standing. One of the three general precepts which Justinian reduced the whole doctrine of the law, the others being alterum non leedere (not to injure others), and suum cuique tribuere (to render to every man his due).

Honestus. Lat. Of good character or standing.

Honeste vivere. Lat. To live honorably, creditably, or virtuously. One of the three general precepts which Justinian reduced the whole doctrine of the law, the others being alterum non leedere (not to injure others), and suum cuique tribuere (to render to every man his due).

Honor. u. To accept a bill of exchange, or to pay a note, check, or accepted bill, at maturity and according to its tenor. To pay or to accept and pay, or where a credit so engages to purchase or discount a draft complying with the terms of the draft. U.C.C. § 1-201(21). See also Dishonor.

Honor. n. In old English law, a seigniory of several manors held under one baron or lord paramount. Also those dignities or privileges, degrees of nobility, knighthood, and other titles, which flow from the crown as the fountain of honor.

In America, the customary title of courtesy given to judges, and occasionally to some other officers; as, “his honor,” “your honor,” “honorable.”

Act of honor. When a bill has been protested, and a third person wishes to take it up, or accept it, for the “honor” (credit) of one or more of the parties, the notary draws up an instrument, evidencing the transaction, which is called by this name. Such acts of honor have been eliminated by the U.C.C.

Honor courts. In old English law, tribunals held within honors or seigniories.

Office of honor. As used in constitutional and statutory provisions, this term denotes a public office of considerable dignity and importance, to which important public trusts or interests are confided, but which is not compensated by any salary or fees, being thus contrasted with an “office of profit.”

Honorable. A title of courtesy given in England to the younger children of earls, and the children of viscounts and barons; and, collectively, to the house of commons. In America, the word is used as a title of courtesy for various classes of officials and judges, but without any clear lines of distinction.

Honorable discharge. A formal final judgment passed by the government upon the entire military record of a soldier, and an authoritative declaration by the government that he has left the service in a status of honor. Zearing v. Johnson, 10 Cal.App.2d 654, 52 P.2d 1019, 1020. Full veterans benefits are only given to those with an “honorable discharge” status.

Honorarium. In the civil law, a voluntary reward for that for which no remuneration could be collected by law. Cunningham v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A., 67 F.2d 205. A voluntary donation, in consideration of services which flow from hire or compensation for service.

A voluntary reward for that for which no remuneration could be collected by law. Cunningham v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A., 67 F.2d 205. A voluntary donation, in consideration of services which admit of no compensation in money.

A payment of money or anything of value made to a person for services rendered for which fees cannot legally or are not traditionally made. Federal laws place restrictions on the payment of honoraria to members of Congress. 2 U.S.C.A. § 31-1. See also Gratuity.

Honorary. As applied to public offices and other positions of responsibility or trust, this term means either that the office or title is bestowed upon the incumbent as a mark of honor or compliment, without intending to charge him with the active discharge of the duties of the place, or else that he is to receive no salary or other compensation in money, the honor conferred by the incumbency of the office being his only reward. In other contents or usages, it means attached to or growing out of some honor or dignity or honorable office, or else it imports an obligation or duty growing out of honor or trust only, as distinguished from legal accountability.

Honorary canons. Those without emolument.
Honorary feuds. In old English law, titles of nobility, descivable to the eldest son, in exclusion of all the rest. 2 Bl.Comm. 56.

Honorary services. In feudal law, special services to be rendered to the king in person, characteristic of the tenure by grand serjeanty; such as to carry his banner, his sword, or the like or to be his butler, champion, or other officer, at his coronation.

Honorary trust. See Trust.

Honorary trustees. Trustees to preserve contingent remainders, so called because they are bound, in honor only, to decide on the most proper and prudential course.

Honoris respectum /hɔnərɪs ˈrɛspəkts/. By reason of honor or privilege. See Challenge.

Hostellaria, hospitallaria /hôsp(cha)talëriya/ . A place or room in religious houses used for the reception of guests and strangers.

Hostile. Having the character of an enemy; standing in the relation of an enemy. Feeling or displaying enmity or antagonism such as a hostile witness. See Hostile or adverse witness.
ciently applied to the mixing and blending of lands given to one daughter in frank marriage, with those descending to her and her sisters in fee-simple, for the purpose of dividing the whole equally among them; without which the daughter who held in frank marriage could have no share in the lands in fee-simple. 2 Bl.Comm. 190.

Hotchpot, or the putting in hotchpot, is applied in modern law to the throwing the amount of an advancement made to a particular child, in real or personal estate, into the common stock, for the purpose of a more equal division, or of equalizing the shares of all the children. This answers to or resembles the collatio bonorum, or collation of the civil law.

Hotel. A building held out to the public as a place where all transient persons who come will be received and entertained as guests for compensation and it opens its facilities to the public as a whole rather than limited accessibility to a well-defined private group. Ambassador Athletic Club v. Utah State Tax Commission, 27 Utah 2d 377, 496 P.2d 883.

Hotel divorce. Form of collusive divorce in which by agreement of both spouses, one spouse stages a fake adultery scene.

Hotelkeeper's lien. A possessory or statutory lien allowing the hotelkeeper or innkeeper to take the personal property of a guest, brought into the hotel, as security for nonpayment of the guest's bill.

Hot issue. See Issue (Securities).

Hot pursuit. See Fresh pursuit.

Hot-water ordeal. In old English law, this was a test, in cases of accusation, by hot water; the party accused and suspected being appointed by the judge to put his arms up to the elbows in seething hot water, which, after sundry prayers and invocations, he did, and was, by the effect which followed, judged guilty or innocent.

Hour. The twenty-fourth part of a natural day; sixty minutes of time.

Office hours. See Office.

Hours of labor. Time period in which employees work and which is governed in part by state and federal (e.g. Adamson Act; Fair Labor Standards Act) laws enacted under police power insofar as such legislation deals with the safety and welfare of laborers and the public. See Child labor laws; Fair Labor Standards Act; Wage and hour laws.

Under some statutes housebreaking may consist in "breaking out" of a house after access had been gained without breaking.

House counsel. Lawyer who acts as attorney for business though carried as an employee of that business and not as an independent lawyer. Generally, such lawyer advises business on day to day matters. Larger businesses have legal departments with attorneys assigned to specialized areas of law affecting their particular business; e.g., labor law, taxes, personal injury litigation, corporate law, etc.

Household, adj. Belonging to the house and family; domestic.

Term "household" is generally synonymous with "family" for insurance purposes, and includes those who dwell together as a family under the same roof. Van Overbeke v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 303 Minn. 387, 227 N.W.2d 807, 810. Generally, the term "household" as used in automobile insurance is synonymous with "home" and "family." Bartholet v. Berkness, 291 Minn. 123, 189 N.W.2d 410, 412.

For family, see that title.

Householder. The occupier of a house. More correctly, one who keeps house with his or her family; the head or master of a family. Berghen v. Berghen, 113 Ind.App. 412, 48 N.E.2d 1001, 1003. One who has a household; the head of a household. See also Head of household.

House law. A peculiar type of regulatory code, now largely obsolete, promulgated by the head of a royal or noble family, or of a prominent private family, governing intra-family relationships and acts with respect to policies of marriage, disposition of property, inheritance and the like. Usually these codes had no legal authority but were enforced within the family by sufficient personal and economic sanctions.

House of delegates. When used in connection with the American Bar Association, the House of Delegates is the body in which is vested the control and administration of the ABA. See ABA Constitution, Art. VI.

House of prostitution. See Bawdy-house.
the existing circumstances remain unchanged that the "humanitarian doctrine" seizes upon the situation and imposes upon defendant a duty to thereafter exercise proper care to avoid the threatened injury. Finch v. Kegevic, Mo.App., 486 S.W.2d 515, 518, 519, 521. Only a very few states follow this doctrine.

See also Immediate danger; Imminent peril; Last clear chance doctrine.

Hundred. Under the Saxon organization of England, each county or shire comprised of an indefinite number of hundreds, each hundred containing ten tithings, or groups of ten families of freeholders or frankpledges. The hundred was governed by a high constable, and had its own court; but its most remarkable feature was the corporate responsibility of the whole for the crimes or defaults of the individual members. The introduction of this plan of organization into England is commonly ascribed to Alfred, but the idea, as well of the collective liability as of the division, was probably known to the ancient German peoples, as we find the same thing established in the Frankish kingdom under Clothaire, and in Denmark. 1 Bl.Comm. 115; 4 Bl.Comm. 411.

Hundredarius /hándrádéríyás/. In old English law, a hundredary or hundredor. A name given to the chief officer of a hundred, as well as to the freeholders who composed it.

Hundredary /hándrádéríy/. The chief or presiding officer of a hundred.

Hundred Court. In English law, a larger court-baron, being held for all the inhabitants of a particular hundred, instead of a manor. The free suitors were the judges, and the steward the registrar, as in the case of a court-baron. It was not a court of record, and resembled a court-baron in all respects except that in point of territory it was of greater jurisdiction. These courts no longer exist. 3 Bl.Comm. 34, 35.

Hundredes earldor, or hundredes man /hándrád ərldor/hándrádzmah/. The presiding officer in the hundred court.

Hundred-fecta /hándrád fékta/. The performance of suit and service at the hundred court.

Hundred gemote /hándrád gamɔwrt/. Among the Saxons, a meeting or court of the freeholders of a hundred, which assembled, originally, twelve times a year, and possessed civil and criminal jurisdiction and ecclesiastical powers.

Hundred lagh /hándrád lɔ/. The law of the hundred, or hundred court; liability to attend the hundred court.

Hundredors /hándrádær/. In English law, the inhabitants or freeholders of a hundred, anciently the suitors or judges of the hundred court. Persons impaneled or fit to be impaneled upon juries, dwelling within the hundred where the cause of action arose. It was formerly necessary to have some of these upon every panel of jurors. 3 Bl.Comm. 359, 360. The term "hundredor" was also used to signify the officer who had the jurisdiction of a hundred, and held the hundred court, and sometimes the bailiff of a hundred.

Hundred penny. In old English law, a tax collected from the hundred, by the sheriff or lord of the hundred.

Hundred rolls. In England, rolls embodying the result of investigations made by the commissioners in 1274 as to usurpations of the royal rights.

Hundred secta /hándrád sɛktə/. The performance of suit and service at the hundred court.

Hundred setena /hándrád sɛtnə/. In Saxon law, the dwellers or inhabitants of a hundred.

Hundredweight. A denomination of weight containing, according to the English system, 112 pounds; but in this country, generally, it consists of 100 pounds avoirdupois.

Hung jury. A jury so irreconcilably divided in opinion that they cannot agree upon any verdict by the required unanimity. See Dynamite instruction.

Huntley hearing. In New York, a separate proceeding in a criminal case wherein the admissibility of an accused's extrajudicial statements is determined. People v. Huntley, 15 N.Y.2d 72, 255 N.Y.S.2d 838, 204 N.E.2d 179.

Hurdererfrēst /hاردارفرست/. A domestic; one of a family.

Hurt. In such phrases as "to the hurt or annoyance of another," or "hurt, molested, or restrained in his person or estate," this word is not restricted to physical injuries, but includes also mental pain, as well as discomfort or annoyance. See also Damage; Injury.

Hurto /hʊrtow/. In Spanish law, theft.

Husband. A married man; one who has a lawful wife living. The correlative of "wife."

Etymologically, the word signified the "house bond;" the man who, according to Saxon ideas and institutions, held around him the family, for whom he was in law responsible.

Husbandman. A farmer, a cultivator or tiller of the ground. The word "farmer" is colloquially used as synonymous with "husbandman", but originally meant a tenant who cultivates leased ground.

Husband of a ship. See Ship (Ship's husband).

Husbandria /hʉsunbɾiə/. In old English law, husbandry.

Husband-wife privilege. Term refers to privilege extended to confidential marital communications. While state statutes vary, in general such provide that a spouse has a privilege to refuse to disclose, and to prevent the other from disclosing, a confidential communication made while spouses were married. There are...
Husband-wife tort actions. The common law rule, carried forward by statute in many states, prohibits tort actions between spouses. The current trend however is to abolish this interspousal immunity doctrine, thus permitting such suits between spouses. Some states have abolished the doctrine only insofar as automobile tort actions. See also Consortium.

Hypnosis. The act of inducing artificially a state of sleep or trance in a subject by means of verbal suggestion by the hypnotist or by the subject's concentration upon some object. It is generally characterized by extreme responsiveness to suggestions from the hypnotist.

A state of heightened concentration with diminished awareness of peripheral events. State v. Hurd, 86 N.J. 525, 432 A.2d 86. A majority of states have held that hypnotically induced testimony is admissible in a criminal trial, e.g. United States v. Awkard, C.A.Cal., 597 F.2d 667 cert. den. 444 U.S. 885, 100 S.Ct. 179, 62 L.Ed.2d 116; Clark v. State, Fla.App., 379 So.2d 372. Some courts hold, however, that hypnotically refreshed testimony must satisfy the standard of acceptability for scientific evidence before it is admissible in a criminal trial. E.g. State v. Hurd, 86 N.J. 525, 432 A.2d 86, 91.

Hypobolum /hɔpōbɔləm/. In the civil law, the name of the bequest or legacy given by the husband to his wife, at his death, above her dowry.

Hypochondria; hypomania /hɔypɔkɔndriə, hɪpɔmændriə, hɪpɔ/ /hɔypɔmændriə, hɪpɔ/. See insanity.

Hypothecary action /hɔpoθɛkəriəkredətəriə/. In the civil law, an hypothecary action; an action for the enforcement of an hypotheca, or right of mortgage; or to obtain the surrender of the thing mortgaged.

Hypothecaria actio /hɔpɔθɛkəriəkredətəriəkredətəriə/. Lat. In the civil law, an hypothecary action; an action for the enforcement of an hypotheca, or right of mortgage; or to obtain the surrender of the thing mortgaged.

Hypothecarrii creditores /hɔpɔθɛkəriəkrɛdətɔriə/. Lat. In the civil law, hypothecary creditors; those who loaned money on the security of an hypotheca (q.v.).

Hypothecary action /hɔpɔθɛkəriəkredətəriə/. The name of an action allowed under the civil law for the enforcement of the claims of a creditor by the contract of hypotheca (q.v.). Lovell v. Cragin, 136 U.S. 130, 10 S.Ct. 1024, 34 L.Ed. 372.

Hypotecate /hɔpɔθɛkət/. To pledge property as security or collateral for a debt. Generally, there is no physical transfer of the pledged property to the lender, nor is the lender given title to the property; though he has the right to sell the pledged property upon default. Moore v. Wardlaw, C.C.A.Tex., 522 S.W.2d 552, 554. See also Pledge; Rehypotecate.

Hypotecation bond /hɔpɔθɛkəʃən bɔnd/. A bond given in the contract of bottomry or respondentia.

Hypothèque /ɪɔpɔtwɪk/ /ɪɔpɔtwɪk/. In French law, hypothecation; a mortgage on real property; the right vested in a creditor by the assignment to him of real estate as security for the payment of his debt, whether or not it be accompanied by possession.
It corresponds to the mortgage of real property in English law, and is a real charge, following the property into whosoever hands it comes. It may be légale, as in the case of the charge which the state has over the lands of its accountants, or which a married woman has over those of her husband; judiciaire, when it is the result of a judgment of a court of justice; and conventionelle, when it is the result of an agreement of the parties.

Hypothesis /həpəθəˈsɪs/. A supposition, assumption, or theory; a theory set up by the prosecution, on a criminal trial, or by the defense, as an explanation of the facts in evidence, and a ground for inferring guilt or innocence, as the case may be, or as indicating a probable or possible motive for the crime.

Hypothetical question. A hypothetical question is a form of question framed in such a manner as to call for an opinion from an expert based on a series of assumptions claimed to have been established as fact by the evidence in a case. It is a device which is used at trial to enable an expert witness to express an opinion concerning facts about which he did not have personal knowledge. It should be so framed as to recite all the facts in evidence which are relevant to the formation of an opinion and then, assuming the facts recited to be true, the witness should be asked whether he is able to form an opinion therefrom and if so to state his opinion. McMurray v. State, 145 Tex.Cr.R. 439, 168 S.W.2d 858, 860. Federal Rules of Evidence 705 and 703 eliminate the requirement that a hypothetical question must be used in Federal Court, but either the court or the questioner may decide that one should be used.

Hypothetical yearly tenancy. The basis, in England, of rating lands and hereditaments to the poor-rate, and to other rates and taxes that are expressed to be leviable or assessable in like manner as the poor-rate.

Hysteria. Disorder of the psychoneurotic system characterized by disturbances of the psychic, sensory, motor, and visceral functions. Extreme emotionalism, commonly characterized by attention-seeking, impulsive demonstrations.

Hysteropotmoi. Those who, having been thought dead, had, after a long absence in foreign countries, returned safely home; or those who, having been thought dead in battle, had afterwards unexpectedly escaped from their enemies and returned home. These, among the Romans, were not permitted to enter their own houses at the door, but were received at a passage opened in the roof.
Ib. See ibidem.

Ibidem /ibdam/ abáydam/. Lat. In the same place; in the same book; on the same page, etc. Abbreviated to "ibid." or "ib."

Ibi semper debet fieri triatio ubi juratores meliorem possunt habere notitiam /ibay semspor débet fáyray tryéksh(yow) yúwbay júratórylz pósont hábiry nowtísh(yi)am/. A trial should always be had where the jurors can be the best informed.

I.C.C. Interstate Commerce Commission.

I—ctus. An abbreviation for "jurisconsultus," one learned in the law; a jurisconsult. See Jurisconsultus.

Ictus orbis /iktas orbas/. A maim, a bruise, or swelling; any hurt without cutting the skin. When the skin is cut, the injury is called a "wound."

Id. See Idem.

I.D. Identification.

Id certum est quod certum reddi potest /id sártam est kwó sórtam réday pówta$t/. That is certain which can be made certain. 2 Bl.Comm. 143; 1 Bl.Comm. 78.

Id certum est quod certum reddi potest, sed id magis certum est quod de semetipso est certum /id sártam est kwó sórtam réday pówta$t, sed id méyjás sórtam est kwó di lýmítipsoyw est sórtam/. That is certain which can be made certain, but that is more certain which is certain of itself.

Idem /áydam/. Lat. The same; used to indicate a reference previously made. According to Lord Coke, "idem" has two significations, sc., idem syllabis seu verbis (the same in syllabus or words), and idem re et senae (the same in substance and in sense).

Idem agens et patiens esse non potest /áydam eyjanz ét péysh(y)anz éšíy nón pówta$t/. The same person cannot be both agent and patient; i.e., the doer and person to whom the thing is done.

Idem est facere, et non prohibere cum possis; et qui non prohibit, cum prohibere posseit, in culpa est (aut jubeat) /áydam ét féyshariy ét nón prówshabirìy, kám pósas, ét kway nón prów(h)abat kám prówshabirìy pósit in kálpé ets/. To commit, and not to prohibit when in your power, is the same thing; and he who does not prohibit when he can prohibit is in fault, or does the same as ordering it to be done.

Idem est nihil dicere, et insufficienter dicere /áydam ést náy(h)al disaríy ét insšflshiyéntar disaríy/. It is the same thing to say nothing, and to say a thing insufficiently. To say a thing in an insufficient manner is the same as not to say it at all. Applied to the plea of a prisoner.

Idem est non esse, et non apparere /áydam ést nón éšíy ét nón zápariríy/. It is the same thing not to be as not to appear. Not to appear is the same thing as not to be.

Idem est non probari et non esse; non deficit jus, sed probatio /áydam ést nón próbray ét nón éšíy, nón défésat jás séd próbréysh(yow)/. What is not proved and what does not exist are the same; it is not a defect of the law, but of proof.

Idem est scire aut scire debere aut potuisse /áydam ést sáyriy òt sáyriy dábiríy òt pótuywisíy/. To be bound to know or to be able to know is the same as to know.

Idem per idem /áydam por áydam/. The same for the same. An illustration of a kind that really adds no additional element to the consideration of the question.

Idem semper antecedenti proximo refertur /áydam sémpr ántaséndantay próksomow rafárta$. "The same" is always referred to its next antecedent.

Idem sonans /áydam sównáns/. Sounding the same or alike; having the same sound. A term applied to names which are substantially the same, though slightly varied in the spelling, as "Lawrence" and "Lawrance," and the like. State v. Culbertson, 6 N.C.App. 327, 170 S.E.2d 125, 127. Under the rule of "idem sonans," variance between allegation and proof of a given name is not material if the names sound the same or the attentive ear finds difficulty in distinguishing them when pronounced. Martin v. State, Tex.Cr.App., 541 S.W.2d 605, 606.

Two names are said to be "idem sonantes" if the attentive ear finds difficulty in distinguishing them when pronounced, or if common and long-continued usage has by corruption or abbreviation made them identical in pronunciation. The rule of "idem sonans" is that absolute accuracy in spelling names is not required in a legal document or proceedings either civil or criminal; that if the name, as spelled in the document, though different from the correct spelling thereof, conveys to the ear, when pronounced according to the commonly accepted methods, a sound practically identical with the correct name as commonly pronounced, the name thus given is a sufficient identification of the individual referred to, and no advantage can be taken of the clerical error. The doctrine of "idem sonans" has been much enlarged by decisions, to conform to the growing rule that a variance, to be material, must be such as has misled the opposite party to his prejudice.

Identical. Exactly the same for all practical purposes.

Identification. Proof of identity. The proving that a person, subject, or article before the court is the very same that he or it is alleged, charged, or reputed to be; as where a witness recognizes the prisoner as the same person whom he saw committing the crime; or where handwriting, stolen goods, counterfeit coin, etc., are recognized as the same which once passed under the observation of the person identifying them.

The requirement of identification as a condition precedent to admissability is satisfied by evidence sufficient to support a finding that the matter in question is what its proponent claims. Fed.Evid.R. 901.

See also Authentication; Blood test evidence; DNA identification; Eyewitness identification; Lineup; Mug book; Voice identification; Voiceprint.

Identification of goods. The buyer obtains a special identification of goods.

Identitas vera colligitur ex multitudine signorum /adentatae nomena/. In English, true identity is collected from a multitude of signs.

Identitate nominis /adentateyti nomanas/. In English law, an ancient writ (now obsolete) which lay for one year to arrest any person, and committed to prison, by mistake for another man of the same name.

Identity. Evidence. Sameness; the fact that a subject, person, or thing before a court is the same as it is represented, claimed, or charged to be. See Authentication; Identification.

Patent Law. Such sameness between two designs, inventions, combinations, etc., as will constitute the one an infringement of the patent granted for the other. To constitute "identity of invention," and therefore infringement, not only must the result obtained be the same, but, in case the means used for its attainment is a combination of known elements, the elements combined in both cases must be the same, and combined in the same way, so that each element shall perform the same function; provided that the differences alleged are not merely colorable according to the rule forbidding the use of known equivalents. Electric Railroad Signal Co. v. Hall Railroad Signal Co., 114 U.S. 87, 5 S.Ct. 1069, 29 L.Ed. 96. "Identity of design" means sameness of appearance, or, in other words, sameness of effect upon the eye,—not the eye of an expert, but of an ordinary intelligent observer. Smith v. Whitman Saddle Co., 148 U.S. 674, 13 S.Ct. 768, 37 L.Ed. 606.

Identity of interests. In civil procedure, an amendment (addition) of a party will be allowed if the party sought to be joined is so closely related in business operations or other activities that the institution of an action against one serves as notice of litigation to the other, and hence the amendment will relate back. Grooms v. Greyhound Corp., C.A.Ohio, 287 F.2d 95; Fed.R.Civil P. 15(c). See also Identity of parties; Privity.

Identity of parties. Refers to condition of persons in relation to each other so that a former judgment against one bars action against others because of res judicata; hence, same parties and those in privity are so barred. See Res (Res judicata).

Ideo /áydiyow/. Lat. Therefore.

Ideo consideratum est /áydiyow konsiderátyam est/. Lat. Therefore it is considered. These were the words used at the beginning of the entry of judgment in an action, when the forms were in Latin. They are also used as a name for that portion of the record.

Ides /áydiyow/. A division of time among the Romans. In March, May, July, and October, the Ides were on the 15th of the month; in the remaining months, on the 13th. This method of reckoning is still retained in the chancery of Rome, and in the calendar of the breviary.

Id est /id est/. Lat. That is. Commonly abbreviated "i.e."

Idiochira /idiyowkáyra/. Greco-Lat. In the civil law, an instrument privately executed, as distinguished from such as were executed before a public officer.

Idioccy, idiopathic insanity /id(i)ýasiy, idiyowpáeflak insénatly/. See Insanity.

Idiota /idiyowta/. In the civil law, an unlearned, illiterate, or simple person. A private man; one not in office.

Idiota inquiringo, writ de /rit diy idiyówta ĺpkwarén-dow/. This is the name of an old writ which directs the sheriff to inquire whether a man is an idiot or not. The inquisition is to be made by a jury of twelve men. And, if the man were found an idiot, the profits of his lands and the custody of his person might be granted by the king to any subject who had interest enough to obtain them. 1 Bl.Comm. 303.

Idoneitas /idániyataes/. In old English law, ability or fitness (of a person).

Idoneum se facere; idoneare se /idóniýsim siy fés-arti/ïndan(i)ýeriy sîy/. To purge one’s self by oath of a crime of which one is accused.

Idoneus /idóniýsas/. Lat. In the civil and common law, sufficient; competent; fit or proper; responsible; unimpeachable. Idoneus homo, a responsible or solvent person; a good and lawful man. Sufficient; adequate; Satisfactory. Idonea caúto, sufficient security.

Id perfectum est quod ex omnibus suis partibus constat /id perfréktam est kwôd éks ómnabas s(y)Úwas pártabas konstas/. That is perfect which consists of all its parts.
Id possimus quod de jure possimus /id pósamos kwód dly júriy pósamos/. We may do only that which by law we are allowed to do.

Id quod est magis remotum, non trahit ad se quod est magis junctum, sed e contrario in omni caso /id kwód est méjás rmótwam, nón trúy(h)ot ëd skl kwód est méjás jåktam, séd iy kántrériyow in ómnay kéýs(y)uw/. That which is more remote does not draw to itself that which is nearer, but the contrary in every case.

Id quod nostrum est sine facto nostro ad alium transferri non potest /id kwód nóstram ét sánýi fáktow nóstrow ëd éyly(í)yam tráënsfárav nón póvtast/ That which is ours cannot be transferred to another without our act.

Id solum nostrum quod debitis deductis nostrum est /id sowlam nóstram kwód débatas dàuktos nóstram ét/. That only is ours which remains to us after deduction of debts.

I.e. An abbreviation for “id est,” that is; that is to say.

If. In deeds and wills, this word, as a rule, implies a condition precedent, unless it be controlled by other words. Hughes v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., 163 Misc. 31, 297 N.Y.S. 116, 122.

I.F.B. Invitation for Bids.

Ignis judicium /ignás jadísh(y)am/. Lat. The old judicial trial by fire.

Ignitegium /ignátyiy(í)yam/. In old English law, the curfew, or evening bell. See Curfew.

Ignominy /ignáminiy/. Public disgrace; infamy; reproach; dishonor. Ignominy is the opposite of esteem.

Ignoramus /ignaráýmas/. Lat. “We are ignorant;” “We ignore it.” Formerly the grand jury wrote this word on bills of indictment when, after having heard the evidence, they thought the accusation against the prisoner was groundless, intimating that, though the facts might possibly be true, the truth did not appear to them; but now they usually write in the words “No bill,” “Not a true bill,” or “Not found,” if that is their verdict. But they are still said to ignore the bill.

Ignorance. The want or absence of knowledge, unaware or uninformed.

Ignorance of law is want of knowledge or acquaintance with the laws of the land in so far as they apply to the act, relation, duty, or matter under consideration. Ignorance of fact is want of knowledge of some fact or facts constituting or relating to the subject-matter in hand.

Ignorance is not a state of the mind in the sense in which sanity and insanity are. When the mind is ignorant of a fact, its condition still remains sound; the power of thinking, of judging, of willing, is just as complete before communication of the fact as after. The essence or texture, so to speak, of the mind, is not, as in the case of insanity, affected or impaired. Ignorance of a particular fact consists in this: that the mind, although sound and capable of healthy action, has never acted upon the fact in question, because the subject has never been brought to the notice of the perceptive faculties.

In criminal law, ignorance as to a fact may be a defense, but ignorance as to law generally is no defense. See Model Penal Code, § 2.04.

See also Mistake (Mistake of fact and law).

Synonyms

“Ignorance” and “error” or “mistake” are not convertible terms. The former is a lack of information or absence of knowledge; the latter, a misapprehension or confusion of information, or a mistaken supposition of the possession of knowledge. Error as to a fact may imply ignorance of the truth; but ignorance does not necessarily imply error.

General Types

Culpable ignorance is that which results from a failure to exercise ordinary care to acquire knowledge, and knowledge which could be acquired by the exercise of ordinary care is by law imputed to the person and he is held to have constructive knowledge. Luck v. Buffalo Lakes, Tex.Civ.App., 144 S.W.2d 672, 676.

Essential ignorance is ignorance in relation to some essential circumstance so intimately connected with the matter in question, and which so influences the parties, that it induces them to act in the business.

Involuntary ignorance is that which does not proceed from choice, and which cannot be overcome by the use of any means of knowledge known to a person and within his power; as the ignorance of a law which has not yet been promulgated.

Nonessential or accidental ignorance is that which has not of itself any necessary connection with the business in question, and which is not the true consideration for entering into the contract.

Voluntary ignorance exists when a party might, by taking reasonable efforts, have acquired the necessary knowledge. For example, every man might acquire a knowledge of the laws which have been promulgated.

Ignorantia /ignaráýns(y)š/. Lat. Ignorance; want of knowledge. Distinguished from mistake (error), or wrong conception. Divided by Lord Coke into ignorantia facti (ignorance of fact) and ignorantia juris (ignorance of law). And the former, he adds, is twofold—lectionis et lingue (ignorance of reading and ignorance of language). See Ignorance.

Ignorantia eorum qua quis scire tenetur non excusat /ignaráýns(y)š yiyrom kwíy kwíyw káyriy tanyíytor nón àsks(y)úwzat/. Ignorance of those things which one is bound to know excuses not.

Ignorantia facti excusat /ignaráýns(y)š fáktay àsks(y)úwzat/. Ignorance of fact excuses or is a ground of relief. Acts done and contracts made under mistake or Ignorantia juris quod quisque tenetur scire, neminem facti excusat, ignorantia juris non excusat. Ignorantia juris sui non praejudicat juri. Ignorantia præsuumitur ubi scientia non probatur. Ignoratio elenchi furnishes no ground, either in law or equity, to rescind agreements, or reclaim money paid, or set aside solemn acts of the parties.

Iknal. Compulsion; especially constraint exercised by one person over another to do an illegal act, or to act contrary to his inclination.

Iknar. Agreement, assent, or ratification.

Iknar nama. A deed of assent and acknowledgment.

III. In old pleading, bad; defective in law; null; naught; the opposite of good or valid.

Illegal. Against or not authorized by law.

Illegal contract. Contract is illegal where its formation or performance is expressly forbidden by a civil or criminal statute or where penalty is imposed for doing act agreed upon.

Hiltzold v. T-Shirts Plus, Inc., App., 98 Wis.2d 711, 298 N.W.2d 217, 220.

Illegal entry. An alien is guilty of illegal entry if: (1) he enters the country at the wrong time or place, or (2) eludes an examination by immigration officers, or (3) obtains entry by fraud, or (4) knowingly enters into a marriage for the purpose of evading any provision of the immigration laws. 8 U.S.C.A. § 1325.

Illegal interest. Usury; interest at a higher rate than the law allows.

Illegality. Illegality. That which is contrary to the principles of law, as contradistinguished from mere rules of procedure.

Illegally obtained evidence. Evidence which is obtained in violation of defendant's rights because officers had no warrant and no probable cause to arrest or because the warrant was defective and no valid grounds existed for seizure without a warrant. Evidence secured in violation of statutes or constitutional guarantee against unreasonable searches; U.S. Constitution, 4th Amendment. Such evidence is inadmissible in criminal trial of victim of such search. Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643, 81 S.Ct. 1684, 6 L.Ed.2d 1081. See Exclusionary Rule; Fruit of poisonous tree doctrine; Suppression hearing; Suppression of evidence.

Illegal per se. Unlawful in and of itself and not because of some extraneous circumstance, e.g. a contract to assassinate a public official.

Illegal trade. Such traffic or commerce as carried on in violation of federal, state, or local laws; e.g. trade in violation of antitrust laws; trade in stolen goods.

Illegitmaci. Illegitimacy. The condition before the law, or the social status, of a child born out of wedlock; condition of one whose parents were not intermarried at the time of his or her birth.

Illigitimate. Illegitimate. That which is contrary to law; term is usually applied to children born out of lawful wedlock. See Illegitimate child.

Illegitimate child. Child who is born at a time when his parents, though alive, are not married to each other. Such child however is legitimate if they were married after his conception and before his birth. Home of Holy Infancy v. Kaska, Tex., 397 S.W.2d 208. An illegitimate child has a constitutionally protected right to inherit from his or her father. Trimble v. Gordon, 430 U.S. 762, Illud, quod alias licitum non est, necessitas facit privilegium quoad jura privata /ilad kwød élyiáy lisítam nóñ ét naséestrás féysat lisítam; ét naséestrás ony(i)kswst privaliy(i)ym kwóswad júro právýeyta/. That which is otherwise not permitted, necessity permits; and necessity makes a privilege as to private rights.

Illud, quod alteri unitur, extinguitur, neque amplius per se vacare licet /ilad, kwød dítaray ywánwat, akstígwtá, nákwi amályyas pór sly vákéri wyáste/. That which is united to another is extinguished, nor can it be any more independent.

Illusion /il(y)uwzhan/. Distorted or misinterpreted sensory impression which, in contrast to hallucinations, arises from an actual stimulus, i.e., shadow is taken to be a man, specks on window are seen as a swarm of mosquitos. Prevalent in delirious states. The misinterpretation of a real, external sensory experience.

An image or impression in the mind, excited by some external object addressing itself to one or more of the senses, but which, instead of corresponding with the reality, is perverted, distorted, or wholly mistaken, the error being attributable to the imagination of the observer, not to any defect in the organs of sense. See Hallucination.

Illusory /al(y)uwzariy/“uwz”/. Deceiving by false appearances; nominal, as distinguished from substantial; fallacious; illusive. Bolles v. Toledo Trust Co., 144 Ohio St. 196, 58 N.E.2d 381, 390.

Illusory appointment. Nominal, overly restrictive or conditional transfer of property under power of appointment; lacking in substantial existence.

Formerly the appointment of a merely nominal share of the property to one of the objects of a power, in order to escape the rule that an exclusive appointment could not be made unless it was authorized by the instrument creating the power, was considered illusory and void in equity. This rule has been abolished in England. Brown v. Fidelity Union Trust Co., 126 N.J.Eq. 406, 9 A.2d 311. See Illusory Appointment Act.

Illusory Appointment Act. This English statute provided that no appointment made after its passing (July 16, 1830), in exercise of a power to appoint property, real or personal, among several objects, shall be invalid, or impeached in equity, on the ground that an unsubstantial, illusory, or nominal share only was thereby appointed, or left unappointed, to devolve upon any one or more of the objects of such power; but that the appointment shall be valid in equity, as at law. See now Law of Property Act (1925), § 158.

Illusory contract. An expression cloaked in promissory terms, but which, upon closer examination, reveals that the promisor has not committed himself in any manner. Harrington v. Harrington, N.D., 365 N.W.2d 552, 555. See also Illusory promise.

Illusory promise. A purported promise that actually promises nothing because it leaves to speaker the choice of performance or nonperformance. When promise is illusory, there is no actual requirement upon promisor that anything be done because promisor has an alterna-Illusory promise is an expression cloaked in promissory terms, but which, upon closer examination, reveals that the promisor has really not committed himself to anything. If performance of an apparent promise is entirely optional with the provisor, the promise is illusory.

Illusory tenant. A straw man who, as landlord's alter ego, subleases apartment to permit landlord to circumvent or evade obligations under rent laws, or prime tenant who is individual entrepreneur trafficking in stabilized or controlled apartments which he subleases as business. Conti v. Citrin, Sup., 132 Misc.2d 834, 505 N.Y.S.2d 481, 482.

Illusory trust. Where a settlor in form either declares himself trustee of, or transfers to a third party, property in trust, but by the terms of the trust, or by his dealings with the trust property, in substance exercises so much control over the trust property that it is clear that he did not intend to relinquish any of his rights in the trust property, the trust is invalid as illusory. A trust arrangement which takes the form of a trust, but because of powers retained in the settlor has no real substance and in reality is not a completed trust. In re Herron's Estate, Fla.App., 237 So.2d 563, 566.

Illustrious /illəˈstriəs/. The prefix to the title of a prince of the blood in England.

Imagine. In old English law, in cases of treason the law made it a crime to imagine the death of the king. But, in order to complete the crime, this act of the mind must have been demonstrated by some overt act. The terms "imagining" and "compassing" are in this connection synonymous. 4 Bl.Comm. 78.

Imbargo. An old form of "embargo" (q.v.).

Imbecility. See Insanity.

Imbracery. An occasional or obsolete form of "embezzle" (q.v.).

Imitation. See Embracery.

An imitation of a trademark is that which so far resembles the genuine trademark as to be likely to induce the belief that it is genuine, whether by the use of words or letters similar in appearance or in sound, or by any sign, device, or other means. The test of "colorable imitation" is, not whether a difference may be recognized between the names of two competing articles when placed side by side, but whether the difference will be recognized by the purchaser with no opportunity for comparison. The Best Foods v. Hemphill Packing Co., D.C.Del., 5 F.2d 355, 357. See Counterfeit; Forgery.

Immaterial. Not material, essential, or necessary; not important or pertinent; not decisive; of no substantial consequence; without weight; of no material significance. See also Impertinence; Irrelevancy; Irrelevant allegation. Compare Material; Material fact; Relevant.

Immaterial averment. In pleading, an averment alleging with needless particularity or unnecessary circumstances what is material and necessary, and which might properly have been stated more generally, and without such circumstances and particulars; or, in other words, a statement of unnecessary particulars in connection with and as descriptive of what is material. Such immaterial matter may be ordered stricken from the pleading. Fed.R.Civil P. 12(f). See also irrelevant allegation.

Immaterial evidence. Evidence which lacks probative weight and is unlikely to influence the tribunal in resolving the issue before it. Such evidence is commonly objected to by opposing counsel, and disallowed by the court. See also irrelevancy. Compare Relevant evidence.

Immaterial facts. Those which are not essential to the right of action or defense. See immaterial averment. Compare Material fact.

Immaterial issue. In pleading, an issue taken on an immaterial point; that is, a point not proper to decide the action.

Immaterial variance. Discrepancy between the pleading and proof of a character so slight that the adverse party cannot say that he was misled thereby. One in which difference between allegations and proof is so slight and unimportant that adverse party is not misled or prejudiced in maintaining his defense. Strimiska v. Yates, 158 Conn. 179, 257 A.2d 814, 817. See also Variance.

Immediacy. The state or quality of being immediately and directly perceived; urgency; occurring without delay.

Immediate. Present; at once; without delay; not deferred by any interval of time. In this sense, the word, without any very precise signification, denotes that action is or must be taken either instantly or without any considerable loss of time. A reasonable time in view of particular facts and circumstances of case under consideration. Next in line or relation; directly connected; not secondary or remote. Not separated in respect to place; not separated by the intervention of any intermediate object, cause, relation, or right. Thus we speak of an action as prosecuted for the "immediate benefit" of A., of a devise as made to the "immediate issue" of B., etc.
IMMEDIATE CAUSE

Immediate cause. The last of a series or chain of causes tending to a given result, and which, of itself, and without the intervention of any further cause, directly produces the result or event. A cause may be immediate in this sense, and yet not “proximate;” and conversely, the proximate cause (that which directly and efficiently brings about the result) may not be immediate. The familiar illustration is that of a drunken man falling into the water and drowning. His intoxication is the proximate cause of his death, if it can be said that he would not have fallen into the water when sober; but the immediate cause of death is suffocation by drowning. See also Proximate cause.

Immediate control. Such constant control as would enable driver to instantly govern vehicle’s movements, including the power to stop within a distance in which such a vehicle, in good mechanical condition, driven by a reasonably skillful driver, and traveling at a lawful rate of speed, could be stopped.

Immediate danger. Definition of “immediate danger” as part of humanitarian doctrine contemplates that there be some inexorable circumstance, situation or agency bearing down on plaintiff with reasonable probability of danger prior to negligent act of defendant. Curran v. Bi-State Development Agency, Mo.App., 522 S.W.2d 98, 100. See also Imminent danger; Imminent peril.

Immediate descent. See Descent.

Immediate family. Term generally referring to one’s parents, wife or husband, children, and brothers and sisters.

Immediately. Without interval of time, without delay, straightway, or without any delay or lapse of time. Drumbar v. Jeldo-Highland Coal Co., 155 Pa.Super. 57, 37 A.2d 25, 27. When used in contract is usually construed to mean “within a reasonable time having due regard to the nature of the circumstances of the case”, although strictly, it means "not deferred by any period of time". Integrated, Inc. v. Alec Ferguson Elec. Contractors, 250 C.A.2d 287, 58 Cal.Rptr. 503, 508, 509. The words “immediately” and “forthwith” have generally the same meaning. They are stronger than the expression “within a reasonable time” and imply prompt, vigorous action without any delay. Alsam Holding Co. v. Consolidated Taxpayers’ Mut. Ins. Co., 4 N.Y.S.2d 498, 505, 167 Misc. 732.

Immediate notice. As required by insurance policy as for proof of loss means within a reasonable time. Lydon v. New York Life Ins. Co., C.C.A.Mo., 89 F.2d 78, 82.

Immemorial. Beyond human memory; time out of mind.

Immemorial usage. A practice which has existed time out of mind; custom; prescription.

Immeubles /imiyúblə/. Fr. These are, in French law, the immovables of English law. Things are immeubles from any one of three causes: (1) From their own nature, e.g., lands and houses; (2) from their destination, e.g., animals and instruments of agriculture when supplied by the landlord; or (3) by the object to which they are annexed, e.g., easements.

Immigrant. An alien in a country except, in United States, one within a specified class within the Immigration and Nationality Act. 8 U.S.C.A. § 1101(a)(15). One who leaves a country to permanently settle in another.

Immigration. The coming into a country of foreigners for purposes of permanent residence. The correlative term "emigration" denotes the act of such persons in leaving their former country.

Immigration and Nationality Act. A comprehensive federal law which deals with immigration, naturalization and exclusion of aliens. 8 U.S.C.A. § 1101 et seq.

Immigration and Naturalization Service. Such Service is responsible for administering the immigration and naturalization laws relating to the admission, exclusion, deportation, and naturalization of aliens. Specifically, the Service inspects aliens to determine their admissibility into the United States; adjudicates requests of aliens for benefits under the law; guards against illegal entry into the United States; investigates, apprehends, and removes aliens in this country in violation of the law; and examines alien applicants wishing to become citizens.

Immigration Appeals Board. The Board of Immigration Appeals, the highest administrative tribunal in the immigration field, is charged with the interpretation and administration of the immigration laws. The Board has jurisdiction, defined by regulation, to hear appeals from certain decisions of the Immigration and Naturalization Service. Most of the cases reaching the Board consist of appeals from formal orders of the Service's Immigration Judges entered in due process deportation hearings against aliens. These usually also involve applications by aliens for discretionary relief from deportation.

Imminent. Near at hand; mediate rather than immediate; close rather than touching; impending; on the point of happening; threatening; menacing; perilous. Something which is threatening to happen at once, something close at hand, something to happen upon the instant, close although not yet touching, and on the point of happening. Continental Illinois Nat. Bank & Trust Co. of Chicago v. U.S., C.A.Ill., 504 F.2d 586, 588.

Imminent danger. In relation to homicide in self-defense, this term means immediate danger, such as must be instantly met, such as cannot be guarded against by calling for the assistance of others or the protection of the law. Or, as otherwise defined, such an appearance of threatened and impending injury as would put a reasonable and prudent man to his instant defense. See Self-defense.

Imminently dangerous article. One that is reasonably certain to place life or limb in peril. Employers’ Liability Assur. Corporation v. Columbus McKinnon Chain Co., D.C.N.Y., 13 F.2d 128.

Imminent peril. Such peril under humanitarian doctrine means certain, immediate, and impending, and not remote, uncertain, or contingent; and likelihood or bare possibility of injury is not sufficient to create "imminent peril." Hastings v. Coppage, Mo., 411 S.W.2d 232, 236. That position of danger to the plaintiff in which—if the existing circumstances remain unchanged—injury to him is reasonably certain. Elam v. Allbee, Mo.App., 432 S.W.2d 379, 381. Doctrine of "imminent peril" is properly applied only in cases where an unexpected physical danger is presented so suddenly as to deprive driver of his power of using reasonable judgment, and a party will be denied benefit of the doctrine where that party's negligence causes or contributes to creation of the perilous situation. Pittman v. Boiven, 249 C.A.2d 207, 57 Cal.Rptr. 319, 325. See also Emergency doctrine; Humanitarian doctrine.

Immiscere /ɪˈmɪsdʒər/. Lat. In the civil law, to mix or mingle with; to meddle with; to join with.

Immobilia situm sequuntur /ɪməˈbɪliə sɪˈtəm sɛkˈwəntər/. Immovable things follow their site or position; are governed by the law of the place where they are fixed. Cf. Mobilia Sequuntur Personam.

Immobilis /ɪməˈbɪlɪs/. Lat. Immovable. Immobilia or res immobiles, immovable things, such as lands and buildings.

Immoderate /ɪmˈdɑːrət/. Exceeding just, usual, or suitable bounds; not within reasonable limits.

Immoral. Contrary to good morals; inconsistent with the rules and principles of morality; inimical to public welfare according to the standards of a given community, as expressed in law or otherwise. Morally evil; impure; obscene; unprincipled; vicious; or dissolute. U.S. v. One Book, Entitled "Contraception," by Marie C. Stopes, D.C.N.Y., 51 F.2d 525, 527. Immorality has not been confined to sexual matters, but includes conduct inconsistent with rectitude, or indicative of corruption, indecency, depravity, and dissoluteness; or is wilful, flagrant, or shameless conduct showing moral indifference to opinions of respectable members of the community, and as an inconsiderate attitude toward good order and public welfare. Clarke v. Board of Educ. of School Dist. of Omaha, in Douglas County, in State of Neb., 215 Neb. 250, 338 N.W.2d 272, 277.

Immoral act or conduct. Within rules authorizing disbarment of attorney is that conduct which is willful, flagrant, or shameless, and which shows a moral indifference to the opinions of the good and respectable members of the community. In re Monaghan, 126 Vt. 53, 222 A.2d 665, 674.

Immoral consideration. One contrary to good morals, and therefore invalid. Contracts based upon an immoral consideration are generally void.

Immoral contracts. Contracts founded upon considerations contra bonos mores are void.

Immorality. That which is contra bonos mores. See Immoral.

Immovables. In the civil law, property which, from its nature, destination, or the object to which it is applied, cannot move itself, or be removed.

In conflicts of law, refers to land and those things so firmly attached thereto that they may be regarded as part of it and the law of the situs governs in choice of law. Restatement, Second, Conflict of Laws, § 223.

Immunity. Exemption, as from serving in an office, or performing duties which the law generally requires other citizens to perform; e.g. exemption from paying taxes. Freedom or exemption from penalty, burden, or duty. Special privilege. See also Exemption; Judicial immunity; Legislative immunity; Parent-child immunity; Privilege; Sovereign immunity.

Governmental tort immunity. The federal, and derivatively, the state and local governments are free from liability for torts committed except in cases in which they have consented by statute to be sued; e.g. Federal Tort Claims Act; state tort claims acts. Most states, either by statute or court decision, have abolished or greatly restricted the doctrine of sovereign immunity at both the state and local levels.

The Supreme Court has held that local governments can be sued directly under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 for monetary, declaratory, or injunctive relief where "the action that is alleged to be unconstitutional implements or executes a policy statement, ordinance, regulation, or decision officially adopted and promulgated by that body's officers." Monell v. Department of Social Services of N.Y., 429 U.S. 1071, 97 S.Ct. 807, 50 L.Ed.2d 789.

A state law that immunizes government conduct otherwise subject to suit under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 is preempted. Felder v. Casey, 487 U.S. 131, 108 S.Ct. 2302, 101 L.Ed.2d 123. See also Color of law; Federal Tort Claims Act; Official immunity doctrine; Sovereign immunity.

Immunity from prosecution. By state and federal statutes, a witness may be granted immunity from prosecution for his or her testimony (e.g. before grand jury). States either adopt the "use" or the "transactional" immunity approach. The federal government replaced the later with the former approach in 1970. The distinction between the two is as follows: "Use immunity" prohibits witness' compelled testimony and its fruits from being used in any manner in connection with criminal prosecution of the witness; on the other hand, "transactional immunity" affords immunity to the witness from prosecution for offense to which his compelled testimony relates. People v. Henson, Colo.App., 705 P.2d 996. See 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 6001-6005.

Protection from prosecution must be commensurate with privilege against self incrimination, but it need not be any greater and hence a person is entitled only to protection from prosecution based on the use and derivative use of his testimony; he is not constitutionally entitled to protection from prosecution for everything arising from the illegal transaction which his testimony concerns (transactional immunity). Kastigar v. U.S., 406 U.S. 441, 92 S.Ct. 1653, 32 L.Ed.2d 212.
Impanel. The act of the clerk of the court in making up a list of the jurors who have been selected for the trial of a particular cause. All the steps of ascertaining who shall be the proper jurors to sit in the trial of a particular case up to the final formation. See also Jury-list; Jury panel.

Imparcare /imparkeri/ . In old English law, to impound. To shut up, or confine in prison. Inducti sunt in carcerem et imparcati, they were carried to prison and shut up.

Impartial /ampár/ . To have license to settle a litigation amicably; to obtain delay for adjustment.

Imparlan(t)s/ . In early practice, imparlance meant time given to either of the parties to an action to answer the pleading of the other. It thus amounted to a continuance of the action to a further day. Literally the term signified leave given to the parties to talk together; i.e., with a view to settling their differences amicably. But in modern practice it denotes a time given to the defendant to plead.

A general imparlance is the entry of a general prayer and allowance of time to plead till the next term, without reserving to the defendant the benefit of any exception; so that after such an imparlance the defendant cannot object to the jurisdiction of the court, or plead any matter in abatement. This kind of imparlance is always from one term to another.

A general special imparlance contains a saving of all exceptions whatsoever, so that the defendant after this may plead not only in abatement, but he may also plead a plea which affects the jurisdiction of the court, as privilege. He cannot, however, plead a tender, and that he was always ready to pay, because by craving time, he admits that he is not ready, and so falsifies his plea.

A special imparlance reserves to the defendant all exceptions to the writ, bill, or count; and therefore after it the defendant may plead in abatement, though not to the jurisdiction of the court.

Impartial. Favoring neither; disinterested; treating all alike; unbiased; equitable, fair, and just.

Impartial expert. Witness appointed by tribunal for unbiased opinion on matter addressed to the court. Commonly, Worker’s Compensation Board will appoint an impartial physician to examine and report his findings to Board. Similar usage of experts is made in social security disability hearings. Also, a court may appoint an expert witness (see e.g., Fed.R.Evid. 706).

Impartial jury. The provision of the Bill of Rights (Sixth Amendment to Const. of U.S.) requiring that the accused shall have a fair trial by an impartial jury, means that the jury must be not partial, not favoring one party more than another, unprejudiced, disinterested, equitable, and just, and that the merits of the case shall not be prejudged. Term refers to a jury which is of impartial frame of mind at beginning of trial, is influenced only by legal and competent evidence produced during trial, and bases its verdict upon evidence connecting defendant with the commission of the crime charged. Houston v. State, Tenn., 593 S.W.2d 267, 272.
For Fair and impartial jury, and Fair and impartial trial, see those titles.

Impartible feud /impártabul fyúwd/. See Feudum indidividuum.

Impeach. To accuse; to charge a liability upon; to sue. To dispute, disparage, deny, or contradict; as, to impeach a judgment or decree, or impeach a witness; or as used in the rule that a jury cannot "impeach their verdict". To proceed against a public officer for crime or misfeasance, before a proper court, by the presentation of a written accusation called "articles of impeachment." See Impeachment.

Impeachment. A criminal proceeding against a public officer, before a quasi political court, instituted by a written accusation called "articles of impeachment"; for example, a written accusation by the House of Representatives of the United States to the Senate of the United States against the President, Vice President, or an officer of the United States, including federal judges. Such federal power of impeachment is provided for in Art. II, § 4 of the Constitution. Under Art. I, § 2, cl. 5, the House of Representatives "shall have the sole Power of Impeachment", and under § 3, cl. 6, "The Senate shall have the sole Power to try all Impeachments". A two thirds vote of the Senate is required for impeachment.

Articles of impeachment. The formal written allegation of the causes for an impeachment, answering the same purpose as an indictment in an ordinary criminal proceeding. Under the above cited constitutional provisions, Articles of Impeachment are initiated by the House of Representatives with the trial conducted by the Senate. See also Address (Bill of address).

Collateral impeachment. See Collateral attack.

Impeachment of verdict. Attack on verdict because of alleged improprieties in the jury's deliberations or conduct.

Impeachment of witness. To call in question the veracity of a witness, by means of evidence adduced for such purpose, or the adducing of proof that a witness is unworthy of belief. McWethy v. Lee, 1 Ill.App.3d 80, 272 N.E.2d 663, 666. In general, though there are variations from state to state, a witness may be impeached with respect to prior inconsistent statements, contradiction of facts, bias, or character. A witness, once impeached, may be rehabilitated with evidence supporting credibility. State v. Peterson, Iowa, 219 N.W.2d 665, 671.

Fed.R.Civ.P. 32(a)(1) permits the use at trial of a witness's prior deposition to discredit or impeach testimony of the deponent as a witness.

Fed.Evid.R. 607 provides that the "credibility of a witness may be attached by any party, including the party calling him." Rule 608 governs impeachment by evidence of character and conduct of witness, and Rule 609 impeachment by evidence of conviction of crime. See also Address (Bill of address); Cross-examination; Jenks Act or Rule; Prior inconsistent statements.

Impechiare /amplychiyóri/. To impeach, to accuse, or prosecute for felony or treason.

Impede. To obstruct; hinder; check; delay.

Impediens /impiydiyência/. In Old English practice, one who hinders; an impedient. The defendant or deforciant in a fine was sometimes so called.

Impedimento /impéydiméntow/. In Spanish law, a prohibition to contract marriage, established by law between certain persons.

Impediments /impédamants/. Disabilities, or hindrances to the making of contracts, such as infancy, want of reason, etc.

Civil law. Absolute impediments are those which prevent the person subject to them from marrying at all, without either the nullity of marriage or its being punishable. Diriment impediments are those which render a marriage void; as where one of the contracting parties is unable to marry by reason of a prior undissolved marriage. Prohibitive impediments are those which do not render the marriage null, but subject the parties to a punishment. Relative impediments are those which regard only certain persons with respect to each other; as between two particular persons who are related within the prohibited degrees.

Impediment to marriage. Legal obstacle to contracting a valid marriage such as relationship of blood within prohibited degree of consanguinity between parties. See also Impediments.

Impeditor /impéditær/. In Old English law, a disturber or hinderer. See also Impedimento.

Impense /impénsiy/. Lat. In the civil law, expenses; outlays. Divided into necessary (necessarie), useful (utiles), and tasteful or ornamental (voluptuariae).

Imperative. Mandatory. See Directory.

Imperator /imparéytar/. Emperor. The title of the Roman emperors, and also of the Kings of England before the Norman conquest. 1 Bl.Comm. 242. See Emperor.

Imperfect. As used in various legal compound terms, this word means defective or incomplete; wanting in some legal or formal requisite; wanting in legal sanction or effectiveness; as in speaking of imperfect "obligations," "ownership," "rights," "title," "usufruct," or "war." See those nouns.

Imperii majestas est tutelae salus /impréi majestés ʃt(y)wtliyliy sèbliy/. The majesty of the empire is the safety of its protection.

Imperitia /imparlsh(i)yi/. Lat. Unskillfulness; want of skill.

Imperitia culpa adnumeratur /imparlsh(y)i kólpiy adnuyyimumreýta/. Want of skill is reckoned as culpa; that is, as blamable conduct or neglect.

Imperitia est maxima mechanicorum pæna /imparlsh(y)i ést máksom makynthakoýrým plýnya/. Unskillfulness is the greatest punishment of mechanics [that is, from its effect in making them liable to those by whom they are employed. The word "pena" in some translations is erroneously rendered "fault."

Impertinence. Irrelevancy; the fault of not properly

Impersonalitas. Lat. Impersonality. A mode of expression where no reference is made to any person, such as the expression "ut dicitur" (as is said).

Impersonalitas non concludit nec ligat /impersonality neither concludes nor binds.

Impersonation. False impersonation is representing oneself to be another, commonly a crime if the other is a public official or police officer. People v. Vaughn, 196 Cal.App.2d 622, 16 Cal. Rptr. 711. See 18 U.S.C.A. § 911 et seq. See also Personate.

Impertinence. Irrelevancy; the fault of not properly pertaining to the issue or proceeding. The introduction of any matters into a bill, complaint, answer, or other pleading or proceeding in a suit, which are not properly before the court for decision, at any particular stage of the suit. Harrison v. Perea, 168 U.S. 311, 18 S.Ct. 129, 42 L.Ed. 478. See Impertinent.

A question propounded to a witness, or evidence offered or sought to be elicited, is called "impertinent" when it has no logical bearing upon the issue, is not for the purpose of putting to question, or evidence of any matters into a bill, complaint, answer, or other pleading or proceeding in a suit, which are not properly before the court for decision, at any particular stage of the suit. Harrison v. Perea, 168 U.S. 311, 18 S.Ct. 129, 42 L.Ed. 478. See Impertinent.

Impertinent. That which does not belong to a pleading, interrogatory, or other proceeding; out of place; superfluous; irrelevant. A term applied to matter not necessary to constitute the cause of action or ground of defense. Such matter may be ordered stricken from the pleading. Fed.R.Civil P. 12(f). See also Impertinent.

Imprecare. In old records, to impeach or accuse. Imprecatus, impeached.

Impetitio vasti. Impounding of waste (q.v.).

Impetrare. In old English practice, to obtain by request, as a writ or privilege. This application of the word seems to be derived from the civil law.

Impetration. In old English law, the obtaining anything by petition or entreaty. Particularly, the obtaining of a benefice from Rome by solicitation, which benefice belonged to the disposal of the king or other lay patron.

Impier. Umpire (q.v.).

Impierment. Impairing or prejudicing.

Impignorata. Pledged; given in pledge (pignori data; mortgaged.

Impignoration. The act of pawning or putting to pledge.

Impius et crudelis judicandus est qui libertati non favet /impius et kruedaliz juidicandas est kway libertatiyay non feyvat/. He is to be judged impious and cruel who does not favor liberty.

Implacitare. Lat. To implead; to sue.

Implead. To sue; to prosecute. To bring a new party into action on ground that new party is, or may be, liable to party who brings him in, for all or part of the subject matter claim. Fed.R.Civil P. 14. See Third-party practice.

Impleader. Procedure by which party is impleaded. See Implead; Third-party practice; Vouching-in. Compare Interpleader; Joiner.

Implements. Such things as are used or employed for a trade, or furniture of a house. Particularly applied to tools, utensils, instruments of labor; as the implements of trade or of farming.

Implication. Intendment or inference, as distinguished from the actual expression of a thing in words. In a will, an estate may pass by mere implication, without any express words to direct its course.

An inference of something not directly declared, but arising from what is admitted or expressed. Act of implying or condition of being implied.

"Implication" is also used in the sense of "inference"; i.e., where the existence of an intention is inferred from acts not done for the sole purpose of communicating it, but for some other purpose.

See also Inference.

Implied. This word is used in law in contrast to "express"; i.e., where the intention in regard to the subject-matter is not manifested by explicit and direct words, but is gathered by implication or necessary deduction from the circumstances, the general language, or the conduct of the parties. Term differs from "inferred" to the extent that the hearer or reader "infers" while the writer or speaker "implies".

As to implied Abrogation; Agency; Agreement; Assumpsit; Condition; Confession; Consent; Consideration; Contract; Covenant; Dedication; Easement; Invitation; Malice; Notice; Obligation; Power; Trust; Use; Waiver; and Warranty, see those titles.

Implied assertions. Statements which, while not expressed, may be deduced from what is written or spoken.

Implied authority. In law of agency, power given by principal to agent which necessarily follows from the express authority given though such power is not expressly asserted. The power of an agent to act on behalf of his principal which is inferred from the responsibilities imposed on the agent or necessary to carry out an agent's express authority. Actual authority may be either express or implied, "implied authority" being that which is necessary, usual and proper to accomplish or perform the main authority expressly delegated to an agent. Clark v. Gneiting, 95 Idaho 10, 501 P.2d 278, 280.

Implied consent. See Consent.

Implied intent. Intent which necessarily arises from language used in an instrument or from conduct of parties.

Implied promise. Fiction which the law creates to render one liable on contract theory so as to avoid fraud or unjust enrichment. See also Equitable estoppel.

Implied reservation. Type of easement created by grantor for benefit of land retained by him and not included in conveyance. Wolek v. Di Feo, 60 N.J. Super. 324, 159 A.2d 127.

Implied reservation of water doctrine. When Federal Government withdraws its land from public domain and reserves it for a federal purpose, the government, by implication, reserves appurtenant water then appurtenant to the extent needed to accomplish the purpose of the reservation. However, it reserves only that amount of water necessary to fulfill the purpose of the reservation, and no more. Cappaert v. U. S., 426 U.S. 128, 96 S.Ct. 2062, 2071, 48 L.Ed.2d 523.

Implied warranty. See Warranty.

Import. A product manufactured in a foreign country, and then shipped to and sold in this country. See also Importation.

Importer. Person who brings (i.e., imports) goods into country from foreign country and pays customs duties. See Customs duties.

Import-export clause. Provision in U.S. Constitution, Art. I, § 10, cl. 2, to the effect that no state shall, without the consent of Congress, lay imposts or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws.

Import quota. A quantitative restriction on the importation of an article into the United States. 19 U.S.C.A. § 22.53(a)(3)(C). The establishment of a quota is one of the remedies available to the President upon his determination that an imported article threatens serious injury to a domestic industry. See also Dumping; Most favored nation clause.

Imports clause. See Import-export clause.

Importunity. Pressing solicitation; urgent request; application for a claim or favor which is urged with troublesome frequency or pertinacity.

Impose. To levy or exact as by authority; to lay as a burden, tax, duty or charge.

Imposition. An impost; tax; contribution. Unreasonable request or burden. Act of imposing.

Impossibility. That which, in the constitution and course of nature or the law, no person can do or perform.

Impossibility is of the following several sorts: An act is physically impossible when it is contrary to the course of nature. Such an impossibility may be either absolute, i.e., impossible in any case, (e.g., to stop earth rotation) or relative (sometimes called "impossibility in fact"), i.e., arising from the circumstances of the case (e.g., for A. to make a payment to B., he being a deceased person). To the latter class belongs what is sometimes called "practical impossibility," which exists when the act can be done, but only at an excessive or unreasonable cost. An act is legally or juridically impossible when a rule of law makes it impossible to do it; e.g., for A. to make a valid will before his majority. This class of acts must not be confounded with those which are possible, although forbidden by law, as to commit a theft. An act is logically impossible when it is contrary to the nature of the transaction, as where A. gives property to B. expressly for his own benefit, on condition that he transfers it to C. See also Legal impossibility.

Impossibility of performance of contract. A doctrine under which a party to a contract is relieved of his or her duty to perform when performance has become impossible or totally impracticable (through no fault of the party). As a defense to nonperformance, such arises when performance is not possible because of, for example, destruction of subject of contract or death of person necessary for performance or where act contracted for has become illegal. The doctrine of "impossibility of performance" is an exception to the general rule that the promisor must either perform, or pay damages for his failure to perform, no matter how burdensome his performance has become because of unforeseen circumstances. While the doctrine has evolved around various specific categories, one basic part of the doctrine is that the impossibility of performance must be objective rather than merely subjective.

It is now recognized that a thing is impossible in legal contemplation when it is not practicable; and a thing is impracticable when it can only be done at an excessive and unreasonable cost. Transatlantic Fin. Corp. v. United States, 363 F.2d 312, 315. When the issue is raised, the court is asked to construct a condition of performance based on changed circumstances, a process which involves at least three reasonably definable steps. First, a contingency—something unexpected—must have occurred. Second, the risk of the unexpected occurrence must not have been allocated either by agreement or by custom. Finally, occurrence of the contingency must have rendered performance commercially impracticable. Although impossibility or impracticability of performance may arise in many different ways, the tendency has been to classify the cases into several categories. These are: 1) Destruction, deterioration or unavailability of the subject matter or the tangible means of performance; 2) Failure of the contemplated mode of delivery or payment; 3) Supervening prohibition or prevention by law; 4) Failure of the intangible means of performance and 5) Death or illness. The basic U.C.C. sections dealing with impossibility of performance are §§ 2–613, 2–615, 2–616. See in this regard, Commercial frustration; Commercial impracticability: Frustration of contract; Impracticability.

Impossible contract. One which the law will not hold binding upon the parties, because of the natural or legal impossibility of the performance by one party of that which is the consideration for the promise of the other.

Impossibilium nulla obligatio est /impossibilium nulla obligatio est/. There is no obligation to do impossible things.

Imposter. One who pretends to be somebody other than who he is, with intent to deceive; a faker, charlatan; mountebank. See also impersonation; Personate.

Impostor rule. Refers to a UCC Article 3 provision, § 3–405(1)(a), that renders effective any person’s in-dorsement of a check drawn payable to an impostor.

Impotence. The inability to have sexual intercourse; it is not sterility. T. v. M., 100 N.J. Super. 530, 242 A.2d 670, 673. Properly used of the male. Impotency as a ground for divorce means want of capacity to consummate the marriage, and not merely incapacity for procreation. Reed v. Reed, 26 Tenn.App. 690, 177 S.W.2d 26, 27.

Impotentialia excusat legem /impotentia excusat legem/. The impossibility of doing what is required by the law excuses from the performance.

Impotentiam, property propter impotentiam /próparty próptr impotentiam/. A qualified property, which may subsist in animals fere naturæ on account of their inability, as where hawks, herons, or other birds build in a person’s trees, or conies, etc., make their nests or burrows in a person’s land, and have young there, such person has a qualified property in them till they can fly or run away, and then such property expires.

Impound. To shut up stray animals or distrained goods in a pound. To seize and take into the custody of the law or of a court. Thus, a court will sometimes impound a suspicious document produced at a trial or a vehicle, funds, records, or other items used in commission of a crime. The term, in its application to funds, means to take or retain in the custody of the law, and that obligation, as is an escrow, is to hold and deliver property intact. U.S. v. Louisiana, 446 U.S. 253, 100 S.Ct. 1618, 1625, 64 L.Ed.2d 196. See also Confiscate; Forfeiture; Seizure; Sequestered account.

Impound account. Accumulated funds (normally collected monthly from mortgagor or trustor) held by a lender for payment of taxes, insurance, or other periodic debts against real property. The lender pays the tax bill, premium, etc. from the accumulated funds when due. See also Escrow.

Impoundment. Action, or inaction, by President or other officers of U.S. Government, that precludes the obligation or expenditure of budget authority by Congress.

Impracticability. The term “impracticability” in federal rule (Fed.R.Civ.P. 28) providing for class action if class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable does not mean “impossibility” but only the difficulty of inconvenience of joining all members of the class. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Woodahl, D.C. Mont., 308 F.Supp. 1002, 1008.

Commercial impracticability. A broadened interpretation of the doctrine of impossibility which holds that a party to a contract for the sale of goods will be relieved of his or her duty to perform when the premise (e.g., existence of certain goods) on which the contract was based no longer exists due to unforeseeable events. See U.C.C. § 2–615. See also Commercial frustration; Commercial impracticability; Impossibility.

Imprescriptibility. The state or quality of being incapable of prescription; not of such a character that a right to it can be gained by prescription.

Imprescriptible rights. Such rights as a person may use or not, at pleasure, since they cannot be lost to him by the claims of another founded on prescription.

Impression, case of first. One without a precedent; one presenting a wholly new state of facts; one involving a question never before determined.

Impressment. A power possessed by the English crown of taking persons or property to aid in the defense of the country, with or without the consent of the persons concerned. It is usually exercised to obtain hands for the royal ships in time of war, by taking seamen engaged in merchant vessels, but in former times impressment of merchant ships was also practiced. The admiralty issues protections against impressment in certain cases, either under statutes passed in favor of certain callings or voluntarily.

Imprest fund. Petty cash fund used by business for small, routine expenses.

Imprest money. Money paid on enlisting or impressing soldiers or sailors.

Impretiabilis /mprèshièyèbols/. Lat. Beyond price; invaluable.

Imprimatur /imprimatur/. Lat. Let it be printed. A print or impression. Published statutes this word is used to signify a printing-office, the art of printing, a print or impression.
Imprisonment. The detention of a person contrary to his will. The act of putting or confining a person in prison. The restraint of a person’s personal liberty; coercion exercised upon a person to prevent the free exercise of his powers of locomotion. It is not a necessary part of the definition that the confinement should be in a place usually appropriated to that purpose; it may be in a locality used only for the specific occasion; or it may take place without the actual application of any physical agencies of restraint (such as locks or bars), as by verbal compulsion and the display of available force. Every confinement of the person is an “imprisonment,” whether it be in a prison, or in a private house, or even by forcibly detaining one in the public streets. Any unlawful exercise or show of force by which person is compelled to remain where he does not wish to be. McKendree v. Christy, 29 Ill.App.2d 866, 172 N.E.2d 380, 381. See also Solitary confinement.

False imprisonment. The unlawful arrest or detention of a person without warrant, or by an illegal warrant, or a warrant illegally executed, and either in a prison or a place used temporarily for that purpose, or by force and constraint without confinement. False imprisonment consists in the unlawful detention of the person of another, for any length of time, whereby he is deprived of his personal liberty. Dupler v. Seubert, 69 Wis.2d 626, 230 N.W.2d 626, 631. The unlawful detention of the occupant of an automobile may be accomplished by driving so rapidly that he cannot alight.

A person commits a misdemeanor if he knowingly restrains another unlawfully so as to interfere substantially with his liberty. Model Penal Code, § 212.3.

The tort of "false imprisonment" is the nonconsensual, intentional confinement of a person, without lawful privilege, for an appreciable length of time, however short. City of Newport Beach v. Sasse, 9 Cal.App.3d 803, 88 Cal.Rptr. 476, 480. Restatement, Second, Torts § 35.

See also False arrest; False imprisonment.

Imprint /imprét/. Adherents; followers. Those who side with or take the part of another, either in his defense or otherwise.

Improbable. Unlikely to be true, or to occur, not to be readily believed. Johnson v. Tregle, La.App., 8 So.2d 755, 758.

Improper cumulation of actions. In common law pleading, an attempt to join in one proceeding inconsist-Impropriation. As used in a statute excluding one found incompetent to execute the duties of an administrator by reason of improvidence, means that want of care and foresight in the management of property which would be likely to render the estate and effects of the intestate unsafe, and liable to be lost or diminished in value, in case the administration should be committed to the improvident person.

Impropriation. A judgment, decree, rule, injunction, etc., when given or rendered without adequate consideration by the court, or without proper information as to all the circumstances affecting it, or based upon a mistaken assumption or misleading information or advice, is sometimes said to have been "impropriately" given or issued.

Impriare /imprúviyéryi/ /imprévéryi/. In old English law, to improve land. Impriamentum, the improvement so made of it.

Impubes /impyúwiyiz/. Lat. In the civil law, a minor under the age of puberty; a male under fourteen years of age; a female under twelve.

Impulse. Sudden urge or inclination; thrusting or impelling force within a person. See also Insanity, irresistible impulse.

Impunctus continuo affectum tribuit delinquendi /impyúwntatékt kontiñwywam akféktam truíwywst délakswénýdýay/. Impunity confirm the disposition to commit crime.

Impunctus semper ad deteriora invitat /impyúwntatékt sémpar ëd dátirýwra onývyst/. Impunity always invites to greater crimes.

Impunity. Exemption or protection from penalty or punishment. See also Immunity.

Imputability. The state or condition rendering one chargeable for an act. Liability or responsibility for conduct or omission. See Liability.

Imputatio /impyútiésh(i)yow/. Lat. In the civil law, legal liability.

Imputation of payment. In the civil law, the application of a payment made by a debtor to his creditor.

Imputed. As used in legal phrases, this word means attributed vicariously; that is, an act, fact, or quality is said to be "imputed" to a person when it is ascribed or charged to him, not because he is personally cognizant of it or responsible for it, but because another person is, over whom he has control or for whose acts or knowledge he is responsible. See also Estoppel.

Imputed cost. See Cost.

Imputed income. See Income.

Imputed interest. See Interest.

Imputed knowledge. This phrase is sometimes used as equivalent to "implied notice," i.e., knowledge attributed or charged to a person because the facts in question were open to his discovery and it was his duty to inform himself as to them. In law of agency, notice of facts brought to the attention of an agent within the scope of his authority or employment is chargeable to his principal in most cases. See Imputed notice.

Imputed negligence. The negligence of one person may be chargeable to another depending upon the relationship of the parties, as for example, the negligence of an agent acting within the scope of his employment is chargeable to the principal. Negligence which is not directly attributable to the person himself, but which is the negligence of a person who is in privity with him, and with whose fault he is chargeable. See also Negligence.

Imputed notice. Information as to a given fact or circumstance charged or attributed to a person, and affecting his rights or conduct on the ground that actual notice was given to some person whose duty was to report it to the person to be affected, as, his agent or his attorney of record. See also Notice.

Impropriate. In the law of real estate, this preposition is used to denote the fact of seisin, title, or possession, and serves as an elliptical expression for some such phrase as "in possession," or as an abbreviation for "intitled" or "invented with title."

An elastic preposition in other cases, expressing relation of presence, existence, situation, inclusion, action, etc.; enclosed or surrounded by limits, as in a room; also meaning for, and about, on, within etc.; and is synonymous with expressions "in regard to", "respecting", "with respect to", and "as is".

In action. Attainable or recoverable by action; not in possession. A term applied to property of which a party has not the possession, but only a right to recover it by action. Things in action are rights of personal things, which nevertheless are not in possession. See Choses in action.

Inadequate. Insufficient; disproportionate; lacking in effectiveness or in conformity to a prescribed standard or measure.

Inadequate consideration. One not adequate or equal in value to the thing conveyed. Farrell v. Third Nat. Bank, 20 Tenn.App. 540, 101 S.W.2d 158, 163.

Inadequate damages. See Damages.

Inadequate price. A term applied to indicate the want of a sufficient consideration for a thing sold, or such a price as would ordinarily be entirely incommensurate with its intrinsic value.

Inadequate remedy at law. Within the meaning of the rule that equity will not entertain a suit if there is an adequate remedy at law, this does not mean that there must be a failure to collect money or damages at law, but the remedy is considered inadequate if it is, in its nature and character, unfitted or not adapted to the end in view, as, for instance, when the relief sought is preventive (e.g. injunction) rather than compensatory. Cruickshank v. Bidwell, 176 U.S. 73, 20 S.Ct. 280, 44 L.Ed. 377. Compare Adequate remedy.
In adversum /in ædvarsam/. Against an adverse, unwilling, or resisting party. "A decree not by consent, but in adversum."

Inadvertence. Needlessness; lack of attention; want of care; carelessness; failure of a person to pay careful and prudent attention to the progress of a negotiation or a proceeding in court by which his rights may be affected. Used chiefly in statutory and rule enumerations of the grounds on which a judgment or decree may be vacated or set aside; as, "mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect." Fed.R. Civil P. 60(b). State ex rel. Regis v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist. in and for Silver Bow County, 102 Mont. 74, 55 P.2d 1295, 1298.

In ædificatio /in iydfakéysh(i)yow/. Lat. In the civil law, building on another's land with one's own materials, or on one's own land with another's materials.

In æquali jure /in skwélay júry/. In equal right; on an equality in point of right.

In æquali jure melior est conditio possidentis /in skwélay júry miyliyar ést kandish(i)yow psidi-yéntas/. In [a case of] equal right the condition of the party in possession is the better.

In æquali manu /in skwélay ménýuw/. In equal hand; held equally or indifferently between two parties. Where an instrument was deposited by the parties to it in the hands of a third person, to keep on certain conditions, it was said to be held in æquali manu.

In aqua manu /in lykwó ménýuw/. In equal hand.

Inalienable /inéyli(y)yonabal/. Not subject to alienation; the characteristic of those things which cannot be bought or sold or transferred from one person to another, such as rivers and public highways, and certain personal rights; e.g., liberty.

Inalienable interests. Type of interest in property which cannot be sold or traded.

Inalienable rights. Rights which are not capable of being surrendered or transferred without the consent of the one possessing such rights; e.g., freedom of speech or religion, due process, and equal protection of the laws. Morrison v. State, Mo.App., 252 S.W.2d 97, 101. See Bill of rights.

In aliens solo /in āliyfnow sólow/. In another's land.

In alio loco /in éyli(i)yow lókwow/. In another place.

In alia priditione nullus potest esse accessorius sed principalis solummodo /in álto pradishyówniy nálas pórvtast éshy ákkésoríyiyas séd prinspéylyas sówłamów-dow/. In high treason no one can be an accessory but only principal.

In alternativus electio est debitoris /in oltärnstáyvás álkshe(y)ow ét débótýras/. In alternatives the debtor has the election.

In ambigua voce legis ea potius accipienda est significatio quæ vitio caret, præsertim cum etiam voluntas legis ex hoc colligi possit /in ámbígìyuwás vówisyi liýyas īyó pówsh(i)yow àkslíyíviyá ést ánsìnákésh(y)îyow kwíy vísh(i)yow kísat, pásrídám kám ésh(i)yow váltántás liýyas ék hó kólaýjí póst/. In an ambiguous expression of law, that signification is to be preferred which is consonant with equity, especially when the spirit of the law can be collected from that.

In ambiguis casibus semper presumitur pro rege /in ámbígìyuwás kéysabas sémpe prás(y)ůwmastar prów riýji/. In doubtful cases the presumption is always in favor of the king.

In ambiguis orationibus maxime sententia spectanda est ejus qui eam protulisset /in ámbígìyuwás aréysh-iyównábas máksámsiy sénthényš(i)yówá spéktyénda ést lýyas kwíy iýas prótwaltíslat/. In ambiguous expressions, the intention of the person using them is chiefly to be regarded.

In ambiguo /in ámbígìyuwów/. In doubt.

In ambiguo sermone non utrumque dicimus sed id duntaxat quod volumus /in ámbígìyuwów sórmwóny nôn yuwwtrkwiýs dásmás séd id dántáxat kwód wóýýíasma/. When the language we use is ambiguous, we do not use it in a double sense, but in the sense in which we mean it.

In anglia non est interregnum /in ánglíyá nón est intréygn/. In England there is no interregnum.

In aperta luce /in sópártä l(y)úwiśy/. In open daylight; in the day-time.

In apicibus juris /in spísabas júras/. Among the subtleties or extreme doctrines of the law.

In arbitrio judicis /in arbitriyam júwdásas/. At the pleasure of the judge.

In arcta et salva custodia /in árktá ét sélva keš-tówdi(i)yow/. In close and safe custody.

In articulo /in artíkylów/. In a moment; immediately.

In articulo mortis /in artíkylów mórtís/. In the article of death; at the point of death.

In atrocioribus delictis punitur affectus licet non sequatur effectus /in tróshów(h)iýorás dálktás pwúmnstā sféktos láysat nón sówkwyartar sféktos/. In more atrocious crimes the intent is punished, though an effect does not follow.

Inauguration. The act of installing or inducting into office with formal ceremonies, as the coronation of a sovereign, the inauguration of a president or governor, or the consecration of a prelate. A word applied by the Romans to the ceremony of dedicating a temple, or raising a man to the priesthood, after the augurs had been consulted.
In incapacity. As representing another. An executor, administrator, or trustee sues in autre droit.

In banc. See En banc.

In banco. In bank; in the bench. A term applied to proceedings in the court in bank, as distinguished from the proceedings at nisi prius. Also, in the English court of common bench. See Banc; En banc.

In being. In existence or life at a given moment of time, as, in the phrase "life or lives in being" in the rule against perpetuities. An unborn child may, in some circumstances be considered as "in being."

In blank. A term applied to the indorsement of a bill or note where it consists merely of the endorser’s name, without restriction to any particular indorsee. U.C.C. § 3-204(2).

Inblaura /inblørəs/. In old records, profit or product of ground.

Inboard. In maritime law, and particularly with reference to the stowage of cargo, this term is contrasted with "outboard." It does not necessarily mean under deck, but is applied to a cargo so piled or stowed that it does not project over the "board" (side or rail) of the vessel.

In bonis /in bɔwnəs/. Among the goods or property; in actual possession. In bonis defuncti, among the goods of the deceased.

Inborh /inbɔrg/. In Saxon law, a security, pledge, or hypotheca, consisting of the chattels of a person unable to obtain a personal "borg," or surety.

Inbound common. An uninclosed common, marked out, however, by boundaries.

In bulk. As a whole; as an entirety, without division into items or physical separation in packages or parcels. See also Bulk.

Inc. Incorporated.

In cahoots /in kʰoʊts/. Jointly interested in property; or, common participants in enterprise or illegal act.

In camera /in kəməra/. In chambers; in private. A judicial proceeding is said to be heard in camera either when the hearing is had before the judge in his private chambers or when all spectators are excluded from the courtroom. See also In chambers.

In camera inspection. Under certain circumstances, a trial judge may inspect a document which counsel wishes to use at trial in his chambers before ruling on its admissibility or its use; e.g. grand jury testimony. See, e.g., Fed.R.Crim. P. 14.

In camera proceedings. Trial or hearing held in a place not open to the public such as the judge’s lobby or chambers.

Incapacitated person. Any person who is impaired by reason of mental illness, mental deficiency, physical illness or disability, advanced age, chronic use of drugs, chronic intoxication, or other cause (except minority) to the extent that he lacks sufficient understanding or capacity to make or communicate responsible decisions concerning his person. Uniform Probate Code, § 5-101. See also Incapacity.

Incapacity. Want of legal, physical, or intellectual capacity; want of power or ability to take or dispose; want of legal ability to act. Inefficiency; incompetency; lack of adequate power. The quality or state of being incapable, want of capacity, lack of physical or intellectual power, or of natural or legal qualification; inability, incapability, disability, incompetence. Bole v. Civil City of Ligonier, 130 Ind.App. 362, 161 N.E.2d 189, 194. See also Incompetency; Partial incapacity.

Legal incapacity. This expression implies that the person in view has the right vested in him, but is prevented by some impediment from exercising it; as in the case of minors, committed persons, prisoners, etc. See Civil death; Minority.

Total incapacity. In workers’ compensation acts, such disqualification from performing the usual tasks of a worker that he or she cannot procure and retain employment. Incapacity for work is total not only so long as the injured employee is unable to do any work of any character, but also while he remains unable, as a result of his injury, either to resume his former occupation or to procure remunerative employment at a different occupation suitable to his impaired capacity. Such period of total incapacity may be followed by a period of partial incapacity, during which the injured employee is able both to procure and to perform work at some occupation suitable to his then-existing capacity, but less remunerative than the work in which he was engaged at the time of his injury. That situation constitutes “partial incapacity.” Synonymous with “total disability.” See Disability.

In capite /in kæpətə/. To the heads; by heads or polls. Persons succeed to an inheritance in capite when they individually take equal shares. So challenges to individual jurors are challenges in capite, as distinguished from challenges to the array. See also Challenge; Per capita.

In capite /in kæpəti/. In chief. Tenure in capite was a holding directly from the king.

Incarceration /inkærəˈrɛʃən/. Imprisonment; confinement in a jail or penitentiary. See imprisonment.

In case. If; in the event.

In casu extremæ necessitatis omnia sunt communia /in kɛsɨˈyuːʊw əsktrɪmɪə nɛsɛstətɪs əmˈniːə sənt kɑmˈnjuːnɪə/ /in casu extreme necessitatis omnia sunt communia/. In cases of extreme necessity, everything is in common.

In casu proviso /in kɛsɨˈyuːʊw prɔvɪˈziʊʊ/. In a (or the) case provided. In tali casu editum et provisum, in such case made and provided.

Incaute factum pro non facto habetur /ɪnˈkɑːtiː fɑktəm prəʊ nɒn fɑktəʊ hæˈbɪtər/. A thing done unwarily (or unadvisedly) will be taken as not done.
Incentive stock option. An option granted to an employee of a corporation to purchase stock of such corporation at a specified price for a specified period of time. Generally, there are no tax consequences until such time as the stock is sold.

Incentive pay plans. Compensation programs whereby wages increase as productivity increases above a set standard or base.

Incendio. A fire does not release a debtor from his debt.

d(i)yam iriy aeliyiynow non egzyuwat debi¬torum. A fire does not release a debtor from his debt.

Incendary. One guilty of arson; one who maliciously and willfully sets another person’s building on fire.

Incendiary /insend(i)yariy/ A house-burner; one guilty of arson; one who maliciously and willfully sets another person’s building on fire.

Incitation. Commencement; opening; initiation. The beginning of the operation of a contract or will, or of a note, mortgage, lien, etc.; the beginning of a cause or suit in court. Oriental Hotel Co. v. Griffiths, 88 Tex. 574, 33 S.W. 652.

Incerta personas /insartiy persowniy/. Uncertain persons, as posthumous heirs, a corporation, the poor, a juristic person, or persons who cannot be ascertained until after the execution of a will.

Incerta pro nullis habentur /insárta prów nálás habén tér/. Uncertain things are held for nothing.

Incerta quantitas vitiat actum /insárta kwóntatás víšiyat dákta/. An uncertain quantity vitiates the act.

Incest. The crime of sexual intercourse or cohabitation between a man and woman who are related to each other within the degrees wherein marriage is prohibited by law.

A person is guilty of incest, a felony of the second degree, if he knowingly marries or cohabits or has sexual intercourse with an ancestor or descendant, a brother or sister of the whole or half blood [or an uncle, aunt, nephew or niece of the whole blood]. “Cohabit” means to live together under the representation or appearance of being married. The relationships referred to herein includes blood relationships without regard to legitimacy, and relationship of parent and child by adoption. Model Penal Code, § 230.2.

Incestuous adulterers. The elements of this offense are that defendant, being married to one person, has had sexual intercourse with another related to the defendant within the prohibited degrees.

Incestuous bastards. Incestuous bastards are those who are produced by the illegal connection of two persons who are relations within the degrees prohibited by law.

Inch. A measure of length, containing one-twelfth part of a foot; originally supposed equal to three barleycorns. Its metric equivalent is 2.540 centimeters.

Miner’s inch. A unit of measurement of the rate of discharge of water, appearing in deeds to water rights and fixed by statute in most Western States, being the amount of water passing through a specified orifice under a prescribed pressure.

1 cubic ft. per sec. = 50 miner’s inches (Idaho, Kansas, Nebraska, N. Mexico, N. Dakota, S. Dakota)

1 cubic ft. per sec. = 40 miner’s inches (Arizona, California, Montana, Oregon)

1 cubic ft. per sec. = 38.4 miner’s inches (Colorado)

1 miner’s inch = .02 cubic ft. per sec. (Idaho, Kansas, Nebraska, N. Mexico, N. Dakota, S. Dakota)

1 miner’s inch = .025 cubic ft. per sec. (Arizona, California, Montana, Oregon)

1 miner’s inch = .026 cubic ft. per sec. (Colorado)

In chambers. While a common meaning of word “cham¬bers” is room adjacent to courtroom in which judge performs the duties of his office when court is not in session, it also connotes fact that judicial action was taken when court was not in session. Thus, when judge performs judicial act while court is not in session in the matter acted upon, it is said that he acted “in chambers” whether the act was performed in the judge’s chambers, the library, at his home, or elsewhere. Mor¬ris v. State, 573 P.2d 1130, 1132, 2 Kan.App.2d 34. See also In camera.

In charge of. Means in the care or custody of, under control of, or intrusted to the management or direction of. See Guardian; Ward.

Inchartare /inkarteriy/. To give, or grant, and assure anything by a written instrument.

In chief. Principal; primary; directly obtained. A term applied to the evidence obtained from a witness upon his examination in court by the party producing him; i.e. direct examination of witness.

Tenure in chief, or in capite, is a holding directly of the king or chief lord.

Inchmaree clause. In marine insurance, provision in policy protecting one from perils resulting from negligence of master, or from any latent defect in machinery or hull, charterer, mariners, engineers and pilots.

Inchoate /inkowat/. Imperfect; partial; unfinished; being, but not completed; as a contract not executed by all the parties. State ex rel. McCubbin v. McMillian, Mo.App., 349 S.W.2d 453, 462.

Inchoate crimes. An incipient crime which generally leads to another crime. An assault has been referred to as an inchoate battery, though the assault is a crime in and of itself. The Model Penal Code classifies attempts, solicitation and conspiracy as such. §§ 5.01-5.03.

Inchoate dower. A wife’s interest in the lands of her husband during his life, which may become a right of dower upon his death. A contingent claim or possibility of acquiring dower by outliving husband and arises, not out of contract, but as an institution of law constituting a mere chose in action incapable of transfer by separate grant but susceptible of extinguishment, which is effected by wife joining with husband in deed, which operates as release or satisfaction of interest and not as conveyance.

Inchoate instrument. Instruments which the law requires to be registered or recorded are said to be "inchoate" prior to registration, in that they are then good only between the parties and privies and as to persons having notice.

Inchoate interest. An interest in real estate which is not a present interest, but which may ripen into a vested estate, if not barred, extinguished, or divested.

Inchoate lien. The lien of a judgment, from the day of its entry, subject to be defeated by its vacation, becoming a consummate lien if the motion for a new trial is thereafter overruled; such lien then relating back to the original entry of the judgment.

Inchoate right. In patent law, the right of an inventor to his invention while his application is pending which matures as "property" when the patent issues. Mullins Mfg. Co. v. Booth, C.C.A.Mich., 125 F.2d 660, 664.

Incident. Something dependent upon, appertaining to, or accompanying something else of greater or principal importance, something arising or resulting from something else of greater or principal importance. Mola v. Reiley, 100 N.J.Super. 343, 241 A.2d 861, 864. Used both substantively and adjectively of a thing which, either usually or naturally and inseparably, depends upon, appertains to, or follows another that is more worthy. Used as a noun, it denotes anything which inseparably belongs to, or is connected with, or inherent in, another thing, called the "principal". Also, less strictly, it denotes anything which is usually connected with another, or connected for some purposes, though not inseparably. Thus, the right of alienation is incident to an estate in fee-simple, though separable in equity.

Incident of ownership. An element of ownership or degree of control over a life insurance policy. The retention by an insured of an incident of ownership in a life insurance policy will cause the policy proceeds to be rendered. Salzman v. Holiday Inns, Inc., 48 A.D.2d 258, 369 N.Y.S.2d 238, 242. A person who is a donee or creditor (third party) beneficiary of a contract is entitled, in certain circumstances, to enforce such contract. Since there will often be many people indirectly or even directly benefitted by any given contractual performance, the term "incidental beneficiary" is used to describe those persons who would benefit by the performance but who were not intended by the parties to be benefitted and who thus cannot enforce the contract.

A person is not a beneficiary of a trust if the settlor does not manifest an intention to give him a beneficial interest, although he may incidentally benefit from the performance of the trust. Restatement, Second, Trusts, § 126.

Incidental damages. See Damages.

Incidental powers. This term, within the rule that a corporation possesses only those powers which its charter confers upon it, either expressly or as incidental to its existence, means such powers as are directly and immediately appropriate to the execution of the powers expressly granted and exist only to enable the corporation to carry out the purpose of its creation.

Incident to arrest. A search can be "incident to arrest" only if it is substantially contemporaneous with the arrest and is confined to the immediate vicinity of the arrest. James v. State of La., La., 382 U.S. 36, 86 S.Ct. 151, 15 L.Ed.2d 30. See also Search incident to arrest.

Incidental to employment. A risk is "incidental to employment" within Worker's Compensation Act, when it belongs to or is connected with what a worker has to do in fulfilling the duties of his or her employment.

Incidental use. In zoning, use of premises which is dependent on or affiliated with the principal use of such premises. Needham v. Winslow Nurseries, Inc., 330 Mass. 95, 111 N.E.2d 453.

Incidere /insirariy/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, to fall into; to fall out; to happen; to come to pass. To fall upon or under; to become subject or liable to. Incidere in legem, to incur the penalty of a law.

Incipitur /insiptrar/. Lat. It is begun; it begins. In old practice, when the pleadings in an action at law, instead of being recited at large on the issue-roll, were set out merely by their commencements, this was described as entering the incipitur; i.e., the beginning.

Incite /insayt/. To arouse; urge; provoke; encourage; spur on; goad; stir up; instigate; set in motion; as, to "incite" a riot. Also, generally, in criminal law to instigate, persuade, or move another to commit a crime; in this sense nearly synonymous with "abet."

Inciter. In criminal law, an aider or abettor; an accessory.

Incivile /insivilr/. Lat. Irregular; improper; out of the due course of law.

Incivile est, nisi tota lege perspecta, una aliqua partecula ejus proposita, judicare, vel respondere /insivilly est, naysay towtw lyiyiy perspekta, ywewn skakwa partikylay hyjas prapwoata, juwedakeryiy, vel rsepandiriy/. It is improper, without looking at the whole of a law, to give judgment or advice, upon a view of any one clause of it.

Incivile est, nisi tota sententia inspecta, de aliqua parte judicature inspexta, diy áskwa párti juwdakéry/. It is irregular, or legally improper, to pass an opinion upon any part of a sentence, without examining the whole.

In civilibus ministerium excusat, in criminalibus non excusat. In civil matters agency (or service) excuses, but not so in criminal matters.

Inclivismo /inskiviz̪mo/. Unfriendliness to the state or government of which one is a citizen.

In claris non est locus conjecturis /in kleras ndn est/. In things obvious there is no room for conjecture.

Inclusa /inkloza/. In old records, a home close or inclosure near the house.

Inclosa domicilium facit /inklozas domasiKfiyam feysat/. Residence creates domicile.

Inclosa domicilium facti /inklozas dómasil(i)yam féysat/. Inclusio unius est exclusio alterius /inkluwzh(i)yow yanáyæ este åskluwzh(i)yow öltáráyas/. The inclusion of one is the exclusion of another. The certain designation of one person is an absolute exclusion of all others. Burgin v. Forbes, 293 Ky. 456, 169 S.W.2d 321, 325. This doctrine decrees that where law expressly describes particular situation to which it shall apply, an irrefutable inference must be drawn that what is omitted or excluded was intended to be omitted or excluded. Kevin McC v. Mary A, 123 Misc.2d 148, 473 N.Y.S.2d 116, 118.

Inclusive. Embraced; comprehended; comprehending the stated limits or extremes. Opposed to "exclusive."

Inclusive survey. In land law, one which includes within its boundaries prior claims excepted from the computation of the area within such boundaries and excepted in the grant.

Incognito. Status of person who appears or travels without disclosing his true identity.

Incola. Lat. In the civil law, an inhabitant; a dweller or resident. Properly, one who has transferred his domicile to any country.

Incola domicilium facti /inkolaz dómasil(i)yam féysat/. Residence creates domicile.

Income. The return in money from one’s business, labor, or capital invested; gains, profits, salary, wages, etc.

The gain derived from capital, from labor or effort, or both combined, including profit or gain through sale or conversion of capital. Income is not a gain accruing to capital or a growth in the value of the investment, but is a gain, a profit, something of exchangeable value, proceeding from the property, severed from the capital, however invested or employed, and coming in, being derived, that is, received or drawn by the recipient for his separate use, benefit, and disposal. Goodrich v. Edwards, 255 U.S. 527, 41 S.Ct. 390, 65 L.Ed. 758. The true increase in amount of wealth which comes to a person during a stated period of time. That which comes in or is received from any business, or investment of capital, without references to outgoing expenditures. City of Fitzgerald v. Newcomer, 162 Ga.App. 646, 291 S.E.2d 766, 768.

See also Allocation of income; Block income; Clear reflection of income; Constructive receipt of income; Deferred income; Earned income; Earnings; Fixed income; Gross income; Income averaging; Income basis; Income in respect of decedent; Income tax; Net income; Net operating income; Personal income; Profit; Real income; Split income; Taxable income; and Unearned income, below.

Accrued income. Income earned during a certain accounting period but not received.

Adjusted gross income. The difference between the taxpayers’ gross income and allowable adjustments. Adjustments include but are not limited to: contributions to an individual retirement account, alimony payments and reimbursed employee business expenses. I.R.C. § 162.

Deferred income. Income received before it is earned, such as rents received in one accounting period for use of the premises in the following period.

Earned income. Income derived from one's own labor or through active participation in a business as distinguished from income from, for example, dividends or investments. See also Earnings.

Fixed income. That type of income which is stable over a considerable period of time such as a pension or annuity.

Gross income. The total income of a business or individual before deductions; including salary, commissions, royalties, gains from dealings in property, interest, dividends, etc. I.R.C. § 61.

Imputed income. Value assigned to property or income, sometimes artificially for tax purposes, as in the case of a non-interest bearing or low interest bearing loan between persons or organizations related to each other. I.R.C. § 483. The value of property enjoyed by the taxpayer as part of his salary; e.g. use of home provided by employer to employee.

The monetary value of goods and services which someone produces and is consumed within the immediate family unit as well as the monetary value of the use of property which someone within the family unit owns. Imputed income is not included in gross income.

Investment income. See Unearned income, below.

Net (business) income. The profit of a business arrived at by deducting operating expenses and taxes from gross receipts. Income after costs and taxes.

Nonoperating income. Income of a business from investments and not from operations.

Operating income. Income derived from operations of business in contrast to income from investments.

Ordinary income. See Ordinary.

Personal income. In taxation, the total of income received by individuals from all sources.

Unearned income. Income derived from investments, such as dividends and interest, as distinguished from income derived from personal labor.

Income received but not yet earned. Normally, such income is taxed when received, even for accrual basis taxpayers.

Income averaging. Method of computing tax by averaging an individual's current income with that of the three preceding years. Income averaging was common with individuals such as athletes, or actors whose income may be very high in a given year in contrast to prior years. The tax benefits of income averaging were repealed with the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

Income basis. Method of computing the rate of return on a security based on the dividend or interest and on the price paid rather than on its face or par value.

Income beneficiary. The party entitled to income from property. A typical example would be a trust where A is to receive the income for life with corpus or principal passing to B upon A's death. In this case, A would be the income beneficiary of the trust.

Income bond. See Bond.

Income exclusions. Items of income which are not subject to federal taxes. An example of such includes interest earned on municipal bonds, as well as money or property received by gift or inheritance.

Income in respect of decedent. Income earned by a decedent at the time of death but not reportable on the final income tax return because of the method of accounting utilized. Typically it includes any accrued income to date of death for cash basis decedent/taxpayer. Estate of Rose, 465 Pa. 53, 348 A.2d 113, 116. Such income is included in the gross estate and will be taxed to the eventual recipient (i.e., either the estate or heirs). The recipient will, however, be allowed an income tax deduction for the death tax attributable to the income. I.R.C. § 691.

In estate taxation, term refers to inclusion of certain income in estate as if it had been collected by decedent in his or her lifetime, Grill v. U. S., 157 Ct.Cl. 804, 303 F.2d 922, 927, e.g. payments received toward satisfaction of a right or expectancy created almost entirely through the efforts or status of the decedent and which, except for his death and without further action on his part, the decedent would have realized as gross income.

Income property. Property which produces income; e.g. rental property. Such property can be either residential, commercial, or industrial.

Income security. Government programs to maintain the income of people, including Social Security, government pensions, unemployment compensation, welfare, food stamps, disability benefits, subsidized housing, and energy assistance. Medicare and Medicaid are categorized as health programs.

Income shifting. An attempt by a taxpayer to transfer money to one or many family members in an effort to reduce the transferors' tax liability. The Tax Reform Act of 1986 has reduced the benefits of income shifting by such regulations as; taxing children under the age of 14 or 15 on unearned income (interest and dividends) at the parents' highest rate. See Kiddie tax.

Income splitting. See Joint tax return.

Income statement. The statement of revenues, expenses, gains, and losses for the period ending with net income (or loss) for the period. A financial statement that indicates how a firm performed during a period of time. See also Balance (Balance sheet); Earnings report; Profit and loss statement.

Income tax. A tax on the annual profits arising from property, business pursuits, professions, trades, or offices. A tax on a person's income, wages, salary, commissions, emoluments, profits, and the like, or the excess thereof over a certain amount. Tax levied by the U.S.
Government, and by some state governments, on an individual, corporation, or other taxable unit's income. See also Tax.

Income tax return. Forms required by federal and state taxing authority to be completed by taxpayer, disclosing all items necessary for computation of tax and the computation itself. See also Return.

In commendam /in kamendam/. In commendation; as

In commerce. The words "in commerce" normally mean in interstate commerce. Rose v. Vulcan Materials Co., 282 N.C. 643, 194 S.E.2d 521, 528. See in commerce test; Interstate commerce.

In commerce test. Jurisdiction under the Sherman Act is conferred if the acts complained of occur in the flow of commerce or if those acts, though local in nature, substantially affect interstate commerce. With the "in commerce test," the impact on interstate commerce is judged according to a qualitative standard, even insubstantial activity placed directly in the flow of commerce satisfies the jurisdictional requirements. McLain v. Real Estate Bd. of New Orleans, Inc., C.A.La., 583 F.2d 1315, 1318.

In commodato haec pactio, ne dolus praestetur, rata non est /in komadeto(h)yow niy dowlas prastityar ní yó fí est/. In the contract of loan, a stipulation not to be liable for fraud is not valid.

Incommodum non solvit argumentum /inkomadom non sóvit árgymentum/. An inconvenience does not destroy an argument.

In common. Shared in respect to title, use, or enjoyment; without apportionment or division into individual parts. Held by several for the equal advantage, use, or enjoyment of all. See Condominium.

In communi /in komyúwnay/. In common.

Incommunicado. A person accused of a crime who does not have the right of communicating with other than the ones in charge of his custody or the one investigating the crime.

Incommunication. In Spanish law, the condition of a prisoner who is not permitted to see or to speak with any person visiting him during his confinement. A person accused cannot be subjected to this treatment unless it be expressly ordered by the judge, for some grave offense, and it cannot be continued for a longer period than is absolutely necessary. This precaution is resorted to for the purpose of preventing the accused from knowing beforehand the testimony of the witnesses, or from attempting to corrupt them and concert such measures as will efface the traces of his guilt. As soon, therefore, as the danger of his doing so has ceased, the interdiction ceases likewise.

Incommutable. Not capable of or entitled to be commuted. See Commutation.

Incompatibility. Incapability of existing or being exercised together. As ground for divorce, refers to such deep and irreconcilable conflict in personalities or temperaments of parties as makes it impossible for them to continue normal marital relationship. Such conflict of personalities and dispositions must be so deep as to be irreconcilable and irremediable. Berry v. Berry, 215 Kan. 47, 523 P.2d 342, 345. Such condition is a ground for divorce in states with no-fault divorce statutes. See irretrievable breakdown of marriage.

Incompetency. Lack of ability, knowledge, legal qualification, or fitness to discharge the required duty or professional obligation. A relative term which may be employed as meaning disqualification, inability or incapacity and it can refer to lack of legal qualifications or fitness to discharge the required duty and to show want of physical or intellectual or moral fitness. County Bd. of Ed. of Clarke County v. Oliver, 270 Ala. 107, 116 So.2d 566, 567. See also Guardian; Incapacity; Insanity; Non compos mentis. Compare Competency.

Incompetent evidence. Evidence which is not admissible under the established rules of evidence; e.g. Fed. Rules of Evidence. Evidence which the law does not permit to be presented at all, or in relation to the particular matter, on account of lack of originality or of some defect in the witness, the document, or the nature of the evidence itself. See e.g. Hearsay. See also Inadmissible.

Incomplete transfer. A transfer made by a decedent during lifetime which, because of certain control or enjoyment retained by the transferor, will not be considered complete for Federal death tax purposes. Thus, some or all of the fair market value of the property transferred will be included in the transferor's gross estate. I.R.C. §§ 2036–2038. See also Revocable transfer.

Inconclusive. That which may be disproved or rebutted; not shutting out further proof or consideration. Applied to evidence and presumptions. See Presumption.

In conjunction with /in kónjáktsis wíó/. In association with.

In conjunctivis, oportet utramque partem esse veram /in kónjáktsis, óportat yuwtremenkwí pártam ésiy víram/. In conjunctives it is necessary that each part be true. In a condition consisting of divers parts in the copulative, both parts must be performed.

In consideratione inde /in kansidáreyshiyowiy indiy/. In consideration thereof.

In consideratione legis /in kansidáreyshiyowiy liyjas/. In consideration or contemplation of law; in abeyance.

In consideratione præmissorum /in kansidáreyshiyowiy prëmsorám/. In consideration of the premises.

In consideratione praemissorum
In consimili casu /in konsimilay keyas(y)uw/. See Consimili casu.

In consimili casu, consimile debet esse remedium /in konsimilay keyas(y)uw, konsimily debet esiy ramlyd(i)yam/. In a similar case the remedy should be similar.

Inconsistency. Mutually repugnant or contradictory. Contrary, the one to the other, so that both cannot stand, but the acceptance or establishment of the one implies the abrogation or abandonment of the other; as, in speaking of "inconsistent defenses," or the repeal by a statute of "all laws inconsistent herewith." Berry v. City of Fort Worth, Tex.Civ.App., 110 S.W.2d 95, 103.

Inconsistent statement. See Prior inconsistent statement.

In conspectu ejus /in kanspek(y)uw ijas/. In his sight or view.

In consuetudinis, non diuturnitas temporis sed soliditas rationis est consideranda /in konsuwat(y)uw, non daystarnatxes temparas sed solidatxes reyshiyowonas est konsidaraenda/. In customs, not length of time, but solidity of reason, is to be considered. The antiquity of a custom is to be less regarded than its reasonableness.

In contemplation of death. In taxation and property law, a transaction, commonly a transfer or gift of property, made by the donor with a view towards his death. For federal estate tax purposes, a transfer made within three years of the decedent's death is deemed to be made in contemplation of death and the value of the property is included in his or her estate for such tax purposes. I.R.C. § 2035(b). See also Contemplation of death.

Incontestability clause. A clause in a life or health insurance policy providing that after the policy has been in force for a given length of time (e.g. two or three years) the insurer shall not be able to contest it as to statements contained in the application; and, in the case of health insurance, the provision also states that no claim shall be denied or reduced on the grounds that a condition not excluded by name at the time of issue existed prior to the effective date.

Incontinence /inkontansas/. Want of chastity; indulgence in unlawful carnal connection.

In continenti /in kkontanentay/. Immediately; without any interval or intermission. Sometimes written as one word "incontinenti.

In contractibus, benigna; in testamentis, benignior; in restitutitionibus, benignissima interpretatio facienda est /in kontraktabas, benigna, in testamentas, benigniyar, in restat(y)uwshiy6wn3bas, benignisama intarpratysh(i)yow fês(h)i(y)yenda est/. In contracts, the interpretation is to be liberal; in wills, more liberal; in restitutions, most liberal.

In contractibus, rei veritas potius quam scriptura perspici debet /in kontraktabas, riyay vêrataes powsh(i)yas kwêm skriptyûra pârpsasay débêt/. In contracts, the truth of the matter ought to be regarded rather than the writing.

In contractibus, tacite insunt [veniunt] quae sunt moris et consuetudinis /in kontraktabas, têstiy insant kwiy sánt moaras êt konswat(y)uwdanas"/vîyn(i)yant"/. In contracts, matters of custom and usage are tacitly implied. A contract is understood to contain the customary clauses, although they are not expressed.

In contrahenda venditione, ambiguum pactum contra venditorem interpretandum est /in kontrahêndo vendishiyowniy ambiyuwam pektam kontra vêntdôrôm intarprädam est/. In the contract of sale, an ambiguous agreement is to be interpreted against the seller.

Inconvenience. In the rule that statutes should be so construed as to avoid "inconvenience," this means, as applied to the public, the sacrifice or jeopardizing of important public interests or hampering the legitimate activities of government or the transaction of public business, and, as applied to individuals, serious hardship or injustice.

In conventionibus, contrahentium voluntas potius quam verba spectari placuit /in kantrsktabas, banigna, in testamentas, moras et konswat(y)uw/.

Incorporation by reference. The method of making one document of any kind become a part of another separate document by referring to the former in the latter, and declaring that the former shall be taken and Incorporator. Person who joins with others to form a corporation and the successors of those who actually sign the papers of incorporation. The person or persons who execute the articles of incorporation. In modern corporation statutes only a single incorporator is required. Under such statutes the role of the incorporator is largely limited to the act of execution of the articles of incorporation, and restrictions on who may serve as incorporators have largely been eliminated. See, e.g., Rev. Model Bus. Corp. Act, § 2.01.

In corpore /in kórporə/. In body or substance; in a material thing or object.

Incorporeal /inkərˈpɔːriəl/. Without body; not of material nature; the opposite of corporeal (q.v.).

Incorporeal chattels. A class of incorporeal rights growing out of or incident to things personal; such as patent-rights and copyrights.

Incorporeal hereditaments. See Hereditaments.

Incorporeal property. In the civil law, that which consists in legal right merely. The same as choses in action at common law.

Incorporeal rights. Rights to intangibles, such as legal actions, rather than rights to property (rights to possession or use of land).

Incorporeal things. Things that have no body, but are comprehended by the understanding, such as rights of inheritance, servitudes, obligations, and right of intellectual property. Webb v. State Through Dept. of Transp. & Development, La.App. 1 Cir., 470 So.2d 994, 996.

Incurrigible /in kərəˈrjəbəl/. Incapable of being corrected, reformed, amended, or improved. With respect to juvenile offenders, unmanageable by parents or guardians. Shinn v. Barrow, Tex.Civ.App., 121 S.W.2d 450, 451. See Delinquent child; Disobedient child.

Incurruptible /in kərəˈrʌptəbəl/. That which cannot be affected by immoral or debasing influences, such as bribery or the hope of gain or advancement.

Increase. Enlargement, growth, development, increment, addition, accession, extension, production, profit, interest, issue. The produce of land; the offspring of animals.

Increase, affidavit of. Affidavit of payment of increased costs, produced on taxation.

Increase, costs of. In old English law, it was formerly a practice with the jury to award to the successful party in an action the nominal sum of 40s. only for his costs; and the court assessed by their own officer the actual amount of the successful party's costs; and the amount so assessed, over and above the nominal sum awarded by the jury, was thence called "costs of increase." The practice has now wholly ceased.

Increment /ɪŋkruːmənt/. An increasing in quantity, number, value, etc. That which is gained or added; the act or process of increasing, augmenting, or growing; enlargement, that which is added; increase; opposed to decrement. In re Corning's Will, 160 Misc. 434, 289 N.Y.S. 1101, 1103.

Incremental cost. Additional or increased costs. For example, as applied to cost of gas, includes cost of gas to distributors plus transportation costs and taxes. Fuels Research Council Inc. v. Federal Power Commission, C.A.II., 374 F.2d 542.

Incrementum /ɪŋkruːməntəm/. Lat. Increase or improvement, opposed to decrementum or abatement.

In criminalibus, probationes debent esse luce clariores /in krɪməniˈleɪbəs, prɔbləʊʃiˈɔmənɪz dɛbənt ɛsɪ liˈjuːs klaˈriəriɔrɪz/. In criminal cases, the proofs ought to be clearer than light.

In criminalibus, sufficit generalis malitia intentionis, cum facto paris gradus /in krɪməniˈleɪbəs, səfsət dʒənərəˈleɪz ˈmælɪʃiˈɔmənɪz kæm ˈfæktəʊ pərəs ˈgreɪdəs/. In criminal matters or cases, a general malice of intention is sufficient [if united], with an act of equal or corresponding degree.

In criminalibus, voluntas reputabitur pro facto /in krɪməniˈleɪbəs ˈvɔlnʊtləs rɪˈpjuːtəbɪtʊr prəʊ ˈfæktəʊ/. In criminal acts, the will will be taken for the deed.

Incriminate /ɪŋkrɪˈmeɪnt/. To charge with crime; to expose to an accusation or charge of crime; to involve oneself or another in a criminal prosecution or the danger thereof; as, in the rule that a witness is not bound to give testimony which would tend to incriminate him. In re Dendy, Tex.Civ.App., 175 S.W.2d 297, 302. See Inculpatory; Self-Incrimination.

Incriminating admission. An acknowledgment of facts tending to establish guilt.

Incriminating circumstance. A fact or circumstance, collateral to the fact of the commission of a crime, which tends to show either that such a crime has been committed or that some particular person committed it.

Incriminating evidence. Evidence which tends to establish guilt of the accused or from which, with other evidence, his or her guilt may be inferred. See also Inculpatory. Compare Exculpatory statement or evidence.

Incrimination. See Incriminate; Self-incrimination.

Incriminating statement. A statement which tends to establish guilt of the accused or from which, with other facts, his guilt may be inferred, or which tends to disprove some defense.

Incroachment /ɪnˈkrɒwəmtʃən/. An unlawful gaining upon the right or possession of another. See Encroachment; Trespass.

In cujus rei testimonium /ɪn kjuˈwəs rə ˈtestəməniom/. In testimony whereof. The initial words of the concluding clause of ancient deeds in Latin, literally translated in the English forms.

Inculpate /ɪŋˈkəlpət/. To impute blame or guilt; to accuse; to involve in guilt or crime. See Incriminate.
Inculpatory /inkəlpətəˈri/. In the law of evidence, going or tending to establish guilt; that which tends to incriminate. People v. White, 35 Cal.App.2d 61, 94 P.2d 617, 621. While a "confession" admits commission of a crime, an "inculpatory statement" admits a fact, circumstance or involvement which tends to establish guilt or from which guilt may be inferred. State v. Brumfield, La., 329 So.2d 181, 198. See also Incriminate; Incriminating evidence. Compare Exculpatory statement or evidence.

Incumbent /inkəmbənt/. A person who is in present possession of an office, and it is not limited, qualified or restricted by the method by which one attained office. Keller v. Smith, 170 Mont. 399, 553 P.2d 1002, 1007. One who is legally authorized to discharge the duties of an office. Hilliard v. Park, 212 Tenn. 588, 370 S.W.2d 829, 839.

In ecclesiastical law, the term signifies a clergyman who is in possession of a benefice.

Incumbent. See Encumbrance.

Incumbrance. See Encumbrance.

Incumbrances, covenant against. See Covenant.

Incur. To have liabilities cast upon one by act or operation of law, as distinguished from contract, where the party acts affirmatively. To become liable or subject to, to bring down upon oneself, as to incur debt, danger, displeasure and penalty, and to become through one's own action liable or subject to. Com. v. Benoit, 346 Mass. 294, 191 N.E.2d 749, 751.

Incurable disease. Any disease which has reached an incurable stage in the patient afflicted therewith, according to general state of knowledge of the medical profession. Disease for which there is no known cure.

Incurramentum /inkərˈrɛməntəm/. L. Lat. The liability to a fine, penalty, or amercement.

Incurred risk. A defense to a claim of negligence, separate and distinct from defense of contributory negligence. It contemplates acceptance of a specific risk of which the plaintiff has actual knowledge. Power v. Brodie, Ind.App. 1 Dist., 460 N.E.2d 1241. See also Assumption of risk.

In custodia legis /in kɑstədəˈliːjə lɪˈjæs/. In the custody or keeping of the law, as when a defendant's property is seized through the remedy of attachment and is held by the sheriff pending resolution of the main action between the parties.

In custody. A suspect is "in custody" for purpose of determining necessity of Miranda warnings if police, by word or by conduct, have manifested to suspect that he is not free to leave. Hammill v. U.S., D.C.App., 498 A.2d 551, 558. Such custody exists when the suspect has been deprived of his freedom in a significant way, and the place where the interrogation takes place does not conclusively establish presence or absence of custody. U.S. v. Jones, C.A.Ark., 630 F.2d 613, 615. See also Miranda Rule.

Inde /indy/. Lat. Thence; thenceforth; thereof; thereupon; for that cause.
at sexual intercourse, but according to others, it is not necessary that the liberties or familiarities should have related to the private parts of the child. See Obscene.

Indecent publications. Such as are offensive to modesty and delicacy; obscene; lewd; tending to the corruption of morals. Dunlop v. U. S., 165 U.S. 496, 17 S.Ct. 375, 41 L.Ed. 799. See Obscene.

Public indecency. This phrase has no fixed legal meaning, is vague and indefinite, and cannot, in itself, imply a definite offense. The courts, by a kind of judicial legislation, in England and the United States, have usually limited the operation of the term to public displays of the naked person, the publication, sale, or exhibition of obscene books and prints, or the exhibition of a monster,—acts which have a direct bearing on public morals, and affect the body of society. Irven v. State, 138 Tex.Cr.R. 368, 136 S.W.2d 608, 609. See Obscene; also, Indecent exposure, above.

Indecimable /in'de:səməbəl/. In old English law, that which is not titheable, or liable to pay tithe.

Indefensas /in'de:fənsezə/. Lat. In old English practice, undefended; undenied by pleading. A defendant who makes no defense or plea.

Indefinite. Without fixed boundaries or distinguishing characteristics; not definite, determinate, or precise. Term is more synonymous with temporary than with permanent; indefinite contemplates that condition will end at unpredictable time, whereas “permanent” does not contemplate that condition will cease to exist. Twisdale v. Womack & Martel, Fla., 148 So.2d 21, 23.

Indefinite failure of issue. A failure of issue not merely at the death of the party whose issue are referred to, but at any subsequent period, however remote. A failure of issue whenever it shall happen, sooner or later, without any fixed, certain, or definite period within which it must happen.

Indefinite legacy. See Legacy.

Indefinite number. A number which may be increased or diminished at pleasure.

Indefinitum supplēt locum universalis /in'definən'sətəm səplət ləwənəvə'sələz/. The undefined or general supplies the place of the whole.

Indemnify /in'demnəfə/. To restore the victim of a loss, in whole or in part, by payment, repair, or replacement. To save harmless; to secure against loss or damage; to give security for the reimbursement of a person in case of an anticipated loss falling upon him. To make good; to compensate; to make reimbursement to one of a loss already incurred by him. Several states by statute have provided special funds for compensating crime victims. See also Contribution; Hold harmless agreement; Indemnity; Reparation; Restitution; Subrogation.

Indemnis /in'demnas/. Lat. Without hurt, harm, or damage; harmless.

Indemnitee /in'demnətə/. The person who, in a contract of indemnity, is to be indemnified or protected by the other.

Indemnitor /in'demnətər/. The person who is bound, by an indemnity contract, to indemnify or protect the other.

Indemnity /in'demnədə/. Reimbursement. An undertaking by one agrees to indemnify another upon the occurrence of an anticipated loss. Dawson v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md., D.C.S.D., 189 F.Sup. 854, 865. A contractual or equitable right under which the entire loss is shifted from a tortfeasor who is only technically or passively at fault to another who is primarily or actively responsible. Moorhead v. Waelde, La.App., 499 So.2d 387, 389. Compare Contribution; Subrogation. See also Double indemnity; Exoneration; Indemnity.

The benefit payable under an insurance policy.

The term is also used to denote the compensation given to make a person whole from a loss already sustained; as where the government gives indemnity for private property taken by it for public use. See Condemnation; Eminent domain; Expropriation; Just compensation.

Indemnity against liability. As contrasted with indemnity against loss, which is an obligee’s right to compensation for a loss already sustained, it is an obligee’s right to indemnification at the time a liability arises. The claim arises upon the obligor’s default, regardless of whether the obligee has suffered loss. Central National Bank of Poteau v. McDaniel, Okl.App., 734 P.2d 1314, 1916. See also Subrogation.

Corporate affairs. In some instances corporations may indemnify officers and directors for fines, judgments, or amounts paid in settlement as well as expenses. See also indemnity; indemnity; Insurance (Directors’ and officers’ (D&O) liability insurance).

Indemnity bond.
Indemnity insurance. See Insurance.

Indemnity lands. Lands granted to railroads, in aid of their construction, being portions of the public domain, to be selected in lieu of other parcels embraced within the original grant, but which were lost to the railroad by previous disposition or by reservation for other purposes. See Land grant.

Indemnity policy. See Indemnity insurance and Liability insurance under Insurance.

Indenization /ɪndənɪziˈeɪʃən/. The act of making a denizen, or of naturalizing.

Indent, n. A certificate or indented certificate issued by the government of the United States at the close of the Revolution for the principal or interest of the public debt.

Indent, v. To cut in a serrated or wavy line. In old conveyancing, if a deed was made by more parties than one, it was usual to make as many copies of it as there were parties, and each was cut or indented (either in acute angles, like the teeth of a saw, or in a wavy line) at the top or side, to tally or correspond with the others, and the deed so made was called an "indenture". Anciently, both parts were written on the same piece of parchment, with some word or letters written between them through which the parchment was cut, but afterwards, the word or letters being omitted, indenting came into use, the idea of which was that the genuineness of each part might be proved by its fitting into the angles cut in the other. But at length even this was discontinued, and eventually the term served only to give name to the species of deed executed by two or more parties, as opposed to a deed poll (q.v.). 2 Bl.Comm. 295.

Indenture /ɪndəntʃər/. In business financing, a written agreement under which bonds and debentures are issued, setting forth form of bond, maturity date, amount of issue, description of pledged assets, interest rate, and other terms. Typically, the contract is entered into between the corporation and an indenture trustee whose responsibility is to protect the bondholders. The indenture often constitutes a mortgage on specified corporate property to secure the bonds. See Debenture; Trust indenture; Trust Indenture Act.

In real estate conveyancing, a deed to which two or more persons are parties, and in which these enter into reciprocal and corresponding grants or obligations towards each other; whereas a deed poll is properly one in which only the party making it executes it, or binds himself by it as a deed, though the grantors or grantees therein may be several in number. See Indent, v.

In bankruptcy law, indenture means mortgage, deed of trust, or indenture, under which there is outstanding a security, other than a voting-trust certificate, constituting a claim against the debtor, a claim secured by a lien on any of the debtor's property, or an equity security of the debtor. Bankruptcy Code, § 101.

Indenture of a fine. In old English law, indentures made and engrossed at the chirographer's office and delivered to the cognizor and the cognizee, usually beginning with the words: "Hec est finalis concordia." And then reciting the whole proceedings at length. 2 Bl.Comm. 351.

Indenture of trust. See Trust indenture.

Indenture trustee. Person or institution named in a trust indenture and charged with holding legal title to the trust property and with carrying out the terms of the indenture. Trustee under an indenture. Bankruptcy Code, § 101.

Independence. The state or condition of being free from dependence, subjection, or control. Political independence is the attribute of a nation or state which is entirely autonomous, and not subject to the government, control, or dictation of any exterior power.

Independent. Not dependent; not subject to control, restriction, modification, or limitation from a given outside source.

Independent adjuster. A person, firm or corporation who holds himself or itself out for employment as claims adjuster to more than one insurance company, is not a regular employee of the company, does not work exclusively for one company and is paid in each case assigned for time consumed and expenses incurred.

Independent advice. Concerning a trust deed or will which must be shown where a fiduciary relationship exists, means that the donor had the preliminary benefit of conferring fully and privately upon the subject of his intended gift with a person who was not only competent to inform him correctly as to its legal effect, but who was, furthermore, so disassociated from the interests of the donee as to be in a position to advise with the donor impartially and confidentially as to the consequences to himself of his proposed benefaction.

Independent contract. See Contract.

Independent contractor. Generally, one who, in exercise of an independent employment, contracts to do a piece of work according to his own methods and is subject to his employer's control only as to end product or final result of his work. Hammes v. Suk, 291 Minn. 233, 190 N.W.2d 478, 480, 481. One who renders service in course of self employment or occupation, and who follows employer's desires only as to results of work, and not as to means whereby it is to be accomplished. Sparks v. L. D. Folsom Co., 217 Cal.App.2d 279, 31 Cal.Rptr. 640, 643.

An independent contractor is a person who contracts with another to do something for him but who is not controlled by the other nor subject to the other's right to control with respect to his physical conduct in the performance of the undertaking. He may or may not be an agent. Restatement, Second, Agency, § 2.

Independent counsel. The Ethics in Government Act, 28 U.S.C.A. § 591 et seq., provides for a Special Division with authority to appoint independent counsel to investigate possible criminal misconduct by high level government officials. The constitutionality of this Act was An act or document is said to be conclusory if used by the common law to refer to a cause that involves the behavior of an individual and a given result such that it is regarded as unfair to hold the defendant responsible for the result. See also Intervening cause.

Independent covenant. See Covenant.

Independent intervening cause. A conclusory label applied to a cause that intervenes between the defendant's behavior and a given result such that it is regarded as unfair to hold the defendant responsible for the result. See also Intervening cause.

Indemnity. See also Indemnify.

Indemnification. See also Indemnify.

Index. A book containing references, alphabetically arranged, to the contents of a series or collection of documents or volumes; or a section (normally at the end) of a single volume or set of volumes containing such references to its contents.

Index fund. See Mutual fund.

Indexing. Adjusting or tying wages, pensions, mortgages, or other debt issues to some measure of inflation (e.g., Consumer Price Index) to preserve the purchasing power of future benefits and investment earnings.

Index offenses. The term designating the eight classes of offenses reported annually by the FBI in its Uniform Crime Reports. They include: murder, forcible rape, robbery, burglary, aggravated assault, larceny over a specified amount, arson, and motor vehicle theft.

Index options. See Option.

Indian Claims Commission. The Indian Claims Commission hears and determines claims against the United States on behalf of any Indian tribe, band, or other identifiable group of American Indians residing within the United States.

Indian lands. Real property ceded to the U.S. by Indians, commonly to be held in trust for Indians. See Indian country; Indian reservation; Indian tribal property; Indian tribe.

Indian tribal property. Property in which an Indian tribe has a legally enforceable interest. Such term is also used to track or measure changes in the economy (see, e.g., Consumer Price Index) and movement in stock markets (e.g., Standard & Poor's Index). Such indexes are usually keyed to a base year, month, or other period of comparison.

In mortgage financing, term used to determine adjustable-rate mortgage interest rates after the discount period ends. Common indexes for ARMs are one-year Treasury securities and the national average cost of funds to savings and loan associations.

Statistical indexes are also used to track or measure changes in the economy (see, e.g., Consumer Price Index) and movement in stock markets (e.g., Standard & Poor's Index). Such indexes are usually keyed to a base year, month, or other period of comparison.

In mortgage financing, term used to determine adjustable-rate mortgage interest rates after the discount period ends. Common indexes for ARMs are one-year Treasury securities and the national average cost of funds to savings and loan associations.
In the law of evidence, a sign or token; an indication.

Indicatif.

An abolished English writ by which a prose-indicator was in some cases removed from a court-christianization; punishment that lies for a patron of a church, whose belief that a given person was in reality, though not necessarily, a member of a given firm. Circumstantial evidence is used, may or may not be "public property" of the United States but held in trust for the Indian tribe. Such property, depending on context in which the term is used, may or not be "public property" of the United States. Chief Seattle Properties, Inc. v. Kitsap County, 86 Wash.2d 7, 541 P.2d 699, 704. See Indian lands; Indian reservation.

Indian tribe. A separate and distinct community or body of the aboriginal Indian race of men found in the United States. Montoya v. U. S., 180 U.S. 201, 21 S.Ct. 355, 45 L.Ed. 521. An "Indian tribe" within meaning of Indian Nonintercourse Act is a body of Indians of the same or similar race, united in a community under one leadership or government, and inhabiting a particular, though sometimes ill-defined, territory. Mashpee Tribe v. New Seabury Corp., D.C.Mass., 427 F.Supp. 899, 902.

For purpose of statute governing federal court jurisdiction of actions brought by Indian tribe or band, "Indians" are separate communities of citizens of Indian descent, possibly with a common racial origin, possessing the power of a sovereign to regulate their internal and social relations. Navajo Tribal Utility Authority v. Arizona Dept. of Revenue, C.A.Ariz., 608 F.2d 1228, 1231.

Indicare /indikēri/. Lat. In the civil law, to show or discover. To fix or tell the price of a thing. To inform against; to accuse.

Indicatif. An abolished English writ by which a prosecution was in some cases removed from a court-christian to the queen's bench.

Indication. In the law of evidence, a sign or token; a fact pointing to some inference or conclusion. See inference.

Indicative evidence. This is not evidence properly so called, but the mere suggestion of evidence proper, which may possibly be procured if the suggestion is followed up. See inference.

Indicavit /indikēyvat/. In old English practice, a writ of prohibition that lies for a patron of a church, whose clerk is sued in the spiritual court by the clerk of another patron, for tithes amounting to a fourth part of the value of the living. 3 Bl.Comm. 91. So termed from the emphatic word of the Latin form.

Indicium /indis(h)iya/. Signs; indications. Circumstances which point to the existence of a given fact as probable, but not certain. For example, "indicia of partnership" are any circumstances which would induce the belief that a given person was in reality, though not ostensibly, a member of a given firm. See Circumstantial evidence.

The term is much used in the civil law in a sense nearly or entirely synonymous with circumstantial evidence. It denotes facts which give rise to inferences, rather than the inferences themselves.

Indicia of title. Generally, a document evidencing title to property, real or personal; e.g. carbon copy of bill of sale to automobile. Edwards v. Central Motor Co., 38 Tenn.App. 577, 277 S.W.2d 413, 416.
of our lord the king, his crown and dignity in general, and not against his individual person; because in England there is no interregnum.

Indictor /indáytdər/. He who causes another to be indicted. The latter is sometimes called the "indictee."

In diem /in dáyəm/. For a day; for the space of a day.

Indifferent. Impartial; unbiased; disinterested.

Indigena /indiŋəna/. In old English law, a subject born; one born within the realm, or naturalized by act of parliament. The opposite of "alienigena" (q.v.).

Indigent /indajənt/. In a general sense, one who is needy and poor, or one who has not sufficient property to furnish him a living nor anyone able to support him to whom he is entitled to look for support. Term commonly used to refer to one's financial ability, and ordinarily indicates one who is destitute of means of comfortable subsistence so as to be in want. Powers v. State, 194 Kan. 820, 402 P.2d 328, 332.

Indigent defendant. A person indicted or complained of who is without funds or ability to hire a lawyer to defend him is, in most instances, entitled to appointed counsel to represent him at every stage of the criminal proceedings, through appeal, consistent with the protection of the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments to U.S. Const. Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335, 83 S.Ct. 792, 9 L.Ed.2d 798; Fed.R.Crim.P. 44; 18 U.S.C.A. § 3006A. Provision also may be made for waiver of court costs and fees for indigent defendants in appealing a case (e.g. Fed.R.App.P. 24); and, the financial condition of the defendant will be considered in imposing fines (see 18 U.S.C.A. § 3572). See also Counsel, right to; In forma pauperis; Pauper's oath. See also Circonvoluted evidence; Inference; Presumption.

Indignity /indignatɪs/. In the law of divorce, a species of cruelty addressed to the mind, sensibilities, self-respect, or personal honor of the subject, rather than to the body. "Indiginites" justifying grant of divorce may consist of vulgarity, unmerited reproach, habitual contumely, studied neglect, intentional incivility, manifest disdain, abusive language, or malignant ridicule. Hargrove v. Hargrove, Pa.Super., 381 A.2d 143, 148. See Mental cruelty.

Indirect. Not direct in relation or connection; not having an immediate bearing or application; not related in the natural way. Circuitous, not leading to aim or result by plainest course or method or obvious means, roundabout, not result directly from an act or cause but more or less remotely connected with or growing out of it. Cahen Trust v. U.S., C.A.III., 292 F.2d 33, 36. Almost always used in law in opposition to "direct," though not the only antithesis of the latter word, as the terms "collateral" and "cross" are sometimes used in contrast with "direct."

As to indirect Confession; Contempt; Costs, and Tax, see those titles.

Indirect attack. See Collateral attack.

Indirect evidence. Such evidence which only tends to establish the issue by proof of various facts sustaining by their consistency the hypothesis claimed. It consists of both inferences and presumptions. Proof of collateral circumstances, from which a fact in controversy, not directly attested to by direct evidence (witnesses or documents), may be inferred. Proof of some other fact or facts from which, taken either singly or collectively, existence of particular fact in question may be inferred as necessary or probable consequence. United Textile Workers of America, AFL-CIO, Local Union No. 120 v. Newberry Mills, Inc., D.C.S.C., 238 F.Supp. 366, 372. See also Circumstantial evidence; Inference; Presumption.

Indirect tax. A tax upon some right or privilege or corporate franchise; e.g. privilege tax; franchise tax. Madison Suburban Utility Dist. of Davidson County v. Carson, 191 Tenn. 300, 232 S.W.2d 277, 280. A tax laid upon the happening of an event as distinguished from its tangible fruits. Chickering v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.Mass., 118 F.2d 254, 258.

Indispatch. Sufficentalternatepartesveram/in dijadisj(kt)ayvaesafasältərampərtəməsəyvirəm/. In disjunctives it is sufficient that either part be true. Where a condition is in the disjunctive, it is sufficient if either part be performed.

Indispensable. That which cannot be spared, omitted, or dispensed with.

Indispensable evidence. That without which a particular fact cannot be proved.

Indispensable parties. One without whose presence no adequate judgment can be entered determining rights of parties before a court. Insurance Co. of North America v. Allied Crude Vegetable Oil Refining Corp., 89 N.J.Super. 518, 215 A.2d 579, 588. Those who have such an interest in the controversy that the court cannot render a final decree without affecting their interests. Ohmart v. Dennis, 188 Neb. 260, 196 N.W.2d 181, 184. Those who must be joined because nonjoinder prejudices their rights and those of parties already joined such that the action cannot continue without them. Wright Farms Const., Inc. v. Kreps, D.C.Vt., 444 F.Supp. 1023, 1028. Those without whom the action cannot proceed, and must be joined even if by such joinder the court loses jurisdiction over the controversy. Milligan v. Anderson, C.A.Okl., 522 F.2d 1202, 1205. Fed.R.Civ.P. 19. See Joinder (Joinder of parties); Necessary Parties; Parties.

Indistanter /indistəntər/. Forthwith; without delay.

Indittee /indaiti/. L. Fr. In old English law, a person indicted.

Individual. As a noun, this term denotes a single person as distinguished from a group or class, and also, very commonly, a private or natural person as distinguished from a partnership, corporation, or association; but it is said that this restrictive signification is not necessarily inherent in the word, and that it may, in proper cases, include artificial persons. See also Person.

As an adjective, "individual" means pertaining or belonging to, or characteristic of, one single person, either in opposition to a firm, association, or corporation, or considered in his relation thereto.
Individual assets. In the law of partnership, property belonging to a member of a partnership as his separate and private property, apart from the assets or property belonging to the firm as such or the partner's interest therein.

Individual debts. Such as are due from a member of a partnership in his private or personal capacity, as distinguished from those due from the firm or partnership.

Individually. Separately and personally, as distinguished from jointly or officially, and as opposed to collective or associate action or common interest.

Individual proprietorship. See Sole proprietorship.

Individual retirement account (I.R.A.). Individuals with earned income are permitted, under certain circumstances, to set aside a limited amount of such income per year for a retirement account. The amount so set aside can be deducted by the taxpayer and is subject to income tax only upon withdrawal. The Internal Revenue Code limits the amount of this contribution that can be deducted for adjusted gross income depending upon (1) whether the taxpayer or spouse is an active participant in an employer-provided qualified retirement plan and (2) the magnitude of the taxpayer's adjusted gross income before the IRA contribution is considered. I.R.C. § 219. Specific statutory requirements are established for the establishment of the trust or custodial account, contributions, and withdrawal of such amounts with penalties provided for failure to comply. I.R.C. § 408(a). See also Keogh Plan.

Individual system of location. A term formerly used in some states to designate the location of public lands by surveys, in which the land called for by each warrant was separately surveyed.

Indivisible. Not susceptible of division or apportionment; inseparable; entire. Thus, a contract, covenant, consideration, etc., may be divisible or indivisible; i.e., separable or entire. See also Contract.

Indivisum /ɪndɪˈvɪzəm/. Lat. That which two or more persons hold in common without partition; undivided.

Indorsee /ɪndəˈsɪri/. The person to whom or for whose benefit an instrument, document or other commercial paper is indorsed, usually referring to the indorser's transferee.

Indorse in due course. An indorse in due course is one who, in good faith, in the ordinary course of business, and for value, before its apparent maturity or presumptive dishonor, and without knowledge of its actual dishonor, acquires a negotiable instrument duly indorsed to him, or indorsed generally, or payable to the bearer.

Indorsement /ɪndəˈsɜːrnənt/. The act of a payee, drawee, accommodation indorser, or holder of a bill, note, check, or other negotiable instrument, in writing his name upon the back of the same, with or without further or qualifying words, whereby the property in the same is assigned and transferred to another. U.C.C. § 3-202 et seq.

The signature on an instrument of a person who has the liability thereon of an indorser. Any signature in an ambiguous capacity is an indorsement. U.C.C. § 3-402. As applied to documents, the term means the signature thereon of a person to whose order the document runs.

An indorsement must be written by or on behalf of the holder and on the instrument or on a paper so firmly affixed thereto as to become a part thereof. An indorsement is effective for negotiation only when it conveys the entire instrument or any unpaid residue. If it purports to be of less it operates only as a partial assignment. U.C.C. § 3-202.

Accommodation indorsement. In the law of negotiable instruments, one made by a third person without any consideration, but merely for the benefit of the holder of the instrument, or to enable the maker to obtain money or credit on it. Unless otherwise explained, it is understood to be a loan of the indorser's credit without restriction. Accommodation indorser is not liable to party accommodated. U.C.C. § 3-415.

Blank indorsement. One made by the mere writing of the indorser's name on the back of the note or bill, without mention of the name of any person in whose favor the indorsement is made, but with the implied understanding that any lawful holder may fill in his own name above the indorsement if he so chooses. An indorsement in blank specifies no particular indorsee and may consist of a mere signature. An instrument payable to order and indorsed in blank becomes payable to bearer and may be negotiated by delivery alone until specially indorsed. The holder may convert a blank indorsement into a special indorsement by writing over the signature of the indorser in blank any contract consistent with the character of the indorsement. U.C.C. § 3-204(2), (3).

Collection indorsement. See that title.

Conditional indorsement. An indorsement that is restrictive because it purports to limit when the instrument can be paid or further transferred, or to condition payment or further transfer on the occurrence of a specified event. One by which the indorser annexes some condition (other than the failure of prior parties to pay) to his liability. The condition may be either present or subsequent. Special indorsement with additional words of condition. U.C.C. § 3-205(a).

Full indorsement. One by which the indorser orders the money to be paid to some particular person by name; it differs from a blank indorsement, which consists merely in the name of the indorser written on the back of the instrument.

General indorsement. See Blank indorsement, above.

Irregular indorsement. An indorsement out of the chain of title which is ordinarily added to an instrument prior to delivery to the payee. Also known as an anomalous indorsement. E.g., M makes a note payable to P; M is the maker and P is the payee. If when the note is executed by M, I also signs in the margin of the instru-
Indorse, indorsement, i.e., being the payee or holder, writes his name on the back of a negotiable instrument. One who signs his name as payee on the back of a check to obtain the cash or credit represented on its face.

A signer of an instrument who engages to pay it only upon dishonor and any necessary notice of dishonor and protest. U.C.C. § 3-414(1). As applied to documents, the term means the person who signs a document that runs to her order.

In dorsal /in dórsw/. On the back. 2 Bl.Comm. 468. In dorsi recordi, on the back of the record. Hence the English indorse, indorsement, etc.

Indubis, benigniora preferenda sunt /in d(y)wbiyas, benigniyóra préferéndá sant/. In doubtful cases, the more favorable views are to be preferred; the more liberal interpretation is to be followed.

Qualifide indorsement. One which restrains or limits, or qualifies or enlarges, the liability of the indorser, in any manner different from what the law generally imports as his true liability, deductible from the nature of the instrument. Stover Bank v. Welpman, Mo.App., 284 S.W. 177, 180. A transfer of a bill or promissory note to an indorsee, without any liability to the indorser. Such is accomplished by adding after signature words such as "without recourse" or the like. U.C.C. §§ 3-414(1), 3-417(2)(x).

Restrictive indorsement. One which stops the negotiability of the instrument, or which contains such a definite direction as to the payment as to preclude the indorsee from making any further transfer of the instrument. An indorsement is restrictive which either: (a) is conditional; or (b) purports to prohibit further transfer of the instrument; or (c) includes the words "for collection", "for deposit", "pay any bank", or like terms signifying a purpose of deposit or collection; or (d) otherwise states that it is for the benefit or use of the indorser or of another person. U.C.C. § 3-205.

Special indorsement. An indorsement that specifies a person to whom or to whose order the instrument is thereafter payable, U.C.C. § 3-204(1), or, in the case of a document, as the person to whom or to whose order the goods should be delivered. Any instrument specially indorsed becomes payable to the order of the special indorsee and may be further negotiated only by his indorsement.

Trust indorsement. An indorsement of an instrument that is restrictive because it states that it is for the benefit or use of the indorser or of another person. U.C.C. § 3-205(d).

Unauthorized indorsement. One made without actual, implied or apparent authority and includes a forgery. U.C.C. § 3-404.

Without recourse. See Qualified indorsement, above.

Indorser /ändórsar/. Person who indorses; i.e., being the payee or holder, writes his name on the back of a negotiable instrument. One who signs his name as payee on the back of a check to obtain the cash or credit represented on its face.

In dubiis, magis dignum est accipiendum /in d(y)wbiyas, méjjas dignam ét skıpiyéndam/. In doubtful cases, the more worthy is to be accepted.

In dubiis, non presumitur pro testamento /in d(y)wbiyas, nón praxíyümstátr prów těstaméntów/. In cases of doubt, the presumption is not in favor of a will.

In dubio /in d(y)wbiyów/. In doubt; in a state of uncertainty, or in a doubtful case.

In dubio, hec legis constructio quam verba ostendunt /in d(y)wbiyów, hýk liyjás kanstráksh(y)ów kwám várbo ásténdánt/. In the case of doubt, that is the construction of the law which the words indicate.

In dubio, pars mitior est sequenda /in d(y)wbiyów, párz máysh(y)ar ésé sákwiéndá/. In doubt, the milder course is to be followed.

In dubio, pro lege fori /in d(y)wbiyów, prów líjjiy fórá/. In a doubtful case, the law of the forum is to be preferred. "A false maxim."

In dubio, sequendum quod tutius est /in d(y)wbiyów, sákwiéndám kwód t(y)wbiyósh(y)as ét/. In doubt, the safer course is to be adopted.

Indubitable proof /ind(y)wbiyówbasbal prúw/. Evidence which is not only found credible, but is of such weight and directness as to make out the facts alleged beyond a doubt. See Prima facie.

Induce. To bring on or about, to affect, cause, to influence to an act or course of conduct, lead by persuasion or reasoning, incite by motives, prevail on. See also Seduce.

Inducement. In contracts, the benefit or advantage which the promisor is to receive from a contract is the inducement for making it. To cause party to choose one course of conduct rather than another. Stoltz v. Delaware Real Estate Com’n, Del.Super., 473 A.2d 1258, 1264.

In criminal law, motive; that which leads or tempts to the commission of crime. For purposes of entrapment defense, may be defined as government conduct which creates substantial risk that undisposed person or otherwise law-abiding citizen would commit the offense. U.S. v. Ortiz, C.A.Utah, 804 F.2d 1161, 1165. See Entrapment.

Inducie /ind(y)wbiyósh(y)ów/. In international law, a truce; a suspension of hostilities; an agreement during war to abstain for a time from warlike acts.

Induct. To put in enjoyment or possession, especially to the commission of crime. For purposes of entrapment defense, may be defined as government conduct which creates substantial risk that undisposed person or otherwise law-abiding citizen would commit the offense. U.S. v. Ortiz, C.A.Utah, 804 F.2d 1161, 1165. See Entrapment.

Inductio /indšksh(y)ów/. Lat. In the civil law, oblation, by drawing the pen over the writing.

Induction. Act or process of inducing; e.g. process of inducing civilian into military service.

Inducti sunt in carcerem et imparcati /indšktay sánt ín kárrsrnm ét imparkétyay/. See Imparcare.
In eadem causa /in ieyday komoz/. In the same state or Disqualification or legal incapacity to be Ineligibility.

Inebriate Industry wide liability. See Enterprise liability.

Industrial development bonds. See Bond.

Industrial disease. In law of worker’s compensation, physical disorder which is caused by or is incident to particular occupation. Lumbermen’s Mut. Cas. Co. v. Rozan, 92 N.H. 328, 30 A.2d 474, 475. See also Occupational disease.

Industrial goods. Goods which are destined and designed to produce other goods as contrasted with consumer goods.

Industrial relations. Term includes all phases of relations between employer and employee, including collective bargaining, safety, employee benefits, etc.

Industrial revenue bond. See Bond.

Industriam, per /par industriyam/. Lat. A qualified property in animals fere nature may be acquired per industriam, i.e., by a man’s reclaiming and making them tame by art, industry, and education; or by so confining them within his own immediate power that they cannot escape and use their natural liberty.

Industry. Any department or branch of art, occupation, or business conducted as a means of livelihood or for profit; especially, one which employs much labor and capital and is a distinct branch of trade. Dessen v. Department of Labor and Industries of Washington, 190 Wash. 69, 66 P.2d 867, 869.

Term is susceptible of more than one meaning: it may be defined in terms of end uses for which various products compete; it may also denote an aggregate of enterprises employing similar production and marketing facilities and producing products having markedly similar characteristics. U.S. v. Continental Can Co., N.Y., 378 U.S. 441, 84 S.Ct. 1738, 1740, 12 L.Ed.2d 953.

Industry wide liability. See Enterprise liability.

In eadem causa /in iyedem kōza/. In the same state or condition.

Inebriate /inlybriyat/. A person under the influence of or addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors.

Ineligibility. Disqualification or legal incapacity to be elected to an office or appointed to a particular position. Thus, an alien or naturalized citizen is ineligible to be elected president of the United States. This incapacity arises from various causes, and a person may be incapable of being elected to one office who may be elected to another; the incapacity may also be perpetual or temporary. See also Incapacity.

In emulationem vicini /in ēm(y)alēyshiyōwnam vosānay/. In envy or hatred of a neighbor. Where an act is done, or action brought, solely to hurt or distress another, it is said to be in emulationem vicini.

In eo quod plus sit, semper inest et minus /in iyow kwōd plās sit, sēmpor inēst ēt māyənas/. In the greater is always included the less also.

In equity. In a court of equity, as distinguished from a court of law; in the purview, consideration, or contemplation of equity; according to the doctrines of equity. See Equitable; Equity.

Inescapable peril. Within last clear chance doctrine, means peril which the plaintiff is helpless to avoid by his own efforts, but which requires action on part of defendant to avert it. Melenson v. Howell, 344 Mo. 1137, 130 S.W.2d 555, 560.

In esse /in ēsiy/. In being. Actually existing. Distinguished from in posse, which means “that which is not, but may be.” A child before birth is in posse; after birth, in esse.

Inesse potest donationi, modus, conditio sive causa; ut modus est; si conditio; quia causa /inēsī pōwtyst daneshiyōwnay, mōwdaś, kandish(iy)ow sāyviy kōza; īt mōwdaś ēst; sāy kandish(iy)ow; kwāya kōza/. In a gift there may be manner, condition, and cause; as [ut] introduces a manner; if [si], a condition; because [quia], a cause.

In est de jure /inēst di jūriy/. (Lat.) It is implied of right or by law.

In evidence. Included in the evidence already adduced. The “facts in evidence” are such as have already been proved in the cause.

Inevitable. Incapable of being avoided; fortuitous; transcending the power of human care, foresight, or exertion to avoid or prevent, and therefore suspending legal relations so far as to excuse from the performance of contract obligations, or from liability for consequent loss.

Inevitable accident. An unavoidable accident; one produced by an irresistible physical cause; an accident which cannot be prevented by human skill or foresight, but results from natural causes, such as lightning or storms, perils of the sea, inundations or earthquakes, or sudden death or illness. By irresistible force is meant an interposition of human agency, from its nature and power absolutely uncontrollable.

An accident is “inevitable”, so as to preclude recovery on ground of negligence, if person by whom it occurs neither has nor is legally bound to have sufficient power to avoid it or prevent its injuring another. Stephens v. Virginia Elec. & Power Co., 184 Va. 94, 34 S.E.2d 374, 377.

The highest degree of caution that can be used is not required. It is enough that it is reasonable under the circumstances; such as is usual in similar cases, and has been found by long experience to be sufficient to answer the end in view,—the safety of life and property. Inevitable accident is only when the disaster happens from natural causes, without negligence or fault on either side, and when both parties have endeavored, by every means in their power, with due care and caution, and with a proper display of nautical skill, to prevent the occurrence of the accident. The Philip J. Kenny, C.C.A. N.J., 60 F.2d 457, 458.

See also Act of God; Unavoidable accident.

Inevitable discovery rule. An exception to the exclusionary rule which permits evidence to be admitted in a criminal case, even though it was obtained unlawfully, when the government can show that discovery of the evidence by lawful means was inevitable. U.S. v. Gorski, C.C.A.Conn., 852 F.2d 692, 695.

In excambio /in eksokyuwan/. In exchange. Formal words in old deeds of exchange.

Inexcusable neglect. Such neglect which will preclude setting aside of default judgment, implies something more than the unintentional inadvertence or neglect common to all who share the ordinary frailties of mankind. Montez v. Tonkawa Village Apartments, 215 Kan. 59, 523 P.2d 351, 356.

In execution and pursuance of /in eksokyuwan & nd/. In execution and pursuance of the instrument is intended to carry into effect some kind. Montez v. Tonkawa Village Apartments, 215 Kan. 59, 523 P.2d 351, 356.

In expositione instrumentorum, mala grammatica, /quod fieri potest, vitanda est/. In the construction of instruments, bad grammar is to be avoided as much as possible.

In exitu /in eksokyuwan/. In exit. De materia in exitu, of the matter in issue.

In execution and pursuance of /in eksokyuwan/. Words used to express the fact that the instrument is intended to carry into effect some other instrument, as in case of a deed in execution of a power.

In exitu /in eksokyuwan/. In issue. De materia in exitu, of the matter in issue.

In expositione instrumentorum, mala grammatica, /quod fieri potest, vitanda est/. In the construction of instruments, bad grammar is to be avoided as much as possible.

In extenso /in eksokyuwan/. In extension; at full length; from beginning to end, leaving out nothing.

In extremis /in eksokyuwan/. In extremity; in the last extremity; in the last illness. Agens in extremis, being in extremity. Declarations in extremis, dying declarations. In extremis does not always mean in effect all other instrument, as in case of a deed in execution of a power.

In facie curiae /in feks(h)i(y)i(y) kyuri(y)i(y)/. In the face of the court.

In facie ecclesiae /in feks(h)i(y)i(y) skl(y)i(y)i(y)/. In the face of the church. A term applied in the law of England to marriages, which are required to be solemnized in a parish church or public chapel, unless by dispensation or license.

In faciendo /in feks(h)i(y)i(y)endow/. In doing; in feasance; in the performance of an act.

In fact. Actual, real; as distinguished from implied or inferred. Resulting from the acts of parties, instead of from the act or intendment of law.

In facto /in fektow/. In fact; in deed. In facto dicit, in fact says.

In facto quod se habet ad bonum et malum, magis de bono quam de malo lex intendit /in fektow kwod siy heybat ad bownam et malam, meyjas diiy bownow kwam diiy malow leks antendat/. In an act or deed which admits of being considered as both good and bad, the law intends more from the good than from the bad; the law makes the more favorable construction.

Infamia /infeymyi(y)/. Lat. Infamy; ignominy or disgrace.

By infamia juris is meant infamy established by law as the consequence of crime; infamia facti is where the party is supposed to be guilty of such crime, but it has not been judicially proved.

Infamous /infeymash/. Lat. In Roman law, a person whose right of reputation was diminished (involving the loss of some of the rights of citizenship) either on account of his infamous avocation or because of conviction for crime.

Infamous crime. See Crime.

Infamous punishment. See Punishment.

Infamy /infamiy/. Condition of being infamous. A qualification of a man's legal status produced by his conviction of an infamous crime and the consequent loss of honor and credit, which, at common law, rendered him incompetent as a witness, and by statute in some jurisdictions entails other disabilities. See Civil death.

Infancy. Minority; the state of a person who is under the age of legal majority,—at common law, twenty-one years; now, generally 18 years. According to the sense in which this term is used, it may denote the condition of the person merely with reference to his years, or the contractual disabilities which non-age entails, or his status with regard to other powers or relations.

At common law, children under the age of seven are conclusively presumed to be without criminal capacity, those who have reached the age of fourteen are treated as fully responsible, while as to those between the ages of seven and fourteen there is a rebuttable presumption of criminal incapacity. Many states have made some change by statute in the age of criminal responsibility for minors. In addition, all jurisdictions have adopted juvenile court legislation providing that some or all criminal conduct by those persons under a certain age (usually eighteen) must or may be adjudicated in the juvenile court rather than in a criminal prosecution.

See also Child; Children; Minor.

Infangenthef /infeymash/. In old English law, a privilege of lords of certain manors to judge any thief taken within their fee. See Outfangthef.

Infans /infans/. Lat. In the civil law, a child under the age of seven years; so called "quasi impos fandi" (as not having the faculty of speech).

Infant. See Child; Children; Infancy; Minor.
Infantia /infânti(a)/. Lat. In the civil law, the period of infancy between birth and the age of seven years.

Infanticide /infântiçid/. The murder or killing of an infant soon after its birth. The fact of the birth distinguishes this act from “feticide” or “procuring abortion,” which terms denote the destruction of the fetus in the womb. See also Procidie.

Infanzon /infânsôn/. In Spanish law, a person of noble birth, who exercises within his domains and inheritance no other rights and privileges than those conceded to him.

In favorabilibus magis attenditur quod prodest quam quod nocet /in fayvârâbiłâs meyjâs stêndstâr kwôd prôwdst kwâm kwôd nôsôt/. In things favored, what profits is more regarded than what prejudices.

Infensare curiam /infânseiriy kyûriyam/. Lat. An expression applied to a court when it suggested to an advocate something which he had omitted through mistake or ignorance.

Infesti /infâstû/. In the law of evidence, operating in the way of inference, to indicate that the passage cited is at the end of a book, chapter, section, etc.
Infinitum in jure reprobatur /infanaytam in juriy réprabéyta/. As applied to litigation, that which is endless is reprobated in law.

Infirm. Weak, feeble. Lacking moral character or weak of health. The testimony of an "infirm" witness may be taken de bene esse in some circumstances. See also incapacity.

Informative. In the law of evidence, having the quality of diminishing force; having a tendency to weaken or render infirm. Exculpatory is used by some authors as synonymous.

Informative consideration. In the law of evidence, a consideration, supposition, or hypothesis of which the criminative facts of a case admit, and which tends to weaken the inference or presumption of guilt deductible from them.

Informative fact. In the law of evidence, a fact set up, proved, or even supposed, in opposition to the criminative facts of a case, the tendency of which is to weaken the force of the inference of guilt deductible from them.

Informative hypothesis. A term sometimes used in criminal evidence to denote an hypothesis or theory of the case which assumes the defendant's innocence, and explains the criminative evidence in a manner consistent with that assumption.

Infirmität. Disability; feebleness. In an application for insurance is an ailment or disease of a substantial character, which apparently in some material degree impairs the physical condition and health of the applicant and increases the chance of his death or sickness and which if known, would have been likely to deter the insurance company from issuing the policy. See also incapacity.

Inflation. An overall rise in prices which results in a decline in the real value of the dollar.

Inflation rate. Rate of change in prices of goods and services as measured for a particular period. The primary indexes for measuring the rate of change are the Consumer Price Index and Producer Price Index.

Influence. Power exerted over others. To affect, modify or act upon by physical, mental or moral power, especially in some gentle, subtle, and gradual way. State v. Robertson, 241 La. 249, 128 So.2d 646, 648. See also Coercion; Duress; Undue influence.

Informal. Deficient in legal form; inartificially drawn up.

Informal contract. A contract that does not require a specified form or formality for its validity. Generally refers to an oral contract as contrasted with a written contract or specialty instrument. See Contract.

Informality. Want of legal form.

Informal proceedings. Proceedings less formal than a normal trial; e.g. small claims or conciliation court, administrative hearings, etc. Those conducted without prior notice to interested persons by an officer of the Court acting as registrar for probate of a will or appoint.
Infomer. An undisclosed person who confidentially discloses material information of a law violation, thereby supplying a lead to officers for their investigation of a crime. Jackson v. State, Wyo., 522 P.2d 1286, 1288. This does not include persons who supply information only after being interviewed by police officers, or who give information as witnesses during course of investigation. Gordon v. U.S., C.A.Fla., 438 F.2d 858, 874. Rewards for information obtained from informers is provided for by 18 U.S.C.A. § 3059. See also Citizen informant.

Infomer’s privilege. The government’s privilege to withhold from disclosure the identity of persons who furnish information on violations of law to officers charged with enforcement of that law. Roviaro v. United States, 353 U.S. 53, 59, 77 S.Ct. 623, 627, 1 L.Ed.2d 639. In the exercise of its power to formulate evidentiary rules for federal criminal cases, the Supreme Court has consistently declined to hold that an informer’s identity need always be disclosed in a federal criminal trial or in a preliminary hearing. McCray v. Illinois, 386 U.S. 300, 312, 87 S.Ct. 1056, 1063, 18 L.Ed.2d 62. A defendant is entitled to a veracity hearing if he makes a substantial preliminary showing that an affidavit knowingly and intentionally, or with reckless disregard for the truth, included in a warrant affidavit a false statement necessary to the finding of probable cause. However, the deliberate falsity or reckless disregard whose impeachment is permitted is only that of the affiant, not of any nongovernmental informant. Franks v. Delaware, 438 U.S. 154, 171, 98 S.Ct. 2674, 2684, 57 L.Ed.2d 667.

In foro /in föröw/. In a (or the) forum, court, or tribunal.

In foro conscientiae /föörow kons(h)iényshiy(i)y/. In the tribunal of conscience; conscientiously, considered from a moral, rather than a legal, point of view.

In foro contentioso /in föröw kontëntëshiyówosow/. In the forum of contentment or litigation.

In foro ecclesiasticco /in föröw ekkišlëshiyówstikow/. In an ecclesiastical forum; in the ecclesiastical court.

In foro seculari /in föröw sekšaleryay/. In a secular forum or court.

Infornatium, homicide per /hômássayd pör instrufyûwn(i)yam/. Where a man doing a lawful act, without intention of hurt, unfortunately kills another.

Infra /infra/. (Lat.) Below, under, beneath, underneath. The opposite of supra, above. Thus, we say, primo gradu est—supra, pater, mater, infra, filius, filla: in the first degree of kindred in the ascending line, above is the father and the mother, below, in the descending line, son and daughter.

In another sense, this word signifies within; as, infra corpus civitatis, within the body of the country; infra præsidia, within the guards. So of time, during: infra füorem, during the madness. This use is not classical. The use of infra for intra seems to have sprung up among the barbarians after the fall of the Roman empire.

Infra statem /infra stétyam/. Under age; not of age. Applied to minors.

Infra annos nubiles /infra ânów nûbyâlîyâs/. Under marriageable years; not yet of marriageable age.

Infra annum /infra ânów/. Under or within a year.

Infra annum lactis /infra ånów lâktës/. (Within the year of mourning.) The phrase is used in reference to the marriage of a widow within a year after her husband’s death, which was prohibited by the civil law.

Infra brachia /infra bréyk(î)yâs/. Within her arms. Used of a husband de jure, as well as de facto. Also inter brachia. It was in this sense that a woman could only have an appeal for murder of her husband inter brachia suæ.

Infra civitatem /infra sivâtyam/. Within the state.

Infra corpus comitatus /infra körpôs kômâtyâtsas/. Within the body (territorial limits) of a county. In English law, waters which are infra corpus comitatus are exempt from the jurisdiction of the admiralty.

Infraction. A breach, violation, or infringement; as of a law, a contract, a right or duty. A violation of a statute for which the only sentence authorized is a fine and which violation is expressly designated as an infraction.

Infra dignitatem curiae /infra dîgîntëtyam kûrîy(i)y/. Beneath the dignity of the court; unworthy of the consideration of the court. Where a bill in equity is brought upon a matter too trifling to deserve the attention of the court, it is demurrable, as being infra dignitatem curiae.

Infra furorem /infra fyrôreom/. During madness; while in a state of insanity.

Infra hospitium /infra hôspish(i)yom/. Within the inn. When a traveler’s baggage comes infra hospitium, i.e., in the care and under the custody of the innkeeper, the latter’s liability attaches. Davidson v. Madison Corporation, 231 App.Div. 421, 247 N.Y.S. 789, 795.

Infra jurisdictionem /infra jûrîsdishkîshîwónnam/. Within the jurisdiction.

Infra præsidia /infra prósidîya/. Within the protection; within the defenses. In international law, when a prize, or other captured property, is brought into a port of the captors, or within their lines, or otherwise under their complete custody, so that the chance of rescue is lost, it is said to be infra præsidia.

In fraudem creditorum /in fróðam krêddstôrom/. In fraud of creditors; with intent to defraud creditors.

In fraudem legis /in fróðam liýisës/. In fraud of the law. With the intent or view of evading the law.

Infringement /infrînjîmânt/. A breaking into; a trespass or encroachment upon; a violation of a law, regulation, contract, or right. Used especially of invasions of the rights secured by patents, copyrights, and trademarks. See also Encroachment; Trespass.

Contributory infringement. The intentional aiding of one person by another in the unlawful making or selling... of a patented invention; usually done by making or selling one part of the patented invention, or one element of the combination, with the intent and purpose of so aiding.

Criminal infringement. Any person who infringes a copyright willfully and for purposes of commercial advantage or private financial gain is subject to a fine and/or imprisonment. Copyright Act, § 506 (17 U.S.C. A.).

Infringement of copyright. Unauthorized use of copyrighted material; i.e. use without permission of copyright holder. In determining whether there is a copyright infringement, and not a “fair use” exemption, the factors to be considered include: (1) the purpose and character of the use, including whether such use is of a commercial nature or is for nonprofit educational purposes; (2) the nature of the copyrighted work; (3) the amount and substantiality of the portion used in relation to the copyrighted work as a whole; and (4) the effect of the use upon the potential market for or value of the copyrighted work. Copyright Act, § 107 (17 U.S.C.A.).

Remedies for copyright infringement include injunctive relief, impounding and disposition of infringing articles, and recovery of actual damages and profits. In lieu of actual damages, the federal Copyright Act provides for statutory damages which will vary as to whether the infringement was willful or unintentional. Copyright Act, § 504 (17 U.S.C.A.).

See also Fair use doctrine; Fragmented literal similarity.

To constitute infringement of a patent claim there must be present in the infringing device or combination every element of such claim or its equivalent, so combined as to produce substantially the same result operating in substantially the same way. Montgomery Ward and Co. v. Clair, C.C.A.Mo., 123 F.2d 878, 881. See 35 U.S.C.A. § 100 et seq. See also Contributory infringement.

Infringement of trademark. The unauthorized use, or colorable imitation of the mark already appropriated by another, on goods of a similar class. Northam Warren Corporation v. Universal Cosmetic Co., C.C.A.Ill., 18 F.2d 774, 775. It exists if words or designs used by defendant are identical with or so similar to plaintiff’s that they are likely to cause confusion, or deceive or mislead others. One who affixes the trademark of another to similar articles in such a way that his use of it is liable to cause confusion in the trade, or is calculated to mislead purchasers and induce them to buy infringer’s articles as goods of the other thus depriving the latter of the full benefit of his property. James Heddron’s Sons v. Millsite Steel & Wire Works, C.C.A.Mich., 128 F.2d 6, 8.

See 15 U.S.C.A. § 1051 et seq. See also Likelihood of confusion.

Infringer. One who infringes the rights secured by copyright, patent or trademark holders. See Infringement.

In full. Relating to the whole or full amount; as a receipt in full. Complete; giving all details.

In full life. Continuing in both physical and civil existence; that is, neither actually dead nor civiliter mortuus.

In futuro /in f(y)styurow/. In future; at a future time; the opposite of in presenti.

In generalibus versatur error /in jenaréylabs varséytor éhtr/. Error dwells in general expressions.

In generali passagio /in jenaréylay paséyj(y)low/. In the general passage; that is, on the journey to Palestine with the general company or body of Crusaders. This term was of frequent occurrence in the old law of essoins, as a means of accounting for the absence of the party, and was distinguished from simplex passagium, which meant that he was performing a pilgrimage to the Holy Land alone.

In genere /in jénorj(y)l/. In kind; in the same genus or class; the same in quantity and quality, but not individually the same. For example, laws on the same subject. See In pari materia. In the Roman law, things which may be given or restored in genere are distinguished from such as must be given or restored in specie; that is, identically.

For easement in gross, see Easement.

Ingenuitas /inj3n(y)uwotses/. Lat. Freedom; liberty; the state or condition of one who is free. Also liberty given to a servant by manumission.

Ingenuitas regni /inj3n(y)uwatsés réginay/. In old English law, the freemen, yeomanry, or commonalty of the kingdom. Applied sometimes also to the barons.

Ingenus /injénýuwas/. In Roman law, a person who, immediately that he was born, was a free person. He was opposed to libertinus, or libertus, who, having been born a slave, was afterwards manumitted or made free. It is not the same as the English law term “generous”; which denoted a person not merely free, but of good family. There were no distinctions among ingenui; but among libertini there were (prior to Justinian’s abolition of the distinctions) three varieties, namely: Those of the highest rank, called “Cives Romani”; those of the second rank, called “Latini Juniani”; and those of the lowest rank, called “Dediticii”.

Ingratitude. In Roman law, ingratitude was accounted a sufficient cause for revoking a gift or recalling the liberty of a freedman. Such is also the law of France with respect to the first case. But the English and American law has left the matter entirely to the moral sense. Ungrateful.

In gremio legis /in griym(i)yow liyjas/. In the bosom of the law; in the protection of the law; in abeyance.
Ingress

The act, or right of, entering. Access; entrance.

Ingress, egress, and regress. These words express the right (e.g., of a lessee) to enter, go upon, and return from the lands in question.

Ingressus /ɪnˈgrɛsəs/ɪə/. In English law, an ancient writ of entry, by which the plaintiff or complainant sought an entry into his lands. Abolished in 1833.

Inhabit. One who resides actually and permanently in a given place, and has his domicile there. Ex parte Shaw, 145 U.S. 444, 12 S.Ct. 935, 36 L.Ed. 768.

The words "inhabitant," "citizen," and "resident," as employed in different constitutions to define the qualifications of electors, means substantially the same thing; and, in general, one is an inhabitant, resident, or citizen at the place where he has his domicile or home. But the terms "resident" and "inhabitant" have also been held not synonymous, the latter implying a more fixed and permanent abode than the former, and importing privileges and duties to which a mere resident would not be subject. A corporation can be an inhabitant only in the state of its incorporation. Sperry Products v. Association of American Railroads, C.C.A.N.Y., 132 F.2d 408, 411. See also Domicile; Residence.

Inhabitante. An authority possessed without its being derived from another. A right, ability, or faculty of doing a thing, without receiving that right, ability, or faculty from another. Powers originating from the nature of government or sovereignty, i.e., powers over and beyond those explicitly granted in the Constitution or reasonably to be implied from express grants; e.g., in the foreign policy area, the Executive’s inherent powers have been held to confer authority upon the President to settle the claims of American nationals against a foreign state as part of a diplomatic agreement. Charles T. Main Int’l, Inc. v. Khuzestan Water & Power Auth., C.A.Mass., 651 F.2d 800, 809-10. See also Power.

Inherent powers /ɪnˈhɛrənt pəˈwɔːr/. An authority possessed without its being derived from another. A right, ability, or faculty of doing a thing, without receiving that right, ability, or faculty from another. Powers originating from the nature of government or sovereignty, i.e., powers over and beyond those explicitly granted in the Constitution or reasonably to be implied from express grants; e.g., in the foreign policy area, the Executive’s inherent powers have been held to confer authority upon the President to settle the claims of American nationals against a foreign state as part of a diplomatic agreement. Charles T. Main Int’l, Inc. v. Khuzestan Water & Power Auth., C.A.Mass., 651 F.2d 800, 809-10. See also Power.

Inherent power of court. The “inherent power” of a court is that which is necessary for the proper and complete administration of justice and such power is resident in all courts of superior jurisdiction and essential to their existence; e.g., sentencing and contempt powers. People v. Cirillo, 100 Misc.2d 527, 419 N.Y.S.2d 820, 824; power to enjoin vexatious litigation, In re Martin–Trigona v. Lavien, et al., C.A.Conn., 737 F.2d 1254.

Inherent right. One which abides in a person and is not given from something or someone outside itself. A right which a person has because he is a person. See Inalienable rights.

Inherent powers of court. The "inherent power" of a court is that which is necessary for the proper and complete administration of justice and such power is resident in all courts of superior jurisdiction and essential to their existence; e.g., sentencing and contempt powers. People v. Cirillo, 100 Misc.2d 527, 419 N.Y.S.2d 820, 824; power to enjoin vexatious litigation, In re Martin-Trigona v. Lavien, et al., C.A.Conn., 737 F.2d 1254.

Inherent right. One which abides in a person and is not given from something or someone outside itself. A right which a person has because he is a person. See Inalienable rights.

Inheretrix /ɪnˈhɛrətrɪks/. The old term for "heirress".

Inherit /ɪnˈhɛrɪt/. To take or receive by inheritance; to take by descent as a matter of law as heir on death of ancestor; though this item has also come to mean to receive by devise (i.e., by will). Acquisition of property by descent and distribution. The word is also used in its popular sense as the equivalent of to take or receive. See also Descent; inheritance.

Inheritable blood. Blood which has the purity (freedom from attainder) and legitimacy necessary to give its possessor the character of a lawful heir. That which is capable of being the medium for the transmission of an inheritance.

Inheritance /inhéhradans/. That which is inherited or to be inherited. Property which descends to heir on the intestate death of another. An estate or property which a person has by descent, as heir to another, or which he may transmit to another, as his heir. See Bequest; Descent; Heirs; Inherit; Legacy.

Civil law. The succession of the heir to all the rights and property of the estate-leaver. It is either testamentary, where the heir is created by will, or ab intestato, where it arises merely by operation of law.

Inheritance tax. Tax imposed in some states upon the privilege of receiving property from a decedent at death as contrasted with an estate tax which is imposed on the privilege of transmitting property at death. A tax on the transfer or passing of estates or property by legacy, devise, or intestate succession; not a tax on the property itself, but on the right to acquire it by descent or testamentary gift. Compare Estate tax.

Inhibition /in(h)abíshan/. Restraining or holding back.

In Ecclesiastical law, a writ issuing from a superior ecclesiastical court, forbidding an inferior judge to proceed further in a cause pending before him. In this sense it is closely analogous to the writ of prohibition at common law. Also the writ of a bishop or ecclesiastical judge that a clergyman shall cease from taking any duty.

In old English law, the name of a writ which forbids a judge from further proceeding in a cause pending before him; it was in the nature of a prohibition.

In the civil law, a prohibition which the law makes or a judge ordains to an individual. See Immigration.

In his enim quae sunt favorabilia animae, quamvis sunt damnosa rebus, fiat aliquando extensio statuti /in his énam kwaí sint fêuyvavéb(i)yâ ànàmñi, kwéméva sint àmñowà ésbyà, fáyay dislakwéndow àksténshiyow stàtyúwaty/ /in iis quae sunt merge facultatis nunquam praecribatar/. In things that are favorable to the spirit, though injurious to property, an extension of the statute should sometimes be made.

In his quæ de jure communi omnibus conceduntur, consuetudo aliquæus patræc vel loci non est allegranda /in his kwi diy jùry kàmuyàwày ömnàbàs könsdístänt, könswat(y)ùyndow åksténshiyow stàtyúwaty/. In those things which by common right are conceded to all, the custom of a particular district or place is not to be alleged.

In hoc /in hók/ /in hok/. In this; in respect to this.

Inhonestus /ihnánéstos/. In old English law, unseemly; not in due order.

Inhuman treatment. In the law of divorce, such mental or physical cruelty or severity as endangers the life or health of the party to whom it is addressed, or creates a well-founded apprehension of such danger. The phrase commonly employed in statutes is "cruel and inhuman treatment," from which it may be inferred that "inhumanity" is an extreme or aggravated "cruelty." Such treatment commonly constitutes a ground for divorce. See also Cruel and inhuman treatment; Cruelty; Mental cruelty.

In íisdem terminis /in iyáysdam tármanas/. In the same terms.

In íis quæ sunt mere facultatis nunquam praecribatur /in áyas kwi sint miríy fékñaltéyats nákñwam prækribíyánt/. Prescription does not run against a mere power or faculty to act.

In individuo /in ándavid(y)uwów/ /in individuo/. In the distinct, individual, or individual form; in specie.

In infinitum /in infánýtam/. Infinitely; indefinitely. Imports indefinite succession or continuance.

In initio /in anish(i)yow/. In or at the beginning. In initio litis, at the beginning, or in the first stage of the suit.

In integrum /in antégram/. To the original or former state.

In invidiam /in anvid(i)yam/. To excite a prejudice.

In invitum /in anvytám/. Against an unwilling party; against one not assenting. A term applied to proceedings against an adverse party, to which he does not consent.

In ipsis faucibus /in ípsas fósbas/. In the very throat or entrance. In ípsis faucibus of a port, actually entering a port.

Iniquissima pax est anteponenda justissimo bello /inikwisíma pák ëst àntéponénda jástisamòw bòwów/. The most unjust peace is to be preferred to the justest war.

Iniquum est alios permettere, allos inhibere mercatum /iníkwam est ëy(i)yows permiteriy, ëy(i)yows in(h)abíriy märkátüyamam/. It is inequitable to permit some to trade and to prohibit others.

Iniquum est aliquem rei sui esse judicem /aníkwam ëst ålókswam riyyay s(y)yíway éssi jüwàdam/. It is wrong for a man to be a judge in his own cause.

Iniquum est ingenuis hominibus non esse liberam rerum suarum alienationem /aníkwam ëst ínjen-ywas haminabas nòn éssi liberam riyam s(y)ywéram eylíyéyshíyównamam/. It is unjust that freemen should not have the free disposal of their own property.

Initial. That which begins or stands at the beginning. The first letter of a person's name.

Initial appearance. After arrest, the first appearance of the accused before a judge or magistrate. See Arraignment; Preliminary hearing.

Initial carrier. In the law of bailments, the carrier who first receives the goods and begins the process of their transportation, afterwards delivering them to another carrier for the further prosecution or completion of their journey. But it has also been defined as the one contracting with the shipper, and not necessarily the one whose line constitutes the first link in transportation.

Initial determination. With respect to social security benefit claims, refers to first determination of agency of claimants' application for benefits. Several levels of appeal are provided for from an initial claim denial. 42 U.S.C.A. § 405(b).

Initiate. Commence; start; originate; introduce; inchoate. Cursus initiate is the interest which a husband has in the wife's lands after a child is born who may inherit, but before the wife dies. To propose for approval—as schedule of rates. Idaho Power Co. v. Thompson, D.C. Idaho, 19 F.2d 547, 579.

Initiative. An electoral process whereby designated percentages of the electorate may initiate legislative or constitutional changes through the filing of formal petitions to be acted on by the legislature or the total electorate. The power of the people to propose bills and laws, and to enact or reject them at the polls, independent of legislative assembly. Hughes v. Bryan, Okl., 425 P.2d 952, 954. Not all state constitutions provide for initiative. See also Referendum.

In itinere /in aytinariy/. In eyre; on a journey or circuit. In old English law, the justices in itinere (or in eyre) were those who made a circuit through the kingdom once in seven years for the purposes of trying causes. In course of transportation; on the way; not delivered to the vendee. In this sense the phrase is equivalent to "in transitu."

In judgment. In a court of justice; in a seat of judgment.

In judiciis, minori etati succurratur /in jadis(h)iyas, manoray steytay sakaratar/. In courts or judicial proceedings, infancy is aided or favored.

In judicio /in jadis(h)iyow/. In Roman law, in the course of an actual trial; before a judge (judex). A cause, during its preparatory stages, conducted before the pretor, was said to be in jure; in its second stage, after it had been sent to a judex for trial, it was said to be in judicio.

In judicio non creditur nisi juratis /in jadis(h)iyow non krëdatar näysay jarëytas/. In a trial, credence is given only to those who are sworn.

Injunction. A court order prohibiting someone from doing some specified act or commanding someone to undo some wrong or injury. A prohibitive, equitable remedy issued or granted by a court at the suit of a party complainant, directed to a party defendant in the action, or to a party made a defendant for that purpose, forbidding the latter from doing some act which he is threatening or attempting to commit, or restraining him in the continuance thereof, such act being unjust and inequitable, injurious to the plaintiff, and not such as can be adequately redressed by an action at law. A judicial process operating in personam, and requiring person to whom it is directed to do or refrain from doing a particular thing. Gainsburg v. Dodge, 193 Ark. 475, 101 S.W.2d 178, 180. Generally, it is a preventive and protective remedy, aimed at future acts, and is not intended to redress past wrongs. Snyder v. Sullivan, Colo., 705 P.2d 510, 513. Fed.R.Civ. P. 65. See also Temporary restraining order.

Interlocutory injunction. Interlocutory injunctions are those issued at any time during the pendency of the litigation for the short-term purpose of preventing irreparable injury to the petitioner prior to the time that the court will be in a position to either grant or deny permanent relief on the merits. In accordance with their purpose, interlocutory injunctions are limited in duration to some specified length of time, or at the very outside, to the time of conclusion of the case on the merits. Within the category of interlocutory injunctions there are two distinct types which must be considered individually. The first is generally referred to as a preliminary injunction, and includes any interlocutory injunction granted after the respondent has been given notice and the opportunity to participate in a hearing on whether or not that injunction should issue. The second is generally referred to as a temporary restraining order, and differs from a preliminary injunction primarily in that it is issued ex parte, with no notice or opportunity to be heard granted to the respondent. Temporary restraining orders supply the need for relief in those situations in which the petitioner will suffer irreparable injury if relief is not granted immediately, and time simply does not permit either the delivery of notice or the holding of a hearing. Fed.R.Civ. P. 65. See also Injunction (Irreparable injury); Temporary restraining order.

Mandatory injunction. One which (1) commands the defendant to do some positive act or particular thing; (2) prohibits him from refusing (or persisting in a refusal) to do or permit some act to which the plaintiff has a legal right; or (3) restrains the defendant from permitting his previous wrongful act to continue operative, thus virtually compelling him to undo it.

Permanent injunction. One intended to remain in force until the final termination of the particular suit.

Perpetual injunction. An injunction which finally disposes of the suit, and is indefinite in point of time.

Preliminary injunction. An injunction granted at the institution of a suit, to restrain the defendant from doing or continuing some act, the right to which is in Injure. To violate the legal right of another or inflict an actionable wrong. To do harm to, damage, or impair. To hurt or wound, as the person; to impair the soundness of, as health; to damage. Ziolkowski v. Continental Casualty Co., 284 Ill.App. 505, 1 N.E.2d 410, 412. As applied to a building, "injure" means to materially impair or destroy any part of the existing structure. See Injurious Exposure. Such exposure as will render em¬ployer liable for occupational disease of employee, is concentration of toxic material which would be sufficient to cause disease in event of prolonged exposure to such concentration regardless of length of exposure re¬quired actually to cause the disease. Union Carbide Corp. v. Industrial Commission, 196 Colo. 56, 581 P.2d 734, 736. See also Occupational disease.

Injurious Falsehood. In law of slander and libel, a defamation which does actual damage. See Libel; Slander.

Injurious Words /anjūriyas wárds/. Slander, or libelous words. See Libel; Slander.

Injury. Any wrong or damage done to another, either in his person, rights, reputation, or property. The invasion of any legally protected interest of another. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 7.

Absolute Injuries. Injuries to those rights which a person possesses as being a member of society.

Accidental Injury. A bodily injury by accident. Within worker's compensation acts, one which occurs in the course of the employment, unexpectedly, and without the affirmative act or design of the employee; it being something which is unforeseen and not expected by the person to whom it happens. Any injury to an employee in the course of his employment due to any occurrence referable to a definite time, and of the happening of which he can give notice to his employer, regardless of whether the injury is a visible hurt from external force, or disease or infection induced by sudden and castastrophic exposure. Lerner v. Rump Bros., 212 App.Div. 747, 209 N.Y.S. 698, 701. The term is to receive a broad and liberal construction with a view to compensating injured employees where injury resulted through some accidental means, was unexpected and undesigned and may be the result of mere mischance or miscalculation as to effect of voluntary action. It includes an accident causing injury to the physical structure of the body, notwithstanding a natural weakness predisposing to injury. For purposes of workers' com-penstation act, a "pain" can be classified as an "injury," Hernon v. Albuquerque Public Schools, App., 92 N.M.
635, 593 P.2d 470, 475; as can mental ailments or nervous conditions directly resulting from physical injury, Campbell v. Kiser Corp. & Diecast, 137 Ind.App. 366, 208 N.E.2d 727, 730. The words indicate, not so much the existence of an accident, but rather the idea that the injury was unexpected or unintended.

See also Accident; Compensable injury; Continuous injury; Damages; Disability; Great bodily injury; Harm; Loss;
Malicious injury; Pain and suffering; Pecuniary injury.

Bankruptcy law. Willful and malicious conversion is an "injury" within meaning of Bankruptcy Code section stating that individual is not discharged from debt for willful and malicious "injury" by debtor. Bankruptcy Code § 523. In re Holtz, Bkrtcy.N.D.Iowa, 62 B.R. 782, 785.

Bodily injury. Physical pain, illness or any impairment of physical condition. "Serious bodily injury" means bodily injury which creates a substantial risk of death or which causes serious, permanent disfigurement, or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ. Model Penal Code, § 210.0.

Civil injury. Injuries to person or property, resulting from a breach of contract, delict, or criminal offense, which may be redressed by means of a civil action. An infringement or privation of the civil rights which belong to individuals considered as individuals.

Injury in fact. Such as is required to give a plaintiff standing to sue means concrete and certain harm and, to warrant granting of standing, there must also be reason to think that the harm can be redressed by relief the court can grant. National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n Irrecoverable injury. This phrase does not mean such an injury as is beyond the possibility of repair, or beyond possible compensation in damages, or necessarily great damage, but includes an injury, whether great or small, which ought not to be submitted to, on the one hand, or inflicted, on the other; and which, because it is so large or so small, or is of such constant and frequent occurrence, or because no certain pecuniary standard exists for the measurement of damages, cannot receive reasonable redress in a court of law. Wrongs of a repeated and continuing character, or which occasion damages that are estimated only by conjecture, and not by any accurate standard, are included. The remedy for such is commonly in the nature of injunctive relief. "Irreparable injury" justifying an injunction is that which cannot be adequately compensated in damages or for which damages cannot be compensable in money. Caffery v.

Powell, La.App., 320 So.2d 223, 226. Contrast Irrepara-bale injury, below. See Injunction; Temporary restraining order.

Permanent injury. An injury that, according to every reasonable probability, will continue throughout the remainder of one's life.

Personal injury. In a narrow sense, a hurt or damage done to a man's person, such as a cut or bruise, a broken limb, or the like, as distinguished from an injury to his property or his reputation. The phrase is chiefly used in this connection with actions of tort for negligence and under worker's compensation statutes. But the term is also used (usually in statutes) in a much wider sense, and as including any injury which is an invasion of personal rights, and in this signification it may include such injuries to the person as libel or slander, criminal conversation, malicious prosecution, false imprisonment, and mental suffering. Gray v. Wallace, 319 S.W.2d 582.

In worker's compensation acts, "personal injury" means any harm or damage to the health of an employee, however caused, whether by accident, disease, or otherwise, which arises in the course of and out of his employment, and incapacitates him in whole or in part.
The occurrence of disability or impairment. Such includes the aggravation of a preexisting injury.

Private injuries. Infringements of the private or civil rights belonging to individuals considered as individuals.

Public injuries. Breaches and violations of rights and duties which affect the whole community as a community.

Real injury. A real injury is infliction by any act by which a person's honor or dignity is affected.

Relative injuries. Injuries to those rights which a person possesses in relation to the person who is immediately affected by the wrongful act done.

Reparable injury. The general principle is that an injury, the damage from which is merely in the nature of pecuniary loss, and can be exactly and fully repaired by compensation in money, is a "reparable injury". Contrast Irrecoverable injury, above.

Unknown injury rule. Under this rule, release of claims for personal injuries may be avoided on the ground of mutual mistake if parties at the time of signing the agreement were mistaken as to the existence of injury, as opposed to unknown consequences of known injuries.
LaFleur v. C.C. Pierce Co., Inc., et al., 398 Mass. 254, 496
N.E.2d 827.

Verbal injury. See Libel; Slander.

Violation of constitutional rights. "Injury" within meaning of state Tort Claims Act includes damage caued by violation of constitutional rights. Lloyd v.
Injustice. The withholding or denial of justice. In law, almost invariably applied to the act, fault, or omission of a court, as distinguished from that of an individual. "Fraud" is deception practiced by the party; "injustice" is the fault or error of the court. They are not equivalent words in substance, or in a statute authorizing a new trial on a showing of fraud or injustice. Fraud is always the result of contrivance and deception; injustice may be done by the negligence, mistake, or omission of the court itself. Silvey v. U. S., 7 Ct.Cl. 305, 324.

Inland. Within a country, state or territory; within the interior part of a land mass.
In old English law, inland was used for the demesne (q.v.) of a manor; that part which lay next or most convenient for the lord's mansion-house, as within the view thereof, and which, therefore, he kept in his own hands for support of his family and for hospitality; in distinction from outland or utland, which was the portion let out to tenants.

Inland bill of exchange. A bill of which both the drawer and drawee reside within the same state or country. Otherwise called a "domestic bill," and distinguished from a "foreign bill." See Bill.

Inland marine insurance. See Insurance.

Inland navigation. Within the meaning of the legislation of congress upon the subject, this phrase means navigation upon inland waters (q.v.).

Inland trade. Trade wholly carried on at home; as distinguished from foreign commerce. See Commerce.

Inland waters. Such waters as canals, lakes, rivers, watercourses, inlets and bays, within, or partly within, the United States, exclusive of the open sea, though the water in question may open or empty into the ocean.

In United States v. Steam Vessels of War, 106 U.S. 607, 1 S.Ct. 539, 27 L.Ed. 286.

Inlantal, inlantale /inlæntal, inlæntélyi/. Demesne or inland, opposed to delantal, or land tenanted.

Innavigability. In insurance law, the condition of being in navigable (q.v.). The term is also applied to the condition of streams which are not large enough or deep enough, or are otherwise unsuited, for navigation.

Innavigable. As applied to streams, not capable of or suitable for navigation; impassable by ships or vessels. As applied to vessels in the law of marine insurance, it means unfit for navigation; so damaged by misadventures at sea as to be no longer capable of making a voyage. Compare Navigable waters.

Inner barrister. A serjeant or king's counsel, in England, who is admitted to plead within the bar. See also, Outer Bar.

Innings. In old records, lands recovered from the sea by draining and banking.

Innkeeper. One who keeps an inn, hotel, motel or house for the lodging and entertainment of travelers.

Innocence. The absence of guilt. See also Presumption of innocence.

Innocent. Free from guilt; acting in good faith and without knowledge of incriminatory circumstances, or of defects or objections. See Not guilty.

Innocent agent. In criminal law, one who, being ignorant of any unlawful intent on the part of his principal, is merely the instrument of the guilty party in committing an offense; one who does an unlawful act at the solicitation or request of another, but who, from defect of understanding or ignorance of the inculpatory facts, incurs no legal guilt.

Innocent construction rule. In libel law, this rule requires that allegedly libelous words that are capable of being read innocently must be so read and declared nonactionable as matter of law. Belmonte v. Rubin, 68 Ill.App.3d 700, 25 Ill.Dec. 430, 386 N.E.2d 904.

Innocent conveyances. A technical term of the old English law of conveyancing, used to designate such conveyances as may be made by a leasehold tenant without working a forfeiture. These are said to be lease and re-lease, bargain and sale, and, in case of a life-tenant, a covenant to stand seised.

Innocent party. Person who did not consciously or intentionally participate in event, transaction, etc.

Innocent purchaser. One who, by an honest contract or agreement, purchases property or acquires an interest therein, without knowledge, or means of knowledge sufficient to charge him in law with knowledge, of any infirmity in the title of the seller. Treit v. Oregon Auto. Ins. Co., 262 Or. 549, 499 P.2d 335, 336. Person is "innocent purchaser" when he purchases without notice, actual or constructive, of any infirmity and pays valuable consideration and acts in good faith. Morehead v. Harris, 262 N.C. 330, 137 S.E.2d 174, 182, 185. See also Good faith purchaser.

Innocent trespass. A trespass to land, committed, not recklessly, but through inadvertence or mistake, or in good faith, under an honest belief that the trespasser was acting within his legal rights.

Innocent trespasser. One who enters another's land unlawfully, but inadvertently or unintentionally, or in the honest, reasonable belief of his own right so to do,

In paper. In old English law, a term formerly applied to the proceedings in a cause before the record was made up. Probably from the circumstance of the record being always on parchment. The opposite of "on record."

In pari causa /in páray kóza/"peray"/. In equal fault or guilt; equally culpable or criminal. A common law defense that prohibited a plaintiff from suing if it had been a participant in the contract or conspiracy that led to the violation of law at issue. As a general rule, the defense of in pari delicto is not recognized in the anti-trust laws. See also Equitable estoppel.

In pari causa possessor potior haberi debet /in páray pówsh(i)yár habiray debst/. In an equal cause he who has the possession should have the preferred title.

In pari delicto /in páray daliktw/"peray"/. In equal fault; equally culpable or criminal; in a case of equal fault or guilt. A person who is in pari delicto with another differs from a particeps criminis with [defense of] in pari delicto to the violation of law at issue. As a general rule, the defense that prohibited a plaintiff from suing if it had always included the former, but the latter does not always include the former.

In pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis [defendant] /in páray daliktw pówsh(i)yár est kandish(i)yow póssédentas/"defendéntas". In a case of equal or mutual fault [between two parties] the condition of the party in possession [or defending] is the better one. Where each party is equally in fault, the law favors him who is actually in possession. Where the fault is mutual, the law will leave the case as it finds it.

In pari materia /in páray m3tir(i)y3/"mátr(a)s". Upon the same matter or subject. Statutes "in pari materia" are those relating to the same person or thing or having a common purpose. Undercofer v. L.C. Robinson & Sons, Inc., 111 Ga.App. 411, 141 S.E.2d 847, 849. This rule of statutory construction, that statutes which relate to the same subject matter should be read, construed and applied together so that the legislature's intention can be gathered from the whole of the enactments, applies only when the particular statute is ambiguous. Kimes v. Bechtold, W.Va., 342 S.E.2d 147, 150.

In pattiendo /in páshiyéndow/"pátiásndéndow". In suffering, permitting, or allowing. See also Jurisdiction in personam.

In pectore judicis /in péktةriy júwdásas/. In the breast of the judge. A phrase applied to a judgment.

In pejorem partem /in pájorám pártm/"paítém". In the worst part; on the worst side.

In peney and outpeny /inpenyi ēnd awtpenyi/"in peney and out peny". In old English law, a customary payment of a penny on entering into and going out of a tenancy (pro eixtu de tenura, et pro ingressu).

In perpetuum rei memoriam /in párpe'tiyuwsam riýay mámōriyam/"in perpetuam rei memoriam". In perpetual memory of a matter; for preserving a record of a matter. Applied to depositions taken in order to preserve the testimony of the deponent.

In perpetuity /in pár'pe'tyúwatiy"/ Endless duration; lasting; forever.

In perpetuum rei testimonium /in párpe'tiyuwsam riýay téstamóniwsam/"in perpetuum testimonium of a matter; for the purpose of declaring and settling a thing forever.

In person. A party, plaintiff or defendant, who sues out a complaint, writ or other process, or appears to conduct his case in court himself, instead of through a solicitor or counsel, is said to act and appear in person. See Pro se.

In personam /in parsównm/. Against the person. Action seeking judgment against a person involving his personal rights and based on jurisdiction of his person, as distinguished from a judgment against property (i.e. in rem). Type of jurisdiction or power which a court may acquire over the defendant himself in contrast to jurisdiction over his property. See also In personam jurisdiction; In rem; Jurisdiction in personam.

Inquest of office. In old English practice, an inquiry made by the king's (or the queen's) officer, his sheriff, coroner, or escheator, virtute officii, or by writ sent to them for that purpose, or by commissioners specially appointed, concerning any matter that entitles the king to the possession of lands or tenements, goods or chattels; as to inquire whether the king's tenant for life died seised, whereby the reversion accrues to the king; whether A., who held immediately of the crown, died without heir, in which case the lands belong to the king by escheat; whether B. be attainted of treason, whereby his estate is forfeited to the crown; whether C., who has purchased land, be an alien, which is another cause of forfeiture, etc. 3 Bl.Comm. 258. These inquests of office were most frequent in practice during the continuance of the military tenures; and were devised by law as an authentic means to give the king his right by solemn matter of record. Id. 258, 259. Sometimes simply termed "office," as in the phrase "office found" (q.v.). Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. Mingus, 165 U.S. 413, 17 S.Ct. 348, 41 L.Ed. 770.

Inquisitorial /inkwizishan/. An inquiry or inquest; parántia. In old English law, an inquisitio or inquest. A common law writ (now obsolete), which admits the jurisdiction, as an attorney is an officer of the court, and he is presumed to plead after having obtained leave, which admits the jurisdiction, as an attorney is an officer of the court, and he is presumed to plead after having obtained leave, which admits the jurisdiction. See Pro se.

Inquiry court. See Court of inquiry; Inquest.

Inquiry notice. Information which is charged to a person where a duty is imposed upon him by law to make a reasonable investigation; the information which such investigation would have revealed is imputed to such person.

Inquiry, writ of. A common law writ (now obsolete), sued out by a plaintiff in a case where the defendant had let the proceedings go by default, and an interlocutory judgment had been given for damages generally, where the damages did not admit of calculation. It issued to the sheriff of the county in which the plaintiff is favored. See Pro se.

Inquisition /inkwizishan/. In old English law, an inquisition or inquest. Inquisitio post mortem, an inquiry after death. An inquest of office held, during the continuance of the military tenures, upon the death of every one of the king's tenants, to inquire of what lands he died seised, who was his heir, and of what age, in order to entitle the king to his marriage, wardship, relief, primer seisin, or other advantages, as the circumstances of the case might turn out. 3 Bl.Comm. 258. Inquisitio patriae, the inquisition of the country; the ordinary jury, as distinguished from the grand assise.

Inquisition /inkwizishan/. An inquiry or inquest; particularly, an investigation of certain facts made by a sheriff, together with a jury impaneled by him for the Inquisition after death. See Inquest; Inquisitio.

Inquisitor /ənkwɪzɪtər/. A designation of sheriffs, coroners super visum corporis, and the like, who have power to inquire into certain matters.

In Ecclesiastical law, the name of an officer who is authorized to inquire into heresies, and the like, and to punish them. A judge.

In quo quis delinquit, in eo de jure est puniendus /in kwó kwísw dálígkwat, in iyow di júry ést pyúwni-yéndas/. In whatever thing one offends, in that is he rightfully to be punished. The punishment shall have relation to the nature of the offense.

In re /in ríy/. In the affair; in the matter of; concerning; regarding. This is the usual method of entitling a judicial proceeding in which there are not adversary parties, but merely some res concerning which judicial action is to be taken, such as a bankrupt’s estate, an estate in the probate court, a proposed public highway, etc. It is also sometimes used as a designation of a proceeding where one party makes an application on his own behalf, but such proceedings are more usually entitled “Ex parte ______”

In rebus /in ríybas/. (Lat.) In things, cases, or matters.

In rebus manifestis, errat qui auctoritates legum allegat; quia perspicuca vera non sunt probanda /in ríybas mánfájelas, ehrot kwáy októrésteytiz líggam álagat; kwáyas persplkyuwa vira nón sánt prebbánda/, In clear cases, he mistakes who cites legal authorities; for obvious truths are not to be proved. Applied to cases too plain to require the support of authority; “because,” says the report, “he who endeavours to prove them ob¬scures them.”

In rebus quæ sunt favorabilia animæ, quamvis sunt damnosa rebus, fiat aliquando extensio statutī /in ríybas kwí swánt féyvarabilíyá ánmámi, kwémáswá sánt dmánowsá ríybas, fáyát álakwándow áksténshíyíyáw státywátyw/. In things that are favorable to the spirit, though injurious to things, an extension of a statute should sometimes be made.

In re communi melior est conditio prohibentis /in ríy kamyúwnay miyíliyá ést kándishíyíyáw prów-habéntas/. In common property the condition of the one prohibiting is the better. In other words, either co-owner has a right of veto against the acts of the other.

In re communi potior est conditio prohibentis /in ríy kamyúwnay pówshíyíyá ést kándishíyíyáw prów-habéntas/. In a partnership the condition of one who forbids is the more favorable.

In re dubia, benigniorem interpretationem sequi, non minus justius est quam tutius /in ríy diyúwbiya, benigniýóram antárprétayshíyíyánam sékway, nón máynas jístiýíyá ést kwám týwshíyíyáas/, In a doubtful matter, to follow the more liberal interpretation is not less the juster than the safer course.

In re dubia, magis infiltratio quam affirmatio intelligenda /in ríy diyúwbiya, méyjas anfíshíyéyshíyíyáw kwám áxfarméyshíyíyáw antéléjénda/, In a doubtful matter, the denial or negative is to be understood [or regarded], rather than the affirmative.

In regard to /in ragárd tůw/. Concerning; relating to; in respect of; with respect to; about. Hart v. Hart, 181 Iowa 527, 164 N.W. 849, 850.

In re lupanari, testes lupanares admittertur /in ríy l(y)úwpanéray, téstíyíy l(y)úwpanéryáx ãdmatténtar/, In a matter concerning a brothel, prostitutes are admitted as witnesses.

In rem /in rém/. A technical term used to designate proceedings or actions instituted against the thing, in contradistinction to personal actions, which are said to be in personam.

“In rem” proceedings encompass any action brought against person in which essential purpose of suit is to determine title to or to affect interests in specific property located within territory over which court has jurisdiction. ReMine ex rel. Liley v. District Court for City and County of Denver, Colo., 709 P.2d 1379, 1382. It is true that, in a strict sense, a proceeding in rem is one taken directly against property, and has for its object the disposition of property, without reference to the title of individual claimants; but, in a larger and more general sense, the terms are applied to actions between parties, where the direct object is to reach and dispose of property owned by them, or of some interest therein. Such are cases commenced by attachment against the property of debtors, or instituted to partition real estate, foreclose a mortgage, or enforce a lien. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 714, 24 L.Ed. 565. In the strict sense of the term, a proceeding “in rem” is one which is taken directly against property or one which is brought to enforce a right in the thing itself.

Actions in which the court is required to have control of the thing or object and in which an adjudication is made as to the object which binds the whole world and not simply the interests of the parties to the proceeding. Flesch v. Circle City Excavating & Rental Corp., 137 Ind.App. 695, 210 N.E.2d 865.

Insane delusion. An "insane delusion" is a conception of a disordered mind which imagines facts to exist of which there is no evidence and belief in which is adhered to against all evidence and argument to contrary, and which cannot be accounted for on any reasonable hypothesis. In re Nigro's Estate, 243 Cal.App.2d 152, 52 Cal.Rptr. 128, 133.

Insanity. The term is a social and legal term rather than a medical one, and indicates a condition which renders the affected person unfit to enjoy liberty of action because of the unreliability of his behavior with concomitant danger to himself and others. The term is more or less synonymous with mental illness or psychosis. In law, the term is used to denote that degree of mental illness which negates the individual's legal responsibility or capacity.

Insanity as Defense to Crime

There are various tests used by the courts to determine criminal responsibility, or lack thereof, of a defendant who asserts the defense that he or she was insane at the time of the crime. A frequently used test as provided in Section 4.01 of the Model Penal Code is as follows: "A person is not responsible for criminal conduct if at the time of such conduct as a result of mental disease or defect he lacks substantial capacity either to appreciate the criminality (wrongfulness) of his conduct or to conform his conduct to the requirements of law." Under this test there must be a sufficient causal link between the defendant's mental disease or defect and his inability to control his behavior. U.S. v. Jackson, 553 F.2d 109, 113, 179 U.S.App.D.C. 375. This test, as defined by the American Law Institute, has been adopted (sometimes with slight modifications) by a number of states and also in most federal courts. See 18 U.S.C.A. § 4241.

If a defendant intends to rely upon the defense of insanity at the time of the alleged crime, he is required to notify the attorney for the government of such intention. Fed.R.Crim.P. 12.2.; 18 U.S.C.A. § 4242.

It is an affirmative defense to a prosecution under any Federal statute that, at the time of the commission of the acts constituting the offense, the defendant, as a result of a severe mental disease or defect, was unable to appreciate the nature and quality or the wrongfulness of his acts. Mental disease or defect does not otherwise constitute a defense. 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 17(a), 4241.

In certain states, once the insanity defense is made the burden is on the prosecution to prove that the defendant is mentally competent, while in others the burden is on the defense to prove the defendant is insane. In federal criminal cases, the defendant has the burden of proving the defense of insanity by clear and convincing evidence. 18 U.S.C.A. § 17.

See also Automaticism; Diminished responsibility doctrine; Durham rule; Irresistible impulse; M'Naghten Rule and Right and wrong test, for various other tests used by courts to determine criminal responsibility of defendant who asserts insanity defense. See also Competency; Insanity delusion; Lucid interval; Lunacy; Melancholia; Sanity hearing; Substantial capacity test; Uncontrollable impulse.

Insanity as Affecting Capacity

Capacity to make a will includes an intelligent understanding of the testator's property, its extent and items, and of the nature of the act he is about to perform, together with a clear understanding and purpose as to the manner of its distribution and the persons who are to receive it. Lacking these, the testator is not mentally competent. The presence of insanity delusions is not inconsistent with testamentary capacity, if they are of such a nature that they cannot reasonably be supposed to have affected the dispositions made by the will; and the same is true of the various forms of monomania and of all kinds of eccentricity and personal idiosyncrasy. But imbecility, senile dementia, and all forms of systematized mania which affect the understanding and judgment generally disable the person from making a valid will. To constitute "senile dementia," incapacitating one to make a will, there must be such a failure of the mind as to deprive the testator of intelligent action. See also Capacity.

As a ground for voiding or annulling a contract or conveyance, insanity does not mean a total deprivation of reason, but an inability, from defect of perception, memory, and judgment, to do the act in question or to understand its nature and consequences. The insanity must have entered into and induced the particular contract or conveyance; it must appear that it was not the act of the free and untrammeled mind, and that on account of the diseased condition of the mind the person entered into a contract or made a conveyance which he would not have made if he had been in the possession of his reason.

Most state statutes provide for annulment of a marriage because of insanity. Insanity sufficient to justify the annulment of a marriage means such a want of understanding at the time of the marriage as to render the party incapable of assenting to the contract of marriage. Also, under most state statutes, insanity, if sufficient in degree and/or duration, constitutes a ground for divorce. In general, the same degree of mental capacity which enables a person to make a valid deed or will is sufficient to enable him to marry.

As a ground for restraining the personal liberty of the person (i.e. commitment), it may be said in general that the form of insanity from which he suffers should be such as to make his going at large a source of danger to himself or to others, though this matter is largely regulated by statute, and in many places the law permits the commitment of persons whose insanity does not manifest itself in homicidal or other destructive forms of mania, but who are incapable of caring for themselves and their property or who are simply fit subjects for treatment in hospitals and other institutions especially designed for the care of such patients. See Commitment.

To constitute insanity such as will authorize the appointment of a guardian or conservator, there must be such a deprivation of reason and judgment as to render him incapable of understanding and acting with discretion in the ordinary affairs of life; a want of sufficient mental capacity to transact ordinary business and to take care of and manage his property and affairs.

Insanity as a plea or proceeding to avoid the effect of the statute of limitations means practically the same thing as in relation to the appointment of a guardian. On the one hand, it does not require a total deprivation of reason or absence of understanding. On the other hand, it does not include mere weakness of mind short of imbecility. It means such a degree of derangement as renders the subject incapable of understanding the nature of the particular affair and his rights and remedies in regard to it and incapable of taking discreet and intelligent action. The time of sanity required in order to allow the statute to begin to run is such as will enable the party to examine his affairs and institute an action, and is for the jury.

There are a few other legal rights or relations into which the question of insanity enters, such as the capacity of a witness or of a voter; but they are governed by the same general principles. The test is capacity to understand and appreciate the nature of the particular act and to exercise intelligence in its performance. A witness must understand the nature and purpose of an oath and have enough intelligence and memory to relate accurately the facts within his knowledge. So a voter must understand the nature of the act to be performed and be able to make an intelligent choice of candidates. In either case, eccentricity, feeble-mindedness not amounting to imbecility, or insane delusions which do not affect the matter in hand, do not disqualify. District of Columbia v. Armes, 107 U.S. 519, 2 S.Ct. 840, 27 L.Ed. 618.

Insider. With respect to federal regulation of purchase and sale of securities, refers to anyone who has knowledge of facts not available to the general public (e.g., officers, directors, key employees, relatives). 15 U.S. C.A. § 78p(a). An insider is liable for insider stock trading under section 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and SEC Rule 10b-5 only where he or she fails to disclose material non-public information before trading on it and thus makes secret profits. Dirks v. S.E.C., 463 U.S. 646, 103 S.Ct. 3255, 77 L.Ed.2d 911. In determining whether a person, not a director or officer, is a corporate "insider" who as a purchaser of stock has a duty to disclose material facts unknown to seller, the test is whether he had such a relationship to corporation that he had access to information which should be used only for corporate purposes and not for personal benefit of anyone. Ross v. Licht, D.C.N.Y., 263 F.Supp. 395, 409. See also Insider information; Insider reports; Insider trading; Rule 10b-5; Short swing profits; Tippees.

For purposes of Bankruptcy Code, "insider" is entity or person with sufficiently close relationship with debtor that his conduct is made subject to closer scrutiny than those dealing at arm's length with debtor. In re Acme-Dunham Inc., D.C.Me., 50 B.R. 734, 739; Bankruptcy Code § 101.

Insider information. Information about a company's financial situation that is obtained by insiders (officers, directors, employees, etc.), before the public obtains it. True inside information is usually only known by corporate officials or other "insiders." SEC rules and court decisions restrict stock trading by insiders on the basis of such information. See also Insider; Insider trading; Tippees.

Insider reports. Monthly reports required by Securities and Exchange Commission from directors, officers and stockholders of their transactions in stock of which they own more than 10% of such shares. 15 U.S.C.A. § 78p(a).

Insider trading. Term refers to transactions in shares of publicly held corporations by persons with inside or advance information on which the trading is based. Usually the trader himself is an insider with an employment or other relation of trust and confidence with the corporation. Such transactions must be reported monthly to Securities and Exchange Commission (see Insider reports).

The Supreme Court has established rules governing liability for insider trading under section 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and SEC Rule 10b-5. Two elements for establishing a violation of section 10(b) and Rule 10b-5 by corporate insiders are the existence of a relationship affording access to inside information intended to be available only for a corporate purpose, and the unfairness of allowing a corporate insider to take advantage of that information by trading without disclosure. Chiarella v. United States, 445 U.S. 222, 100 S.Ct. 1108, 63 L.Ed.2d 348; Dirks v. S.E.C., 463 U.S. 646, 103 S.Ct. 3255, 77 L.Ed.2d 911. See Insider.

Insidiatores viarum /insidystóriyz vàyérám/. Lat. Highwaymen; persons who lie in wait in order to commit some felony or other misdemeanor.

Insignia /insigniysis/. Ensigns or arms; distinctive marks; badges; indicia; characteristics.

Insiliarius /insiliyériys/. An evil counsellor.

Insilium /insiliyóym/.. Evil advice or counsel.

In similii materia /in simali matiriiys/. Dealing with the same or a kindred subject-matter.

Insimul /insimul/. Lat. Together; jointly.

Insimul computassent /insimul kömpyutésant/. They accounted together. In common law pleading, the name of the count in assumpsit upon an account stated; it being averred that the parties had settled their accounts together, and defendant engaged to pay plaintiff the balance.
Insimul tenuit /insəməl ténjuwət/. One species of the writ of formedon brought against a stranger by a copar-cener on the possession of the ancestor, etc.

Insinuación /insənuwəˈsjuan/ In Spanish law, the presentation of a public document to a competent judge, in order to obtain his approbation and sanction of the same, and thereby give it judicial authenticity.

Insinuare /insənuwəˈriər/. Lat. In the civil law, to put into; to deposit a writing in court, answering nearly to the modern expression “to file.” Si non mandatum actis insinuatum est, if the power or authority be not deposited among the records of the court. To declare or acknowledge before a judicial officer; to give an act an official form.

Insinuatio /insənuwəˈʃjəroʊ/. Lat. In old English law, information or suggestion. Ex insinuazione, on the information.

Insinuation. To hint or suggest doubt or suspicion.

In the civil law, the transcription of an act on the public registers like our recording of deeds. It was not necessary in any other alienation but that appropriated for the purpose of donation.

Insinuation of a will. In the civil law, the first production of a will, or the leaving it with the registrar, in order to its probate.

In solido /in sóˈlədəʊ/. In the civil law, for the whole;
as a whole. An obligation in solido is one where each of the several obligors is liable for the whole; that is, it is joint and several. Henderson v. Wadsworth, 115 U.S.
264, 6 S.Ct. 40, 29 L.Ed. 377. Possession in solido is exclusive possession. When several persons obligate themselves to the obligee by the terms “in solido,” or use any other expressions which clearly show that they intend that each one shall be separately bound to perform the whole of the obligation, it is called an “obligation in solido” on the part of the obligors.

In solidum /in sóˈlədəm/. For the whole. Si plures sint fiduciarios, quotquot erunt numero, singuli in solidum tenetur, if there be several sureties, however numerous they may be, they are individually bound for the whole debt. In parte sive in solidum, for a part or for the whole.

In solo /in sóˈləʊ/. In the soil or ground. In solo aliero, in another’s ground. In solo proprio, in one’s own ground.

Insolvency. The condition of a person or business that is insolvent; inability or lack of means to pay debts.
Such a relative condition of a person’s or entity’s assets and liabilities that the former, if all made immediately available, would not be sufficient to discharge the latter.
Under bankruptcy law, the condition of a person or firm that is unable to pay debts as they fall due, or in the usual course of trade or business. Financial condition such that businesses’ or person’s debts are greater than aggregate of such debtor’s property at a fair valuation.
American Nat. Bank & Trust Co. of Chicago, Ill. v. Bone,
C.A.Mo., 333 F.2d 984, 987. In general, state insolvency laws have been superseded by the Federal Bankruptcy

“Insolvency” under the Bankruptcy Code is defined in § 101.

“Technical” insolvency is a situation in which a firm is unable to meet its current obligations as they come de, even though the value of its assets may exceed its liabilities.

Under U.C.C., a person is insolvent who either has ceded to pay his debts in the ordinary course of business or cannot pay his debts as they fall due or is insolvent within the meaning of the Federal Bankruptcy Law. U.C.C. § 1–201(23).

Insolvency proceeding. Any proceeding intended to liquidate or rehabilitate the estate of the person involved, including any assignment for the benefit of creditors and any chapter proceeding under federal bankruptcy law. U.C.C. § 1–201(22). See Bankruptcy proceedings.

In specie /in spəˈʃiː/. Specific; specifically.
Thus, to decree performance in specie is to decree specific performance. In kind, in the same or like form.
A thing is said to exist in specie when it retains its existence as a distinct individual of a particular class.

Inspector. A prosecutor or adversary.

Inspection. To examine; scrutinize; investigate; look into; check over; or view for the purpose of ascertaining the quality, authenticity or conditions of an item, product, document, residence, business, etc. Word has broaden meaning than just looking, and means to examine carefully or critically, investigate and test officially, especially a critical investigation or scrutiny. State ex App., 509 S.W.2d 485, 487. See also Freedom of Information Act; In camera inspection; Privacy laws.

Discovery practice. Rights of parties in civil actions to inspect papers, documents, land, etc. of opposing party are governed by Fed.R. Civil P. 26 and 34. Similar rights of prosecutor and defendant in criminal cases are and statutes, “inspection” is sufficiently broad to include testing of evidence, and is not necessarily confined to visual observation but is ordinarily understood to embrace tests and examinations. State ex rel. Remington Arms Co., Inc. v. Powers, Okl., 552 P.2d 1150, 1152. See also Inspection of documents; Jencks Act; Subpoena duces tecum.

Reasonable inspection. As relates to duty of employer to provide employee with proper instrumentalities with which to work, does not mean such an inspection as would necessarily or infallibly disclose a defect if one existed, but only such inspection as reasonably prudent man, in the exercise of ordinary care, would make.

Inspection laws. Laws authorizing and directing the inspection and examination of various kinds of merchandise intended for sale, especially food, with a view to ascertaining its fitness for use, and excluding unwholesome or unmarketable goods from sale that do not conform to standards prescribed by regulations, and directing the appointment of official inspectors for that purpose; e.g., grain or meat inspection laws. Patapsco Guano Co. v. Board of Agriculture, 171 U.S. 345, 18 S.Ct. 862, 43 L.Ed. 191. State and federal inspection laws may also be concerned with employment safety conditions (e.g., Occupational Safety and Health Act (OSHA)); building construction safety (e.g., building ordinances); health conditions of restaurants or food processors; and safety conditions of motor vehicles. See Food and Drug Administration; Occupational Safety and Health Administration.

If a resident refuses permission to a fire, health, building, etc. inspector to inspect the premises, a search warrant will be required. Camara v. Municipal Court of etc. San Francisco, 387 U.S. 523, 87 S.Ct. 1727, 18 L.Ed.2d 930. A warrant is likewise required for inspection of business premises by OSHA inspectors. Marshall v. Barlow's, Inc., 436 U.S. 307, 98 S.Ct. 1816, 56 L.Ed.2d 305.

See also Freedom of Information Act; inspection rights; inspection searches; Privacy laws.

Inspection of documents. This phrase refers to the right of a party, in a civil action, to inspect and make copies of documents which are essential or material to the maintenance of his cause, and which are either in the custody of an officer of the law or in the possession of the adverse party. Fed.R. Civil P. 26, 34 and 37. Such opportunity for inspection in criminal cases is afforded both the prosecutor and defendant under Fed.R.Crim.P. 16. See also Subpoena duces tecum.

Inspection rights. Buyer of goods has right to inspect them before payment or acceptance at any reasonable place and time and in any reasonable manner. U.C.C. § 2-513(1). See also Inspection.

With respect to discovery in civil actions, Fed.R. Civil P. 26 and 34 affords a party the right to inspect documents, records, land, etc. of the other party. Similar rights are afforded the prosecutor and defendant under Fed.R.Crim.P. 16. See also Inspection of documents; Subpoena duces tecum.

Inspection, trial by. A mode of trial formerly in use in England, by which the judges of a court decided a point in dispute, upon the testimony of their own senses, without the intervention of a jury. This took place in cases where the fact upon which issue was taken must, from its nature, be evident to the court from ocular demonstration, or other irrefragable proof; and was adopted for the greater expedition of a cause.

Inspector. The name given to certain officers whose duties are to examine and inspect things over which they have jurisdiction. Officers whose duty it is to examine the quality of certain articles of merchandise, food, weights and measures, working conditions of business, structural soundness of building, etc.; e.g., federal grain or meat inspectors; OSHA inspectors; building inspectors; health inspectors. See also Inspection laws.

Inspector general. Various agencies of the federal government have an office of Inspector General whose primary function is to conduct and supervise audits and investigations relating to programs and operations of the particular agency. 5 U.S.C.A.App.

Inspectorship, deed of. In old English law, an instrument entered into between an insolvent debtor and his creditors, appointing one or more persons to inspect and oversee the winding up of such insolvent's affairs on behalf of the creditors.

Inspeiximus /inspéksamas/. (Lat.) We have seen. A word sometimes used in letters patent, reciting a grant, inspeiximus such former grant, and so reciting it verbatim; it then grants such further privileges as are thought convenient.

Install. To place in a seat, give a place to; to set, place, or instate in an office, rank, or order, etc. To set up or fix in position for use or service.

Installation. The ceremony of inducting or investing with any charge, office, or rank, as the placing a bishop into his see, a dean or prebendary into his stall or seat, or a knight into his order. The act by which an officer is put in public possession of the place he is to fill. The President of the United States, or a governor, is installed into office, by being sworn agreeably to the constitution and laws.

Installment contract. Type of agreement calling for periodic performances and payments. An "installment contract" is one which requires or authorizes the delivery of goods in separate lots to be separately accepted, even though the contract contains a clause "each delivery is a separate contract" or its equivalent. U.C.C. § 2-612.

See Installment land contract; Installment sale; Retail installment contract.

Installment credit. Commercial arrangement in which buyer undertakes to pay in more than one payment and seller agrees to sell on such basis and in which a finance charge may be exacted. Such agreements are common-Installment land contract. Type of contract by which buyer is required to make periodic payments towards purchase price of land and only on the last payment is the seller required to deliver a deed. Also called a “contract for deed” or “long-term land contract.” See also Land contract.

Installment loan. A loan made to be repaid in specified, usually equal, amounts over a certain number of months. The contract specifies the amount and method of payment. Consumer installment loan contracts are subject to disclosure requirements of Truth-in-Lending Act (q.v.). See also Annual percentage rate; Balloon payment; Installment credit; Installment sale.

Installment method. A method of accounting enabling a taxpayer to spread the recognition of gain on the sale of property over the payout period. Under this elective procedure, the seller computes the gross profit percentage from the sale (i.e., the gain divided by the selling price) and applies it to each payment received to arrive at the gain to be recognized. Effective for tax years beginning after 1987, a restriction has been placed on the use of the installment method and dealers in real estate or personal property are not permitted to use the installment method to report gains from the sale of property. I.R.C. § 453.

Installment note. See Installment loan.

Installment plan. Commercial sales arrangement by which goods are sold and buyer pays for them in periodic payments. See also installment contract; Installment credit; Installment loan; Installment sale.

Installment sale. Commercial arrangement by which buyer makes initial down payment and signs a contract for payment of the balance in installments over a period of time. In accounting for such sales, the seller may either account for the profits on basis of each installment payment received or the entire amount in the period of the sale; in latter case, reserves are established for bad debts, collection expenses and costs of reconditioning returned merchandise. See also installment contract; Installment credit; Installment loan; installment method; Truth-in-Lending Act.

Retail installment sale. The sale of goods or the furnishing of services by a retail seller to a retail buyer for a deferred payment price payable in installments. Retail installment sales contracts are governed with respect to disclosure of terms and finance charges by Truth-in-Lending Act (q.v.). See also Annual percentage rate.

Instance court. In English law, that division or department of the court of admiralty which exercised all the ordinary admiralty jurisdiction, with the single exception of prize cases, the latter belonging to the branch called the “Prize Court.” Now part of High Court.

Instancia /iɛnˈs탄ˈsiya/. In Spanish law, the institution and prosecution of a suit from its commencement until definitive judgment. The first instance, “primera instancia,” is the prosecution of the suit before the judge competent to take cognizance of it at its inception; the second instance, “secunda instancia,” is the exercise of the same action before the court of appellate jurisdiction; and the third instance, “tercera instancia,” is the prosecution of the same suit, either by an application of revision before the appellate tribunal that has already decided the cause, or before some higher tribunal, having jurisdiction of the same.

Instans est finis unius temporis et principium alterius /ɪnˈstæntiːz ɛst fæˈnæs ˈjɑːnəs ˈtɛmpərəs ɛt prɪˈsnɪp(ʊ)lɪˈɑːrɪs/. An instant is the end of one time and the beginning of another.

Instant. Present, current, as instant case.

Instantaneous crime. An “instantaneous” crime is one which is fully consummated or completed in and by a single act (such as arson or murder) as distinguished from one which involves a series or repetition of acts.

Instantaneous death. See Death.

Instanter /ɪnˈstæntər/. Immediately; instantly; forthwith; without delay. Trial instanter was had where a prisoner between attainted and execution pleaded that he was not the same who was attainted. When a party was ordered to plead instanter, he was required to plead the same day. The term was usually understood to mean within twenty-four hours.

Instantly. Immediately; directly; without delay; at once.

Instar /ɪnˈstɑːr/. Lat. Likeness; the likeness, size, or equivalent of a thing. Instar dentium, like teeth. Instar omnium, equivalent or tantamount to all.

In statu quo /ɪn ˈstɛtu(ʊ)kwɔː/ /ɪn ˈståtu(ʊ)wɔː/. In the condition in which it was. Status quo.

Instigate /ɪnˈstægɪʃət/. To stimulate or goad to an action, especially a bad action; one of its synonyms is “abet”. Hughes v. Van Bruggen, 44 N.M. 534, 105 P.2d 494, 499. See Aid and abet;Entrapment.

Instigation /ɪnˈstægəʃən/. Incitation; urging; solicitation. The act by which one incites another to do something, as to commit some crime or to commence a suit. See Aid and abet; Entrapment; Incite.

In stipulationibus cum quiritur quid actum sit verba contra stipulatorem interpretanda sunt /ˌɪn ˈstɪpləˈʃɪəbəs kʊm kwɪˈrɪtər kwɪd ˈɛktəm sɪt vərˈba kɒntra stɪpʊlaˈtɔrəm ɪntəprɪˈtəndə sɑnt/. In the construction of agreements words are interpreted against the person using them. Thus, the construction of the stipulatio is against the stipulator, and the construction of the promissio against the promissor.

In stipulationibus, id tempus spectatur quo contrahimus /ˌɪn ˈstɪpləˈʃɪəbəs ɪd tɛmˈpəs spɛktətˈtær kwɔː kʌntrə stɪpʊlaˈtɔrɪəs/. In stipulations, the time when we contract is regarded.

Instirpare /ɪnˈstɪpərɛɪ/ To plant or establish.

In stirpes /ˌɪn ˈstɪpərəs/. In the law of intestate succession, according to the roots or stocks; by representation; as distinguished from succession per capita. See Per capita; Per stirpes.

Institor /instat(ə)r/. Lat. In the civil law, a clerk in a store; an agent.

Institoria actio /instat(ə)riɔ əksh(ə)yə/. Lat. In the civil law, the name of an action given to those who had contracted with an institor (q.v.) to compel the principal to performance.

Institutional power /instat(ə)riɔyal pəwər/. In the civil law, the charge given to a clerk to manage a shop or store.

Institute.*\textit{v.} To inaugurate or commence, as to institute an action. Post v. U.S., 161 U.S. 583, 16 S.Ct. 611, 40 L.Ed. 816. To set up; to originate; to initiate; to start; to introduce. To nominate, constitute, or appoint, as to institute an heir by testament. See Institution.

Institute.*\textit{n.} Act of instituting; something that is instituted. A principle recognized as authoritative; also the organization which drafts and authors such authoritative principles; e.g. American Law Institute. See also Institute.

In the civil law, a person named in the will as heir, but with a direction that he shall pass over the estate to another designated person, called the "substitute."

Instituted executor. An instituted executor is one who is appointed by the testator without any condition.

Institutes. A name sometimes given to textbooks containing the elementary principles of jurisprudence, arranged in an orderly and systematic manner. For example, the Institutes of Justinian, of Gaius, of Lord Coke.

Institutes of Gaius. An elementary work of the Roman jurist Gaius; important as having formed the foundation of the Institutes of Justinian (q.v.) of the Institutes were discovered by Niebuhr in 1816, in a codex rescriptus of the library of the cathedral chapter at Verona, and were first published at Berlin in 1820.

Institutes of Justinian. One of the four component parts or principal divisions of the Corpus Juris Civilis, being an elementary treatise on the Roman law, in four books. This work was compiled from earlier sources (resting principally on the Institutes of Gaius), by a commission composed of Tribonian and two others, by command and under direction of the emperor Justinian, and was first published November 21, A.D. 533.

Institutes of Lord Coke. The name of four volumes by Lord Coke, published A.D. 1628. The first is an extensive comment upon a treatise on tenures, compiled by Littleton, a judge of the common pleas, temp. Edward IV. This comment is a rich mine of valuable common-law learning, collected and heaped together from the ancient reports and Year Books, but greatly defective in method. It is usually cited by the name of "Co. Litt." or as "1 Inst." The second volume is a comment upon old acts of parliament, without systematic order; the third a more methodical treatise on the pleas of the crown; and the fourth an account of the several species of courts.

These are cited as 2, 3, or 4 "Inst." without any author’s name.

Theophilus' Institutes. A paraphrase of Justinian, made, it is believed, soon after A.D. 533. This paraphrase maintained itself as a manual of law until the eighth or ninth century. This text was used in the time of Hexabiblos of Harmenipulus, the last of the Greek jurists. It is also conjectured that Theophilus was not the editor of his own paraphrase, but that it was drawn up by some of his pupils after his explanations and lectures, inasmuch as it contains certain barbarous phrases, and the texts of the manuscripts vary greatly from each other.

Institutio heredis /instat(ə)yəwsh(ə)yə harɪdəs/. Lat. In Roman law, the appointment of the hares in the will. It corresponds very nearly to the nomination of an executor in English law. Without such an appointment the will was void at law, but the praetor (i.e., equity) would, under certain circumstances, carry out the intentions of the testator.

Institution. The commencement or inauguration of anything, as the commencement of an action. The first establishment of a law, rule, rite, etc. Any custom, system, organization, etc., firmly established. An elementary rule or principle. See also Institute.

An establishment, especially one of eleemosynary or public character or one affecting a community. An established or organized society or corporation. It may be private in its character, designed for profit to those composing the organization, or public and charitable in its purposes, or educational (e.g. college or university). In re Peabody's Estate, 21 Cal.App.2d 690, 70 P.2d 249, 250. A foundation, as a literary or charitable institution. Prescott Courier v. Board of Sup'rs of Yavapai County, 49 Ariz. 423, 67 P.2d 483, 486.

Civil law. The appointment of an heir; the act by which a testator nominates one or more persons to succeed him in all his rights active and passive.

Political law. A law, rite, or ceremony enjoined by authority as a permanent rule of conduct or of government. An organized society, established either by law or the authority of individuals, for promoting any object, public or social.

A system or body of usages, laws, or regulations, of extensive and recurring operation, containing within itself an organism by which it effects its own independent action, continuance, and generally its own further development. Its object is to generate, effect, regulate, or sanction a succession of acts, transactions, or productions of a peculiar kind or class. We are likewise in the habit of calling single laws or usages "institutions," if their operation is of vital importance and vast scope, and if their continuance is in a high degree independent of any interfering power.

Practice. Commencement of civil action or criminal prosecution. See Commence.
Institutional investors. Large investors, such as mutual funds, pension funds, insurance companies, and others who largely invest other people’s money.

Institutional lender. Banks, savings and loan associations, and other businesses which make loans in the ordinary course of business, rather than individuals, credit unions, or companies which may make loans to employees.

Institutions /inst(y)ōwshiyówniyz/. Lat. Works containing the elements of any science; institutions or institutes. One of Justinian’s principal law collections, and a similar work of the Roman jurist Gaius, are so entitled. See Institutes.

Instruct. To convey information as a client to an attorney, or as an attorney to a counsel, or as a judge to a jury. To authorize one to appear as advocate; to give a case in charge to the jury.

Instructions to jury. See Jury instructions.

Instrument. A formal or legal document in writing, such as a contract, deed, will, bond, or lease. A writing that satisfies the requisites of negotiability prescribed by U.C.C. Art. 3. A negotiable instrument (defined in U.C.C. § 9-104), or a security (defined in U.C.C. § 8-102) or any other writing which evidences a right to the payment of money and is not itself a security agreement or lease and is of a type which is in ordinary course of business transferred by delivery with any necessary indorsement or assignment. U.C.C. § 9-105(1).

Anything reduced to writing, a document of a formal or solemn character, a writing given as a means of affording evidence. A document or writing which gives formal expression to a legal act or agreement, for the purpose of creating, securing, modifying, or terminating a right. A writing executed and delivered as the evidence of an act or agreement. Moore v. Diamond Dry Goods Co., 47 Ariz. 128, 54 P.2d 553, 554. Anything which may be presented as evidence to the senses of the adjudicating tribunal.

Incomplete instrument. A paper whose contents show, at the time of signing, that it is intended to become an instrument but that is not an instrument because a necessary element is missing. See U.C.C. § 3-115(1).

See also Bearer instrument; Bill; Commercial paper; Negotiable instruments; Note.

Instrumenta /instrt(y)mnts/. Lat. That kind of evidence which consists of writings not under seal; as court-rolls, accounts, and the like.

Instrumental. Serviceable, helpful; serving as a means or agent; something by which an end is achieved.

Instrumentality. Something by which an end is achieved; a means, medium, agency. Perkins v. State, 61 Wis.2d 341, 212 N.W.2d 141, 146.

Institutionality rule. Under this rule, corporate existence will be disregarded where a corporation (subsidiary) is so organized and controlled and its affairs so conducted as to make it only an adjunct and instrumentality of another corporation (parent corporation), and parent corporation will be responsible for the obligations of its subsidiary. Taylor v. Standard Gas & Electric Co., C.C.A.Okl., 96 F.2d 693, 704.

The so-called “instrumentality” or “alter ego” rule states that when a corporation is so dominated by another corporation that the subservient corporation becomes a mere instrument and is really indistinct from controlling corporation, then the corporate veil of domination corporation will be disregarded, if to retain it results in injustice. National Bond Finance Co. v. General Motors Corp., D.C.Mo., 238 F.Supp. 248, 256.

Instrument of appeal. The document by which an appeal is brought in an English matrimonial cause from the president of the probate, divorce, and admiralty division to the full court. It is analogous to a petition.

Instrument of evidence. Instruments of evidence are the media through which the evidence of facts, either disputed or required to be proved, is conveyed to the mind of a judicial tribunal; and they comprise persons and living things as well as writings. Demonstrative evidence.

Insubordination. State of being insubordinate; disobedience to constituted authority. Refusal to obey some order which a superior officer is entitled to give and have obeyed. Term imports a wilful or intentional disregard of the lawful and reasonable instructions of the employer. Porter v. Pepsi-Cola Bottling Co. of Columbia, 247 S.C. 370, 147 S.E.2d 620, 622.

Insufficiency of evidence to support verdict. This phrase in a motion for new trial, motion for directed verdict, or for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, means that there is some evidence, but not enough in light of the evidence to the contrary to support a verdict. Arnold v. Haskins, 147 S.W.2d 469, 472, 347 Mo. 320. It does not mean that evidence is factually insufficient to support affirmative finding on an issue, but that there is no evidence to warrant submission of the issue. Gannett Outdoor Co. of Texas v. Kubeczka, Tex.App.—Hous. (14 Dist.), 710 S.W.2d 79, 87. See also Directed verdict; Dismissal; Judgment (Judgment notwithstanding verdict). Compare Sufficiency of evidence.

Insufficient. Not sufficient; inadequate to some need, purpose, or use; wanting in needful value, ability, or fitness; incompetent; unfit, as insufficient food; insufficient means. It is the antonym of "sufficient." Nissen v. Miller, 44 N.M. 487, 105 P.2d 324, 325.

Insufficient funds. Bank term meaning that the drawers deposit balance is less than the amount of the check drawn on such account. See Bad check.

Insula /ins(y)lə/. Lat. An island; a house not connected with other houses, but separated by a surrounding space of ground.
Insurable. Capable of being insured against loss, damage, illness, death, etc.; proper to be insured as based on standards of insurer; affording a sufficient ground for insurance. Greenberg v. Continental Casualty Co., 24 Cal.App.2d 506, 75 P.2d 644, 649.

Insurable interest. Such a real and substantial interest in specific property as will prevent a contract to indemnify the person interested against its loss from being a mere wager policy. Such an interest as will make the loss of the property of pecuniary damage to the insured. A right, benefit, or advantage arising out of the property or dependent thereon, or any liability in respect thereof, or any relation thereto or concern therein, of such a nature that it might be so affected by the contemplated peril as to directly damnify the insured. Generally, an "insurable interest" exists where insured derives pecuniary benefit or advantage by preservation and continued existence of property or would sustain pecuniary loss from its destruction. Hinojosa v. Allstate Ins. Co., Tex. Civ.App., 520 S.W.2d 936, 938.

In the case of life insurance, a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit from the continued life of another; also, a reasonable ground, founded upon the relation of the parties to each other, either pecuniary or of blood or affinity, to expect some benefit or advantage from the continuance of the life of the assured. Connecticut Mut. Life Insurance Co. v. Schaefer, 94 U.S. 457, 460, 24 L.Ed. 251. Essential thing being that policy be obtained in good faith, not for purpose of speculating on hazard of life in which insured has no interest. Alexander v. Griffith Brokerage Co., 228 Mo.App. 773, 73 S.W.2d 418, 423.

Insurable value. Value of property for insurance purposes. Based on the value of the property, less indestructible parts (land) for fire insurance. For title insurance purposes, the sales price (market value) is used.

Insurance. A contract whereby, for a stipulated consideration, one party undertakes to compensate the other for loss on a specified subject by specified perils. The party agreeing to make the compensation is usually called the "insurer" or "underwriter;" the other, the "insured" or "assured;" the agreed consideration, the "premium;" the written contract, a "policy;" the events insured against, "risks" or "perils;" and the subject, right, or interest to be protected, the "insurable interest." A contract whereby one undertakes to indemnify another against loss, damage, or liability arising from an unknown or contingent event and is applicable only to some contingency or act to occur in future. An agreement by which one party for a consideration promises to pay money or its equivalent or to do an act valuable to other party upon destruction, loss, or injury of something in which other party has an interest.

Classification

Accident insurance. Form of insurance which undertakes to indemnify the assured against expense, loss of time, and suffering resulting from accidents causing him physical injury, usually by payment at a fixed rate per month while the consequent disability lasts, and sometimes including the payment of a fixed sum to his heirs in case of his death by accident within the term of the policy. See also, Casualty insurance below.

Accounts receivable insurance. Insurance coverage designed to protect against inability to collect because of damage to records which support the accounts.

Additional insured. A person other than the named insured, such as the insured's spouse, who is protected under the terms of the contract.

Air travel insurance. Form of life insurance which may be purchased by air travelers according to the terms of which the face value of the policy is paid to the named beneficiary in the event of death resulting from a particular flight.

All-risk insurance. Type of insurance policy which ordinarily covers every loss that may happen, except by fraudulent acts of the insured. Miller v. Boston Ins. Co., 218 A.2d 275, 278, 420 Pa. 566. Type of policy which protects against all risks and perils except those specifically enumerated.

Annuity insurance. An insurance contract calling for periodic payments to the insured or annuitant for a stated period or for life.

Assessment insurance. A species of mutual insurance in which the policyholders are assessed as losses are incurred. A contract by which payments to insured are not unalterably fixed, but dependent on collection of assessments necessary to pay amounts insured, while an "old-line policy" unalterably fixes premiums and definitely and unchangeably fixes insurer's liability.

Automobile insurance may embrace insurance against loss of or damage to a motor vehicle caused by fire, windstorm, theft, collision, or other insurable hazards, and also against legal liability for personal injuries or damage to property resulting from operation of the vehicle. Policy of indemnity to protect the operator and owner from liability to third persons as a result of the operation of the automobile. See also Collision insurance; and No-fault auto insurance, below, this topic.

Business insurance. Type of insurance which protects a business on the disability or death of a key employee. See also Key man life insurance, below.

Business interruption insurance. Type of insurance which protects a business from losses due to inability to operate because of fire or other hazards.

Cargo insurance. Insures risk that cargo will not be delivered in the same condition in which it was initially shipped.

Casualty insurance. That type of insurance that is primarily concerned with losses caused by injuries to persons and legal liability imposed upon the insured for such injury or for damage to the property of others.

Coinsurance. Provision in a policy that the liability of the insurer is limited to that proportion of the loss which the amount of insurance bears to a particular percentage of the value of property at the time of the loss. See also Coinsurance.

Collision insurance. A form of automobile insurance that covers loss to the insured vehicle from its collision with another vehicle or object, but not covering bodily injury or liability also arising out of the collision. Type of coverage which protects insured for damage to his own property in an accident as contrasted with liability insurance which protects him in an action or claim for loss to another's property.

Commercial insurance. Indemnity agreements, in the form of insurance bonds or policies, whereby parties to commercial contracts are to a designated extent guaranteed against loss by reason of a breach of contractual obligations on the part of the other contracting party. To this class belong policies of contract credit and title insurance.

Comprehensive insurance. See All-risk insurance, above.

Concurrent insurance. Insurance coverage under two or more similar policies of varying dates and amounts.

Convertible collision insurance. Type of collision coverage generally carrying lower premium but requiring higher premium after first loss or claim; an alternative form of deductible collision coverage.

Convertible insurance. A policy that may be changed to another form by contractual provision and without evidence of insurability. Usually used to refer to term life insurance convertible to permanent insurance.

Convertible life insurance. Generally a form of term life insurance which gives the insured the right to change policy to permanent life insurance without medical examination.

Cooperative insurance. Type of non-stock mutual insurance in which the policyholders are the owners; may be assessable or nonassessable.

Credit insurance. Type of insurance protection against losses due to death, disability, insolvency or bankruptcy of debtor. Policy covers balances of debt due, with proceeds payable to creditors. Commonly offered by banks and other lenders. Terms and conditions of such are regulated by federal and state statutes; e.g. Truth-in-Lending laws. See also Credit insurance.

Crime insurance. Type of insurance which protects insured from losses due to criminal acts against insured such as burglary, etc. Such insurance is sponsored by federal government for residents of certain high-crime localities.

Crop insurance. Insurance coverage against financial loss due to destruction of agricultural products resulting from rain, hail, and other elements of nature. Such insurance is sponsored by Federal Crop Insurance Corporation.

Decreasing term insurance. A term insurance policy where the premiums are uniform throughout its life, but the face value of the policy declines. Sometimes called a home protection plan because the face value declines much in the same way a mortgage due on a house declines. A form of life insurance that provides a death benefit of amount declining throughout the term of the contract to zero at the end of the term.

Deposit insurance. Federally sponsored (Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.) insurance coverage against loss of deposits due to bank or savings and loan closings.

Directors' and officers' (D & O) liability insurance. Such insures corporate directors and officers against claims based on negligence, failure to disclose, and to a limited extent, other defalcations. Such insurance provides coverage against expenses and to a limited extent fines, judgments and amounts paid in settlement.

Disability insurance. See Disability insurance.

Employer's liability insurance. In this form of insurance the risk insured against is the liability of the assured to make compensation or pay damages for an accident, injury, or death occurring to a servant or other employee in the course of his employment, either at common law or under statutes imposing such liability on employers. Coverage which protects employer as to claims not covered under worker's compensation insurance.

Endowment insurance. Type of protection which combines life insurance and investment so that if the insured outlives the policy the face value is paid to him. If he does not outlive it, the face value is paid to his beneficiary.

Errors and omissions insurance. Insurance that indemnifies the insured for any loss sustained because of an error or oversight on his part.

Excess insurance. Coverage against loss in excess of a stated amount or in excess of coverage provided under another insurance contract.

Extended term insurance. A non-forfeiture provision in most policies which continues the existing amount of life insurance for as long a period of time as the contract's cash value will purchase term coverage.

Family income insurance. Type of term insurance designed to give maximum coverage during the period of maximum family dependency.

Fidelity insurance. Form of insurance in which the insurer undertakes to guaranty the fidelity of an officer, agent, or employee of the assured, or rather to indemnify the latter for losses caused by dishonesty or a want of fidelity on the part of such a person. See also Fidelity and guaranty insurance.

Fire insurance. A contract of insurance by which the underwriter, in consideration of the premium, undertakes to indemnify the insured against all losses in his houses, buildings, furniture, ships in port, or merchandise, by means of accidental fire happening within a prescribed period. See also Loss payable clause; Pro rata distribution clause.

First party insurance. Insurance which applies to the insured's own property or person.

Fleet policy insurance. Type of blanket policy covering a number of vehicles of the same insured; e.g., covers pool or fleet of vehicles owned by business.

Floaters insurance. A form of insurance that applies to moveable property whatever its location, if within the territorial limits imposed by the contract.

Flood insurance. Insurance indemnifying against loss by flood damage. Required by lenders in areas designated as potential flood areas. The insurance is privately issued but federally subsidized.

Fraternal insurance. The form of life or accident insurance furnished by a fraternal beneficial association, consisting in the undertaking to pay to a member, or his heirs in case of death, a stipulated sum of money, out of funds raised for that purpose by the payment of dues or assessments by all the members of the association.

Government insurance. Life insurance underwritten and offered by Federal government to war veterans. See also National service life insurance; War risk insurance, below.

Group health insurance. Provides protection to employees or other members covered under group policy for hospital, surgical and other medical expenses.

Group insurance. A form of insurance whereby individual lives of a group of persons, usually employees, are in consideration of a flat periodical premium based on average age and paid either by employer in whole or partially by both employer and employee, insured each in a definite sum so long as insured remains in such employment and the premiums are paid. Holland v. Lincoln Nat. Life Ins. Co., 45 N.J.Super. 66, 131 A.2d 428, 429. Coverage of number of individuals by means of single or blanket policy. McFarland v. Business Men's Assur. Co. of America, 105 Ga.App. 209, 124 S.E.2d 432, 433. Type of insurance (life, medical, dental, automobile, legal) offered to employees or other homogeneous group under a single master policy. Generally, each employee receives a certificate of participation instead of a policy.

Group term life insurance. Life insurance coverage permitted by an employer for a group of employees. Such insurance is renewable on a year-to-year basis and does not accumulate in value (i.e., no cash surrender value is built up). The premiums paid by the employer on such insurance are not taxed to an employee on coverage of up to a specified amount per year.

Guaranty or fidelity insurance. A contract whereby one, for a consideration, agrees to indemnify another against loss arising from the want of integrity or fidelity of employees and persons holding positions of trust, or embezzlements by them, or against the insolvency of debtors, losses in trade, loss by non-payment of notes, or against breaches of contract.

Hail insurance. Type of insurance which provides protection against loss of crops, grain, etc. because of hail storms. See also Crop insurance, above.

Health insurance. A contract or agreement whereby an insurer is obligated to pay or allow a benefit of pecuniary value with respect to the bodily injury, disablement, sickness, death by accident or accidental means of a human being, or because of any expense relating thereto, or because of any expense incurred in prevention of sickness, and includes every risk pertaining to any of the enumerated risks.

Homeowners insurance. Policy insuring individuals against any, some, or all of the risks of loss to personal dwellings or the contents thereof or the personal liability pertaining thereto.

Hull insurance. Marine or aviation insurance covering loss to vessel or plane or its machinery or equipment.

Indemnity insurance. Insurance which provides indemnity against loss, in contrast to contracts which provide for indemnity against liability. The latter are known as liability contracts or policies, and the former as indemnity contracts or policies.

Inland marine insurance. Originally, a form of insurance protection for goods transported other than on the ocean. Now, term applies to a variety of covers on floating personal property and to general liability as a bailee.

Joint life insurance. Form of life insurance on two or more persons and payable on the death of the first to die.

Key man life insurance. Type of life insurance written on the life of an important or key officer or employee in a business organization. The business is the beneficiary and is entitled to the proceeds on his death. See also Key man insurance.

Last survivor insurance. Life insurance on two or more persons, the benefits of which are payable on the death of the last survivor.
Lease insurance. Protects against the loss sustained through the termination of a lease by hazards specifically insured against such as, for example, fire.

Level premium insurance. Type of insurance in which the cost is spread evenly over the premium paying period.

Liability insurance. Insurance that covers suits against the insured for such damages as injury or death to other drivers or passengers, property damage, and the like. It is insurance for those damages for which the driver can be held liable.

Liability insurance is that form of insurance which indemnifies against liability on account of injuries to the person or property of another. It is distinguished from "indemnity insurance" (see that title, above), and may be issued to cover the liability of, for example, carriers, contractors, employers, landlords, manufacturers, drivers.

Life insurance. A contract between the holder of a policy and an insurance company (i.e., the carrier) whereby the company agrees, in return for premium payments, to pay a specified sum (i.e., the face value or maturity value of the policy) to the designated beneficiary upon the death of the insured.

That kind of insurance in which the risk contemplated is the death of a particular person; upon which event (if it occurs within a prescribed term, or, according to the contract, whenever it occurs) the insurer engages to pay a stipulated sum to the legal representatives of such person, or to a third person having an insurable interest in the life of such person.

See also Life insurance proceeds; Life insurance trust; Term insurance (this topic).

Group life insurance. Type of life insurance commonly offered by companies to their employees in which there is a master insurance contract providing life insurance benefits to each covered employee who holds a certificate indicating his participation. See also Group term life insurance, above.

Limited payment life insurance. Type of life insurance for which premiums are payable for a definite period after which the policy is fully paid.

Straight life insurance or whole life insurance is insurance for which premiums are collected so long as the insured may live, whereas, term insurance is insurance which promises payment only within a stipulated term covered by the policy; though such term policies are commonly renewed each term. The premium for whole life insurance remains the same whereas the premium for term insurance increases with the age of the insured, i.e., as the risk increases. Also, whole life policies build up cash reserves, whereas term policies do not. See also Term insurance, below.

Universal life insurance. Insurance over a specified period of time, which builds a cash value for policyholders over time. This coverage emphasizes the separation of the portion of the premium that is used to cover the insurance protection from the portion of the premium allocated to an investment that is used to build the policy's cash value. Investments are usually selected with a view to maximizing the rate of return.

Variable life insurance. A distinct type of whole-life insurance in which some amount of death benefit is guaranteed by the insurer, but the total death benefit and the cash-value of the insurance before death depend on the investment performance of that portion of the premium which is allocated to a separate fund. Some variable-life insurance policies allow the insured to decide how the separate account is to be invested.

Whole life insurance. A life insurance policy in which the insured pays a level premium for his or her entire life and in which there is a constantly accumulating cash value against which the insured can withdraw or borrow. Sometimes referred to as straight life insurance.

Limited policy insurance. Type of coverage which offers protection against specific perils or accidents and against no others.

Major medical insurance. Insurance protection against large medical, surgical and hospital expenses of the insured.

Malpractice insurance. Type of liability insurance which protects professional people (e.g., doctors, lawyers, accountants) against claims of negligence brought against them.

Manual rating insurance. Type of insurance in which the premium is set from a manual classifying types of risk on a general basis such as a particular industry without reference to the individual case.

Marine insurance. A contract whereby one party, for a stipulated premium, undertakes to indemnify the other against certain perils or sea-risks to which his ship, freight, and cargo, or some of them, may be exposed during a certain voyage, or a fixed period of time. An insurance against risks connected with navigation, to which a ship, cargo, freightage, profits, or other insurable interest in movable property may be exposed during a certain voyage or a fixed period of time. See also Inland marine insurance, above.

Mortgage insurance. Insurance from which the benefits are intended by the policyowner to pay off the balance due on a mortgage upon the death of the insured or to meet the payments on a mortgage as they fall due in case of the death or disability of the insured. Insurance against loss to the mortgagees in the event of default and a failure of the mortgaged property to satisfy the balance owing plus costs of foreclosure.

National service life insurance. Life insurance on servicemen. The contract is between the U.S. Government and private insurers for benefit of servicemen.

No-fault auto insurance. Type of automobile insurance in which claims for personal injury (and sometimes property damage) are made against the claimant's own insurance company (no matter who was at fault) rather than against the insurer of the party at fault. Under such state "no-fault" statutes only in cases of serious personal injuries and high medical costs may the injured bring an action against the other party or his insurer. No-fault statutes vary from state to state in terms of scope of coverage, threshold amounts, threshold types (e.g., monetary or verbal), etc.

Nonassessable insurance. Type of insurance in which the rate of premium is guaranteed and no additional assessments may be made against the policyholder.

Old line life insurance. Insurance on a level or flat rate plan where, for a fixed premium payable without condition at stated intervals, a certain sum is to be paid upon death without condition.

Ordinary life insurance. Whole life and permanent insurance as distinguished from term, group and industrial insurance.

Paid-up insurance. Insurance policy on which all premiums have been paid and on which no further premiums are due and for which benefits company is liable.

Participating insurance. Type of insurance issued by a mutual company on which policyholder may participate in dividend distributions.

Partnership insurance. Life insurance on lives of partners designed to enable surviving partners to buy out deceased partner’s estate. Life or health insurance sold to a partnership, usually for guaranteeing business continuity in case of disability or death of a partner.

Patent insurance. Insurance against loss due to infringement of the insured's patent, or due to claim of infringement of the other's patent by the insured.

Product liability insurance. Type of liability coverage which protects manufacturers and suppliers from claims for accidents arising out of the use of their products.

Profits insurance. Policy that pays the insured for loss of profits he would have had if the damage or loss had not occurred.

Public liability insurance. Liability insurance protection against claims arising out of the insured’s property, conduct or the conduct of his agent.

Reciprocal insurance. Type of insurance plan administered by an exchange rather than an insurance company and in which each insured is the insurer of the other members of the plan.

Renewable term insurance. Type of term insurance in which the premiums are level during each term, but increases at each new term with the age of the insured. The insured generally has the right to renew for additional terms without a medical examination.

Retirement income insurance. Type of insurance in which the insurer guarantees payment of the policy if the insured dies before a certain age and an annuity if the insured survives beyond the specified period.

Self insurance. Plan in which the insured (e.g., business) places aside in a fund sufficient sums to cover liability losses that may be sustained. Commonly, under such plan the business will self-insure itself up to a certain amount and then carry regular liability insurance to cover any excesses.

Single premium insurance. Type of policy on which the insured makes but one premium payment.

Social insurance. A comprehensive welfare plan established by law, generally compulsory in nature, and based on a program which spreads the cost of benefits among the entire population rather than on individual recipients. The federal government began to use social insurance programs in 1935 with the passage of the Social Security Act. The basic federal and state approaches to social insurance presently in use are: Old Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance (i.e., social security); Medicare and Medicaid; unemployment insurance; and worker's compensation.

Split dollar insurance. Type of insurance in which the insurer divides the premium dollar between life insurance protection and investment for the benefit of the insured.

Step-rate premium insurance. Type of insurance in which the premium may vary from time to time at the option of the insurer.

Surety and fidelity insurance. Form of insurance which more approximates a bond which protects the insured against dishonesty of employees, agents and the public.

Term insurance. Form of pure life insurance having no cash surrender or loan value and generally furnishing insurance protection for only a specified or limited period of time; though such policy is usually renewable from term to term. See also Convertible life; Decreasing term; Extended term; Family income; Group term; Renewable term insurance, above.

Title insurance. A policy issued by a title company after searching the title, representing the state of that title and insuring the accuracy of its search against claims of title defects. Insurance against loss or damage resulting from defects or failure of title to a particular parcel of realty, or from the enforcement of liens existing against it at the time of the insurance. This form of insurance is taken out by a purchaser of the property or one loaning money on mortgage, and is furnished by companies specially organized for the purpose, and which keep complete sets of abstracts or duplicates of the records, employ expert title-examiners, and prepare conveyances and transfers of all sorts. A "certificate of title" furnished by such a company is merely the formally expressed professional opinion of the company's examiner that the title is complete and perfect (or otherwise, as stated), and the company is liable only for a want of care, skill, or diligence on the part of its examiner; whereas an "insurance of title" warrants the validity of the title in any and all events. It is not always easy to distinguish between such insurance and a "guaranty of title" given by such a company, except that in the former case the maximum limit of liability is fixed by the policy, while in the latter case the undertaking is to make good any and all loss resulting from defect or failure of the title. See also Back title letter.

Trust insurance. A trust, the res of which consists in whole or in part of insurance policies.
Unemployment insurance. Form of taxation collected from business to fund unemployment payments and benefits.

War risk insurance. Insurance offered by the federal government to protect persons against wartime loss of vessels and property on the high seas, and death or injury while in the armed forces. Insurance covering damage caused by acts of war. War risk insurance refers to those contracts which were brought into being by the United States government during the first World War to replace ordinary life and accident insurance which was no longer available to those in the hazardous occupation of military service. See also National service life insurance, above.

Worker's compensation insurance. Type of protection purchased by employers to cover payments to employees who are injured in accidents arising out of and in the course of their employment; governed by statutes in all jurisdictions. See also Employer's liability insurance, above.

Other Insurance Terms

Aviation clause. Insurance clause limiting the liability of the insurer in case of death or injury is connected in a specified degree with aviation.

Blanket policy. Policy covering more than one type of property in one location, or one or more types of property at more than one location.

Claims made policy. Under this type policy the insured is indemnified for claims made during the policy period regardless of when the acts giving rise to those claims occur. Appalachian Ins. Co. v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., C.A.Pa., 676 F.2d 56, 59. Also called “discovery” policy. Compare Occurrence policy, below.

Comprehensive coverage. A simple and convenient form of indemnity now commonly available in contracts of automobile insurance. It includes not only the conventional coverages against loss caused by fire, theft, wind, water, or malicious mischief, but is generally designed to protect against all damage to the insured vehicle except collision or upset.

Concurrent insurance. That which to any extent insures the same interest against the same casualty, at the same time, as the primary insurance, on such terms that the insurers would bear proportionately the loss happening within the provisions of both policies.

Contract of insurance. See Contract of insurance.

Discovery policy. See Claims made policy, above.

Double insurance. See Double.

Excess insurance. See Excess insurance, above.

General and special insurance. In marine insurance, a general insurance is effected when the perils insured against are such as the law would imply from the nature of the contract considered in itself and supposing none to be specified in the policy. In the case of special insurance, further perils (in addition to implied perils) are expressed in the policy.

Insurance adjuster. One undertaking to ascertain and report the actual loss to the subject-matter of insurance due to the peril insured against. The adjuster also settles claims against the insurer. Such adjuster may be employed either by the insurer or the insured. See Adjuster.

Insurance agent. Person authorized to represent insurer in dealing with third parties in matters relating to insurance. Travelers Indem. Co. v. National Indem. Co., C.A.Minn., 292 F.2d 214, 219. An agent employed by an insurance company to solicit insurance business. Agents of insurance companies are called “general agents” when clothed with the general oversight of the company's business in a state or large section of country, and “local agents” when their functions are limited and confined to some particular locality. See also Insurance broker, below.

Insurance binder. A memorandum of the insurance coverage agreement. It extends temporary protection pending issuance of the formal policy, while the insurer is investigating the risks and setting appropriate premium rates. Blackburn v. Crum & Forster, C.A.Tex., 611 F.2d 102, 103.

Insurance broker. One who acts as middleman between insured and company, and who solicits insurance from public under no employment from any special company and places order of insurance with company selected by insurer or, in absence of any selection, with company selected by such broker. Broker is agent for insured though at same time for some purposes he may be agent for insurer, and his acts and representations within scope of his authority as such agent are binding on insured. An “insurance agent” is tied to his company, whereas an “insurance broker” is an independent middleman not tied to a particular company. Osborn v. Ozlin, Va., 310 U.S. 53, 60 S.Ct. 758, 761, 84 L.Ed. 1074.

Insurance commissioner. A public officer in most states, whose duty is to supervise the business of insurance as conducted in the state by foreign and domestic companies, for the protection and benefit of policy-holders, and especially to issue licenses, approve rates, make periodic examinations into the condition of such companies, and receive, file, and publish periodical statements of their business as furnished by them.

Insurance company. A corporation or association whose business is to make contracts of insurance. They are generally either mutual companies or stock companies. A "mutual" insurance company is one whose fund for the payment of losses consists not of capital subscribed or furnished by outside parties, but of premiums mutually contributed by the parties insured, or in other words, one in which all persons insured become members of the association and contribute either cash or assessable premium notes, or both, to a common fund, out of which each is entitled to indemnity in case of loss. A "stock" company is one organized according to the usual form of business corporations, having a capital stock divided into shares, which, with current income and accumulated surplus, constitutes the fund for the payment of losses, policy-holders paying fixed premiums and not being members of the association unless they also happen to be stockholders. See also Joint-stock insurance company.

Insurance contract. See Policy of insurance.

Insurance policy. See Policy of insurance.

Insurance pool. Combining together of several insurers to share premiums and losses so as to spread risks.

Insurance rating. Process by which the premium for a policy is set after considering the risks involved.

Insurance trust. An agreement between insured and trustee, whereby proceeds of policy are paid directly to trustee for investment and distribution to designated beneficiaries in manner and at such time as insured has directed in trust agreement. See also Trust.

Insuring clause. Provision in insurance policy or bond which recites the agreement of the insurer to protect the insured against some form of loss or damage.

Interinsurance. Insurance system whereby several individuals, partnerships, or corporations, through common attorney in fact, underwrite one another’s risks against loss under agreement that underwriters act separately and severally. Hoopeston Canning Co. v. Cullen, 318 U.S. 313, 63 S.Ct. 602, 604, 87 L.Ed. 777. It is distinguishable from all other forms of insurance, in that every insured is interinsurer, and every insurer is insured.

Loss. See Loss.

Mutual insurance company. See that term.

Occurrence policy. This type policy provides for indemnity, regardless of when claim is made or reported, if act giving rise to the claim occurred during policy period. Yazoo County, Miss. v. International Surplus Lines Inc. Co., D.C.Miss., 616 F.Supp. 153, 154. Compare Claims made policy, above.

Over-insurance. Insurance effected upon property, either in one or several companies, to an amount which, separately or in the aggregate, exceeds the actual value of the property. See Excess insurance, above.

Policy of insurance. See that title.

Reinsurance. Insurance of an insurer; a contract by which an insurer procures a third person (usually another insurance company) to insure it against loss or liability, or a portion of such, by reason of the original insurance.

Standard policy. A form of insurance contract which is required, or recommended, to be issued in a particular state. Such is regulated by various state statutes and administrative officials.

Umbrella policy. A form of insurance protection against losses in excess of the amount covered by other liability insurance policies. Type of supplemental or excess liability policy that provides coverage above basic or normal limits of liability.

Under-insurance. Insurance coverage for less than the value of the property. Under such policy, coverage for loss or damage to property will be reduced by percentage of under-insurance.

Underwriter. Party (insurer) who assumes a risk in return for the payment of a premium. See Insurer; Underwriter.

Insure. To make sure or secure, to guarantee, as, to insure safety to any one. To engage to indemnify a person against pecuniary loss from specified perils or possible liability. To provide insurance. See also Underwrite.

Insured. The person who obtains or is otherwise covered by insurance on his health, life, or property. The "insured" in a policy is not limited to the insured named in the policy, but applies to anyone who is insured under the policy. Midwest Contractors Equipment Co. v. Bituminous Cas. Corp., 112 Ill.App.2d 134, 251 N.E.2d 349, 392. The owner of a policy of insurance. Detrick v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., Iowa, 158 N.W.2d 99, 104.

Insurer. The underwriter or insurance company with whom a contract of insurance is made. The one who assumes risk or underwrites a policy, or the underwriter or company with whom contract of insurance is made. National Securities, Inc. v. Johnson, 14 Ariz.App. 31, 480 P.2d 368, 370. See also Underwriter.

Insurgent. One who participates in an insurrection; one who opposes the execution of law by force of arms, or who rises in revolt against the constituted authorities. An enemy.

Insurrection. A rebellion, or rising of citizens or subjects in resistance to their government. Insurrection consists in any combined resistance to the lawful authority of the state, with intent to cause the denial thereof, when the same is manifested, or intended to be manifested, by acts of violence. It is a federal crime to incite, assist, or engage in a rebellion or insurrection against the United States. 18 U.S.C.A. § 2383. See also Internal security acts.

Intakes. In old English law, temporary inclosures made by customary tenants of a manor under a special custom authorizing them to inclose part of the waste until one or more crops have been raised on it.

In tali casu editum et proviso /in télay kéys(y)uw édatəm et praváyüz/. See in casu proviso.

Intangible asset. Property that is a “right” such as a patent, copyright, trademark, etc., or one which is lacking physical existence, such as goodwill. A nonphysical, noncurrent asset which exists only in connection with something else, such as the goodwill of a business. An intangible asset generally has a life longer than one Intangible property. As used chiefly in the law of taxation, this term means such property as has no intrinsic and marketable value, but is merely the representative or evidence of value, such as certificates of stock, bonds, promissory notes, copyrights, and franchises. See Intangible asset. Compare Tangible property.

Intangibles. Property that is a "right" such as a patent, copyright, trademark, etc., or one which is lacking physical existence; such as goodwill. See Amortization; General intangibles; Intangible asset.

Intangibles tax. In certain states such tax is imposed on every resident for right following privileges: (a) Signing, executing and issuing intangibles; (b) selling, assigning, transferring, renewing, removing, consigning, mailing, shipping, trading in and enforcing intangibles; (c) receiving income, increase, issues and profits of intangibles; (d) transmitting intangibles by will or gift or under state laws of descent; (e) having intangibles separately classified for taxes.

Intangible value. Nonphysical value of such assets as patents, copyrights, goodwill.

Integrity. As used in statutes prescribing the qualifications of public officers, trustees, etc., this term means soundness or moral principle and character, as shown by one person dealing with others in the making and performance of contracts, and fidelity and honesty in the discharge of trust; it is synonymous with "probity," "honesty," and "uprightness."

Intelligence. In pleading, the statement of matters of fact directly (excluding the necessity of inference or argument to arrive at the meaning) and in such appropriate terms, so arranged, as to be comprehensible by a person of common or ordinary understanding. "Each averment of a pleading shall be simple, concise, and direct." Fed.R. Civil P. 8(e).

Intemperance. A lack of moderation. Habitual intemperance is that degree of intemperance from the use of intoxicating liquor which disqualifies the person a great portion of the time from properly attending to business, or which would reasonably inflict a course of great mental anguish upon an innocent party. Habitual or excessive use of liquor. See Intoxication.

Intend. To design, resolve, propose. To plan for and expect a certain result. To apply a rule of law in the nature of presumption; to discern and follow the probabilities of like cases. See also Intent.
Intendant. One who has the charge, management, or direction of some office, department, or public business.

Used in the constitutional and statutory law of some European governments to designate a principal officer of state corresponding to the cabinet or secretaries of the various departments of the United States government, as, "intendant of marine," "intendant of finance."

Intended to be recorded. Phrase used in conveyances, when reciting some other conveyance which has not yet been recorded, but which forms a link in the chain of title.

Intended use doctrine. In determining "intended use" for which products must be reasonably safe, manufacturer has duty to take into consideration the environment in which product will be used. Larsen v. General Motors Corp., C.A.Minn., 391 F.2d 495, 501. In product liability cases, two factors are considered: the marketing scheme of the maker, and the foreseeability of the risks which are inherent in the product when used for the purposes intended. Helene Curtis Industries, Inc. v. Pruitt, C.A.Tex., 385 F.2d 841.
